V. 22-24. It was a most extraordinary circumstance, that, after the priests and Levites, and pious persons from Israel, had settled in Judah, (Note, 2 Chr. 11:13-17. 12:1.) Rehoboam and his subjects in general should become more gross idolaters, than the Israelites were. Yet this was actually the case: for they worshipped false gods even more directly than the Israelites; and the groves seem to have been temples erected in shady places, where the most abominable lewdness was practised in honour of their filthy idols. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 9-11. 12:26-29. Lev. 18:21-30.) Thus they far surpassed all their progenitors in abominable idolatries, and emulated the abominations of the devoted Canaanites.

V. 25-28. It is probable that Shishak was excited by Jeroboam, as well as allured by the prospect of an immense booty, in thus making war against Rehoboam. (Note, 11:10.) If, as some learned men suppose, Shishak was the Sesostris of pagan historians, he was a most powerful and formidable conqueror; and Rehoboam, perhaps intimidated by seeing the hand of God so speedily lifted up against him, seems to have tamely surrendered. (Notes, 2 Chr. 12:1-11.) Thus in less than five years from Solomon's death, the temple was plundered, as well as his royal palaces; and Shishak having seized the booty, appears to have relinquished his conquests in Judah.—Rehoboam replaced the golden shields with others made of brass; and the use which he made of these shows for what purposes those of gold had been designed; and intimates, that he still on some occasions attended the worship of God at his temple. (Notes, 7:2. 10:16,17.)

V. 29. Marg. Ref. Note, 19.

V. 30. Rehoboam was not allowed to attack Jeroboam, in the beginning of his reign, and we read of no great battles fought between them: yet by mutual incursions, they molested and weakened each other all their days. (Notes, 12. 21-24. 15:6,7.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-20. Parents often suffer and are corrected in the affliction of their children: and on such occasions they should examine their lives, repent of their sins, humble themselves before God, submit to his will, seek help from him, and especially pray that the affliction may be sanctified for the good of their souls. But sinners are more anxious to know the secret purposes of God, than to understand his revealed will and their own duty: and they are often conscious, that their forms are not to be depended on; but are afraid that others should perceive their convictions, and despise them. They secretly reverence the faithful servants of God: and, having found the truth of some of their words, they have an inward persuasion, that the rest also will be verified; except as they flatter themselves with hopes of escaping the miseries denounced against them. They form, indeed, very erroneous judgments both of God and of his servants; yet they would be glad of help or information in times of trouble, did they not fear rebukes and warnings. They therefore, either keep at a distance, or attempt to impose upon faithful ministers, by disguising their real characters, and pretending kindness to them. Indeed the wisest of men may thus be deceived; but God searches every heart, and often unmasks the hypocrite before the world: he more frequently enables his servants to see through their disguises, and to address them in their real, not their assumed characters; and at last he will expose them to universal shame and contempt before the assembled world. 'What then doth it avail thee, thou deceiver, to attempt imposing upon men? "Why feignest thou thyself to be another" person? In vain dost thou expect an answer of peace, while thou continuest in sin. The ministers of Christ are all sent to thee with heavy tidings: thine attempt to impose on them, or to bribe them by presents, does but increase thy guilt: they will not thus be diverted from giving thee faithful reproofs and awful warnings; and the event will shortly inform thee of the purpose of God concerning thee; the foreknowledge of which, would only augment thy misery, except thou repent of all thy wickedness, and turn to the Lord in uprightness of heart.'—Every providential favour demands a return of grateful obedience, and aggravates future transgression; and thus prosperous sinners accumulate guilt and wrath, with a rapidity proportioned to their abused mercies. (Note, Rom. 2:4-6.)—When men have witnessed, and have even gained by, the wrath of God against the sins of other men, and yet imitate and exceed them in iniquity; they may expect to be visited with more tremendous vengeance; and as they dishonour him by their crimes, he will disgrace them in their punishment.—A man is not indeed affected by the indignity shown to his dead body, or even by the miseries of his posterity; yet the prospect may torment his mind while he lives: such judgments form a proper emblem of the punishment of the wicked after death; and they strongly express the abhorrence and indignation of God for a warning to others.—Instruments will readily be found, among the depraved sons of men, for the most bloody and savage acts of inhumanity: but the circumstance of their being advanced to power by the providence of God, who overrules their crimes to the accomplishment of his own righteous purposes, forms no excuse for their ambition and cruelty.—Impenitent sinners often flatter themselves, that threatened judgments are very distant, when they are even at the door; and excuse themselves, because they were persuaded or frightened into compliance.—Awful indeed will be the doom of those who employ their abilities and authority to make others sin; for thousands will for ever execrate some of them, as the causes of their eternal perdition. They, however, who yield to temptation, follow bad examples, and obey sinful commands, will provoke the Lord to give them up, and cast them off, unless they deeply repent of their iniquity.—The Lord deals with men according to their habitual character: and he will not mention against the upright believer, who has cordially followed him, those incidental sins of which he has repented, and for which he has patiently borne correction.—To show the power and sovereignty of his grace, he frequently reserves an individual or two out of the worst of families, in whom there is "some good thing toward the LORD God of Israel." The fruits of his grace he peculiarly delights in, when they flourish from the hearts of the young and the affluent, and of those who are surrounded with contagious examples and instructions. When such young persons are spared, they prove blessings to their families and connexions; but their premature death forebodes awful judgments, and may well be mourned over as a public calamity. But they "are taken away from the evil to come," and their death can never be a loss to themselves.

V. 21-31. No wonder that they, who live at a distance from the ordinances of God, are hardened in iniquity; when such as are most favoured provoke him to jealousy by their crimes, and are uninfluenced by his judgments, mercies, warnings, and promises.—The perpetration of the worst crimes, of the worst of the heathen, in Jerusalem, the city that the Lord had chosen for his temple and worship; and at present in this favoured land and city; demonstrates, that nothing can render the heart of fallen man holy, but the special sanctifying grace of the Holy Spirit: on this alone may we depend; for this may we daily pray, in behalf of ourselves and of all around us!—But sin quickly enfeebls, impoverishes, and disgraces the most prosperous nations; and when holiness, the real glory of a religious profession, is gone, all external splendour will follow it, or become worthless. Yet many, who live in gross wickedness, keep up a formal attendance upon divine ordinances, and are pleased with an ostentatious imitation of the usages of better times; which have lost all their intrinsic value, and retain nothing, except the external glitter that amuses weak and carnal minds.—Death still marches his solemn round, and conveys monarchs from their thrones, as well as peasants from their cottages. Happy are they, and they alone, who possess the "lively hope of an incorruptible inheritance," in that world, "where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest!"

NOTES.—CHAP. XV. V. 1-3. (Marg. Ref. a, b. Note, 9.) There is no sufficient ground for the opinion, that Maachah was the daughter of Absalom the son of David (Marg. Ref. c, d.) She is called "Miciah the daughter of Uriel," in Chronicles.—His heart was not perfect, &c. (3) Marg. Ref. f. Note, 14.—As Abijam, though a wicked man, was a professed worshipper of JEHOVAH, he is called "the LORD his God." (Note, 2 Chr. 28:5.)

V. 4. Notwithstanding the wickedness of Abijam, and others of David's race; they were for his sake, continued as "a lamp in Jerusalem." (Notes, 11:12, 13, 34—36, v. 36.) and they were made highly useful, both to establish the civil state of that city, and to maintain the true worship of God in it; when the light of divine truth was extinguished in almost all other places of the earth.

V. 5. Save only, &c. Many other parts of David's conduct were evidently faulty: but in this instance alone he acted so inconsistently with his profession, in all respects, as otherwise it could scarcely have been conceived that a truly pious man could have done. (Notes, 2 Sam. 11:)—Those who know the human heart, and the state of a believer in this world of conflict and temptation, will never expect to see in mere man a character and conduct free from blemish and criminality; though they observe many preserved from falling, or from continuing long, under the power of notorious evils. David, however, deeply repented of this part of his conduct; and to the close of his life he showed himself to be the upright and devoted servant and worshipper of the Lord, and in no instance turned aside to idolatry, or countenanced it in his subjects. (Notes, 11:1-8, conclusion. 1 Chr. 28: 29: Ps. 51:)

V. 6, 7. God vouchsafed to continue the royal authority over Judah in the family of David: yet, instead of ruling over Israel also, as David and Solomon had done, both Rehoboam and Abijam were harassed by perpetual wars with Jeroboam the king of Israel. Rehoboam left this unnatural war, after it had lasted all his days, to his son Abijam, who obtained a most decisive victory over Jeroboam, but died soon after. (Notes, 14:30. 2 Chr. 13:3-22.)

V. 9. Abijam began to reign during the eighteenth year of Jeroboam; he reigned through his nineteenth year, and he died before the close of his twentieth, when Asa succeeded him. Thus Abijam is said, according to the Hebrew idiom, 9 And in the twentieth year of Jeroboam king of Israel reigned Asa over Judah.

10 And forty and one years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abishalom.

11 And Asa did that which was right in the eyes of the LORD, as did David his father.

12 And he took away the Sodomites out of the land, and removed all the idols that his fathers had made.

13 And also Maachah his mother, even her he removed from being queen, because she had made an idol in a grove; and Asa destroyed her idol, and burnt it by the brook Kidron.

14 But the high places were not removed: nevertheless Asa's heart was perfect with the LORD all his days.

15 And he brought in the things which his father had dedicated, and the things which himself had dedicated, into the house of the LORD, silver, and gold, and vessels. [Practical Observations.]

16 And there was war between Asa and Baasha king of Israel all their days.

17 And Baasha king of Israel went up against Judah, and built Ramah, that he might not suffer any to go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

18 Then Asa took all the silver and the gold that were left in the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house; and delivered them into the hand of his servants; and king Asa sent them to Ben-hadad, the son of Tabrimon, the son of Hezion, king of Syria, that dwelt at Damascus, saying,

19 There is a league between me and thee, and between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent unto thee a present of silver and gold; come and break thy league with Baasha king of Israel, that he may depart from me.

20 So Ben-hadad hearkened unto king Asa, and sent the captains of the hosts which he had against the cities of Israel, and smote Ijon, and Dan, and Abel-bethmaachah, and all Cinneroth, with all the land of Naphtali.

21 And it came to pass, when Baasha heard thereof, that he left off building of Ramah, and dwelt in Tirzah.

22 Then king Asa made a proclamation throughout all Judah; none was exempted: and they took away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha had builded; and king Asa built with them Geba of Benjamin, and Mizpah.

23 The rest of all the acts of Asa, and all his might, and all that he did, and the cities which he built, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah? Nevertheless in the time of his old age he was diseased in his feet.

24 And Asa slept with his fathers, and he was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and Jehoshaphat his son reigned in his stead.

25 And Nadab the son of Jeroboam began to reign over Israel in the second year of Asa king of Judah, and reigned over Israel two years.

26 And he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the way of his father, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin.

27 And Baasha the son of Ahijah, of the house of Issachar, conspired against him; and Baasha smote him at Gibbethon, which belonged to the Philistines; for Nadab and all Israel laid siege to Gibbethon.

28 Even in the third year of Asa king of Judah did Baasha slay him, and reigned in his stead.

29 And it came to pass, when he reigned, that he smote all the house of Jeroboam; he left not to Jeroboam any that breathed, until he had destroyed him, according unto the saying of the LORD, which he spake by his servant Ahijah the Shilonite:

30 Because of the sins of Jeroboam which he sinned, and which he made Israel sin, by his provocation wherewith he provoked the LORD God of Israel to anger.

31 Now the rest of the acts of Nadab, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

32 And there was war between Asa and Baasha king of Israel all their days.

33 In the third year of Asa king of Judah began Baasha the son of Ahijah to reign over all Israel in Tirzah, twenty and four years.

34 And he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the way of Jeroboam, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin.

to have reigned "three years," in the same manner as Christ is said to have risen after "three days." Thus also Nadab began to reign in the second year of Asa, and reigned two years: yet Baasha succeeded him in the third year of Asa. (28) This is the way, in which the computation of the years between the two kingdoms may be made to coincide: for, in the numerous successions in the kingdom of Israel, the same year is frequently twice reckoned; both to him who reigned in its commencement, and to him who succeeded before the close of it.

V. 10-13. Maachah was Asa's grandmother, but probably his own mother was dead, and Maachah had brought him up: (Notes, 1-3, 2 Chr. 11:18-23.) he however deprived her of authority, and removed her from court, for her idolatry, which he entirely suppressed.—The words translated, "from being queen," may be rendered, from the queen, namely, lest Maachah should seduce Asa's queen also into idolatry.—Idols. V. 14. Was perfect, &c.] This may be opposed to the external good behaviour, and the insincere and divided heart of hypocrites; and may signify that Asa was cordially devoted to the service and worship of God all his days; and that his sins arose from infirmity, not from presumptuous, deliberate wickedness. (Notes, 5, 17-24. 2 Chr. 16: Ps. 19: 12-14.) But some explain it to mean no more, than that he never turned aside from the worship of God to idolatry, as Solomon had done.—He had not, however, zeal and resolution enough to suppress the high places, on which the people sacrificed to the Lord, instead of coming to the temple; though he destroyed the idols out of the land. (Notes, 3: 2-4.)

V. 15. It seems that Abijam, in his war with Jeroboam, had made some vow of dedicating the spoil to God, which he did not live to perform. But Asa fulfilled it, as well as a similar vow of his own. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Lev. 27:28, 29. 2 Chr. 14:9-15.)

V. 16-22. (25-31.) The conduct of Asa evidently arose from unbelief, and was very criminal in itself. It was wholly wrong to tempt Ben-hadad to "break his league" with the king of Israel; and still worse to hire him to it with the consecrated treasures of the temple; and the calamities and miseries brought by Ben-hadad's invasions on the inhabitants of the cities in the northern part of the land, were very great. This occurred in the latter years of Asa's reign.—Baasha's policy was not unlike the impious devices of Jeroboam: (Note, 12:26-29.) but God could have turned it into foolishness, without Asa opposing it by a policy not more justifiable. (Notes, 2 Chr. 16:1-10.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-15. Even a superficial acquaintance with the divine law may enable us to perceive evident defects, in the conduct of eminent believers; and man's natural enmity to God and his servants disposes him to delight in severely animadverting on them: yet if the habitual conduct of the righteous, towards God and man, be impartially contrasted with that of unbelievers, the difference is very visible, and they appear to be of another spirit, and far more excellent than their neighbours. But when the secret desires and good works of the righteous, and the secret evils of the hearts and lives of ungodly men, shall be made manifest at the day of judgment; the glory of the divine justice and mercy will be displayed to the whole world, in the allotment of their everlasting portion of happiness or misery. (Note, Mal. 3:13-18.) The general conduct of the Lord's servants may therefore be held forth as an example for imitation: and numbers are blessed on their account, both while they live, and after they are gone to their rest. But alas! even children, who have been favoured and spared for their parents' sake, often forsake their righteous ways; and but few, especially in superior stations, or among kings and rulers, have hitherto served God in uprightness of heart. He has, however, still taken care of his cause; while those, who ought to have been servicable to it, have perished in their sins: and the Son of David will continue a Light to his church, to establish it in truth and righteousness, to the end of time, and for ever. (Note, Rev. 21:22-27.)—It is happy for nations, when wicked rulers are speedily removed; and when the righteous come in their stead, and are long preserved, "to do that which is right in the eyes of the Lord."—Those who would please him, and promote reformation, must prefer his glory to the reputation of every friend or relative: nay, they must oppose the crimes even of their own parents, though this may seem a reflection upon the memory of the deceased, or a slight put upon the characters of the living. Nor may any age, sex, or relative tie, induce such as are intrusted with authority, to allow those to possess power or influence, who abuse it to the dishonour of God, and to promote idolatry, superstition, or ungodliness; and in every situation our duty to him must have the precedence over all other duties. (Notes, Matt. 10:37-39. Luke 14:25-27.) How absurd then is it, to be satisfied with a religion, merely because our fathers professed it! for indeed that reason, if allowed to be valid, would generally prove that men ought to continue in idolatry, superstition, and immorality. (Note and P. O. 1 Pet. 1:17-21.)—Every reformation upon earth has hitherto been defective: the utmost attainment of fallen man has been an upright and persevering endeavour to glorify God; and this meets with his merciful acceptance, by faith in Jesus Christ.

V. 16-34. Even true believers find it very difficult in times of urgent danger, "to trust in the LORD with all their heart, and not to lean to their own understanding;" and unbelief proportionably makes way for carnal policy. This has often induced Christians to call in the help of the enemies of God in their contests with their brethren; to spend that time and substance to obtain their favour, which ought to have been devoted to the Lord's service; and to tempt others to behave deceitfully or cruelly. Such evils have frequently disgraced religious disputes: the victories thus acquired have weakened the common cause, and ended in shame and bitterness: and some, who once shone bright in the meridian of the church, have been thus covered with a dark cloud toward the close of their days. May God help us to follow after peace, and those things, where with one may edify another," that our "path may shine more and more bright unto the perfect day."¹—But after all, how much happier are those who are connected with godly people, than such as have their lot cast among the profane and wicked! (Note, 16:21, 22.)—Wretched is it for others, but most so for themselves, when children inherit the vices, with the estates, of their wicked parents: their temporal calamities may arise from the sins of their fathers; but "the wrath to come" will be the recompense of their own crimes.—Ungodly men execute the just judgment of God upon each other, whilst gratifying their own ambition, avarice, or revenge; and at the same time they ripen for sower vengeance, by imitating the sins of those whom they have supplanted. Many suffer, and many are induced to commit iniquity, by such rulers and usurpers. But in the midst of all these enormities, and this apparent confusion, the Lord is carrying on his universal plan: and when it shall be fully completed, all rational and holy creatures, and all the company of redeemed sinners, will perceive, admire, and adore the glorious justice, wisdom, truth, and mercy, displayed in every part of it through all the ages of eternity.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVI. V. 1. Hanani, the father of Jehu, was a prophet, as well as his son. (Note, 2 Chr. 16:7-10.) Jehu was a young man at this time, and he continued for many years employed by the Lord, and useful to his people. (Notes, 2 Chr. 19:2. 20:31-34.)—Thus a succession of prophets was raised up in the nation of Israel, through every generation, till the advent of Christ approached. (Preface to Malachi.)

V. 2. The conduct of Baasha, in conspiring against Nadab, and murdering him and Jeroboam's family, was highly criminal. But the success of his conspiracy, and his advancement from a very low condition, to the throne of Israel, were from the Lord; whose benefits aggravated the guilt of his subsequent idolatry and wickedness. (Note, 2 Sam. 12:8.)—God acknowledged Israel as his people, notwithstanding their apostasy, because they professed themselves his worshippers; because there were many believers in the land, and because he intended to maintain religion among them, and not utterly to cast them off. This also was an aggravation of Baasha's sin; that being, by Providence, made prince over the Lord's people, he employed his authority in causing them to sin against him.

V. 3-6. (Notes, 14:5-14.) Baasha was not slain, but died and was buried; Jeroboam also died: but the threatenings were executed on his whole family and posterity.

I will take away. (3) בִּמְהֵרָה: I will consume as by fire.

V. 7. It is likely that Jehu was sent from Judah, of which kingdom he seems to have been, and delivered his message to Baasha, as the man of God did to Jeroboam. (Notes, 13:1-6. 2 Chr. 16:7-10. 19:2.)—Killed him.—Baasha destroyed Jeroboam in his posterity, by cruelly murdering them all. God had not commanded him to do this, though he had predicted that it should be done. Baasha was actuated by his own ambition and other selfish passions; and therefore deserved punishment, though he fulfilled the righteous purposes of God. (Notes, 2 Kings 10:29-31. 1s. 10:5-15. Hos. 1:4, 5. Acts 2:22-24.)

V. 8-14. Baasha began to reign in the third year of Asa, and he reigned twenty-four years, yet he died, and was succeeded by Elah, in the twenty-sixth year of Asa. Thus, it is evident, that a part of the third year of Asa, after Baasha came to the throne, is calculated as a whole year. (Note, 15:9.) In like manner Elah, who began to reign in the twenty-sixth year of Asa, and was killed in the twenty-seventh, is said to have reigned two years, that is a part of two years.—The sentence denounced against the house of Baasha, greatly resembles that denounced against Jeroboam

10 And ²²⁰Zimri went in, and smote him, and killed him, in the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah, and reigned in his stead.

a. c.] 11 And it came to pass, when he began to reign, as soon as he sat on his throne, ²²¹that he slew all the house of Baasha: ²²²he left him not one that pisseth against a wall, ²²³neither of his kinsfolks nor of his friends.

12 Thus did Zimri destroy all the house of Baasha, ²²⁴according to the word of the LORD, which he spake against Baasha ²²⁵by Jehu the prophet, 13 For all the sins of Baasha, and the sins of Elah his son, by which they sinned, and by which they made Israel to sin, in provoking the LORD God of Israel to anger with their vanities.

14 Now the rest of the acts of Elah, and all that he did, ²²⁶are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

[Practical Observations.]

15 ¶ In the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah did Zimri reign ²²⁷seven days in Tirzah. And the people ²²⁸were encamped against Gibbethon, which ²²⁹belonged to the Philistines.

16 And the people ²³⁰that were encamped heard say, Zimri hath conspired, and hath also slain the king: wherefore all Israel made ²³¹Omri, the captain of the host, king over Israel that day in the camp.

17 And Omri went up from Gibbethon, and all Israel with him, and they ²³²besieged Tirzah.

18 And it came to pass, when Zimri saw that the city was taken, that he went into the palace of the king's house, ²³³and burnt the king's house over him with fire, and died, 19 For his sins which he sinned ²³⁴in doing evil in the sight of the LORD, in walking in the way of Jeroboam, and ²³⁵in his sin which he did, to make Israel to sin.

20 Now ²³⁶the rest of the acts of Zimri, and his reason that he wrought, ²³⁷are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

¶ 21 Then were the people of Israel ²³⁸divided into two parts: half of the people followed Tibni the son of Ginath, to make him king; and half followed Omri.

22 But the people that followed Omri prevailed against the people that followed Tibni the son of Ginath: so Tibni died, and Omri reigned.

23 ¶ In the thirty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah, began Omri to reign over Israel, ²³⁹twelve years: six years reigned he in Tirzah.

24 And he bought the hill Samaria of Shemei for two talents of silver, and built on the hill, and called ²⁴⁰the name of the city which he built, after the name of Shemer, owner of the hill, ²⁴¹Samaria.

25 But Omri wrought evil in the eyes of the LORD, and ²⁴²did worse than all that were before him.

26 For he walked in all the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin, to provoke the LORD God of Israel to anger with ²⁴³their vanities.

27 Now ²⁴⁴the rest of the acts of Omri, which he did, and his might that he showed, ²⁴⁵are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

28 So Omri ²⁴⁶slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria: and Ahab his son reigned ²⁴⁷in his stead.

29 ¶ And in the thirty and eighth year of Asa king of Judah, began Ahab the son of Omri to reign over Israel: and Ahab the son of Omri reigned over Israel fifteen years.

30 And Ahab the son of Omri did evil in the sight of the LORD ²⁴⁸above all that were before him.

31 And it came to pass, ²⁴⁹as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, that he ²⁵⁰took to wife Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal king of the Zidonians, and went and ²⁵¹served Baal, and worshipped him.

32 And he reared up an altar for Baal in ²⁵²the house of Baal, which he had built in Samaria.

and his family: and both Jeroboam and Baasha died in peace; while Nadab and Elah, their sons, were slain within two years, and the posterity of each of them was entirely and ignominiously extirpated! But Baasha's friends likewise were involved in the same ruin: and Zimri executed the sentence of the prophet with great rapidity; though he meant not so.—Drunk. (9) Marg. Ref. o.

V. 15. The death of Nadab had before prevented the prosecution of the siege of Gibbethon: (15:27, 28.) and it was the second time interrupted by the murder of Elah, who stayed at home to indulge himself while his army was besieging that city.—Gibbethon lay in the lot of Dan, but it was given to the Levites. (Josh. 19:44. 21:23.) The Philistines, however, had got possession of it, during the distractions which prevailed in Israel.

V. 17-19. The army, which besieged Gibbethon, having made their commander Omri king, by military election; and Omri having left the siege of Gibbethon, to make war against Zimri in Tirzah; Zimri, finding his cause desperate, afraid of falling alive into the hands of his enemies, and perhaps envying his competitor the possession of that palace and those riches which he had coveted, burnt himself, with the palace and all its treasures. He was driven to this extremity, and left to this desperation, by the righteous judgment of God, for his sins: as in the space of seven days he had murdered all the posterity and relations of Baasha; and had manifested his determination to support the worship of the golden calves. (Note, 2 Kings 9:30-37.)

V. 21, 22. The army, encamped before Gibbethon, chose Omri, their commander, king: but it seems either that some of them were afterwards disgusted by him; or that the principal persons, who were absent, disapproved of this measure, and set up Tibni against him.—As the war lasted six years, (Note, 23.) numbers no doubt were cut off on both sides, before the contest ended with the death of Tibni.

So Tibni, &c. (22) How much is contained in this concise sentence! and similar contests continually terminate in the same manner. It is an epitome especially of the history of civil wars.

V. 23. Twelve, &c.] Twelve years elapsed between the death of Zimri and that of Omri; namely from the beginning of the twenty-seventh, to the end of the thirty-eighth year of Asa's reign. But probably half that time had been spent in civil war between Omri and Tibni; and the thirty-first year of Asa was nearly concluded, when Omri obtained the undisputed possession of the throne; from which time he reigned six complete years.—Thus, whilst Israel was torn to pieces by intestine commotions, conspiracies, massacres, and the succession of one usurper to another, who were all monsters of iniquity, and all destroyed the families, friends, and adherents of the murdered king; Judah was quietly governed by one pious prince, who began to reign in the days of Jeroboam, survived Nadab, Baasha, Elah, Zimri, and Omri, and lived till the fourth year of Ahab. The revolt of Israel therefore proved to be mainly their own loss. (Note, 12:16.)

V. 24. It is probable, that the burning of the palace at Tirzah, by Zimri, induced Omri to this measure.—It is conjectured that Shemer sold this estate at a low price, upon condition of having the city to be built on it, called by his name. From this city the whole surrounding country was called Samaria, or Shomeran: and sometimes the whole kingdom of the ten tribes is thus called, after Samaria became the capital city. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 30-33. Omri had done worse than all that had been before him, and probably had enforced the worship of the golden calves with greater strictness and severity: (25:26,) but it seemed a light thing to Ahab to tread in his steps, or in those of Jeroboam; (Note, Ez. 16:44-47.) for, without any political inducement, he proceeded to still grosser idolatries. He had a rooted enmity to the worship of JEHOVAH, and to every thing which related to it; and he married Jezebel, a zealous and furious worshipper of Baal, on purpose, as it seems, to have her counsel and assistance in supplanting the worship of the Lord, and even of the golden calves; and in establishing that of Baal throughout the land.

V. 34. (Note, Josh. 6:26.) Four hundred and forty years had passed since this word had been spoken; and the exact accomplishment of it, after so long a period, was a solemn warning to the people, to expect the fulfilment of all the curses denounced against them, in case of their idolatry, by Moses and Joshua. (Notes, Deut. 4:25—28. Josh. 23:13—16.)—This account illustrates the daring spirit of rebellion against God, which prevailed in those wretched times. Hiel, inured to idolatry at Beth-el, set the curse of God at defiance: and, though his eldest son died when he laid the foundation of Jericho, he scorned to be intimidated, or to desist from his undertaking; till, when he completed the work, his youngest son died also; and the rest of his children, as it is supposed, in the intermediate space of time.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14. We do not well understand the rules, and plans of wisdom, justice, truth, and mercy, by which God governs nations and individuals; (Note, Ps. 97:2.) yet we may draw general instructive conclusions from this history. Frequently the Lord warns before he punishes: and they, who are not induced to repentance, are rendered more inexcusable in their wickedness. By whatever means men are advanced to authority; their exaltation is from the Lord, they are bound to use it in his service, and are liable to severe punishment for the abuse of it: yet they must also give an account to God, for the crimes committed in order to obtain the dangerous pre-eminence. The same observations hold good in respect of wealth, and every other temporal distinction.—God is greatly displeased with those who in any way tempt others to commit iniquity: but he is especially provoked by those, who seduce his professing people to apostasy, or true believers to conceal or disgrace their profession: persecutors, therefore, will be answerable for all the sins to which they tempt men by the dread of punishment, as well as for all the injustice which they commit, and the blood which they shed.—Those who follow the examples of such as have been awfully punished for their sins, may expect to be overtaken with similar vengeance: and many very wicked men have been men of might and renown, have built cities, and perpetuated their memories in the annals of history; but they have no name in the book of life, and stand condemned in the word of God.—The impunity of the principal culprits, while their children, relatives, or helpers suffer for their crimes, loudly declares the approaching day of judgment, and the more exact discrimination of characters, and distribution of rewards and punishments, which shall then take place.—No crime more degrades and exposes a man than drunkenness: and they who sit down with the intention of “drinking themselves drunk” or are persuaded to do so, should recollect how easily they may be murdered in such a state; in how many ways they may be hurried before the tribunal of God; and what an awful thing it would be, to meet their Judge in such a situation. And when rulers and great men spend their time in intemperate indulgence, instead of attending to the duties of their station, it bodes ill to the public and to themselves. (Notes, Esth. 3:12—15. Prov. 31:4—7. Ec. 10:16—19.)

V. 15—34. Wicked men accomplish the purposes of God without intending it; and their injustice and cruelty towards each other display his righteousness, while they illustrate the desperate wickedness of the heart of man.—When they are hurried on by their vile passions, and have got the power into their hands, they often perpetrate much wickedness in a little time: and thus they speedily fill up their measure, and hasten the vengeance of God upon themselves. Whether they destroy themselves, or are murdered by others, the ruin is brought upon them by sinning against the Lord: even in death they frequently show the predominancy of their pride, envy, and malice; and thus are driven away into the eternal world, not only under condemnation as sinners, but under the dominating power of most diabolical dispositions, being “vessels of wrath fitted for destruction.” From such a death, good Lord deliver us!—In all cases the triumphing of the ungodly is short; and for the wickedness of nations may we see their princes. When tyrants hastily succeed one another, with massacres, conspiracies, and civil wars; and when every one is worse than all that went before him; we may be sure that the Lord has a controversy with the people for their sins: and they are loudly called to repentance and reformation. Indeed, those who forsake God, will generally be left to plague

CHAPTER XVII.

Elijah foretells to Ahab a long and excessive drought; and is sent by God to the brook Cherith, and fed by ravens, 1—7. He is afterwards sent to Zarephath, and sustained by a widow-woman, whose barrel of meal and cruse of oil do not fail, 8—16. Her son dies, but is restored to life in answer to Elijah's prayer, whom she fully believes to be sent by God, 17—24.

one another: they, who seek not rest in his service, will always be unsettled and uneasy; and when his professed people quarrel with each other, their enemies will always be gainers.—Intermarriages with daring offenders greatly embolden men's minds in wickedness, and hurry them on to the greatest excesses.—The progress of iniquity must be from bad to worse; it seems a light thing to notorious sinners to walk in the steps of their predecessors; and they are often ambitious of distinguishing themselves, and of expressing their enmity and contempt of God, in ways before unheard of. Hence so many newly invented oaths, blasphemies, superstitions, and species of false religion; as well as new refinements in licentiousness and immorality.—When princes set the example of rebellion against God, their subjects will often ambitiously emulate them, and thus ungodliness becomes a test of loyalty, and a kind of fashionable accomplishment: nor will any warnings daunt the stout spirits of presumptuous sinners till wrath come upon them to the uttermost. But they, who despise the denunciations of God's word, will certainly know his truth in them by their own dreadful experience.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVII. V. 1. The most illustrious prophet Elijah was raised up, in the reign of the most wicked among the kings of Israel: and he is brought to our notice in a very abrupt manner. Nothing is recorded either of his parentage, education, or previous manner of life. He is called “the Tishbite,” but it is not agreed, whether this title was taken from the place where he lived, or given him because he was the reformer of Israel: for the word may signify a convert. He was of the inhabitants of Gilead, beyond Jordan; but we know not of which tribe. His name signifies, The LORD my God is He. This might imply that JEHOVAH, the true God, would stand by him in the perilous services to which he was called, in opposing the worship of false gods.—It may be supposed, that Elijah had previously warned Ahab to forsake his idolatry, and that he had treated his message with contempt: at length therefore, he declared, and confirmed it with a solemn oath by the LORD God of Israel, before whom he stood, (as his servant acting by his authority,) that there should be neither rain nor dew for years, but according to his word; that is, until he came again, and foretold its coming, and prayed for it. The expression, “As the LORD God of Israel liveth,” intimated that the idols of the heathen were lifeless stocks, and could not help their worshippers.—The duration of this drought was three years and a half; and the effects must have been inexpressibly calamitous. (Marg. Ref. c.) One whole year, without rain or dew, would afflict this land more terribly than it can be conceived: but in much less than three years and a half nearly all the cattle must be destroyed, and most of the inhabitants would be either dead or migrated into other countries. Yet the bulk of Israel continued mad upon their idols, throughout this most tremendous calamity! It was sent in answer to the prophet's prayer, which probably he offered in Ahab's hearing: and the judgment was intended to be a demonstration, that Baal could not defend his worshippers against the indignation of JEHOVAH. The glory of God and the interests of true religion were therefore so greatly concerned in this decision, which was needful in order to prevent the utter apostasy and rejection of Israel, that the prophet might present this petition in wise zeal, and true benevolence; and doubtless he was immediately instructed by the Lord to do so. The benefit of the calamity would abundantly outweigh the miseries: for though many were hardened, yet doubtless numbers were eventually brought to repentance, and made to embrace and continue steadfast in the service of the true God. (Note, Jam. 5:16—18.)

V. 2, 3. Elijah was commanded to conceal himself, not only to avoid the persecuting rage of Ahab instigated by Jezebel, but as an additional judgment upon the Israelites. The Lord did not intend to shorten the term of the calamity, and he would not have his servant pray for it and be denied. (Notes, Jer. 14:10—12. 15:1.) He was pleased therefore to send him out of the way, that he might not be solicited and refuse; and all this time the people were deprived of the benefit of Elijah's example and instructions. Thus he was excluded from society and usefulness: but he doubtless was engaged in heavenly contemplation and communion with God; and in prayers for the reformation of his people, and for their being turned unto the Lord, though not for the present removal of the famine.—The brook Cherith ran into the river Jordan; (5) but it seems the place was so retired, and the prophet kept so close, that neither friends nor foes knew where he was. (Note, 18:10.)

V. 4—6. Elijah was a very extraordinary person, and every circumstance relating to him was rendered equally ex-shall not be 'dew nor rain these years, but according to my word.

2 And 'the word of the LORD came unto him, saying,

3 Get thee hence, and turn thee eastward, and 'hide thyself by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

4 And it shall be, that thou shalt drink of the brook; and 'I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there.

5 So he went and 'did according unto the word of the LORD: for he went and dwelt by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

6 And 'the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening; and he drank of the brook.

7 And it came to pass, 'after a while, that 'the brook dried up, because there had been no rain in the land. [Practical Observations.]

8 ¶ And 'the word of the LORD came unto him, saying,

9 Arise, get thee to 'Zarephath, 'which belongeth to Zidon, and dwell there: behold, I have commanded a 'widow-woman there to sustain thee.

10 So he arose and went to Zarephath. And when he came to the gate of the city, behold, the widow-woman was there gathering of sticks: and he called to her, and said, 'Fetch me, I pray thee, a little water in a vessel, that I may drink.

11 And 'as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, 'a morsel of bread in thy hand.

traordinary, in order to excite the attention of a thoughtless and hardened generation. Ravens, being birds of prey, were far more likely to take away the food of those who had any, than to bring bread and flesh to the prophet in his destitute situation: but the command, or miraculous power of God, suspended their natural instinct, and made them act directly contrary to it. (Note, 1 Sam. 6:10-16.) It is useless and presumptuous to inquire whence they procured the bread and flesh, or how the food was prepared? He who commanded them to feed his servant, had ten thousand ways of enabling them to fulfil his word. Thus Elijah was sufficiently provided for, when numbers were starving; and the consolations of the Lord would render him contented with his solitude and sustenance.—Some have objected that ravens, being unclean birds, would pollute the food which they brought; but this arises from a mistake. The flesh of unclean animals might not be eaten; but the touch of them when living, communicated no ceremonial uncleanness, either to food, or any other thing: for asses and camels were also unclean; yet in constant use, for carrying provisions, as well as for other purposes. (Note, Lev. 11:31.)

V. 7. Elijah seems to have continued in this situation about a year: the natural supply of water which came by common Providence failed because of the dry weather; but the miraculous supply of food, which was ensured to him by promise, failed not. (Note, 10-16.)

V. 9. (Marg. Ref. 1.) This woman was of Gentile extraction, a Zidonian, of the same nation with Jezebel the patroness of the worship of Baal; (16:31.) yet she had become acquainted with the God of Israel, and probably was a spiritual worshipper of him, when the nation of Israel was in general lapsed to idolatry. (Note, Matt. 15:21-24.) That ravens first, and then a poor widow-woman, a Gentile, should be employed to feed God's prophet, in preference to any of the Israelites, was a severe refection upon that people: and Elijah's being sent to Zarephath, rather than to any other city, or any poor distressed widows, of Israel, was an illustration of God's sovereignty, and a pre-inauguration of the calling of the Gentiles. (Note, Luke 4:23-30.)—As the Lord commands his creatures, according to their natures and capacities; perhaps this poor widow had received some pre-inauguration of Elijah's coming, and a command to entertain him, nothing doubting.

V. 10-16. The effects of the famine in the land of Israel, were severely felt at Zidon also, and probably in all the adjacent countries; Judah perhaps being excepted. The poor woman was gathering sticks for fuel, when addressed by the 12 And she said, 'As the LORD thy God liveth I have not a cake, 'but a handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse: and behold, I am gathering two sticks, that I may go in and dress it for me and my son, 'that we may eat it and die.

13 And Elijah said unto her, 'Fear not; go and do as thou hast said: but 'make me thereof a little cake 'first, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and for thy son.

14 For 'thus saith the LORD God of Israel, 'The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the LORD 'sendeth rain upon the earth.

15 And she went and 'did according to the saying of Elijah: and she, and he, and her house, did eat 'many days.

16 And 'the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, 'according to the word of the LORD, which he spake 'by Elijah.

[Practical Observations.]

17 ¶ And it came to pass after these things, that 'the son of the woman, the mistress of the house, fell sick; and his sickness was so sore, 'that there was no breath left in him.

18 And she said unto Elijah, 'What have I to do with thee, 'O thou man of God? 'Hast thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?

19 And he said unto her, Give me thy son. And he took him out of her bosom, and carried him up 'into a loft, where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed.

prophet, who probably knew by a divine intimation that she was the person appointed to entertain him. Notwithstanding her distress, and the scarcity that prevailed, she readily complied with the request of a stranger to fetch him a little water. But when he craved a morsel of bread also, she called "the LORD his God" to witness, that she had none, but was going to prepare her very last provision; and then had nothing to look for, but death by hunger, for herself and her son. It must be supposed that she knew Elijah to be an Israelite by his appearance and attire: (Note, Num. 15:38-40,) and he had perhaps declared himself the servant of JEHOVAH, and asked her for bread and water in his name; and for his sake, she would have been ready to help him, if it had been in her power. Moreover, she doubtless perceived something venerable in his aspect, which prepossessed her in his favour so that when he required her, "in the name of the LORD," to make him a cake first, (which, in her circumstances, was surely one of the hardest commands that ever was given!) promising her that her scanty supply should not fail; her faith surmounted all difficulties and silenced all objections: she believed his words, and did as she was directed, and so "became heir of the righteousness that is by faith." (Note, Heb. 11:7.) Thus having "entertained a prophet, in the name of a prophet, she received a prophet's reward." (Note, Matt. 10:40-42.) For above two years she and her son, as well as Elijah, were fed miraculously with sufficient provision; and she lived by faith, in temporal as well as in spiritual things! For though the margin renders the words "many days," a full year; it is evident from the continuance of the famine, that Elijah abode with her a much longer time.

V. 17. Perhaps the woman's son died suddenly, before the prophet had opportunity to pray for his recovery; because the Lord intended a greater display of his own glory, and a more distinguishing favour to the woman, than the sparing of his life: or he was left to die without any miraculous interposition, to try her faith. (Notes, Mark 5:35-43. John 11:1-10.)

V. 18. This woman had doubtless heard, that the drought had come upon Israel in answer to Elijah's prayer; and perhaps she supposed that her affliction had come upon her in the same way. She seems to have venerated his sanctity and to have had a trembling consciousness of her own sinfulness. Perhaps the death of her son brought her former worship of Baal to remembrance; or she thought she was not worthy of the company of the prophet, or had not duly profited by it. But her mind was much agitated; and she

20 And he cried unto the Lord, and said, O Lord my God, hast thou also brought evil upon the w-dow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son?

22 And the Lord heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, "and he revived."

23 And Elijah took the child, and brought him down out of the chamber into the house, and delivered him unto his mother: and Elijah said, "See, thy son liveth."

24 ¶ And the woman said to Elijah, "Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth."

words imply a mixture of unbelief and impatience, as well as self-abasement and a sense of guilt. And she seems to have thought the presence of the man of God was dangerous, and hastened divine judgments upon her. (Luke 5:8. Notes, 1 Sam. 16:4. 2 Sam. 6:8,9.) Yet by her own account the prophet's presence had prolonged her son's life, and her own also. (12) 'Their sins are said to be "called to remembrance" by the God, when he punishes them.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, Ez. 21:23).

V. 19. Left. 'The LXX translate it ἐνταύθα, an upper room; which he had to himself for his study, meditation, and prayer; as Elisha afterwards had in another place: 2 Kings 4:10.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 20. Elijah himself could not understand the mystery of this dispensation; but greatly wondered that the Lord should bring evil on the woman, who entertained him for his sake, as well as on those who rejected both God and his prophet; and he expostulated with God on the occasion.

V. 21, 22. The external conduct of Elijah denoted the earnestness of his desires, and the greatness of his expectations, of the child's restoration to life. He would, if possible, have communicated of his own life to him, or have concurred, if any thing had been in his power, to his revival.—The expression, "Let this child's soul come into him again," not only intimates the prophet's certainty that he was really dead; but it marks the distinction between the rational soul and the earthly body to be as real, as that between the house and its inhabitant: for both the prophet and the historian, "speaking as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," used proper language. No one had yet, as far as we know, been raised from the dead, and perhaps no prayer to this effect had ever before been offered. (Notes, Gen. 22:5,6. John 9:27-34. Rom. 4:18-22. Heb. 11:17-19.) Elijah's petition was no doubt directed by immediate inspiration.

V. 24. The woman had been strongly tempted to unbelief; but she had now got the victory, and was more confirmed and assured in faith and hope than ever. She had doubted, but now she knew, that Elijah was the servant of God, and she fully expected the performance of all his declarations.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. The Lord will have witnesses to his truth in the worst of times; and as he does not immediately cast off his professing people, when they renounce his service; he employs various methods to convince them of their sin, and to bring them to repentance.—Great intrepidity and resolution are necessary for those who are employed to stop the torrent of prevailing iniquity, or to declare the message of God before persecuting tyrants: but he who sends them, will qualify them, and bear them out in these arduous and perilous services.—Impenitent sinners have eventually the prayers even of the most benevolent ministers of God against them: because, if they go on in sin, his glory requires their destruction; and every servant of the Lord seeks His glory, in preference to every other consideration. But, if the severest temporal judgments be made effectual to bring men to serve God, they will have great cause to bless him for sending them.—Fruitful seasons, and abundance of provisions for the body, are valuable mercies, and famine is a most tremendous evil: yet the liberty and opportunity of attending on divine ordinances are more valuable advantages; and a famine of the word of God is above all to be dreaded and deprecated. (Notes, Am. 8:11-14.)—The Lord will provide for those who serve him faithfully: and he will teach them to be satisfied with their provisions though mean, and their situation though outwardly uncomfortable. Indeed, if we consider how much better we are dealt with than we deserve, and how many are destitute of the necessities of life; we shall see abundant reason to be contented with food and raiment, of the meanest and coarsest kind: nor ought we ever to desire luxuries or superfluities.—It is the greatest trial to the faithful and zealous minister, to be taken off from his work and usefulness, and excluded from the society of pious persons: yet, if thus circumstanced, he should submit to it as his trial, wait the Lord's time to be employed again, seek his comfort from communion with him and diligently prepare for future service. And if the trying dispensation did not arise from his own misconduct, the loss will not eventually be his, but that of those from whom he is banished; being frequently a judgment upon them for not profiting by former advantages, while they enjoy them.—All nature shall sooner change its course, than one of God's promises fail. We do not indeed now expect literally to be fed by ravens: but the Lord often employs selfish men, contrary to their nature and general character to support his indigent people, or to maintain his cause by their property. The thanks, in this case, are due to the Lord, who sends the provisions by such instruments: but we should pray, that, as he has counteracted their natural disposition in this instance, he would be pleased also to change them by his renewing grace.

V. 8-16. The Lord does not generally provide long together for his people in the same way, or by the same means; lest they should rest in them, and expect help from them. But he permits one resource to fail; and when he has left them nothing but his own promise to trust to, he unexpectedly opens another resource; that they may admire the manifold riches of his wisdom, as well as adore his power, truth and love. Frequently he raises supplies from those who themselves need relief: "the abundance of their joy, and their deep poverty, abound unto the riches of their liberality:" (Notes, 2 Cor. 8:1-5. 9:8-11.) and he supplies their wants, whilst they are encouraged to communicate of their pittance to others still more destitute. Indeed our faith must be proved by various trials in providence, as well as by our obedience to the commandments of God; and must also grow strong by exercise. But when it is genuine, it "worketh by love" of him and of his people: and the desire of doing good to others for his sake, united to a firm expectation that his promises will be performed, produces obedience even to hard commands, notwithstanding all the reluctance and objections of our distrustful, selfish hearts.—They who come unto God, and walk with him, must simply trust him, nay, venture their lives and souls upon his word, and at his command renounce every present interest, in expectation of future and more enduring advantages. Genuine faith encourages men to do this; while unbelief dislikes the security, holds fast things present, and for the perishing pleasures and interests of this world forgoes the blessings of eternal salvation. If it none can be losers in the event by giving up secular advantages, at the Lord's command; and what is expended upon his people, for his sake, shall be recompensed as if given to himself: so that the self-denial and liberality of faith, are the best means of excluding the fear of future want, of providing for our families, and of placing out our substance at the highest interest, and upon the most unexceptionable security. In these funds the poor may obtain property, as well as the rich; for a morsel of bread, or a cup of water, will go as far, when it is all that we can give, as thousands of gold and silver when they can be spared. (Notes, Prov. 19:17. Mark 12:41-44. Luke 6:27-36. 2 Cor. 8:10-15.)

V. 17-24. Neither faith nor obedience, however exemplary, can exclude afflictions and death: and under severe and unexpected trials it is extremely difficult to avoid impatience, and to exercise unshaken confidence and unreserved submission. But the Lord bears with our infirmities and compassionates our sorrows: and we should pity and readily help each other, thus bearing one another's burdens, according to the example and command of Christ. (Note, Gal. 6:1-5.) Though we cannot work miracles for the relief of the afflicted, we may afford much assistance to them; and in all cases we may pray in faith, that the Lord would sanctify and make up every loss, by the influences and consolations of his Spirit.—The Lord by afflictions "calls our sins to remembrance;" and this should quiet our spirits, and lead us to self-examination and repentance, that we may obtain forgiveness from him: and thus all shall issue in our increase of faith, assurance of hope, and joyful expectation of every promised good.—Thus when Jesus comes to communicate his blessings, the convinced trembling sinner often mistakes the meaning of those humbling instructions which he imparts, and those trials which he employs; he is ready to suspect, that he means to "bring his sins to remembrance," and to slay all his hopes; and is tempted to say, "What have I to do with thee?" But the loving Saviour pities and bears with such trembling souls: and when he has turned their mourning into joy, by reviving their hopes and forgiving their sins; they admire his love and power, and know assuredly that his word is truth; and expect every future good in reliance on his promise, and obedience to his holy will.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVIII. V. 1, 2. The third year. That is, in the third year of Elijah's abode at Zarephath. For it is probable, that he continued there above two years, which, added to a year at the brook Cherith, completed three years and a half: for this was the time which the drought lasted. Some, however, think he remained just two years at Zarephath; and that the six months preceded his returning to

CHAPTER XVIII.

Elijah is sent to meet Ahab, 1, 2. Ahab and pious Obadiah go different ways, to search the land for pasture, 3-6. Elijah meets Obadiah and sends him to call Ahab, 7-16. Ahab, at Elijah's word, condemns Israel, with the prophets of Baal, at Carmel, 17-29. Elijah proposes to decide, whether JEHOVAH or Baal be God, by proving which would answer by fire, 21-24. Baal's prophets invoke him in vain, 25-29. Elijah prepares a sacrifice, causes much water to be poured upon it, and calls on JEHOVAH, who answers by fire, consuming the altar with the sacrifice; the people are convinced that JEHOVAH is God; and at Elijah's word they slay Baal's prophets, 30-40. Elijah gives Ahab notice of abundant rain, which he obtains by prayer; and then he runs before Ahab's chariot to Jezreel, 41-46.

AND it came to pass ^aafter many days, that the word of the LORD came to Elijah in ^bthe third year, saying, ^cGo, show thyself unto Ahab; and ^dI will send rain upon the earth.

2 And Elijah ^ewent to show himself unto Ahab. And there was ^fa sore famine in Samaria.

3 And Ahab called ^gObadiah, which was ^hthe governor of his house. (Now Obadiah ⁱfeared the LORD greatly :

4 For it was ^jso, when ^kJezebel ^lcut off the prophets of the LORD, that Obadiah ^mtook a hundred prophets, and hid them by fifty ⁿin a cave, and ^ofed them with ^pbread and water.)

5 And Ahab said unto Obadiah, Go into the land, unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks: peradventure we may find ^qgrass to save the horses and mules alive, that ^rwe lose not all the beasts.

6 So they divided the land between them, to pass throughout it: ^sAhab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

7 ¶ And as Obadiah ^twas in the way, behold, Elijah met him: and ^uhe knew him, and ^vfell on his face, and said, ^wArt thou that ^xmy lord Elijah?

the brook Cherith. (Luke 4:25.)—He seems to have been little noticed at Zarephath, notwithstanding the miracles which he wrought.—Elijah could not but deeply lament the miseries of Israel: but he did not leave his retirement, till the Lord ordered him to go to Ahab, previously to his sending ^arain upon the land,^b as it should be rendered; for the land of Israel was especially intended.—The extremity of the famine rendered it the more dangerous for him to show himself to the enraged tyrant: but at this time he was raised above all fear of what flesh could do unto him. (Notes, 19:2.)

V. 3. Obadiah signifies The servant of the LORD. Obadiah was so faithful and useful a servant to Ahab, that even Jezebel's instigation did not induce him to dismiss or injure him: and he was, it seems, willing to retain his place, though perilous and difficult while he could with a safe conscience; as he might do some good, and prevent some evil, by continuing in it: and, though he witnessed abominable idolatries and iniquities, we may be sure, that he was not required to bow his knee unto Baal. (Notes, Dan. 2:46-49. 3:1-7.) He feared the LORD greatly. Obadiah, at a distance from religious ordinances, and surrounded by the worst of examples and by strong temptations, was eminently pious and devoted to God! (Notes, Gen. 22:11, 12. Ec. 12:1-14.)

V. 4. Wicked as Ahab was, he does not seem to have directly persecuted, except as instigated by Jezebel, until she had long trained him up to it.—After the institution of the worship of the golden calves, the priests and Levites, and pious Israelites, had generally left their possessions, and gone up to the tribe of Judah and united with it: (Note, 2 Chr. 11:13-17.) but the Lord had mercifully raised up prophets, who promoted true religion throughout the land. It is probable, that they were brought up in the schools of the prophets, first instituted by Samuel, which still remained, and were made very serviceable by the blessing of God upon them. (Notes, 1 Sam. 10:5, 6. 2 Kings 2:3. 4:1.) These prophets did not stately offer sacrifices: nor did they require the people to go up to Jerusalem to keep the solemn feasts: but they taught them the essentials of true religion, either in private houses, or in such assemblies as were afterwards called synagogues. Thus they worshipped the God of Israel towards, though not at, the temple and Jerusalem: (Note, 8:28-30.) and there seems to have been considerable numbers of believers dispersed through the tribes. Against these prophets, who were the chief opposers of idolatry, (and doubtless against the seminaries where they were educated,) Jezebel's rage was directed, and she cut off many of them: but Obadiah found means to conceal and preserve a hundred persons, through the persecution, supporting them in their concealment at his own expense. And, though his conduct was no secret, he 8 And he answered him, I am: go, tell ^athy lord Behold, Elijah ^bis here.

9 And he said, ^cWhat have I sinned, that thou wouldest deliver thy servant into the hand of Ahab, to slay me?

10 ^dAs ^ethe LORD thy God liveth, there is no nation nor kingdom, ^fwhither my lord hath not sent to seek thee: and when they said, ^gHe is not there, he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that ^hthey found thee not.

11 And now thou sayest, ⁱGo, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah ^jis here.

12 And it shall come to pass, ^kas soon as I am gone from thee, that ^lthe spirit of the LORD shall carry thee whither I know not; and so when I come and tell Ahab, and he cannot find thee, ^mhe shall slay me: but I thy servant fear the LORD ⁿfrom my youth.

13 Was it not told my lord ^owhat I did when Jezebel slew the prophets of the LORD, how I hid a hundred men of the LORD's prophets by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water?

14 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah ^pis here; and he shall slay me.

15 And Elijah said, ^qAs the LORD ^rof hosts liveth, ^sbefore whom I stand, I will surely show myself unto him to-day.

16 So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him: and Ahab went to meet Elijah.

was still protected and employed by Ahab!—Bread and water. That is, with the necessities of life; "food convenient for them." (13:8, 9, 16, 22.)

V. 5, 6. Horses, &c. (5) Ahab seems to have been more anxious about the animals, which ministered to his luxury, than about those, which were more immediately necessary to his poor subjects, as sheep, goats, and oxen. That the king in person should go upon such a business, could only be the effect of the extremity of the famine. Probably most of the cattle, and many of the people, had perished: yet no mention was made of returning to the Lord with repentance, fasting, and prayer! (Notes, Joel 1:13-15. 2:15-17.) Had God never sent to them, it seems they would never have applied to him to terminate the calamity, whatever extremities they had endured: but he had a remnant, for whose sake he was pleased to return to them in mercy; and the glory of his name required, that he should not yet give up Israel to utter destruction. (Notes, 19:18. Judg. 3:9, 10, 14. Rom. 11:1-6.)

V. 7. Elijah was a poor man, and greatly hated in Ahab's court, in which Obadiah held considerable preferment: yet Obadiah, by word and deed, testified the greatest reverence for him, as to an honoured and distinguished superior; because he was a man of God, and of eminent sanctity! (Note, Matt. 8:8, 9.)

V. 10. No nation, &c. That is, in the neighbourhood, among Ahab's dependants and allies.—He was so earnest to discover Elijah, that he caused the rulers of those countries, in which he possessed sufficient influence, to swear that they did not conceal him, and perhaps that they would deliver him up if they found him: yet Elijah lived part of the time in Ahab's own kingdom; and the rest, in the country of Zidon, whence Jezebel came!—As Ahab offered no violence to the prophet when he met him, it has been thought, that he did not seek him from a vindictive motive, but in expectation that he would terminate the terrible drought which he had denounced: as if the prophet could do it without the Lord, to whom no application was made! It is, however, probable, that resentment and enmity greatly influenced Ahab; and that Jezebel intended to cut off Elijah also, if he could have been found, at least, unless he consented to remove the famine. But Ahab was over-awed by his unexpected appearance and intrepidity, and did not dare to proceed against him. (Note, 2 Kings 1:15, 16.)

V. 12-16. Obadiah, even in Ahab's family, had from his youth been a devoted and zealous worshipper of JEHOVAH! He introduced the mention of his good services, not in ostentation, but as an evidence of his sincerity. He well knew how exceedingly Ahab would be offended, if he thought himself imposed upon, in a matter which he had so much at 18 And he answered, 'I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, ⁱⁿ that ye have forsaken the commandments of the LORD, and thou hast followed Baalim.

20 So Ahab sent unto all the children of Israel, and gathered the prophets together unto mount Carmel.

21 And Elijah came unto all the people, and said, ^{How} long halt ye between two ^{opinions}? if the LORD be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word.

22 Then said Elijah unto the people, I, even I only, remain a prophet of the LORD; but ^{Baal's} prophets are four hundred and fifty men.

23 Let them therefore give us two bullocks; and let them choose one bullock for themselves, and cut it in pieces, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under: and I will dress the other bullock, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under:

25 And Elijah said unto the prophets of Baal, Choose you one bullock, for yourselves, and dress it first; for ye are many; and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under.

26 And they took the bullock which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Baal ^{from} morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, ^{hear} us. But there was ^{no} voice, nor any that ^{answered}. And they ^{leaped} upon the altar which was made.

27 And it came to pass at noon, that ^{Elijah} mocked them, and said, Cry aloud: for he is a god: either ^{he} is talking, or he ^{is} pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and ^{must} be awaked.

28 And they cried aloud, and ^{cut} themselves after their manner with knives and lancets, till ^{the} blood gushed out upon them.

29 And it came to pass, when mid-day was past, and they ^{prophesied} until the time of the ^{offering} of the evening sacrifice, that there was ^{neither} voice, nor any to answer, nor any ^{that} regarded.

neart: and perhaps he concluded that Ahab would be enraged, because he had not apprehended the prophet, when he had the opportunity. He could not suppose that Elijah intended to venture into the presence of his indignant enemy, and he was persuaded, that the Spirit of the Lord could readily convey away his servant, and again conceal him: (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, 2 Kings 2:16-18. Ez. 8:2-4) and therefore he desired to be excused from so perilous a service. But when the prophet solemnly assured him, that he did not mean to elude Ahab, but to show himself unto him on that very day, he willingly went to inform him.

V. 17. Elijah was the grand opposer of Ahab's plan, for bringing Israel to unite in the worship of Baal, and so making, according to his views, a quiet settlement of the religion of the nation; and in this sense he perhaps deemed him "a troubler of Israel." (Notes, Acts 16:19-24. 17:5-9).—But it is not easy to determine what his precise sentiments were concerning the drought, which came at Elijah's word. If he thought, that it was caused and continued by the prophet's power, and could be removed at his will; and that he troubled Israel in not removing it; he must have been disposed to credit any absurdity, rather than believe that JEHOVAH was the Author of it, and that it could be removed only by his power; or allow that it was his interest and duty to return to the worship of God which he had forsaken. (Notes, Ez. 7:22,23. 1 Sam. 6:2-9.)

V. 18-20. "Baalim" is the plural number: for Ahab worshipped many false gods.—The boldness and authority, with which the prophet charged him as the "troubler of Israel," intimidated the king, who had not his prompter Jezebel with him. He was afraid perhaps, that Elijah would execute judgment upon him at once, if he further offended him. (Note, 1 Sam. 15:26-28.) he found the prophet would not be induced by menaces and reproaches to comply with his requirements; and he was willing to be upon terms with him, in hopes that he would procure the removal of the famine: and thus he was induced to consent to the demand which he made.—It seems that an altar had been built upon mount Carmel, and sacrifices offered or ^{to} JEHOVAH; (30) but the worship of Baal had supplanted even this irregular service of the one living and true God.—There were no less than four hundred and fifty prophets, or priests, of Baal, and four hundred of the groves (^{אשרות}), who are supposed to have been devoted to a Zidonian goddess. These four hundred especially were entertained at Jezebel's table, as a kind of domestic chaplains; though no doubt they too were at times sent, at her expense, into every part of the land, to promote idolatry among the inhabitants.—Elijah, however, desired to confront the whole company before all the people of Israel, and to bring the matter in dispute to a fair decision. But when JEHOVAH had called for drought, and neither Baal nor any other of their idols could send rain, the matter was already sufficiently plain to every reasonable person. (Note, Jer. 14:19-22.)

Troubled, &c. (18) 'They trouble a nation who break the laws of God, not they that defend them.' Bp. Patrick.

(Note, Josh. 7:25,26.)

north of the land. (Josh. 19:26.) Not Carmel, in the lot of Judah: (1 Sam. 25:2.)

V. 21. Halt ye, &c. The metaphor is taken from the unequal walk of a lame person. Many of the people wavered in judgment, and varied in practice; sometimes worshipping JEHOVAH, at others worshipping Baal, as their convictions or interests prevailed: or they endeavoured to form a coalition between them, of which Baal's prophets would probably admit: but to which JEHOVAH would never consent. Elijah therefore called upon them without further delay to determine, whether of the two was the self-existent and eternal God, the Creator, Governor, and Judge of the world; and to follow him alone, whether JEHOVAH or Baal were he, as there could be no more than one supreme God. (Notes, Deut. 6:4,5. Josh. 24:14,15. Matt. 6:24.) To this the people answered nothing: being unwilling to confess their guilt, or offend the king, and not being able to object to what he said, or being ashamed of their conduct.

V. 22. Elijah was the only prophet of JEHOVAH who stood forth at this time; the prophets whom Obadiah preserved, and the prophets of whom we afterwards read, being driven into concealment. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 4. 19:10.)

V. 23. Elijah conceded the preference, in every external circumstance, to the prophets of Baal, that the victory might be the more conspicuous, to the glory of God alone: for doubtless he acted by direction from heaven. (Note, Ez. 8:9-11.)

V. 24. The proposal was so reasonable, that the people at once agreed to it; and thus Baal's prophets were constrained either to comply: or to allow Baal to be an imponent idol, and JEHOVAH the only true God.—By fire. (Marg. Ref. v. Notes, Gen. 4:3-5. Lev. 9:24.)

V. 26. O Baal, &c. (Note, Matt. 6:7,8.) The continued cry of four hundred and fifty prophets, during several hours, with an unmeaning repetition of the words, "O Baal, hear us," with great vehemence, must have formed a most dissonant vociferation; whilst like frantic men, they leaped upon, or round, or up and down, at the altar and sacrifice, according to the worship which they were accustomed to perform!—Some think that the sun was worshipped under the name Baal; and that this encouraged his prophets to expect an answer by fire.

V. 27-29. Elijah mocked, or ridiculed, the false prophets, and ironically observed, that Baal, no doubt, had a very great number of engagements, and therefore was taken up, or at a distance, or asleep; and therefore his votaries would not succeed without greater earnestness and louder cries! (Notes, 22:15. Ec. 11:9,10. Is. 44:12-17. Mark 7:9.)—The absurdity of the idolatry was worthy of being exposed to contempt before the people, though the effects of it were most deplorable.—It seems however, that they thought Elijah in earnest in his counsel and determined to follow it; and, still more to please the demon whom they worshipped as God, they cut their flesh, and mingled their own blood with that of their sacrifice, according to the frequent custom of idolaters! But all their efforts proved in vain: though they continued to prophesy, after their manner, till three hours after noonday had passed, showing tokens of being under a supernatural influence; and, at a any support, singing near unto me. And all the people came near unto him. And he repaired the altar of the LORD that was broken down.

31 And Elijah took twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob, unto whom the word of the LORD came, saying, Israel shall be thy name:

32 And with the stones he built an altar in the name of the LORD: and he made a trench about the altar, as great as would contain two measures of seed.

33 And he put the wood in order, and cut the bullock in pieces, and laid him on the wood, and said, Fill four barrels with water, and pour it on the burnt-sacrifice, and on the wood.

34 And he said, Do it the second time. And they did it the second time. And he said, Do it the third time. And they did it the third time.

35 And the water ran round about the altar; and he filled the trench also with water.

36 And it came to pass at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near and said, LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things in thy word.

hymns to Baal along with their absurd and frantic devotions. No doubt Satan could have sent fire, and would if he might have done it; but he can do nothing except what is permitted to him. (Notes, Job 1:9-12, 16. Matt. 8:30-32.) —The evening sacrifice. (29) About three hours before sunset. (Note, 36, 37.)

V. 30. The prophet gave his competitors full opportunity of making a fair trial what Baal could do: but when they had prophesied till almost evening, it was time that he should proceed to show them what JEHOVAH could and would do; and therefore he interrupted them by addressing the people. (Note, 18-20.)

V. 31. (Note, Ex. 20:21-25.) Elijah meant by this exact number of stones, selected to repair, or rebuild, the altar of JEHOVAH which had gone to decay, to show, that the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, notwithstanding divisions and apostasies, were yet the people of JEHOVAH, and formed one church and nation: and that they ought to unite in worshipping the God of their fathers, and in opposing all idolatry. The reference to the name of "Israel" given to Jacob, when he wrestled with God and prevailed, was suited to shame the people from their idol-worship, as well as to encourage Elijah's own heart in prayer. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 32:24-30.)

V. 32-35. By forming this trench, or trough, round about the altar, and both filling it with water, and pouring a great quantity upon the altar, the burnt-offering, and the wood, Elijah excluded all possibility of suspicion that any fire had been concealed, and thus rendered the divine interposition more illustrious and convincing.

V. 36, 37. The prophet, by the time chosen for his sacrifice and prayer, avowed his communion with the worshippers of God, at his temple in Jerusalem: and he briefly, but most fervently, besought JEHOVAH on this important occasion to interpose; that the people might be convinced that he was indeed the true God, the God of their fathers, and of the nation; and also that all, which he, his servants, had done, concerning the famine especially, had been in obedience to God's command. This would greatly display the glory of his name, and promote the highest good of his people; since they might henceforth know and worship him, as that God, who had thus turned their hearts back from idolatry unto himself, to worship and serve him alone, and to render the whole praise and glory unto his name. Holy zeal and intelligent good-will to Israel suggested every word, and rendered the prayer peculiarly emphatical; especially when contrasted with the unmeaning and long-continued vociferations of Baal's prophets. (Note, 26.)

V. 38, 39. It is probable, that this fire appeared as lightning, though no cloud was seen: or it was called "the fire of God," from its extraordinary force, and its unparalleled effects; and especially as sent to plead the cause of God, and to expose his worthless rival to contempt. (Marg. Ref. t, u.)—It would be more perspicuous and emphatical to retain the original word, JEHOVAH, in the translation of this chapter. The people were convinced, for the time, that JEHOVAH was the only true God; and they prostrated them-

37 Hear me, O LORD, hear me, that this people may know that thou art the LORD God, and that thou hast turned their heart back again.

38 Then the fire of the LORD fell, and consumed the burnt-sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench.

39 And when all the people saw it, they fell on their faces: and they said, The LORD, he is the God; the LORD, he is the God.

40 And Elijah said unto them, Take the prophets of Baal; let not one of them escape. And they took them: and Elijah brought them down to the brook Kishon, and slew them there.

41 And Elijah said unto Ahab, Get thee up, eat and drink; for there is a sound of abundance of rain.

42 So Ahab went up to eat and to drink. And Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; and he cast himself down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees, 43 And said to his servant, Go up now, look toward the sea. And he went up, and looked, and said, There is nothing. And he said, Go again seven times.

44 And it came to pass at the seventh time, that he said, Behold, there ariseth a little cloud selves before him with terror, mixed with reverence.—It has been observed, that the fire on this occasion consumed the altar as well as the sacrifice, because oblations were not there steadily to be offered; but at the dedication of the temple, the sacrifice was consumed, and the altar continued. (Notes, Lev. 9:24. 2 Chr. 7:1-3.)

V. 40. Baal's prophets, being Israelites, idolaters, and teachers of idolatry in Israel, were condemned by the prophet to die, according to the express injunctions of the Mosaic law. (Notes, Deut. 13:1-5, 18:20-22.) The people, under the present impression, readily concurred with Elijah, and Ahab did not interpose to prevent the execution of the condemned criminals.—"The four hundred prophets of the groves," were not present on this occasion. Some learned men think, that they were Zidonians, not Israelites; and therefore their attendance had not been insisted on, or they had refused to come.

V. 41. (Note, 17:1.) The idolatry of Israel having received a powerful check, and its chief abettors the prophets of Baal having suffered condign punishment; the prophet declared to Ahab the approach of deliverance from that awful calamity, under which the land had so long groaned; and encouraged him to go and cheerfully refresh himself. (Note, 2 Sam. 21:9-14.) It is probable, that the prophet, who throughout this chapter spake and acted with heroic intrepidity, "being strong in faith, giving glory to God," was too sanguine in his expectations of subsequent success. Ahab's concurrence in all that he had done, or connivance at it, and the people's decided language and conduct, led him to conclude, that he should, as it were, carry all before him, till the worship of Baal was wholly extirpated. This unwarranted expectation made way for the timid conduct and depressed state of mind, which is recorded in the next chapter. (Notes, 19:1-14.) In this chapter he shows what man may be and do, when God upholds and strengthens him; in the next what the same man is, when left to himself. This appears, in the case of Elijah, as clearly, though in a far different way, as in the case of Samson: (Notes, Judg. 16:) and in many things it resembles what St. Paul records of himself. (Notes, 2 Cor. 12:1-10.)

V. 42. In a posture of most profound reverence, the prophet sought of God, by earnest prayer, the blessing of rain upon the parched land; and he continued his fervent supplications in the same place and posture, without having taken any refreshment, as it appears, till he had sensible evidence that his prayer was granted. (Note, Jam. 5:16-18.)

V. 43-45. As Elijah had no servant before he went to Zarephath; some have thought, that the widow's son, whom he had raised to life, had accompanied him. But it appears from the narrative, that he was not old enough; and it is more likely, that a young person from the schools of the prophets attended Elijah on this occasion.—The prophet spake as one assured that his prayer would immediately be answered; and like Jacob of old, he seemed determined not to let the Lord go until he had blessed him. The servant was therefore ordered to go seven times; and he saw no appearance till the last time, when a very small cloud arose, out of the sea, like a man's hand. And he said, Go up, say unto Ahab, 'Prepare thy chariot, and get thee down, that the rain stop thee now.

45 And it came to pass in the mean while, that the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and 'there was a great rain. And Ahab rode, and went to Jezreel.

46 And *the hand of the LORD was on Enjah; and he girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab to the entrance of Jezreel.

out of the Mediterranean sea, which was near to mount Carmel; this the prophet knew to be the forerunner of the desired blessing, and he sent word to Ahab accordingly.—The rain was no doubt equal to the necessities of the land; and it formed another demonstration that JEHOVAH was the only true God. (Note, 18–20.)

Went up, &c. (43) The transactions of the day are supposed to have taken place at the foot of the mount, near some rivulet, whence water could still be procured. From this place, Ahab went up to some tent or residence to take refreshment; but Elijah went up towards the summit of the mount, where the Mediterranean sea might be clearly seen: yet he sent his servant to some higher crag or eminence to make his observations.

V. 46. The Lord directed and strengthened Elijah, though weak with fasting and fatigue, to show this respect to Ahab; and to run as a footman before his chariot; in order to convince him, that his severe reproofs were consistent with affection and loyalty in secular matters: nor was the prophet afraid of going to Jezreel, where Jezebel was; though he did not come into her presence. It does not appear, that either Ahab, or his attendants, or the inhabitants of Jezreel, offered him any refreshment, or hospitably entertained him. His reception at least was discouraging.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1–16.—The severest judgments will not of themselves humble or change the hearts of sinners; who often grow more hardened under them, even to desperation.—The imagined fire of purgatory, therefore, or the real torments of hell, possess no purifying efficacy; and the wicked under the anguish of their sufferings will continually increase in wickedness, and accumulate wrath to all eternity. For nothing, except the atoning blood of Christ, can expiate the guilt of sin; nothing, except the sanctifying Spirit of God, can purge away its pollution: and all other expedients are satanical delusions, to keep men from this one "fountain, which God hath opened for sin and for uncleanness."—The enmity of man's heart against God, expresses itself by persecuting those who bear his image and seek his glory: yet he protects them, until their testimony be finished.—It has been the common lot of his prophets and faithful servants, to be lodged in caves or dens of the earth, and fed with bread and water, (if that could be procured,) while the ministers of Satan have rioted in luxury. (Note, Heb. 11:35–38.) Yet the Lord has had a remnant in all places, where any part of his word has been known, in every age of the world: and notwithstanding errors and irregularities, that spiritual worship, and that repentance, fear, and love of his name, which are the fruits of his Holy Spirit, are accepted through the Redeemer, and by faith in him. Thus the remnant in Israel, when that nation had generally apostatized to idolatry, encourages the hope, that there are true believers known unto God, and reserved to him, in those parts of the Christian church, where the ostensible body is most deformed by superstition and idolatry.—If men of eminent piety were found in Ahab's family, and in Nero's palace, we may conclude that the Spirit of God will keep alive the holy flame which he has kindled, in any situation to which a believer can be called. (Note, Phil. 4:21, 22.) We should therefore be very cautious about leaving, or persuading others to leave, the posts assigned in Providence, however perilous or ensnaring; while they can be maintained without sinful compliances, and while they afford opportunities of doing good.—They, who begin early to serve God, are likely to be eminent in their generation: and those who "fear the LORD greatly," devise various methods of usefulness; for they do not shrink from trouble, danger, or expense, in promoting his cause, or protecting and relieving his oppressed and afflicted servants. Providence indeed has often remarkably preserved those who have ventured their lives freely in his service, in times of triumphant wickedness; yet, singular activity, prudence, and fidelity in secular concerns, frequently prove the means of their security. (Notes, Dan. 6:3–5.)—Many are careful to prevent the effects of sin upon their temporal interests, whilst they continue by their crimes to augment the fierce wrath of God, which is the cause of all misery: and ungodly rich men are commonly more careful about their own self-indulgence, than to preserve the multitude of the poor from starving. (Notes, Am. 6:3–8. Luke 16:19–21.) But while sinners remain on earth, the Lord will afford them some respite; that his judgments and mercies may concur, either to lead them to repentance, or to display his justice in their condemnation: and national calamities are often retarded or terminated, for the sake of a despised remnant of believers; for if persecutors could extirpate them all, they would open the flood-gates of divine vengeance upon themselves.—The servants of God may, in his cause, boldly face their most powerful enraged enemies; for they dare not touch them when he intimidates their hearts, and cannot when he restrains their hands: (Notes, Matt. 14:3–5. Acts 4:13–22. 5:26–39.) and such as fear the Lord, however exalted in life, will greatly respect his faithful servants, though poor and hated by all around them.—They, whose situations have long required them to be cautious of giving unnecessary umbrage, are apt to grow too timid, and to apprehend consequences which are not likely to follow: if, however, they be sincere, they will surmount their fears, and join with their more courageous brethren in doing the will of God.

V. 17–29. The ministers of the Lord have generally been accounted the troublers of nations, nay, even of the church, by ungodly rulers: because they oppose prevailing abuses though sanctioned by authority, and denounce the wrath of God against impenitent sinners. Nay, they have frequently been treated as the authors of those calamities, which have come upon men for persecuting them, and neglecting their warnings! But they are able to refute, and even to retort, such charges, when urged to their faces: and to show that those who forsake the commandments of the Lord, and teach others to do so, are the real troublers of the world, of the church, and of themselves and their own families: and when this is done with firmness and solemnity, as by the authority of God, it will often cause the proudest sinner to tremble; to desist from present purposes of violence, and to comply with reasonable requirements.—The condescension of the Lord in repeatedly proving the most evident truths, concerning his being, perfections, the divine authority of his word, and the nature of his worship, is as wonderful as the perverseness of men, which requires such repeated demonstrations: but the fundamentals of religion stand on such manifest grounds of reason and sound argument, that they need fear no fair investigation. It is of peculiar importance, that we come to a decision on such subjects; for whilst we waver respecting them, we must be unstable in all our ways. But we should be equally decided in our practice, else our creed, however orthodox, will be received only by a dead faith. If the LORD be God, let us worship him, choose him for our Portion, and devote ourselves to his service: if Jesus be the divine and only Saviour, let us come to him, cleave to him, and depend on him alone for every thing: if the Bible be the word of God, let us reverence, study, and receive the whole of it, and submit our understanding to its teaching: and let us no longer endeavour to serve God and Mammon; to reconcile religion and secret sin; or to believe revelation, to accept of salvation, or to give up ourselves to the service of our Redeemer, by halves, or with reserves. This Satan will be content with, but the LORD abhors it.—The cause of truth is not to be determined by vote, authority, or wealth: one poor prophet or minister for JEHOVAH; hundreds and thousands for Baal, even of those in reputation and favour, and the highest secular or ecclesiastical stations; as well as of those who have possessed wealth and learning, has been a common case! But God will plead his own cause, and that of his witnesses, which will countervail all disadvantages; and his truth is great, and will prevail. In confidence of his support, we may concede every external precedence to our opponents, and boldly stand forth in his cause, without apprehension about the event. It is right, however, to state every thing in so equitable, plain, and convincing a manner, that all may be constrained to say, "It is well spoken," and that the mouths of gainsayers may be stopped.—The absurdities of superstition and false religion might excite our ridicule or mockery, did not their awful effects demand our tears.—The example of Elijah, in this instance, must be imitated with great caution, and only on very peculiar and evident occasions.—The service of Satan, whether in the observations of idolatrous worship, or in the practice of immoralities, whilst it promises indulgence to men's lusts, is cruel to their persons, and tends to torment them even in this world.

V. 30–46. All religious diligence, which is not regulated according to the word of God, as to its grand outlines, however self-denying or plausible, is unavailing: "for he, who gathereth not with the Saviour, scattereth." (Note, Matt. 12:29, 30.) Yet, when it is impracticable for us exactly to come up to the scriptural standard; or when we cannot have personal communion with God's people, in his more solemn ordinances: we must come as near as we can to the one, and show our fellowship with the other by such expressions as we are capable of: and the Lord will graciously accept our upright intentions, and dispense with the unavoidable irregularity.—Hypocrites expect to be heard for their much or their loud speaking; but a few words uttered in assured faith, and with fervent affections of zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men, or thirstings after the Lord's image and favour, often form "the effectual fervent prayer of the righteous man, which availeth much." Such principles ought to dictate all our prayers, and we should utterly disregard even our own reputation in the judgment of men; except

CHAPTER XIX.

Ahab shows Jezebel, that Elijah had slain Baal's prophets, and she sends to Elijah, threatening to take away his life, 1, 2. He flies into the wilderness; to weary of being; but being twice strengthened with food brought by an angel, he fasts forty days, and arrives at Horeb, 3-8. There God meets him, preceded by a strong wind, an earthquake, and fire; and, speaking to him in a still small voice, commissions him to awake Hazeel, Jehu, and Elisha, 9-17. Elijah is informed that seven thousand worshippers of JEHOVAH still remain in Israel, 18. Elijah casts his mantle on Elisha, who leaves a cave of his friends, and follows him, 19-21.

AND Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, and withal how he had slain all the prophets with the sword.

2 Then Jezebel sent a messenger unto Elijah, saying, 'So let the gods do to me, and more also, if I make not thy life as the life of one of them by to-morrow about this time.'

3 And when he saw that, he arose, and went for his life, and came to Beer-sheba, which belongeth to Judah, and left his servant there.

4 ¶ But he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness, and came and sat down under a juniper-tree: and he requested for himself that he might die: and said, It is enough; now, O LORD, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers.

5 And as he lay and slept under a juniper-tree, behold, then an angel touched him, and said unto him, Arise and eat.

6 And he looked, and behold, there was a cake baken on the coals, and a cruse of water at his head: and he did eat, and drink, and laid him down again.

7 And the angel of the LORD came again the second time, and touched him, and said, Arise and eat, because the journey is too great for thee.

8 And he arose, and did eat and drink, and went in the strength of that meat, forty days and forty nights, unto Horeb the mount of God.

9 ¶ And he came thither unto a cave, and lodged there; and behold, the word of the LORD came to him, and he said unto him, What doest thou here, Elijah?

10 And he said, I have been very jealous for the LORD God of hosts: for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away.

when it is connected with the credit of religion, the conviction of sinners that our cause is that of God, and the establishment of believers in the faith: but for these purposes we should endeavour to obviate every occasion of suspicion, and to be careful that our good be not evil spoken of.—The awful displays of the divine justice and holiness may terrify and convince the sinner; extort many confessions, and dispose him to external acts of obedience, while the impression lasts: but the view of these attributes, harmonizing with mercy, love, and truth, in Christ Jesus, is needful to draw the soul into self-abasement, affiance, and love. Yet the spirit of God employs both methods, in effecting the conversion of sinners, in order and measure, as he pleases: and in our endeavours for that same blessed purpose, it is generally advisable to inform the understanding and convince the judgment first, and then to address the heart and conscience.—When sinners are deeply impressed with divine truth, they should be earnestly exhorted without delay, to set about those self-denying duties, to which the Saviour calls his disciples.—Under the Christian dispensation, indeed, we must not destroy the lives of men, even though they have deceived others to idolatrous worship. When, however, false teachers are removed, silenced, or put to shame, it exceedingly promotes the revival of true religion: and after effectual measures for public reformation have been used, we may hope for the merciful removal of public calamities.—Faith perceives things imperceptible to sense, and anticipates future and distant blessings: it therefore excites fervent prayers, in which reverence, humility, importunity, and perseverance are requisite in order to success.—The love of faithful ministers to the persons of sinners should not only be manifest to that God, who in secret hears their affectionate prayers for those whom they most severely reprove: but they should show it by every external expression; and be ready to give honour to whom honour on any account is due; and in their private conduct to become the meaneast servants to those, whom, speaking in God's name, they "rebuke with all authority." And he will strengthen his people for every exertion and self-denial, to which his commandments and his providence shall call them.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIX. V. 1, 2. (Marg. Ref.) The Lord left this wicked woman, when informed by Ahab of what had been done, to be so intoxicated by rage, that, instead of sending a messenger to apprehend or kill Elijah, she gave him warning and time to make his escape! (Note, Matt. 27:8.) Some indeed think, that she was afraid to venture at the same time on the rage of the people, and the miraculous power, which the prophet evidently and undeniably possessed, by attempting to slay him: but contented herself with threatening him, that he might abscond and occasion her no further interruption, or take further measures, against the worship and worshippers of Baal, and the prophets of the groves: (18:19.) while others suppose she had such an opinion of his intrepidity, that she concluded he would certainly wait the event. But her absolute language, and the imprecation upon herself if she failed, seem more like the outrageous effusion of passion, than the effect of deliberation and design. Without reflecting that she might not live till the morrow, or not be able to find Elijah, or to prevail against him: she swore by the gods that she would put him to death, as if all events were absolutely in her own power! (Notes, 2 Kings 1:10-17. Prov. 27:1. Jam. 4:13-17.)

V. 3, 4. It seems, that Elijah fled from Jezreel on the very night after the sacrifice, and the fire from heaven, and the abundant rain given in answer to his prayers; and before he had time suitably to refresh himself after the fatigues of the preceding day. Beer-sheba, in the south of Judah, was at a considerable distance from Jezreel, in the lot of Issachar: (Josh. 19:18.) yet he travelled with all speed till he came thither. But there he left his servant, as unable to proceed through weariness: or perhaps he was unwilling to expose him to farther hardship; having, as some think, purposed to end his life in that desolate wilderness, where Israel had wandered forty years.—He had passed through the whole kingdom of Judah, where doubtless pious Jehoshaphat would have welcomed and protected him. But he seems, on this occasion, to have been left to himself for his humiliation; and consequently he was seized with unreasonable terror. Instead of venturing all consequences, assured of the protection of the Almighty; and pushing his advantage, by leading the people to destroy the temple and worship of Baal, and restore the worship of JEHOVAH; he fled from the important service, and impatiently wished and prayed for death! What a contrast to his zeal and intrepidity, as recorded in the preceding chapter! (Notes, 18:40. Num. 11:1-15. Jon. 1:2, 3. 4:1-4, 9-11.) Thus the people, left without a leader, and intimidated by his example, would be too much afraid of Jezebel, to reap those decisive advantages from the miracle, and the events recorded in the former chapter, which might have been hoped for.—When Elijah said "I am no better than my fathers," he seems to have referred to some pre-intimations given him of his translation: but he was willing rather to die, than to live in misery, and to behold, without being able to prevent, the wickedness and ruin of his people: yet he would rather die by the hand of the Lord, than by that of Baal's worshippers, lest they should blaspheme that God whose prophet they had slain.

V. 5-8. The Lord intended that Elijah should visit Horeb, where Moses had fasted forty days and nights; that in him the miracle might be repeated: because as Moses was the lawgiver, so Elijah was in some respects the chief of the prophets. (Note, Matt. 17:3.) God at first miraculously provided his servant with food: (Note, 17:4-6.) and then he supported him without food, or any need or desire of it. (Notes, Ex. 34:28. Matt. 4:3, 4.) As mount Horeb was but a few days' journey from Beer-sheba: the forty days here mentioned seemed to include the whole of the time, which passed till his return out of the wilderness.

V. 9. What doest thou, &c.? Elijah had been secretly guided to mount Horeb, rather than to another place; and probably he sought retirement for meditation and prayer. But this was not at that crisis his proper employment; for he ought by no means to have fled from the land of Israel, but there to have persevered, without dread of consequences, in promoting the cause of true religion. (Notes, Josh. 7:10-12. Neh. 6:10-14. Acts 4:29-31. 8:1.)

V. 10. The prophet pleaded in his own behalf that "he had been very jealous for the LORD," having had his glory exceedingly at heart, and having been deeply grieved, and even filled with holy indignation, at Israel's apostacy. This he had long endeavoured to prevent; and he had now mount before the LORD. And behold, the LORD passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the LORD; but the LORD was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but the LORD was not in the earthquake:

12 And after the earthquake a fire; but the LORD was not in the fire: and after the fire a still small voice.

13 And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entering in of the cave. And behold, there came a voice unto him, and said, What doest thou here, Elijah?

14 And he said, I have been very jealous for the LORD God of hosts: because the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life to take it away. [Practical Observations.]

15 And the LORD said unto him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of Damascus: and when thou comest, anoint Hazael to be king over Syria:

16 And Jehu the son of Nimshi shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel: and Elisha the son of Shaphat of Abe-meholah shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.

17 And it shall come to pass, that him that escapeth the sword of Hazael shall Jehu slay: and him that escapeth from the sword of Jehu shall Elisha slay.

18 Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him.

19 ¶ So he departed thence, and found Elisha the son of Shaphat, who was ploughing with twelve yoke of oxen before him, and he with the twelfth: and Elijah passed by him, and cast his mantle upon him.

20 And he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said, Let me, I pray thee, kiss my father and my mother, and then I will follow thee. And he said unto him, Go back again: for what have I done to thee?

21 And he returned back from him, and took a yoke of oxen, and slew them, and boiled their flesh with the instruments of the oxen, and gave unto the people, and they did eat. Then he arose, and went after Elijah, and ministered unto him.

CHAPTER XX

Ben-hadad king of Syria, not satisfied with Ahab's submission, leads a powerful army against Samaria, and wars against it, 1-12. Ahab, directed by a prophet, gains a complete victory over him, 13-21. A prophet warns Ahab to prepare for another assault, 22. The Syrians come again, the next year, with very great preparations; and are opposed by a very small company, 23-27. A prophet assures Ahab of victory, because the Syrians thought JEHOVAH the God of the hills, but not of the valleys, 28. The Syrians are smitten with immense slay, Ahab, and Ben-hadad flee and hide themselves, 29, 30. He administers reproof to Ahab, who makes a league with him, 31-34. A prophet, in a parable, leads Ahab to condemn himself, and then denounces the judgment of God against him for his unreasonable lenity, 35-43.

ral interests, and to venture persecution as a prophet of the Lord: and to lead him to count his cost ere he engaged. (Notes, Matt. 8:18-22. Luke 14:28-33.) But Elisha's heart was touched by the Holy Spirit, and he was ready to leave all to attend Elijah. He did not ask to wait till the death of his parents, but only to bid them farewell: and, having made a feast for his neighbours of the flesh of the oxen, prepared with their yokes, as the fuel; (in token, that he never meant to return again to that employment;) he followed Elijah, and ministered to him, that under his tuition he might be prepared to succeed him, and in the mean time be a help and comfort to him. (Notes, 2 Kings 3:11, 12. Matt. 9:9-13.)—The prophet could now no longer complain, that he was left alone, for the Lord had provided him a companion. (Notes, Ex. 4:14. Matt. 10:1-4.)—From the ensuing history it appears, that Elijah and Elisha employed themselves not only in privately instructing the people, but also in founding or superintending seminaries of prophets, in different parts of the land, who might assist them in the work of reformation, and maintain it when they were removed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. No miracles or judgments can finally stop the fury of persecutors: though they be intimidated for a season, when they have respite, and leisure to confer with one another, they grow desperate in proportion as they have been baffled and mortified. (Notes, Ex. 8:15. 14:5-9. Acts 4:13-22. 5:17-28.) Nay, such diabolic enmity can inhabit the breasts of females, and has sometimes raged in them with peculiar vehemence! (Notes, Matt. 14:3-11.)—Mad passions often defeat their own end, and furious threats prevent the execution of determined malice.—The most eminent believers cannot exercise even those graces, which most distinguish their characters, without the immediate assistance of God: and when in danger of being exalted above measure, they are sometimes left to struggle with temptation without their wonted support. Then the boldest, who before feared no number or power of the adversaries, tremble at the distant prospect of danger; the most zealous are dissatisfied with their employments, and sit down disconsolate and desponding; they the most resigned grow fretful, and even pray in a peevish manner, and want to die, not out of longing for heavenly glory, but from weariness of conflicts and tribulations. But it is shameful for a soldier to wish to be absent from his place in the day of battle, or to expect the victory without the peril and the hardship of the conflict. The Lord, however, bears with his faithful servants, notwithstanding their infirmities; and preserves them for every service which he has allotted them, whatever they wish or fear. As all creatures are at his command, those for whom he engages to provide, can want no good thing; and yet if he pleases, he can support them without either means or instruments. (Notes, 17:1-16.) His mercy and power are the same from generation to generation, whether displayed in the same way or not: and he will vouchsafe his gracious presence to his people, into whatever place they are banished. Indeed when they flee from the path of duty, he will meet and rebuke them, but he will not forsake them.

V. 10-14. No former zeal, boldness, or usefulness, will excuse present neglects: yet we are most apt to boast of what we have been and done, when most remiss in present duty! Disappointments in our too sanguine expectations often sour our tempers, as well as render us discontented: and then we are ready to blame others for our failures, and to be severe in our censures and remarks. The zealous minister often finds this heaven corrupting his services: he is sometimes tempted to think all his labour in vain, when he does not see the immediate effect; and to conclude, that he can do no good, because he cannot do all that he hoped for: and when he witnesses much evil in the church, or in that part in which he labours, he often imagines matters to be much worse than they really are. Thus "our hands hang down, and our knees wax feeble;" and we are ingenious in discouraging and disquieting ourselves. But upon reflection, this very experience may explain to us that rebellion of others, which so disconcerts us; and teach us gentleness and long-suffering, without disdaining or despairing of the worst of sinners.—The blessing is from the Lord; and he often works most effectually when proper means are used, with quiet assiduity and perseverance, without any of that bustle and vehemence which excite the public attention. Magistrates should indeed exercise their authority, in promoting true religion, by all hallowed and scriptural means. (Notes, 2 Chr. 17:7-9. 30:12.) But attempts to produce reformation, in and two kings with him, and horses, and chariots; and he went up and besieged Samaria, and warred against it.

2 And he sent messengers to Ahab king of Israel into the city, and said unto him, Thus saith Ben-hadad,

3 Thy silver and thy gold is mine; thy wives also and thy children, even the goodliest, are mine.

4 And the king of Israel answered and said, either doctrine or worship, by coercive means, and the secular arm, bearing all down before it, like the strong wind, the earthquake, and the fire, in every case promise more than they effect; and even when the magistrate's authority is regulated and limited in a proper manner, in repressing impiety and immorality, and countenancing zealous ministers in their labours, it only makes way for the "still small voice" of the gospel, by means of which the Holy Spirit performs his gracious work upon the heart. (Notes, Is. 42:1-4. Rom. 1:13-16. 1 Cor. 2:3-5. 2 Cor. 10:1-6.) And the minister, when deprived of this protection and support, and driven by persecution into obscure corners, may expect great usefulness, by this power accompanying his labours.—The word of God also is indeed "like a fire, and a hammer, that breaketh the rocks in pieces;" and the whole of it should be preached with zealous plainness and faithfulness: but "the ministration of condemnation," and the awful terrors of eternal vengeance, only precede and make way for "the ministration of righteousness," and the sweet gospel of Christ, attended by urgent persuasions, melting expostulations, and tender invitations, in which the Lord chiefly comes to seal our hearts for himself; and without this little will be done.—We shall do well often to imagine, that we hear the Lord inquire, "What doest thou here?" In scenes of worldly dissipation, in trifling company, in riotous feasting, or where unlawful traffic is carrying on, the Christian can have no good answer ready: nor can the minister, if engrossed by needless worldly business, by trifling studies, or by the pursuits of ambition, preferment, pleasure, or reputation, to the neglect of the important duties of his calling. Nay, if we are at home, when we should be in the pulpit; asleep, when we should be at work; or in company when we should be engaged in prayer and meditation, or reading the Scriptures; such a question must confound us. In short every station has its proper duties, and every portion of time its proper work, and we should frequently call ourselves to account, whether we be in our place and proper employment, as the duty of the season requires.

V. 15-21. It is not easy to convince men of their faults, and silence their excuses or boastings: and whilst the Lord encourages his servants, under their difficulties, he sends them back to their proper work, ashamed of their timidity and neglect; and then he gives them both helpers and success. He has "a remnant, according to the election of grace," which he reserves to himself, and preserves from prevailing abominations. For their conversion and edification he waits and provides: in the mean time impenitent sinners ripen for vengeance; and he raises up instruments to execute it upon them, from whom they shall by no means escape: for the word of God, spoken by his despised ministers, ensures their destruction, more than the sword of any enemy. Nor will he ever desert his own cause, however it seems to be run down: he will furnish men for the most perilous and self-denying services: and those who duly understand the importance of the sacred ministry, will renounce every other honour, pleasure, and interest for the sake of it, though called to labour in the midst of hardships, poverty, and persecution.—Zeal for the glory of God and the salvation of souls will subordinate, though it will not extinguish natural affections. (Notes, Matt. 10:37-39.) The work of the ministry requires the whole man: and when such persons are employed, as have not been regularly educated for it, they are especially concerned to attend the instructions, to frequent the company, and to copy the examples, of aged and approved ministers; and "no man having set his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." (P. O. Matt. 4:12-25. Note, Matt. 8:21, 22.) In difficult times helpers of inferior abilities may be a great comfort to the discouraged servants of God; and this service is carried on to advantage, when different ministers concur, from the same principles, to seek the same great end of his glory in the salvation of souls. May "the Lord of the harvest send forth many such labourers into his harvest!" Amen. (Note, Matt. 9:36-38.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XX. V. 1. Ben-hadad signifies The son of Hadad; (11:14-22.) yet he is said to have been "the son of Tabrimon, the son of Hezion." (15:18.)—Perhaps Hadad was his father, and Tabrimon and Hezion his more remote ancestors.—The thirty and two kings were petty princes of the adjacent countries, who were either vassals or allies to the king of Syria.—Ben-hadad seems to have been induced by rapacity to wage war against Ahab; and it is probable that he had wasted the country before he besieged Samaria.—The late terrible famine must have diminished

My lord, O king, according to thy saying, I am thine, and all that I have.

5 And the messengers came again, and said, Thus speaketh Ben-hadad, saying, Although I have sent unto thee, saying, Thou shalt deliver me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children;

6 Yet I will send my servants unto thee tomorrow about this time, and they shall search thy house, and the houses of thy servants; and it shall be, that whatsoever is pleasant in thine eyes, they shall put it in their hand, and take it away.

7 Then the king of Israel called all the elders of the land, and said, Mark, I pray you; and see how this man seeketh mischief: for he sent unto me for my wives, and for my children, and for my silver, and for my gold, and I denied him not.

8 And all the elders and all the people said unto him, Harken not unto him, nor consent.

9 Wherefore he said unto the messengers of Ben-hadad, Tell my lord the king, All that thou didst send for to thy servant at the first, I will do: but this thing I may not do. And the messengers departed, and brought him word again.

10 And Ben-hadad sent unto him, and said, The gods do so unto me, and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me.

11 And the king of Israel answered and said, Tell him, Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.

12 And it came to pass, when Ben-hadad heard this message as he was drinking, he and the kings in the pavilions, that he said unto his servants, Set yourselves in array. And they set themselves in array against the city.

13 ¶ And behold, there came a prophet unto Ahab king of Israel, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Hast thou seen all this great multitude? behold, I will deliver it into thy hand this day; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

14 And Ahab said, By whom? And he said, Thus saith the Lord, Even by the young men of the princes of the provinces. Then he said, Who shall order the battle? And he answered, Thou.

15 Then he numbered the young men of the princes of the provinces, and they were two hundred and thirty-two: and after them he numbered all the people, even all the children of Israel, being seven thousand.

16 And they went out at noon. But Ben-hadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions, he and the kings, the thirty and two kings that helped him.

17 And the young men of the princes of the provinces went out first; and Ben-hadad sent out, and they told him, saying, There are men come out of Samaria.

18 And he said, Whether they be come out for peace, take them alive; or whether they be come out for war, take them alive.

19 So these young men of the princes of the provinces came out of the city, and the army which followed them.

20 And they slew every one his man: and the Syrians fled; and Israel pursued them: and Ben-hadad the king of Syria escaped on a horse with the horsemen.

21 And the king of Israel went out, and smote the horses and chariots, and slew the Syrians with a great slaughter. [Practical Observations.]

22 ¶ And the prophet came to the king of Israel, and said unto him, Go strengthen thyself, and mark, and see what thou doest: for at the return of the year the king of Syria will come up against thee.

23 And the servants of the king of Syria said the number of the Israelites, by death and emigration, almost beyond calculation: and by the righteous judgment of God, the remainder were so disaffected to Ahab, or so dismayed by Ben-hadad, that they had retired or fled; and thus they left the capital city in a very defenceless condition.

V. 2-11. Ben-hadad's first message was couched in insulting language. He not only considered Ahab's riches as already his property; but his wives and children, even the goodliest of them, as his slaves. Yet Ahab understood this, only as a claim to dominion over him, and his property or kingdom; and in abject terms he consented to be his vassal, and to do him homage, and pay him tribute. Ben-hadad therefore, (perhaps perceiving his terror and pusillanimity,) grew more insolent, and by a second message demanded the immediate possession and use of them all, for himself and his servants, who would come the next day, and search all the houses and treasures, and carry away what they thought most valuable, whether it belonged to Ahab, or to his people. To this the elders of Israel would not allow the king to consent: the dominion and the public treasures, Ben-hadad might have taken; but to plunder the city and enslave the inhabitants must not be granted. To this answer the king of Syria sent a boasting menace, confirmed with an oath by his idols; implying, that he would enter Samaria with such numbers, that, when the whole city was reduced to a heap of dust, it would not afford them every one a handful: (Notes, Ex. 15:9,10. 2 Kings 19:23,24. Is. 10:12-14.) but Ahab very pertinently reminded him not to exult and triumph, till he had gotten the victory, and had put off his armour; as at present he was only girding it on, and preparing for the battle.

V. 13. Elijah had complained that he was left alone; yet he Lord had other prophets, whom he could send to speak before Ahab. (Note, 19:10.) Probably, Elijah and Elisha were at this time well employed in some distant part of the land; and Ahab and Jezebel were too much engaged, to interrupt their labours or usefulness.—The Lord was pleased to predict the victory to this wicked prince, for his further conviction, that JEHOVAH, not Baal, was the living God; for the punishment of Ben-hadad's insolence; for the honour of his own name, and for the benefit of his true worshippers; and in his long-suffering towards Israel, and compassion for their complicated distresses.

V. 14, 15. Ahab, sensible that the promised victory must be miraculous, inquired, by whom it was to be obtained: and he was directed to employ, not his bravest soldiers, but the servants, or pages, of the chief men in the different provinces: and also himself to lead on the attack. His whole army consisted of only seven thousand men; (the same number with those preserved from idolatry, but not the same persons;) yet none of these were to be employed, till the first assault had been made, and the first advantage gained by this small company of servants! (Notes, Judg. 7:16-22. 1 Sam. 14:6-10.) And under the present impression of terror and hope, Ahab readily obeyed these uncommon orders; though in general he despised and hated both the prophets, and him that sent them.

V. 16-18. It is probable, that Ahab chose to lead out his little troop at noon, when he supposed the Syrians would be at dinner, or reposing themselves.—Ben-hadad, despising the Israelites, was indulging to excess; and on hearing that a small company came out of Samaria, he gave such orders, in haughtiness and intoxication, as were exactly suited to embarrass his officers and soldiers; and to prevent their attacking the assailants with spirit, lest they should slay those whom they had been ordered to take alive! (Marg. Ref. v.) And to make prisoners of those who came out to treat of peace, would have been contrary to all the laws and usages of nations, even in time of war.

V. 19-21. The two hundred and thirty-two servants whom especially Ben-hadad had ordered to be taken alive, slew every one the man who attempted to seize him; and this unexpected resistance, by the secret operation of God upon the minds of the Syrians, so dismayed them, that they yielded the army an easy and decisive victory. (Note, 1 Sam. 14:11-15.) Ben-hadad, after all his boasts and menaces, might be considered as successful, beyond all reasonable expectation, in this respect, that he escaped with life, drunken as he then was. (16. Notes, 1 Sam. 30:16-19.)

V. 22. It does not appear, that Ahab regarded this merciful and seasonable warning, given him by the prophet; or that he made any suitable return for his late unexpected deliverance and success.

V. 23-25. The servants of Ben-hadad, either in flattery as if no human valour could possibly rou

V. 35, 36. This command was given by one of "the sons of the prophets" "in the word of the LORD," to his neighbour, or fellow, to another of the same company, who would know that he spake in the name of the Lord. The refusal therefore was direct disobedience to God, which he was pleased to punish with immediate death, by a lion meeting and slaying him. (Note. 13:23—32.) Ahab would doubtless hear of him.

36 Then said he unto him, 'Because thou hast not obeyed the voice of the Lord, behold, as soon as thou art departed from me, a lion shall slay thee. And as soon as he was departed from him, a lion found him, and slew him.

37 Then he found another man, and said, 'Smite me, I pray thee. And the man smote him, so that in smiting he wounded him.

38 So the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, and disguised himself with ashes upon his face.

39 And as the king passed by, he cried unto the king: and he said, 'Thy servant went out into the midst of the battle; and behold, a man turned aside, and brought a man unto me, and said, 'Keep this man: if by any means he be missing, then shall thy life be for his life, or else thou shalt pay a talent of silver.

40 And as thy servant was busy here and there, the was gone. And the king of Israel said unto him, 'So shall thy judgment be; thyself hast decided it.

this event: and if one who humanely refused to smite a pious prophet at the command of God was thus punished; he might conclude, that he should not be spared, who disobeyed God, by forming an alliance with a haughty idolatrous king, whom the Lord required him to destroy. It seems that the prophet intended, by being wounded, the better to personate a soldier who had been in the battle, and had deserved well of his king, though he had failed of his duty in one particular. (37.)

V. 33-40. The prophet appeared, either as one wounded in the face, and so covered with a bandage like a veil to disguise himself, as many understand it; or he assumed the character of a mourner, being under condemnation to die, seeing he could not pay the talent of silver required of him; or he united both. His account implied, that the prisoner trusted to his keeping was one of superior rank; and that his officer, or captain, committed him to his care, with this injunction, or warning; yet the prisoner was gone; and Ahab, without reflecting on his own conduct, confirmed the sentence. (Notes, 2 Sam. 12:1-7.)

V. 41, 42. As soon as Ahab discovered who the prophet was, he perceived that he had been drawn in to pass sentence upon himself. Ahab lost his life in fighting against Ben-hadad, who did not fulfil this treaty: (Notes, 22:31-35.) and great evils came upon Israel from the Syrians, whom Ahab might at this time have subjugated, or deprived of power to injure them. (Notes, 2 Kings 6:25-29. 8:12, 13. 10:32-36.)

V. 43. Heavy, &c.] Whilst the Lord secured his own glory, and protected his people; he deprived Ahab of all satisfaction in his deliverance and victory, and filled him with vexation and dismay. He did not repent of his fault, but he was chagrined at the message, and enraged at the messenger. Many think it was Michaiiah, which is not improbable. (Notes, 21:4-6. 22:8. 1 Sam. 14:45, 46.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-21. The indignation of the Lord will surely weaken and dispirit sinners: and those nations especially, which have been favoured with the light of revelation, will be brought low for their iniquity, when they forsake the service of God.—Ungodly men delight to insult over the fallen; success increases their pride and insolence; and thus they too are prepared for vengeance.—Those, who most daringly rebel against God, are often mere cowards when assaulted by their fellow-creatures: and no extremities of affliction, or consulting together on what they should, or should not do, will bring sinners, when left to themselves, duly to consider the real causes of their distress.—Men will part with their most pleasant things, which they most love, to save their temporal lives; and yet they lose their souls, and incur everlasting misery, rather than bestow any labour, or give up any pleasure or interest, to prevent it! (Notes, Matt. 16:24-25. P. O. 21-28.)—Boasting and menacing language generally breeds a weak and foolish mind, exposes men to cutting rebukes, and terminates in abject meanness and disgrace. To glory in what we have done, is pride and vanity; but to glory in what we will do, is extreme ignorance and folly; for no capacity or management can ensure success. (Note, Jam. 4:13-17.)—Drunkards perform great things as far as boasting words can go: and they urge one another on to rash and foolish enterprises, which expose them in every way to detriment and to ruin.—The Lord will secure his own glory, and take care of his own people, notwithstanding the wickedness of the great or the many: he will leave every impenitent sinner without excuse; and he delights to save by unlikely instruments, that his own power may be the more conspicuous. At 41 And he hastened, and took the ashes away from his face; and the king of Israel discerned him that he was of the prophets.

42 And he said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, 'Because thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I appointed to utter destruction, therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people.

43 And the king of Israel went to his house heavy and displeased, and came to Samaria.

CHAPTER XXI.

Ahab covets Naboth's vineyard, and is greatly displeased, because Naboth refuses to part with it, 1-4. Jezebel discovering this, by letters, in Ahab's name, to the elders of Jezreel, causes Naboth to be stoned, as a blasphemer, 5-14. She excites Ahab to take possession of his vineyard, 15, 16. Elijah is sent to meet Ahab, and to denounce the judgment of God against him, and his family, and Jezebel, 17-24. Ahab's enormous wickedness, 25, 26. He externally humbles himself before God, and the judgments on his family are deferred to his son's days, 27-29.

AND it came to pass after these things, that was in Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard, which was in Jezreel, hard by the palace of Ahab king of Samaria.

2 And Ahab spake unto Naboth, saying, Give some seasons, the convictions of the most abandoned may get an advantage over their lusts: for a time they may be restrained from iniquity, may do many things according to the command of God, and even regard the admonitions of his ministers: thus they are sometimes externally favoured; that they may experience the different effect of obedience and of disobedience, for their deeper condemnation, if they relapse into their former crimes.—The Lord inspires counsel and courage, or sends infatuation and dismay, as he pleases: so that the battle is not to the strong; but all calculations are strangely proved erroneous, when this secret influence is not taken into the account. (Note, Ec. 9:11, 12.)

V. 22-43. Fallen man has very confused, absurd, and dishonourable apprehensions of the divine attributes. He conceives of God, as if he were such an one as himself, and is thus emboldened to persist in his rebellion; and the most consummate wisdom, in worldly concerns, often unites with the most contemptible ignorance on religious subjects.—To silence the blasphemies, or to expose the mistakes of his enemies, the Lord sometimes gives temporary success to those who, in another way, despise his warnings and disobey his precepts: but he will not countenance them in their crimes, nor let them finally escape condign punishment.—The whole creation is at war with those who fight against God; and he will surely render contemptible, as well as miserable, the haughtiness of them.—The ambitious are pleased with abject submissions and adulation; and love the society of the most wicked men, who will stoop low enough to them. Thus they are seduced and bribed, not only to disregard the will of God, and to prefer the friendship of his enemies; but to forego the most solid temporal advantages to themselves and their connexions, for the sake of empty words and fair professions! It indeed becomes all to be merciful; and clemency is the ornament of royalty, especially of the kings of Israel, the rulers of God's people: yet clemency to notorious criminals, whilst those who love and serve God are treated with cruelty, is strangely inconsistent; to pretend to be more merciful than the Lord, by sparing those whom he commands to be put to death, is an awful presumption; and to regard those as brethren, whom he has doomed to "utter destruction," is an evidence of great impiety.—In every thing the Lord demands implicit obedience; even the plea of compassion will not excuse rebellion against his will: and, by severe temporal judgments on such as have committed lighter offences, he loudly speaks terror to more atrocious criminals; whom he will at length constrain to decide against themselves. And whatever prosperity they may in the mean time obtain, it will be embittered to them by what they feel, and what they fear; for "there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked."—But may we not here, by an allowable accommodation, hint some profitable instructions? The convinced sinner, not daring any longer to persist in his impotent contest against the Almighty; and unable to flee from him, or to purchase his forgiveness and favour, is almost reduced to despair. Then he hears a report of mercy, abounding in Christ Jesus to the chief of sinners; and in hopes of obtaining a free salvation, with penitent tears and humiliating confessions, he cries out, "God be merciful to me, a sinner." Becoming acquainted with the gracious appellations of Father, Brother, and Friend of sinners, and the exceedingly great and precious promises contained in the Scripture; he diligently observes, and eagerly catches them, as it were, from the Saviour's lips, and pleads them in humble prayer. Thus he obtains forgiveness; the everlasting covenant is made with him, and all the blessings of the gospel are secured to him: at the same time, he yields himself to the Lord to be his servant, and love constrains him me thy vineyard, that I may have it for a garden of herbs, because it is near unto my house: and I will give thee for it a better vineyard than it; or if it seem good to thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money.

3 And Naboth said to Ahab, "The Lord forbid it me, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee.

4 And Ahab came into his house heavy and displeased, because of the word which Naboth the Jezreelite had spoken to him: for he had said, "I will not give thee the inheritance of my fathers." And he laid him down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no bread.

5 But Jezebel his wife came to him, and said unto him, "Why is thy spirit so sad, that thou eatest no bread?"

6 And he said unto her, "Because I spake unto Naboth the Jezreelite, and said unto him, Give me thy vineyard for money; or else, if it please thee, I will give thee another vineyard for it: and he answered, 'I will not give thee my vineyard.'

7 And Jezebel his wife said unto him, "Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel? Arise, and eat bread, and let thy heart be merry: I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite."

to live to his glory.—But alas! most that hear these glad tidings are busy here and there, till the day of salvation is gone; and, not having wherewithal to ransom their souls, they must spend eternity in unavailing lamentations and despair. Nay, even true believers are often so taken up with trifles, as to let seasons of important usefulness glide away unimproved, to the loss both of themselves and of others. May the Lord "teach us so to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom!"

NOTES.—CHAP. XXI. V. 1, 2. Ahab had not long before lost an opportunity of enlarging, securing, and improving his dominions; and now he coveted Naboth's vineyard, to make him an additional kitchen-garden, or pleasure-garden! He seemed, however, to propose equitable terms to the possessor; but his fault lay in desiring it in an inordinate manner. (Notes, Ex. 20:17. Rom. 7:7-12.)

V. 3. Naboth seems to have been a conscientious man, and a worshipper of JEHOVAH, which might render Jezebel the more determined on his destruction. (Note, 8-14.) He valued his vineyard as "the inheritance of his fathers," originally assigned to them by the Lord himself. He might, if in want, have leased out, or mortgaged, his estate till the year of jubilee: (Notes, Lev. 25:23-28. Num. 36:1-9.) but this was not the case; and he was sensible, that if his vineyard became a part of the royal gardens, it would never revert to his family. The Lord had forbidden him to alienate his land; and he plainly gave Ahab the true reason, why he could not comply with his desires; for he would rather seem uncourtous, or offend his prince, than transgress the law of God; whatever otherwise he might have been disposed to do.

The word implies the idea of impiety; and Naboth seems to have started back from the proposal, with aversion and alarm, as from a temptation to a heinous sin.

V. 4-6. (Note, 20:43.) Ahab, a victorious and prosperous king, was filled with anguish and vexation, because he met with a denial in so small a matter! Such was the conflict of his passions, that he lay down, and, either through sickness or sullenness, would not taste food! He greatly desired the vineyard. His pride was intolerably offended, that one of his own subjects should peremptorily refuse to comply with his proposal; he was ashamed to yield the point in contest; and he was afraid of proceeding to extremities. The effects of these conflicting passions made him very miserable; yet it is probable he would not have attempted violence against Naboth, had not "Jezebel his wife stirred him up." (Notes, Esth. 5:13, 14.)—It is observable, that in relating the cause of his disquietude, Ahab made no mention of Naboth's conscientious reason for his refusal; but stated it as if it had been entirely the effect of insolence and obstinacy!

V. 7. It was indeed unworthy of the king of Israel to 'et sealed them with his seal, and sent the letters unto the elders and to the nobles that were in his city, dwelling with Naboth.

9 And she wrote in the letters, saying, 'Proclaim a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people:

11 And the men of his city, even the elders and the nobles who were the inhabitants in his city, did as Jezebel had sent unto them, and as it was written in the letters which she had sent unto them.

12 They proclaimed a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people.

13 And there came in two men, children of Belial, and sat before him: and the men of Belial witnessed against him, even against Naboth, in the presence of the people, saying, Naboth did blaspheme God and the king. Then they carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him with stones, that he died.

14 Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, 'Naboth is stoned, and is dead.

himself about such a trifle. But this base woman meant to rouse her husband to gratify both his covetousness and revenge. (Notes, 2 Sam. 13:1-4.) She intimated, that he was incapable of managing a kingdom as it became a king, if he hesitated to seize on Naboth's vineyard, and to punish his insolence. (Note, John 11:49-53.) 'What! hast thou not power to crush such an adversary? Arise and enjoy thyself, and leave the business with me; I will speedily settle it to thy satisfaction.' This was her evident meaning, to which Ahab made no objection or opposition.

V. 8-14. Jezebel wrote in Ahab's name, and sealed the letters with his seal, which it seems he allowed her to use when and as she pleased. Thus the elders of Jezreel were required to obey her directions, as they valued the king's favour. She represented Naboth as a dangerous criminal, who must be taken off, without a particular inquiry into the nature of his offence; yet, as he bore a fair character, some charge must be brought against him, which might prevent the people from taking umbrage at his execution. A fast must therefore be proclaimed; as if some horrid wickedness had been discovered, which threatened the city with divine judgments, till solemnly expiated. (Note, Is. 58:3, 4.) This would excite general consternation; and on the day appointed, Naboth must be apprehended; and "men of Belial" procured, (that is, men wholly unprincipled, and free from all restraints of conscience, who would do any thing for hire;) to testify that he had blasphemed God and the king: thus he would be condemned to be stoned for the blasphemy; for the treasonable words his estate would be confiscated; and the elders were required to see the sentence immediately executed. These infamous orders were as infamously obeyed, without hesitation or reluctance; and by elders and nobles of Israel, though in contempt of all religion, law and justice!—It seems they stoned Naboth's sons also, that there might be none to avenge his death, or to demand his estate. (2 Kings 9:26.) When Jezebel cut off the Lord's prophets, she had doubtless injured the magistrates to similar practices, and rewarded their wickedness: so that she did not fear a refusal from the elders of Jezreel. They also knew from whom the orders came, and reported the execution of them to Jezebel, not to Ahab. The elders of the same city, not long after, paid as implicit an obedience to Jehu's orders, in putting to death seventy of Ahab's descendants. (2 Kings 10:3-10.)

V. 17-19. Other prophets or sons of the prophets had been sent upon ordinary messages to Ahab; but Elijah himself was employed on this occasion, whose very presence would di-may the proud tyrant, and whose strong faith and intrepid spirit qualified him for such a service. (Notes, 18: 17-20.) In the very vineyard of Naboth, even whilst Ahab was seizing on his prey, and surrounded by his officers, the prophet delivered this message to him, for his deeper mortification, and that it might be more noticed by others. He directly charged Ahab with the murder of Naboth, nor did he attempt to deny it, or to excuse himself. The prediction, that dogs should lick the blood of Ahab, certainly implied that he would be cut off by a violent death: but the expression, "in the place where, &c." occasions considerable difficulty: because the city Samaria was at some distance from Jezreel. Some learned men think that the word rendered "the place where," may mean, in like manner as: but this signification of the original word is unprecedented. Others suppose, that the word place is taken in a large sense, for all the adjacent region; and so includes Samaria, where Ahab dwelt, and where he was buried; as well as the city of Jezreel. (22:37, 38.) But may we not say, that, as dogs licked the blood of Ahab, literally, when his chariot was washed in the pool of Samaria; so they licked his blood, as flowing through and from the veins of his son Joram, when Joram was slain by Jehu, and his body thrown into this very spot? (Note, 2 Kings 9:25, 26.)

Jezebel said ^aArise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money: for Naboth is not alive, but dead.

V. 20. After the slaughter of Baal's prophets, and Elijah's flight from Jezebel, Ahab had returned to his wicked course of life, and he shunned the prophet as his worst enemy: and it does not appear, that Elijah had seen him since those events. (Notes, 22:8, 9.) Before indeed Ahab had bestowed much pains to find the prophet: but being now determined in idolatry, and yet afraid of him, whose prayers had called for drought upon the land, and fire and rain from heaven; (Notes, 17:1. 18:38, 39, 41-44.) and especially still feeling in his conscience the anguish of his cutting rebukes, he even trembled at the thoughts of him. Others, called prophets, had come to him with milder messages, and he thought them more friendly; but Elijah's severity could not be mollified. His presence therefore on this occasion surprised, offended, and affrighted him; and when "his enemy had found him," he expected not to go well away, but to hear some awful judgment denounced against him, for his recent transgression.—Nor did Elijah deny that he was an enemy to his wickedness: he neither paid respect to him, nor was intimidated by his anger or power. He had found him, as a thief caught in the fact; and, in the name of God, he denounced the most tremendous sentence of condemnation on him and on his posterity. (Note, Jer. 2:26-30.) For Ahab had "sold himself" as a willing slave to his lusts. This is very different from "being sold under sin": so that through the remaining power of corrupt nature, a man who "delights in the law of God," and hates all sin, yet "cannot do the things that he would." In the former case, the slavery is voluntary, the will itself is enslaved; in the latter, it is involuntary, and is a man's grief and distress. "To will is present with me: out how to perform that which is good, I find not."—Oh wretched man that I am." (Notes, Rom. 7:13-25.)

22 And will 'make thy house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and like the house of Baasha the son of Ahijah, for the provocation, wherewith thou hast provoked me to anger, and made Israel to sin.

23 And of Jezebel also spake the Lord, saying, The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel.

24 Him that dieth of Ahab in the city the dogs shall eat: and him that dieth in the field shall the fowls of the air eat.

25 But there was none like unto Ahab, which did sell himself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord, whom Jezebel his wife stirred up.

26 And he did very abominably in following idols, according to all things as did the Amorites, whom the Lord cast out before the children of Israel.

27 And it came to pass, when Ahab heard those words, that he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and fasted, and lay in sackcloth, and went softly.

28 And the word of the Lord came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying,

29 Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself before me? because he humbleth himself before me, I will not bring the evil in his days: but in his son's days will I bring the evil upon his house.

V. 23. This circumstance not only predicted the dreadful manner in which Jezebel should be slain, but denoted the worst punishment of sin to be after death. (Note, 2 Kings 9:30-37.)—Jezreel.] In the very place in which Naboth had been murdered. If Jezebel attended Ahab on this occasion, it was, as far as is recorded, the only time in which Elijah spake in her presence.

V. 25, 26. Ahab's crime in respect of Naboth, was not a detached part of his conduct, contrary to the general course of his life, as David's sin in the matter of Uriah had been: but it was a specimen of his continued rebellion against God: (Note, Rom. 7:15-17.) and the gross and open idolatry to which Jezebel had first stirred him up, was even more abominable in the sight of God than his murder and other crimes. Having sold himself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord, as if in contempt and defiance of him, he was openly, constantly, and diligently employed in it, as a slave is in his master's business; and it was requisite that his punishment should be as notorious as his crimes had been. (Marg. Ref. k, l.)

V. 27-29. Ahab was greatly terrified at Elijah's message; and at the severe, determined, and solemn manner in which he delivered it: but his humiliation was superficial, and productive of external observances only. He did not, that we find, so much as restore Naboth's vineyard to his heirs; much less did he put away Jezebel, or renounce idolatry, and establish the worship of God. But he rent his clothes, wore sackcloth, and lay in it, fasted, and appeared in public with the dejected air of a penitent.—However, though his humiliation was formal and hypocritical, it acknowledged the justice of God, and his own sin, and put an outward honour on the divine law. Neither Jeroboam nor Baasha had even thus far humbled themselves. Inadequate as it was, Ahab would have acted still worse, if he had vindicated and gloried in his crimes, or attempted to put the prophet to death: and therefore the Lord recompensed his outward temporary repentance with a similar reward; for he granted him a respite of the judgment, as far as it respected his family, and spared him the anguish of witnessing the slaughter of his children. Accordingly, it was his son's blood, not his, which was licked up by the dogs, in the portion of Jezreel. Bp. Patrick. (Note, 17-19.)—Jezebel was too hardened to show any symptoms of remorse on this, or any other occasion. (Note, Acts 24:24-27.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. It is natural to us, as fallen creatures, to hanker after those things which are withheld from us; and every accession of wealth or prosperity, increases the violence of this propensity. The commandment indeed, which forbids us to covet, "is holy, just, and good," the fence of our neighbour's property, and of our own peace and integrity. (Note, Ez. 20:17.) But alas! "it is weak through the flesh," and the impetuous torrent of our lusts easily bursts the salutary barrier, and rages the more for having been opposed. (Note, Rom. 8:3,4.) Yet every violation of the precept proves its excellency; as indulged concupiscence opens the door to temptations, makes way for the most atrocious crimes, and prepares misery and destruction for every one who stands in the way of its gratification. If fair means fail to procure the object of inordinate desires, fraud or violence must be employed.—Pride cannot brook opposition; every plea of conscience is treated as mere pretence; and the best intended actions, of the most blameless and excellent persons, are ascribed to the worst of motives. But such passions are serpents cherished in a man's bosom, the bite of which inflicts exquisite torture and death.—Vain indeed are earthly advantages, if the want of a coveted spot of ground for a garden, and the supercilious or conscientious behaviour of an inferior, can rob a prosperous monarch of his own comfort, and render him sick with rage and vexation! (Note, Esth. 5:13.) This, however, is wholly the effect of men's lusts and passions, which, like children, are always most restless when most indulged. Providential blessings well answer the end for which they were intended, but cannot form a rational creature's felicity; and that degree of contradiction or disappointment, which would scarcely cause a humble man to heave one sigh, will break a proud man's heart. We should beware then of covetousness, pride, anger, envy, and discontent: we should "watch and pray that we may not enter into temptation;" we should aim to make the spiritual precept, "thou shalt not covet," the barrier in our hearts, as well as in the law of God, against the violation of the other commandments; and not allow ourselves so to desire things lawful, as not to be able to brook a denial or disappointment. (Note, Matt. 5:27,28.) Our more intimate connexions are in these respects of the highest importance. In the married state we expect, and should reciprocally impart, sympathy, counsel, encouragement, and assistance: but when, instead of a prudent and pious counsellor, a man has a factor for Satan in the form of an artful, unprincipled, and beloved woman, what fatal effects may not be expected! "Be ye not therefore unequally yoked with unbelievers." It is hard to relate facts respecting ourselves with simplicity and impartiality; but much more difficult to restrain those within the strict limits of equity, who are able to seize on the objects of their desires, without fear of being called to account before any human tribunal. Hence rapines and oppressions have disgraced human nature, and desolated the earth, in all ages; every resistance to the will of a superior, however reasonable, conscientious, and mild, has been condemned as rebellion; and this has occasioned assassinations, massacres, or public executions. A little acquaintance with history, and with human nature, will terminate our astonishment at such transactions; for "nothing is new under the sun;" but they must ever excite our regret, our compassion, and our indignation.

V. 8-16. The most flagrant injustice has generally been committed under the colour of legal forms; and the most horrid crimes have been perpetrated under the mask of piety: because the show of these good things hides the deformity of such transactions as otherwise could never be endured. (Notes, Matt. 23:14,25-28.)—Many command and reward villany, who in their hearts despise and detest the mercenary wretches whom they employ. (Note, Matt. 27:3-5.) It is grievous that men of Belial abound even in the lower orders of society; but most horrible when judges and nobles deserve this harsh appellation. Yet there will always be found those in every rank who will prostitute their talents, influence, and conscience, to the tyrant who rewards iniquity. (Notes, Ps. 58:1,2. 82:2-4. Ez. 22:27,28. Mic. 2:1-3. 7:1-4. Matt. 26:57-62.) Let us then bless God for a limited government, and for security from such outrages of oppression: though, even in Britain, men of Belial, by false testimony and perjury, may deprive us of our property, our liberty, our reputation, or our lives. We should therefore commit all that is dear to us to the Lord's keeping; seek those good things which cannot be taken from us; and wait with cheerful patience for that approaching judgment, when all iniquitous sentences shall be reversed. And let judges, juries, and witnesses beware of being warped in their decisions, verdicts, or testimony, by fear, affection, or interest: for those, who now are placed upon the tribunal, must shortly stand at the bar, to answer before a heart-searching, impartial Judge, for their conduct in their important stations.—Those who rejoice in iniquity, and gladly seize on the profit derived from the crimes of others, will be condemned equally with the perpetrators: and the triumphing of the wicked in the success of their villany, resembles the flash of lightning, which leaves the night more dark and gloomy than before: for the Lord beholds and is displeased; and his tremendous threatenings are only preludes to his more tremendous vengeance.

V. 17-29. Such ministers of God as are most decidedly faithful, must expect to be deemed morose, and even malevolent, by sinners, whose consciences have been galled with their plain warnings and rebukes, but whose hearts are wedded to their lusts. Men of this character often count the very persons to be their enemies, whose hearts bleed with compassion for them, and whose secret prayers in their behalf are recorded before God, as a demonstration of their disinterested love for them. Indeed this appears in their being willing rather to incur their keenest resentment, than cease their endeavours to save their souls. If men allow that they hate the minister for his faithfulness, they condemn themselves; but if they dislike him for his excessive severity, and his ill-nature, they are perfectly excusable: and what sinner would not wish to stand fair with his own conscience, and with society? (Note, 28:8.) On the other hand, impenitent sinners often account those to be their friends, who speak smooth things, and help them to deceive themselves, and are very lavish in their commendation, by way of contrasting them with those whom they deem their enemies; that it may be thought they love religion, while they hate its firmest friends.—But "the man of God" will neither desire the applause, nor fear the reproach, of those who have "sold themselves to work wickedness," and evince that they are the enemies of God and holiness. His testimony will one day find out those who have rejected it for their condemnation. Terrible things may come upon the willing slaves of sin in this world; but they will surely receive its awful wages in the second death. (Note, Rev. 20:11-15.)—At the tribunal of God, the difference will be manifest to all men, between the most lamentable falls of true believers, and the habitual wickedness of ungodly men; and between true repentance and all external, partial, and temporary appearances of it.—Before the searching word of God, the most hardened conscience (with very few exceptions) will sometimes be disquieted, and the stoutest hearts tremble; and for a season sinners will speak and act as if truly penitent. But "by their fruits ye shall know them;" and as the heart remains unchanged, nature will soon return to that course from which it has been violently forced; so that relapses into former iniquities, with continuance and quietness, will evince such hopeful appearances to be widely different from "that repentance, which is unto salvation not to be repented of." Yet, as these concessions outwardly yield the point in contest, and are thus honourable to God, he will notice and recompense them with respites and outward benefits. So that, whilst we are warned to beware of counterfeits, we are encouraged by the abounding grace of God, which he will never withhold from the upright humble soul; seeing he so delights in mercy, that he extends it even to wicked men, as far as consists with his justice, holiness, truth, and wisdom. We may also be animated to abound in the work of the Lord, assured that our labour will not be in vain; since he even recompenses in kind the formal services of his enemies. And finally, may we seek the blessings of the new covenant for the good of ourselves, and of our children after us; whilst wicked men leave their inheritance to their posterity, burdened with the curse of God; and ensure destruction to their own souls.

one of the cities of Refuge. (Deut. 4:43. Josh. 20:3.) It was also given to the Levites of the family of Merari. (Josh. 21:35.) Yet it was at this time possessed by the king of Syria.

V. 4. Jehoshaphat meant nothing more, than to express his readiness to afford Ahab every assistance in his power; as both he and his forces were at his command: but the language seemed to countenance all Ahab's undertakings; or at least to treat all the differences in opinion and conduct between him and Ahab as unimportant! Yet surely there was an essential difference between the reformer of Judah, and the corrupter of Israel! But excessive pliability of temper was the grand defect in Jehoshaphat's character; which exposed him to many temptations, and involved him and his kingdom in many and complicated calamities; and terminated in the extirpation of his whole family, Joash alone excepted. (Notes, 2 Kings 8:18. 9:27, 28. 10:13, 14. 11:1, 2. 2 Chr. 18:1, 19:2.)

V. 5. Jehoshaphat had been used to "acknowledge God in all his ways," and not to engage in any important undertaking without inquiring of him by his prophets, or high-priest; and he was not satisfied that Ahab should do otherwise. But what true servant of God could bring an acceptable, or even a tolerable message, to a gross idolater and cruel oppressor, who, for twenty-two years after he came to the throne, had been hardening himself in iniquity, amidst warnings, judgments, mercies, and convictions?

V. 6. It is most probable, that these were the prophets of the groves, who escaped, when the prophets of Baal were slain at the command of Elijah; for certainly they were false prophets. (Notes, 18:18-20, 40.) No doubt, they commonly prophesied in the name of Baal, or of some idol: but it seems that occasionally they could speak in the name of the LORD. In this verse indeed the word is not JEHOVAH, but Adonai, which is used with greater latitude: but afterwards both Zedekiah, and the rest of them, used the word JEHOVAH. (11, 12.) Like some modern philosophers and poets, they perhaps would argue, that it was all one, whether the Supreme Being were called Baal, or JEHOVAH, or Jupiter. To accommodate themselves therefore to Jehoshaphat, and to show that they were not bigots, but men of candour and liberality, they would for once prophesy in the name of JEHOVAH. They perhaps allowed Jehoshaphat to be a good sort of man; but he had some narrow prejudices, and would not be satisfied, if they said, 'Go up, for Baal shall deliver it into the hand of the King'; and they would scorn to disagree with him about a trifling variation, which they could make with little trouble, and without expense.—They perceived also which way Ahab's inclinations leaned, and to please him likewise they assured him of success. It is however to be supposed, that the number and valour of Ahab's forces, his alliance with Jehoshaphat, and the scandalous treachery of Ben-hadad, concurred in encouraging his hopes that he should obtain the victory: especially as, notwithstanding his idolatries, he had before been rendered successful. (Notes, 20:)

V. 7. Jehoshaphat must have regarded these prophets as deceivers and sycophants, whose interest it was to counsel Ahab to please himself. He knew that Israel was favoured with Elijah, Elisha, and other eminent prophets, though none of them appeared at court; he felt dissatisfied; but being too afraid of giving offence, he seemed to allow that these were prophets of God, yet he wished to consult some other, if there were any to be found. Perhaps he took occasion, from their using the word Adonai, (which might mean either the God of Israel, or a false god,) to inquire after some other prophet of JEHOVAH: and this might induce them afterwards to change their language in this respect. His subsequent conduct, however, shows that he paid far more regard to them, than he ought to have done, or than they deserved. Indeed, he ought to have decidedly entered his protest against them, and warned Ahab of his danger, if he hearkened to them: as Micaiah did. At least he should have done this, after he had heard Micaiah's message. (Notes, 17-28.)

V. 8. Micaiah is never mentioned in the history, except in this chapter and the history in Chronicles: (2 Chr. 18:) yet he doubtless had several times been sent with messages of rebuke and warning to this haughty idolater: (Note, 9.) Ahab, therefore, while he allowed, that they might inquire of the LORD by him, acknowledged that he hated him! (Notes, Is. 30:8-11. John 7:3-10. 15:17-21.) But Jehoshaphat ventured gently to intimate that he ought not to speak thus: he ought neither to hate him, nor be displeased with his word, nor seek agreeable but useful things; and he hoped on this occasion he would bring an encouraging message.

V. 9. Ahab knew where to find Micaiah, whom he perhaps had put in prison for some of his faithful reproofs. (Note, 26, 27.)—Some conjecture that Micaiah was the prophet, who three years before had chagrined Ahab, and that he had kept him in prison ever since. (Note, 20, 43.)

V. 10, 11. (Marg. Ref. q. v. Note, 24, 25.) Horns, &c. (11) These horns of iron were, probably, intended to represent the joint forces of the two kings, made successful by the power of God. The false prophets imitated the true ones in using external signs, the more deeply to impress the minds of those whom they addressed. (Marg. Ref. s. t.)

V. 13, 14. Perhaps this man intended to be friendly to Micaiah: and thought it was a pity, that he should hinder his preference, and expose himself to Ahab's resentment, by a needless or useless scrupulousness. He advised him to show some deference to royalty; to have some respect to the other prophets; and not to affect singularity, or presume that he alone was divinely inspired. But he must have entertained most absurd notions concerning prophecy; either considering the whole to be a mere imposition; or supposing that the truth, will, and purpose of God, could be modelled according to the inclinations of man. If he thought that Micaiah, by speaking that which was good to Ahab, could promote the success of the enterprise, he must have been extremely ignorant. And it was still worse, if he advised Micaiah to please the king, without regard to consequences. Perhaps, he concluded, that the unanimity and confidence, with which so great a number of prophets assured Ahab of success in the name of the LORD, proved them to be in the right; and that it would be foolish in Micaiah to oppose his single voice to such a multitude. And indeed, not only Ahab, but Jehoshaphat himself, seems to have been imposed upon by the same delusive argument; which, in one form or other, has been urged as cogent, if not unanswerable, by very able and sensible men, in every age of the church. He thought he could persuade Micaiah, not to dissent from the rest, lest he should fall under the censure of singularity peevishness, nothing but that which is true in the name of the LORD?

17 And he said, "I saw all Israel scattered upon the hills, 'as sheep that have not a shepherd; and the LORD said, 'These have no master; let them return every man to his house in peace.

18 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, 'Did I not tell thee that he would prophesy no good concerning me, but evil?

19 And he said, "Hear thou therefore the word of the LORD: 'I saw the LORD sitting on his throne, and 'all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left:

20 And the LORD said, 'Who shall 'persuade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one said on this manner, and another said on that manner.

21 And 'there came forth a spirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will persuade him.

22 And the LORD said unto him, 'Wherewith? And he said, I will go forth, and I will be 'a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, "Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also go forth, and do so.

23 Now therefore, behold, 'the LORD hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and 'the LORD hath spoken evil concerning thee.

24 But 'Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah went near, and 'smote Micaiah on the cheek, and said, 'Which way went the Spirit of the LORD from me to speak unto thee?

25 And Micaiah said, 'Behold, thou shalt see in that day, when thou shalt go 'into an inner chamber to hide thyself.

26 And the king of Israel said, 'Take Micaiah, and 'carry him back unto Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king's son;

27 And say, 'Thus saith the king, 'I put this fellow in the prison, and feed him with 'bread of affliction, and with water of affliction, 'until I come in peace.

28 And Micaiah said, 'If thou return at all in peace, the LORD hath not spoken by me. And he said, 'Hearken, O people, every one of you.

and privacy of spirit. And thus it is in the church at this day." Bp. Patrick.—Micaiah however at once silenced the courtier; and with a solemn oath protested, that he would deliver the message of JEHOVAH without any alteration, whatever the king thought of it, and whatever the other prophets might agree in.—A most noble example!

V. 15. Go, &c. The prophet did not preface this address, with "Thus saith the LORD;" and Ahab evidently perceived that he did not speak with his usual decision and authority. It was, as if he had said, "You intend to go up against Ramoth-gilead, and your prophets assure you of success; and if I do not, you will disregard my warning, and treat me as an enemy. But you have my good will and good wishes, if they could profit you; and if my conscience would allow me, I too could easily seek your favour, by saying, "Go, and prosper, for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king."—You have a mind to go, and do so: try the truth of their prediction." Bp. Patrick. (Notes, 18:27-29. Ez. 11:13,10.)

V. 16. Ahab spake as if he had, on former occasions, thus adjured Micaiah to speak nothing to him, but "that which was true in the name of the LORD;" and with some intimation, that the prophet needed such adjurations. He evidently aimed to be thought, especially by Jehoshaphat, exceedingly solicitous about discovering the will of God. Perhaps Micaiah hesitated, till repeatedly urged to speak; and some think, that he did not receive his message, till the very moment before he delivered it.—The adjuring a person to speak, was equivalent to putting him upon his oath; and calling on him, as in the presence and by the authority of God, to speak all he knew. (Marg. Ref. Note, Matt. 26: 63-68.)

V. 17. This vision exactly represented the condition of Ahab's forces, after he was slain; and showed, that Ben-hadad, his pride and revenge being gratified by Ahab's death, would allow the Israelites, when vanquished, and scattered without a leader, to return home in peace. (Marg. Ref. Note, 36.)

V. 18. Ahab aimed to persuade Jehoshaphat and himself, that this warning originated from Micaiah's malignity and enmity to him, being similar to the messages which he had formerly delivered; and therefore, that it ought not to be put in competition with the predictions of all the other prophets. (Notes, 21:17-19. Prov. 29:1. Jer. 38:1-6.)

V. 19-23. In order to leave this hardened criminal without excuse, and to give a salutary instruction and warning to others in future ages, Micaiah received and related this vision.—It is not requisite to inquire particularly, concerning what passes in that world where the Lord unveils his glory; for truths, rather than facts, are revealed in such representations. (Note, Job 1:6.)—God had doomed Ahab to fall at Ramoth-gilead, by the army of Ben-hadad, whom he had smoothly spared. (Notes, 20:31-34, 41, 42.) In order to bring him thither, he was pleased to give an evil spirit leave to impose on him, with the hopes of success in that expedition. "The devil and his angels" are always ready for such attempts, and generally use false prophets and teachers as their ministers. (Note, 2 Cor. 11:13-15.) This method the lying spirit proposed upon the present occasion, and prevailed against Ahab, by inducing all his prophets to assure him of victory. And by permitting him to do this,

"the LORD put a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets." (22) He neither commanded nor inclined the lying spirit to tempt Ahab's prophets; nor did he put the wickedness into their hearts, or the lies into their mouths. He likewise gave Ahab fair warning; and if he had not hated the truth, and loved a lie, he would not have gone to Ramoth-gilead; but God foresaw he would go, and would perish there.—The prophet "saw the LORD sitting upon his throne," and that made him disregard Ahab upon his throne, and not fear his frown and vengeance; nor the resentment of the four hundred prophets, who must have been enraged, even to madness, at being thus publicly declared to be the ministers of the devil, to deceive and persuade their king to his destruction. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ez. 14:1-11. 2 Thes. 2:8-12.)

V. 24, 25. (Note, 10, 11.) Zedekiah seems to have been the principal person among Ahab's prophets: he therefore highly resented Micaiah's words, and both reviled and smote him in the presence of the king and his nobles; (Marg. Ref. q.) nay, in the presence of Jehoshaphat; and yet he met with no rebuke! As one who would appear confident, that he spake by the Spirit of the LORD, he inquired, when and how that Spirit left him to inspire Micaiah. But the prophet meekly answered, that the event would determine which of them spake by the Spirit of God; and he would not need information on that head, when he should conceal himself in the closest recess, "a chamber," or closet, "within a chamber." (marg.) for fear of those who sought his life. Probably Zedekiah accompanied Ahab to the war, and this prediction was fulfilled when he fled from the enemy, after Ahab's death. Then he would have leisure to reflect on his own impiety, and the fatal effects of his counsel to his king, for whom he had pretended great friendship. (Notes, Jer. 28:3-17. Ez. 13:6-16. Am. 7:10-13.)—He would hide himself, 'for fear he should be seized, and punished as a false prophet, and the cause of Ahab's death.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 26, 27. Ahab sent Micaiah back to the persons who had him before in custody, one of whom was "Joash, the king's son;" yet nothing is elsewhere said of a son of Ahab of that name. To these, however, he sent orders to "put him in the prison," some place of closer confinement than before; (Note, 9.) and there to treat him with severity in respect of his sustenance, and in other respects, until he should return in peace, probably intending then to put him to death, as a false prophet. Ahab forgot his own counsel to Ben-hadad, when he spake so confidently of returning in peace. (20:11.)

V. 28. Micaiah thus put the difference between himself and Ahab's prophets to the test, and made his appeal to the people at large; that, if the king despised the word of God, they might from his fate learn to reverence it. (Notes, 18:36,37. Num. 16:28-34.)—People. יְהוּדִים, peoples, meaning both the men of Judah who attended Jehoshaphat, and those of Israel.

V. 29. Jehoshaphat's silent connivance at Ahab's treatment of Micaiah, and his willingness to go with him to battle, after these solemn warnings, were very criminal, and almost unaccountable. Perhaps he feared personal insults; or he persuaded himself that in Ahab's court he had no business to intermeddle; or, matters were carried with such violence and precipitation, that he had scarcely time to reflect on his own conduct. (Note, 7.)

V. 30. Perhaps Ahab was secretly alarmed by the solemnity of Micah's address, though he scorned to desist from his enterprise; or he was aware that he should be peculiarly aimed at by the Syrian forces. Under pretence of honouring Jehoshaphat as with the chief command, he made this insidious proposal, that by exposing him to the greatest danger, he might favour his own escape. (Note, 2 Chr. 18: 29.) Such was his friendship! But Jehoshaphat meant no harm, and suspected none: yet in such a case, the wisdom of the serpent was as needful as the harmlessness of the dove. (Notes, Matt. 10:16-18. 1 Cor. 14:20-25, v. 20.)

V. 31. (20:24.) Some have imagined, that Ben-hadad wished to wipe off the disgrace of his own captivity, by making Ahab prisoner in return; and to reciprocate his kindness, in liberating him without ransom. (Note, 20:31-34.) But his proud heart seems to have rankled with a far more malignant resentment; and Ahab's triumphant success against him had excited such hatred, as no subsequent kindness could erase.

V. 32-35. Jehoshaphat in extreme danger cried unto the Lord, and he wonderfully preserved him. "They turned back from pursuing him;" which was to be ascribed to the secret providence of God, . . . who resolved as wonderfully to preserve Jehoshaphat, as to destroy Ahab.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, 2 Chr. 18:30-34, v. 31. 19:1, 2.) But Ahab, notwithstanding all his precaution, could not escape the destined blow. The captains of Ben-hadad knew not where to seek for him: but an arrow shot at random by a Syrian was directed by God, to penetrate the joints of his breastplate, or coat of mail, and to give him a mortal wound.—"Joints of the harness" in the text, seems less proper than the marginal reading,—"Perhaps Ahab did not think that the wound would prove fatal, and was unwilling to intimidate his forces by wholly leaving the field of battle; and therefore probably having retired that his wound might be dressed; he returned, and remained in his chariot till he died.

V. 36. When Ahab's death was known, either Jehosha-phat, or those who succeeded in command, issued this proclamation, probably with reference to Micah's vision. (Note, 17.)

V. 38. Note, 21:17-19.

V. 39. Ivory house.] It cannot be supposed that this house was built of ivory: but it was so inlaid and ornamented with ivory, that it thence derived its principal elegance, or magnificence. (Marg. Ref. q.)

V. 41-45. Perhaps this general account is here given of Jehoshaphat's reign over Judah, in order to contrast it with Ahab's wicked reign over Israel. The chief blemish in Jehoshaphat's character and conduct is hinted at, when it is said, "He made peace with the king of Israel," not merely engaging to avoid all hostile measures; but entering into the most intimate alliance with him, and confirming the treaty by marrying his son to Ahab's daughter, which introduced much idolatry and wickedness into Judah, brought grief at calamities on the inhabitants, and occasioned the almost entire ruin of Jehoshaphat's family. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2-5. 2 Chr. 17:-20.)

High places. (43.) 'This error was so deeply rooted, that the best of the kings, till Hezekiah's time, . . . connived at it.' Bp. Patrick. (Notes, 2 Kings 18:4, 22. 2 Chr. 31:1.)

V. 46. 15:12. Notes, 14:22-24. Deut. 23:17, 18.

V. 47. David had conquered Edom; and it is probable, that till this time the nominal king of Edom had been merely a viceroy of the kings of Judah. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Sam. 8:13, 14.)

V. 48, 49. Jehoshaphat at first joined with Ahaziah, and lost his fleet: but being reproved by a prophet, he would not consent to Ahaziah's proposals the second time. (Note, 2 Chr. 20:35-37.) These ships of Tarshish were made to go to Ophir: yet it is said in Chronicles, they were "made to go to Tarshish." Was there not therefore a Tarshish near Ophir, as well as a place of that name in Spain. (Note, 10:22.)

V. 51. Jehoshaphat began to reign in the fourth year of Ahab, who reigned twenty and two years; (41) yet Ahaziah succeeded Ahab, in the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat. This occasions some difficulty; but learned men suppose that the chronology of the kings of Israel was adjusted to that of the kings of Judah. Now Ahab began to reign after Asa had entered on his thirty-eighth year, and Asa died before the end of his forty-first year. (16:29. 2 Chr. 16:13.) And Jehoshaphat began to reign in the same year, which thus was reckoned both to Asa and Jehoshaphat. Ahab therefore is computed to have reigned four years in Asa's time, and eighteen in Jehoshaphat's, including a part of the year in which Asa died, and in which Jehoshaphat succeeded him; though Ahab did not live till Jehoshaphat had fully completed his seventeenth year; having died nearer the beginning of the year, than Asa had done.—It is difficult to make this intelligible to persons not acquainted with the Jewish method of computing time; who, (whether in days or years,) take in both the first and last of the account, as if entire, even though only a small part of each had actually passed. Thus Ahaziah having reigned part of the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat, and part of the eighteenth, (for he died in the eighteenth,) is said to have reigned two years. (Note, 16:8—14.)

B.C.] 51 ¶ Ahaziah the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned two years over Israel.

V. 52, 53. Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Kings 1:—Baal, &c. (53.) "Which worship had been introduced by his mother Jezebel; beyond the impiety of Jeroboam. (Notes, 21:17—23.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. They who neglect the word of God, to rely on the promises of ungodly men, generally meet with merited disappointment; but this does not excuse the treachery and ingratitude of those who deceive and injure the very persons that have been criminally kind to them.—There are certain critical seasons, when advantages are placed within our reach; but if we let the opportunity pass we shall in vain attempt to recall it, and our endeavours will only serve to increase our losses. (Note, Ec. 8:6, 7.)—Wicked men court the friendship of the righteous, when they can render their assistance subservient to their own purposes; but their professions of regard must be insincere.—That same compliant spirit, which betrays some pious persons into amity with the declared enemies of religion, renders the connexion peculiarly dangerous to them: they are perpetually persuaded to improper concessions of every kind; and induced to connive at, and even sanction, such converse and conduct, as they ought decidedly to protest against: and the fear of being deemed uncourteous, and the desire of escaping censure, ridicule, or insult, for their religious peculiarities, stop their mouths, and cause them to deviate from sincerity in their expressions of civility or courteousness. Yet these alone are the godly persons whose acquaintance the men of the world will much desire. If, however, we are necessarily placed among profane or infidel characters, we must not yield, either to fear or shame, so as to conceal our dependence on God and devotedness to him; for these mark the difference "between those who serve him, and those who serve him not."—If it were to be decided by vote, what is the true religion, we see plainly that those abominations which God abhors would gain the election, against that worship which he has instituted. Even in the visible church, numbers, authority, and unanimity, have repeatedly been in favour of delusions, nay, destructive heresies, and abominable idolatries, against a single poor despised prophet of the Lord!—It is indeed, in a worldly sense, worth while, for a man of competent talents and address, to employ himself in reconciling men's consciences to their inclinations; and if great men cannot discard their religious scruples, to enable them, by help of some false system, to render them subservient to the commission of sin without remorse. In some places and at some times, such false prophets will be well paid for their delusions; and those, who, from ambition, avarice, or sensuality, "turn away their ears from the truth," and "cannot endure sound doctrine," will "hear" to themselves teachers of this kind, after their own lusts" (Note, 2 Tim. 4:1—5, vv. 3, 4.) that the agreement of so many ministers may engender them to disregard those singular and uncourteous persons who are always robbing them of their comfort, and putting them upon an unnecessary strictness. A few individuals indeed hint, that something is wanting in their favourite instructors; nay, prefer such as they dislike. But then, are not these too scrupulous? Do they not carry matters too far? Do they make proper allowances for human frailty, and peculiar situations? Thus eventually smooth doctrine, united with confidence, ingenuity, and courtly manners, obtains the preference, and opens the way to the favour of the great and of the many. The faithful servants of God must therefore lay their account with hatred, contempt, and insult. They know not to give flattering words, or to call base crimes by soft names, or to buoy up the hopes of hypocrites with insinuating falsehoods: they cannot be silent, when called to speak; but must declare the counsel of God, and not keep in the way of his mother, "and in the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin:

53 For he served Baal, and worshipped him, and provoked to anger the LORD God of Israel according to all that his father had done.

back any thing profitable, however displeasing. Their conscientiousness will often be ascribed to pride and obstinacy: the language of their tender compassion for souls will be called severity or malevolence; and their plaindealing will be branded as insolence and ill-manners. But they must commit their cause to God: and wicked men, who hate them for the truth's sake, will at length find, that they were their own enemies in so doing, and that in opposing them they strove against the Almighty.

V. 10—28. Unprincipled teachers are sufficiently pliable in matters of religion: they carefully avoid the imputation of bigotry; they make great pretensions to candour, and even treat the most fundamental truths of Revelation as matters of indifference or uncertainty; but the same men are exceedingly tenacious of their own interests, and stubborn in their own concerns. Whereas we ought to be as pliant as the willow, where our own ease, credit, advantage, or indulgence are at stake; and as firm as the sturdy oak, in standing up for the great things, which relate to the glory of God, and the salvation of souls.—Those who are rising in the world, or possessed of wealth, are apt to counsel the ministers of Christ, what they ought to speak in the name of the LORD; though they betray their own ignorance and love of the world by every word. We should indeed be accessible and teachable, and willing to take a friendly hint from any man: but when others would persuade us to consult our own ease, and interest, to shun the cross, to prefer courtesy to integrity, and to bend the word of God to the humours of the rich and great; we must recognise the tempter in such counsellors, and by peremptory language stop at once their insidious proposals, by declaring our determination, whatever others do, to adhere to what we consider as the truth and will of our Lord and Judge. (Notes, Am. 7:12—17. Matt. 16:21—23.)—In some cases however we should not be forward to speak: when men evidently do not wish to hear the truth, and appear determinately set against our testimony, it may be enough to express our compassionate good-will, and our fears for them; or to show our disapprobation by silence. But if we are fairly called upon to give our sentiments, we must do it with all seriousness and firmness, without regarding personal consequences.—A believing view of the presence and glory of the King of Heaven, will raise us above the fear of our fellow-creatures, however powerful or enraged; and will enable us to commit ourselves to his protection, in the discharge of our duty, in the midst of apparent danger. But we must not expect exemption from hardship and ill-usage; and need not wonder if we eat the bread of affliction, and are even rewarded with blows, imprisonment, and cruel mockings: and when princes, false teachers, and apostates unite against the servants of God, even the remnant of his people will often be afraid to interfere in their behalf.—Alas! how should we be ashamed to complain of what we in this day call trials, when we consider what the servants of God formerly endured! Yet it will be well, if our exemption from trouble prove not more injurious to us, than persecutions did to them: for we are more easily allured and bribed into unfaithfulness and conformity to the world, than influenced by terrors and threats. Let us then watch and pray, and prepare for temptations of every kind: and be careful that the quietness of our enemies do not arise from our making too many concessions, and going upon their ground, to meet them half way, in order to form the worst of all coalitions.—Nothing can by any means harm us, if we continue faithful, and meekly valiant for the truth: the Lord will remove every aspersion from our characters; and bear testimony to his truth, in his due time: and some will profit by our warnings, though others rush headlong on ruin.—Little do unbelievers suspect how many legions of crafty, malicious, and powerful enemies are unwearied in plotting their destruction; restrained by no hand but that of him whom they despise and disobey. (P. O. Job 16:12.)—The whole multitude of those "who privately bring in damnable heresies," or propagate infidelity with vast industry and ingenuity, speak and write no other things, than are suggested to them by the prompter behind the curtain. Let us then fear suppressing our convictions, and returning back to sin after professions of repentance, lest Satan should thus prevail against us. For if he obtain leave to deceive, the disposition of our hearts to prefer a flattering lie to a humbling truth that opposes our inclinations, will give him such an advantage, that every attempt of others to prevent his success, will only exasperate the mind to persecution or blasphemy.

V. 29—53. Those, who are rebellious against God, and injurious to his people, will not often be very faithful or grateful to their friends. Self-love is their supreme principle, to which all other considerations must be sacrificed; and the children of God are seldom so politic as the children of the wicked one. When, however, the Lord has rebuked his offending people, he will mark that difference between them and his enemies, which they did not sufficiently observe. "His eyes are upon the righteous, and his ears are open to their prayers; but his face is against the workers of iniquity." None "can hide themselves in secret places from him." That which is casual to man, is the appointment of God, to fulfil his word of mercy or of wrath; so that, "men shall say, This hath God wrought, for they shall perceive that it is his work." The deceiver and deceived are his, and the flatterer and flattered shall be taken in the same net, and fall into the same destruction. Alas! what will all riches, monuments, or splendid achievements avail, when God shall require the sinner's soul? Happy are they in death, who have served him in their generation: but the best of mere men, nay their best actions, are so defective, if not defiled, that "blessed is he" alone "whose iniquity is forgiven, and whose sin is covered." Yet sincere endeavours to do good are the proper evidences and effects of saving faith: and the concurring reproofs of God's word and rod will lead the upright believer to repent of every transgression, and to bring forth fruits meet for repentance: whilst hardened sinners rush forward, unawed, and unmoved, in the ways which have led others before them into everlasting misery.

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE KINGS,

COMMONLY CALLED

THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE KINGS.

THIS book is merely a continuation of the preceding, to which it is joined in the Hebrew Canon: the remarks therefore already made on that, in a great measure apply to this.—It contains the history of above three hundred years.—In Israel the kings were uniformly idolatrous and wicked: and though the labours of Elijah, Elisha, and other prophets, were prospered to preserve a considerable number of the people from the general contagion; yet the measure of their national iniquity was soon filled up; so that they were conquered and carried captive by the kings of the Assyrians, and dispersed among the Gentiles, no more, as a collected body to be restored to their own land. Their country was, after this, planted by the conquerors with a mingled people, who established a corrupt and partial worship of JERUSALEM, from whom originated the nation and religion of the Samaritans. These events began to take place considerably above a hundred years before the Babylonish captivity.—In Judah indeed some remarkable revivals of religion took place under the pious princes of David's family, and by means of the faithful labours of the prophets: but these promising appearances were of short duration; several of the kings were idolatrous and extremely wicked: the priests and Levites exceedingly neglected their important duty; and the people were generally prone to idolatry and iniquity. So that, after the death of Josiah, the nation became almost universally corrupt; and the melancholy account closes with the destruction of the city and temple, the desolation of the country, and the enslaving and carrying away of the inhabitants, by the Chaldeans.—As all the prophets, (commonly so called,) whose writings have been preserved, lived in the latter part of this period; (those excepted who lived during or after the captivity;) and as they continually refer to the facts recorded in this history; we may consider all their predictions as sanctioning, by their accomplishment, the divine authority of the narrative, though it does not contain any express prophecy, the completion of which extended much beyond the term of the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity.

CHAPTER I.

Moab rebels against Israel, 1. Ahaziah, being sick, sends to inquire of Baal-zebub, and Elisha, sent by an angel to deliver the messengers to him from him, in the name of JEHOVAH, who twice calls down fire to consume those who came against him, 5-12. The captain of the third company sues for mercy; and Elisha, encouraged by an angel, goes to Ahaziah, and avails him that he would have been slain, 13-16. Ahaziah dies, and is succeeded by Jehoram, 17, 18.

THEN Moab rebelled against Israel after the death of Ahab.

2 And Ahaziah fell down through a lattice in his upper chamber that was in Samaria, and was sick: and he sent messengers, and said unto them, Go, inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron, whether I shall recover of this disease.

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1. After David had subjugated the Moabites, they continued in subjection till the division of the kingdom; when their vassalage and tribute were transferred to the kings of Israel, as those of Edom remained to the kings of Judah. (Note, 1 Kings 22:47.) But after Ahab's death the Moabites revolted. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 34-27. 2 Sam. 8:1, 2.)

V. 2. The lattice, through which Ahaziah fell, is supposed to have had some curious ornamental network, which being decayed, gave way when he leaned upon it.—"Baal-zebub" signifies the lord of a fly or flies. Probably, the country was grievously infested with swarms of flies, and the Ekronites fancied that their idol delivered or preserved them from these. (Note, Ex. 8:21.) Beelzebub, (which is the same name,) is called in the New Testament "the prince of the devils;" and hence we learn that, under these names and images, evil spirits were actually worshipped as gods. (Note, Matt. 12:22-24.)—The Baal generally worshipped in Israel at that time, was the god of the Zidonians; but Baal-zebub was the god of Ekron in Philistia: for they "had lords many,"

3 But the angel of the LORD said to Elijah the Tishbite, Arise, go up to meet the messengers of the king of Samaria, and say unto them, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that ye go to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron?

4 Now therefore thus saith the LORD, Thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die. And Elijah departed.

5 ¶ And when the messengers turned back unto him, he said unto them, Why are ye now turned back?

6 And they said unto him, There came a man up to meet us, and said unto us, Go, turn again and gods many." It seems that his oracle was then in great repute, as that of Delphos was in Greece some ages afterwards.—Ahaziah did not send to inquire what he was to do in order to his recovery, but merely to know whether he should recover or not. (Notes, 8:7, 8. 1 Kings 14:1-4.) Perhaps he had been making preparations for reducing the Moabites, and was impatient to march against them.

V. 3, 4. When a king of Israel sent to inquire of a heathen oracle, he proclaimed to the Gentiles his want of confidence in JEHOVAH: as if the only nation favoured with revelation, and the knowledge of the true God, had been the only nation in which no God was known! This was peculiarly dishonourable and provoking to the Lord: (Notes, 5:8, 15, 16. 1 Kings 18:36, 37. Ps. 76:1, 2.) and therefore the Lord by his angel commissioned Elijah to answer the inquiry of the messengers, and to send them back to Ahaziah, with the solemn denunciation of his speedy death by the disease which confined him to his bed. The prophet accordingly went and met the messengers, and sent them back with this sentence. And he departed, yet did not conceal himself unto the king that sent you, and say unto him, 'Thus saith the Lord, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that thou sendest to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron? 'therefore thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

7 And he said unto them, 'What manner of man was he which came up to meet you, and told you these words?

8 And they answered him, He was a hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. And he said, It is Elijah the Tishbite.

[Practical Observations.]

9 ¶ Then the king sent unto him a captain of fifty with his fifty. And he went up to him: and behold, he sat on the top of a hill. And he spake unto him, 'Thou man of God, the king hath said, Come down.

10 And Elijah answered and said to the captain of fifty, 'If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And there came down fire from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.

11 ¶ Again also he sent unto him another captain of fifty with his fifty. And he answered and said unto him, 'O man of God, thus hath the king said, Come down quickly.

12 And Elijah answered and said unto them, 'If I be a man of God, let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And the fire of God came down from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.

13 ¶ And he sent again a captain of the third fifty with his fifty. And the third captain of fifty went up, and came and fell on his knees before Elijah, and besought him, and said unto him, 'O man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of these fifty thy servants, be precious in thy sight.

14 Behold, there came fire down from heaven, and burnt up the two captains of the former fifties with their fifties: therefore let my life now be precious in thy sight.

15 And the angel of the Lord said unto Elijah, Go down with him: be not afraid of him. And he arose, and went down with him unto the king.

16 And he said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, 'Forasmuch as thou hast sent messengers to inquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron, (is it not because there is no God in Israel to inquire of his word?) therefore thou shalt not come down off that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

17 ¶ So he died according to the word of the Lord which Elijah had spoken. And Jehoram reigned in his stead in the second year of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah; because he had no son.

18 Now the rest of the acts of Ahaziah which he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

but continued so near to the same place, that the captains and their soldiers readily found him. (9,10)

V. 5, 6. The speedy return of the messengers convinced Ahaziah, that they had not gone to Ekron; and they punctually delivered the message of God, which Elijah had sent by them, without softening it in the least, or changing a word in it. Something peculiarly venerable in the appearance of the prophet, with the firm solemnity of his manner in speaking to them, seems to have over-awed them; and probably they were convinced, that his words would be verified.

V. 8. Elijah was a hairy man, either in his person, or by reason of the coarseness and roughness of his garments, made perhaps of hair, and girded round him with a piece of undressed skin. In this manner he showed his mortification to the world, and expressed his concern and grief for the idolatry and iniquity of his people. (Note, Matt. 3:4.)

V. 9. This officer called Elijah a "man of God" by way of derision, not out of respect as others did.—Jezebel's name is not mentioned in this transaction; but probably she stirred up her son, as she formerly had done her husband, against the prophets of the Lord.

On the top of a hill.] Some think mount Carmel is meant: but Carmel was far north, or northwest of Samaria, where Ahaziah lay, (Josh. 19:26.) and the road to Ekron lay to the southwest. Had the prophet retired to mount Carmel, the captain could not so readily have found him.

V. 10. No doubt Elijah was moved to call for fire from heaven on these men, by immediate revelation. He was influenced by a holy zeal for the honour of the Lord, which was attacked in his person as a man of God, by the worshippers of Baalim; for if he had been actuated by resentment or selfish passions, the fire from heaven would not have come at his word. (Notes, 2:23, 24. 2 Cor. 13:7-10.)—He had before demonstrated JEHOVAH to be the only true God, by fire from heaven consuming the sacrifice: (Notes, 1 Kings 18:32-39.) yet the nation in general, and especially the rulers, adhered to the worship of Baal: it was therefore proper, that they should receive a more awful proof; and be made sensible that all the enemies of the Lord would at length be destroyed. The officers and soldiers, who were slain, not only deserved death as idolaters, but doubtless they had been the instruments of Ahab and Jezebel in persecution: and the example would have salutary effects on many in Israel. (Notes, Dan. 3:19-23. Luke 9:51-56. Acts 12:18, 19.)

V. 11, 12. It is hard to say, which was on this occasion the more wonderful, the madness of the wounded and enfeebled Ahaziah, when the report of the awful event reached him, or the presumption of this officer and his soldiers: for the second attempt was made in a more peremptory and haughty manner than the foregoing. But perhaps the former calamity was ascribed to chance. 'Indeed it had so happened that terrible lightning, just at that moment, slew the captain and his fifty men.' None of the persons concerned appear to have been convinced that JEHOVAH had sent the fire from heaven, for this express purpose, in answer to the words of Elijah. (Note, 1 Sam. 6:2-9.)

V. 13, 14. This officer had no courage to refuse obedience to the infatuated tyrant, who ordered him in this desperate service; and yet he dared not attempt any thing against Elijah: he therefore employed humble entreaties, with every expression of respect and submission; and in this manner his life and the lives of his soldiers were preserved. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15, 16. Elijah had so exasperated Jezebel and her party, by putting the prophets of Baal to death; and by the awful sentence on Ahab and Jezebel, and the whole family, denounced in the vineyard of Naboth; that he had no further prospect of doing them good. In general he lived in a retired manner; and laboured among the inferior inhabitants without exposing himself to the rage of the king: but on this occasion, he was especially commissioned to go to him, along with the captain and his fifty. And his presence and authoritative boldness in delivering in person the solemn message before sent by the messengers, so dismayed Ahaziah, that he did not attempt any thing against him: and shortly after he died, (17) according to Elijah's word, for attempting to consult a heathen oracle. (Note, 1 Chr. 10:13, 14.)

V. 17. Jehoshaphat lived some time after this: it is therefore supposed that he admitted his son Jehoram to reign with him, eight or nine years before his death; and Jehoram the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel, in the second year of that term, or in the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat. (Notes, 8:16, 17. 1 Kings 22:51.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. Man's revolt from God is often punished by the rebellion of those who owe subjection to him.—Death meets men in the most unexpected places and forms, but always under the direction of the all-wise and righteous God. If reconciled to him by faith in the Saviour, and walking in his ways, "death is ours," and can never come in a wrong time or manner: but to the impenitent and unbelieving he is and must be "the king of terrors."—False religion amuses men's minds, and gratifies a vain curiosity: but the Bible declares the way of acceptance, and the path of duty; and, without informing us of the events of our future lives, or the time and manner of our death, it teaches us to be always ready; and instructs us how to behave under every dispensation of Providence, and thus to find comfort under them all, and derive benefit from them.—With such instructions, and access to the mercy-seat of our God and Father, we have no occasion to consult any of those oracles, which pretend to unfold what God has been pleased to conceal. The believer assured by the word of God that all things shall work together for his good, may rejoice in hope, and look forward with comfort; but the foreknowledge of the afflictions of future life, joined to the terror of final misery, would mar the little enjoyment which the unbeliever has in this world, and torment him before his time. (P. O. Gen. 15:12. 21.)—Men are prone

CHAPTER II.

Elijah when about to be translated, cannot induce Elisha not to attend him in his progress, 1-1. With his mantle he divides Jordan, and they pass over, 8. Elisha allows conditionally of Elisha's request of a double man of the Spirit, and is taken to heaven in a fiery chariot, 9-11. Elisha takes up Elijah's mantle, smites and dries up Jordan with it, and passes over; and is received as Elijah's successor, 12-15. The sons of the prophets in vain seek for Elijah, 16-18. Elisha heals with salt the bad waters of Jericho, 19-22. Bears destroy the children that mock him, 23-25.

to act as if there were no God; and as if they were left to take care of themselves, as well as to spend their lives in following their own inclinations: hence they are so readily induced to yield to every temptation, and to make rapid progress in wickedness, when in pursuit of the objects which they idolize, or when afraid of losing them.—Those who would be valiant for the truth, and in the cause of God, before the great ones of this world, must learn temperance and frugality; and evince that they neither envy nor covet their luxuries and embellishments, but are indifferent about all other things, compared with the glory of God and the salvation of immortal souls.

V. 9-18. The conduct of some persons, as impartially recorded in the word of God, appears so infatuated, that we should scarcely be able to credit the account, did we not sometimes witness actions equally unaccountable. Often has it been observed, that men upon a deathbed, and aware that they could not recover, have appeared more trifling, profane, avaricious, morose, fierce, or cruel, than at any former period: so that those around them have been tempted, by their intolerable conduct, to wish them dead before the hour arrived! Some have even seemed to regret with their dying lips, that they could do no more mischief in the world before they left it! And in many other ways men are continually acting in a manner inexplicable, except upon the principles of the wise man; "The heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart whilst they live, and after that they go to the dead." (Notes, Ec. 9:1-3. Matt. 2:16-18).—Haughty persecutors will always meet with wretches ready to execute their most impious and desperate mandates: and when providential mercies, means of grace, warnings and corrections, leave them thus desperate in enmity against God and his servants, we may be confident that vengeance slumbereth not.—If the wicked face death in its most tremendous forms, to obtain or preserve the favour of an earthly prince, whose "breath goeth forth, and he returneth to his dust, and all his thoughts perish;" what danger and hardship ought we not to welcome in the service of the everlasting God, who can give us the gracious recompense of eternal life. (Notes, Ps. 143:3-6).—There are proper seasons for different methods of behaving towards sinners, and we must ask wisdom of God to direct us; and, as the same action may be either right or wrong, according to the principle from which it springs, we should look well to our own spirits, and be candid in judging our brethren. It is, however, our general rule, "not to be overcome of evil, but to overcome evil with good."—The judgments of God under the Christian dispensation are commonly spiritual: and the more mildly we behave to those, who insult and injure us for the Lord's sake, the more terrible punishment will be at length inflicted upon them. But our God is ever ready to forgive the humble suppliant, however rebellious he has been; and the way to prevail with him is to bow before him. We therefore should be followers of him, and be ready to pray for and favour our bitterest enemies, especially when under any alarm of conscience they entreat us so to do.—We may safely venture into the presence of our most enraged foes, when he requires us, who has all hearts in his hand: the courage of faith has often struck terror into the heart of the proudest sinner: how then shall any be able to stand before God, when he arises to execute judgment? His words will surely take effect: and while some sinners, being long spared, increase their own condemnation; others are cut off speedily, and hurried into destruction. Both are intended to warn others to seek the Lord whilst he may be found: and his servants will, one way or other, survive and witness the destruction of all his enemies.

art, and to dust shalt thou return." (Note, Gen. 5:22-24. P. O. 21-32.) But the Lord had given Elisha some previous intimations, that he intended thus to distinguish him, and that the day was at hand. (Note, 1 Kings 19:3, 4.) At that time, he and Elisha were at Gilgal: (Notes, Josh. 5:9. 10:7, 40-43.) and thence Elisha went in circuit to several of the schools of the prophets in different places, to give them his parting exhortations and blessing. Doubtless most of them were established, and all of them were superintended by him. (Note, 1 Kings 19:20, 21).—It is not known how old Elisha was when translated.

V. 2. Elisha might intend by this proposal to make trial of the strength of Elisha's attachment; or perhaps he longed for retirement, and shunned ostentation. But Elisha expressed his determination to enjoy the pleasure and reap the benefit of his company to the last; and, if it might be, to witness his translation: and this he confirmed with a most solemn asseveration. (Notes, Ruth 1:16, 17. 2 Sam. 15:18-22).—As the life and soul of man entirely depend on God, to mention them in a solemn oath, either alone, or along with him, was deemed equivalent to swearing by the name of the Lord. (Notes, Matt. 5:33-37. 23:16-22.)

V. 3. Beth-el.] (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Kings 12:26-33. 13:1, 2.) "In that place where the golden calves were worshipped, God... continued the schools of the prophets among them. For by the sons of the prophets" are meant the scholars of the prophets, whom they educated and trained up in religion and piety. And God... bestowed on some of them the Spirit of prophecy... This was a great testimony of God's love to an apostate people... And it is still more remarkable, that prophets of greater excellency for miracles were continued in Israel, than were in Judah; because they needed them more... It seems to me very probable, that these "sons of the prophets" were such ministers to the prophets as the evangelists were to the apostles; whom the prophets sent to publish their prophecies and instructions to the people, where they could not go themselves." Bp. Patrick.—"The sons of the prophets" at Beth-el, and other places, had received a divine intimation, that Elisha was on that day to be taken from them: and as Elisha was next in precedence after Elijah, sitting nearest under him, or at his feet, while he delivered his instructions; he would be considered as their superintendent, when his master was taken "from his head," or from above him. (Note, Acts 22:1-5).—Elisha however would not allow them to interrupt the composure of Elisha's mind at this solemn season by any lamentations: it is probable, that he forbade them publicly to speak of it, lest multitudes should be collected to witness the event; or he counselled them to be calm, and not to disquiet themselves, for the Lord would make up the loss.

V. 6. "He hoped for some great blessing from him, when he was carried up to heaven; and therefore continued firm in his resolution, to attend that wonderful change." Bp. Patrick. (Note, 9:10.)

V. 7, 8. These fifty men seem to have hoped to witness Elisha's translation, but this favour was granted only to Elisha. They, however, saw Jordan twice divided, first before Elijah and Elisha, and then afterwards before Elisha alone, by smiting the waters with Elisha's mantle. (Notes, 14. Josh. 3:15-17.)

V. 9, 10. Elisha was thus reminded to make his request before Elisha was taken from him: for the prophet did not give the least intimation of being prayed to as an intercessor, after he was gone to heaven; nay, his words imply the con-

10 And he said, "Thou hast asked a hard thing: nevertheless, if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so."

[Practical Observations.]

11 ¶ And it came to pass, as they still went on, and talked, that behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven.

12 And Elisha saw it, and he cried, "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof! And he saw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces."

13 He took up also the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and went back, and stood by the bank of Jordan;

14 And he took the mantle of Elijah, that fell from him, and smote the waters, and said, "Where is the Lord God of Elijah? And when he also had smitten the waters, they parted hither and thither: and Elisha went over."

16 And they said unto him, Behold now, there be with thy servants fifty strong men: let them go, we pray thee, and seek thy master: lest peradventure the Spirit of the Lord hath taken him up, and cast him upon some mountain, or into some valley. And he said, Ye shall not send 17 And when they urged him till he was ashamed, he said, Send. They sent therefore fifty men; and they sought three days, but found him not.

18 And when they came again to him, (for he tarried at Jericho,) he said unto them, Did I not say unto you, Go not?

[Practical Observations.]

19 ¶ And the men of the city said unto Elisha, Behold, I pray thee, the situation of this city is pleasant, as my lord seeth: but the water is naught, and the ground barren.

20 And he said, Bring me a new cruse, and put salt therein. And they brought it to him.

21 And he went forth unto the spring of the waters, and cast the salt in there, and said, Thus saith the Lord, I have healed these waters; there shall not be from thence any more death or barren land.

22 So the waters were healed unto this day, according to the saying of Elisha which he spake.

trary, in a very decisive manner. If the request were not made before he was taken away, it would afterwards be too late. Elisha, therefore, knowing the efficacy of Elijah's prayer, desired him to ask for him a double portion of his spirit. (Notes, Num. 11:25-29. 27:18. 1 Kings 3:5-14.) He seems only to have meant a double portion of the Spirit of prophecy, and of wisdom, courage, faith, and grace, to what was ordinarily bestowed upon the prophets; but as he was to succeed so eminent a person in a most important work, and in arduous times, his desires and expectations might be enlarged by zeal for the honour of God, and for the revival of true religion; so that he was led to use words, which may signify even double the portion which Elijah had possessed; and Elijah's answer seems to imply, that this was the import of them.—It appears from the history, that Elisha wrought twice as many miracles as Elijah had done; and being more constantly among the people, as their example and instructor, for above sixty years, from his first calling by Elijah, he seems to have been favoured with more extensive usefulness than he; though in other respects he may be considered as his inferior. (Note, 13:14.) Thus our Lord said to his apostles, (referring to the extensive usefulness of their labours, compared with that of his personal ministry, and to the number, variety, and long-continuance of the miracles wrought by them,) "Greater works than these shall ye do;" yet was he infinitely greater than they. (Notes, Mark 11:7-11. John 14:7-14.)

V. 11. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1.) Elijah's translation was doubtless performed by the ministration of angels, who caused the appearances and effects here described. The event was a distinguished honour put upon one, who had been peculiarly zealous for the honour of God, and had ventured all consequences in his cause, by opposing the idolatry of an apostate and persecuting age and nation. It was a public attestation of the doctrine of a future state of retributions, for the encouragement of God's suffering people; and it was also a prefiguration of the Redeemer's ascension. (Notes, Luke 24:50-53. Acts 1:9-12.)—The prophet had on one occasion passionately wished to die; but the Lord was graciously pleased to deal with him better than his wishes. He had passed over Jordan to his native country, and was conferring with Elisha, perhaps about the joys of heaven, or the interests of true religion in Israel, when they were thus suddenly interrupted and separated.

V. 12. The manner in which Elijah was taken away, amidst his most interesting discourse, must have been exceedingly affecting to Elisha, who could not but congratulate his felicity. But he had lost one whom he loved and revered as a father; and Israel had lost a reformer, whose labours and prayers did more to preserve the nation from ruin, than chariots and horsemen, however numerous, could have done; and on these accounts he grieved, and expressed his regret by rending his clothes. (Note, 13:14.) Nor was he reconciled to his own and the public loss, by being the president of all the schools of the prophets, or by being assured of a double portion of Elijah's spirit.

V. 13. The prophet went to heaven in the body; yet, as a token of the different state into which he was entered, and the change which had taken place, he dropped his mantle or upper garment. (Notes, 1 Cor. 15:50-54. 2 Cor. 5:1-4.) Elisha had been first called to attend Elijah, by the casting of his mantle over him; and he now received and valued this mantle, as a token of his receiving a double portion of his spirit. (Notes, 9:10. 1 Kings 19:19.)

V. 14. Elisha was inwardly moved to make trial, whether Elijah's words were indeed fulfilled to him; and whether the Lord God, who had wrought such miracles by Elijah, and had just before divided the waters of Jericho when he smote them with his mantle, was with him in like manner. The original is more expressive than the translation, and may be rendered, "Where is JEHOVAH, the God of Elijah, even He?" He is still with me: though Elijah be not here, the God of Elijah is. (Notes, Josh. 3:7. Matt. 28:19, 20.)

V. 15. These "sons of the prophets" had witnessed the division of Jordan, both by Elijah, and afterwards by Elisha; (Note, 7:8.) thence they concluded, that the Spirit of Elijah rested on Elisha; and by bowing to the ground before him, they gave him honour as their superintendent from that time.

V. 16-18. These sons of the prophets might think, that even in case Elijah was finally taken from them, his soul alone was gone to heaven; and that his body might be found, and buried with due honour; but perhaps they also doubted, whether he was really removed; or had only been carried to some other place in a supernatural manner, as he seems to have been on former occasions. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Kings 18:12-16.) Elisha, however, might fear lest they should suspect, if he persisted in refusing their request, that he was influenced by an undue desire of filling Elijah's honourable place; and the event tended to establish his authority.

V. 19-22. Jericho had not long before been rebuilt, in defiance of the curse which Joshua had denounced against him who ventured to rebuild it; and it is probable, that the pleasantness of the situation had been the inducement. (Note, 1 Kings 16:34.) But, as an evidence of God's displeasure, the water was unwholesome; and perhaps in consequence, the ground, (though not otherwise deficient in fertility,) had the property of causing the cattle to cast their young; and as some think, the immature fruit to fall from the trees. It is not unlikely, that similar effects were produced on the women also. (Marg.) But, as the inhabitants had admitted a seminary of prophets among them, these tokens of the divine displeasure were miraculously removed. The new cruse, and the salt, could have no natural efficacy to heal the water, and remove the bad property of the land; but were merely signs of JEHOVAH's powerful operation. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 4: 40, 41. 6:1-7 Ez. 47:1. Matt. 5:13.)

there came forth little children out of the city, and mocked him, and said unto him, "Go up, thou bald head; go up, thou bald head."

V. 23, 24. Several learned men have endeavoured to prove, that these offenders were not children, but grown up persons: and, no doubt the firstword (עלמים), rendered children, is often used in that sense. The addition, however, of the word rendered little, seems clearly to evince, that they were not men, but young boys, who had been trained up in idolatry, and taught to despise the prophets of the Lord. They had heard that Elijah was "gone up" to heaven, and they insultingly bade Elisha follow him, that they might be rid of him also; and they reviled him for the baldness of his head. Thus they united the crimes of abusing him for a supposed bodily infirmity, contemptuous behaviour towards a venerable person, and enmity against him as the prophet of God. The sin therefore even of these children was very heinous: yet the greater guilt was chargeable on their parents and teachers; and their fate was a severe rebuke and awful warning to them. If the Spirit of God had not dictated Elisha's solemn curse of them, Providence would not have followed it with so terrible a judgment. (Notes, 1:10. Prov. 26:2.) The children of the city in general seem to have been present; and the insult was perhaps the effect of a pre-concerted plan, to drive the sons of the prophets from Beth-el by ill-treatment. The forty-two children (עלמים), which were devoured, seem to have been only a part of the whole company, and perhaps they were the most guilty. However, the Judge of all the earth surely did right. Had he cut them off by a fever, no one would have objected to it: but, while the dispensation would have been as severe towards them, it would not have been suited, in any adequate measure, to make the same useful impression on the minds of the survivors, or to inculcate the same important instructions to other ages and nations, as this solemn sentence and immediate execution were. (Notes, Num. 31:2. Josh. 6:21. Acts 5:1—11.) It seems that the inhabitants of Beth-el were so over-awed, that they no more ventured to molest Elisha or the sons of the prophets.—Shebears. (24) Note, Hos. 13:5—8.

V. 25. (Marg. Ref.) To Samaria.] Perhaps, there was a seminary of the sons of the prophets even in Samaria: or Elisha had lodgings in that city, to which he returned after his circuits in other parts, for whatever service might there be performed by him. (Note, 6:32,33.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10. The Lord always acts with perfect wisdom, justice, goodness, and truth; but he does not always deign to explain to us the reasons of his conduct. In exempting sinners from merited condemnation, and in conferring unmerited blessings, he "divideth to every man severally as he will." (Note, Acts 10:34,35.) We are assured, that they who repent and believe the gospel, shall be saved; that the Lord will honour those who honour him: and if we obtain eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord, we need not greatly regret that we do not pass the same way to it, as Enoch and Elijah did; being comfortably assured, that we shall be more than conquerors in the last conflict, through him "who hath loved us;" and that at last "death will be swallowed up in victory." (P. O. Gen. 5:21—32. Note, 1 Cor. 15:50—58.)—As we know not the time of our departure, we should give diligence to be habitually ready; and we ought to mind our proper work with greater assiduity, if able, when we perceive that the time approaches. Whether ministers or private Christians, we are called to "serve our generation;" and should aim to leave all around us deeply convinced of the nearness and reality of eternal things, and animated with the desire of glorifying God and doing good; and our example, exhortations, and prayers should especially be directed to these important objects, when we approach the solemn closing scene. (Note, 2 Pet. 1:12—15.) On the other hand, we should gladly embrace opportunities of visiting the deathbeds of eminent believers, that we may learn heavenly wisdom, and catch holy fire, as it were, from their converse and behaviour. But such occasions require seriousness, calmness, and submission to the will of God; and we should learn even to repress our own feelings, rather than distract the minds, or interrupt the devotions and discourse, of the departing Christian. As long as pious persons are with us, we should beg an interest in their prayers; that, by "the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ," we may be enabled to tread in their steps, and to be serviceable to the church as they have been. And if from zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men, we should covet earnestly to abound still more in grace, wisdom, and usefulness; neither God, nor his dying saints, will blame the largeness of our desires. Nor is this hard in itself, however it may appear to us; for that fullness, whence prophets and apostles derived all their endowments, still remains, and we are invited to ask large supplies from it: (Note, John 1:16.) and those who are called to succeed eminent men in arduous and important stations, and are conscious of their own insufficiency, are peculiarly encouraged to expect a double portion of the Spirit of God, that they may not disgrace their situations, or remain useless in them.

V. 11—18. Angels delight to be employed in removing the saints to their glorious rest, in any way that the Lord pleases. (Notes, Gen. 24:2—9. Luke 16:22,23. Heb. 1:13,14.) Yet the event, which is so joyful to them, often causes painful separations to those who are left behind: many on these occasions are bereft of such, as have been more dear and useful to them, than the tenderest parent: yea, even the public has been deprived of some of its strongest bulwarks, though most men are insensible to the loss. (Note, Is. 57:1,2.) On these accounts it is allowable to grieve: but believers should be warned "not to sorrow, as men without hope;" the separation will at length issue in a more joyful meeting, and the loss shall be made up to them. Though Elijah be removed, "the LORD God of Elijah" lives. Thus, when the Saviour ascended into heaven, he left not his disciples comfortless; but he bequeathed to them his precious gospel, like Elijah's mantle, as the token of the divine power being exerted to subvert the empire of Satan, and to set up the kingdom of God in the world: and he poured out upon them his Holy Spirit, both to qualify them fully for their most important and arduous ministry, and to render their labours abundantly successful. The same gospel still remains with us; and though the miraculous powers are withdrawn, it still is attended with a divine energy for the conversion and salvation of sinners. Oh, may that power be more abundantly experienced, wherever the word of God is truly preached! And may we all seriously inquire, whether it be not suspended, retarded, or removed, through some criminal cause in us!—Having, however, the same exceeding great and precious promises, the same throne of grace, the same Mediator, the same powerful God and Father, as the primitive Christians had; if we have also the same "precious faith," we need not fear breaking through all difficulties, opposing enemies, and at last passing comfortably through the Jordan of death, as on dry ground.—When we perceive men averse to conviction, and bent upon their own schemes, though vain and empty; it is sometimes best to leave them to take their own course; and their fruitless labours and inquiries often most effectually discover to them their mistakes.

V. 19—25. The nature of man, in its best estate, and adorned with all the embellishments of which it is capable, resembles the unwholesome water and soil of Jericho. It is throughout infected with sin, and barren of real good; and man's best actions, till renewed by grace, proceed from selfish and carnal motives, are directed to unworthy purposes, and measured by a false rule. But when that remedy is applied, a blessed change takes place through all the powers of the soul: and repentance, faith, and love of God and man, produce good works, performed from the purest principles, and for the most important ends; and regulated according to the holy law of God, and the example of the Redeemer. In this way sometimes whole towns and cities have assumed a new appearance, through the preaching of the gospel, and by the pouring out of the Holy Spirit; so that the curse of sin and ungodliness has been converted into the blessing of fruitfulness "in the works of righteousness, which are through Jesus Christ to the praise and glory of God;" and when this blessing is vouchsafed to seminaries of learning, and places of public education; the fertilizing streams may flow through whole countries, nay into the most distant lands, and produce the most happy change. (Notes, Ez. 47:1—11.)—While the special favour of God evidently rests on those places where his gospel is welcomed; his heaviest wrath will light on those who reject the gracious message, and insult and abuse his ministers. The words and actions even of children, yea, of "little children," are noticed by him. Let then the youngest who read or hear these observations, "stand in awe, and sin not;" let them think of the terror and anguish of the children of Beth-el, when they are tempted to deride the deformed, the lame, or the infirm; when they are induced to show contempt to the aged; and especially when they are about to join those, who revile or ridicule such as ate in reputation for sanctity: for this is to despise the holiness of God in them. And if any have the misfortune to have parents or teachers so wicked, as to set them an example of such profaneness, or to instruct or encourage them to behave in such a manner; let them remember that they should "obey God rather than man;" and that they must answer to him for their offence, whoever commands them to commit it. But words cannot express what strikes the imagination on this awful subject. We can scarcely conceive the horror which seized the parents of Beth-el, on the view of the mangled bodies of their children, whom they had taught that impiety, which brought the dreadful judgment upon them. What then will be the anguish, at the great decisive day, of those parents, who witness the Jehoram reigns wickedly, 1-3. Mesha king of Moab revolts, 4, 5. Jehoram, Jehoshaphat, and the king of Edom, march against him; and being greatly distressed for want of water, they apply to Elisha, who sharply reproves Jehoram, but shows respect to Jehoshaphat, 6-14. He promises them water, and victory, 15-19. Plenty of water is sent; the Moabites are destroyed by the appearance, and are ignominiously defeated, 20-24. The allied kings destroy the cities, spoil the country, and besiege Kir-harasth, 25. The king of Moab, sacrificing his eldest son, causes them to raise the siege, 26, 27.

NOW Jehoram the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria in the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned twelve years.

2 And he wrought evil in the sight of the LORD; but not like his father, and like his mother: for he put away the image of Baal that his father had made.

3 Nevertheless he cleaved unto the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, which made Israel to sin; he departed not therefrom.

4 ¶ And Mesha king of Moab was a sheep-master, and rendered unto the king of Israel a hundred thousand lambs, and a hundred thousand rams, with the wool.

5 But it came to pass, when Ahab was dead, that the king of Moab rebelled against the king of Israel.

6 ¶ And king Jehoram went out of Samaria the same time; and numbered all Israel.

7 And he went and sent to Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, saying, The king of Moab hath rebelled against me: wilt thou go with me against Moab to battle? And he said, I will go up: I am as thou art, my people as thy people, and my horses as thy horses.

8 And he said, Which way shall we go up? And he answered, The way through the wilderness of Edom.

9 So the king of Israel went, and the king of Judah, and the king of Edom: and they fetched a compass of seven days' journey: and there was no water for the host, and for the cattle that followed them.

10 And the king of Israel said, Alas, that the LORD hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab!

11 But Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the LORD, that we may inquire of the LORD by him? And one of the king of Israel's servants answered and said, Here is Elisha the son of Shaphat, which poured water on the hands of Elijah.

12 And Jehoshaphat said, The word of the LORD is with him. So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom went down to him.

[Practical Observations.]

13 And Elisha said unto the king of Israel, What have I to do with thee? get thee to the prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother. And the king of Israel said unto him, Nay: for the LORD hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab.

14 And Elisha said, As the LORD of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, surely, were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor see thee.

15 But now bring me a minstrel. And it came to pass, when the minstrel played, that the hand of the LORD came upon him.

16 And he said, Thus saith the LORD, Make this valley full of ditches:

17 For thus saith the LORD, Ye shall not see wind, neither shall ye see rain; yet that valley shall be filled with water, that ye may drink, both ye, and your cattle, and your beasts.

everlasting condemnation of their offspring, occasioned by their negligence and wickedness! Let us turn from the dreadful meditation, and take warning to train up our families, with increasing earnestness, "in the nurture and admonition of the LORD;" hoping and praying that we shall be enabled, at that important season, to appear before God, and to adopt the language of the prophet, "Behold, I, and the children that thou hast given me."—Indeed the ministers of Christ must and will in all ordinary circumstances continue to bless, and not curse; but the LORD is still glorious in holiness, and all creatures serve him; and while he protects his people, even among their enraged foes, he can soon call for instruments of his vengeance on those whom he sees to be ripe for destruction.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1. Note, 1:17.

V. 2, 3. Jehoram threw aside, but did not destroy, the image of Baal; and if he suppressed the worship of Baal for a time, in order to please Jehoshaphat, and secure his alliance, or through terror at the awful end of his father and brother, it was soon allowed to revive. (Notes, 10:13-31. 1 Kings 16:30-33.) But he was not so eager on that idolatry, or so vehement a persecutor of the prophets and worshippers of the LORD, as his predecessors had been; preferring the more politic measures of Jeroboam. (Note, 1 Kings 12:26-29.) Yet, it seems, Jezebel retained her influence, and promoted her favourite idolatry; though for reasons of state, or being discouraged by various calamities, she acquiesced in her son's measures at the beginning of his reign.

V. 4-6. Marg. Ref. Note, 1:1.—Rams. (4) Or wethers, as some understand it.

V. 7. Jehoshaphat used exactly the same words in this answer to Jehoram, as he had done to his father Ahab. But the ill success of Ahab's expedition, his own extreme danger and merciful deliverance, and the sharp reproof given him by the prophet, should have taught him a different conduct. (Notes, 1 Kings 22:4, 30, 32-35. 2 Chr. 19:2, 3.)—As Jehoram had put away the image of Baal, Jehoshaphat perhaps was in hopes of effecting a more complete reformation in Israel, by this compliance: but he thus almost entirely ruined his own family. (Note, 1 Kings 22:41-46.)

V. 8, 9. This way was far about for Jehoram, and through a part of the desert in which Israel had wanted water, when they came out of Egypt; and the same difficulty might reasonably have been expected. (Notes, Num. 20:2-5, 14—

21. 21:16-18.) Jehoshaphat seems to have intended to prevent the revolt, and secure the assistance of the deputy-king of Edom, and to attack the Moabites by surprise: (Note, 1 Kings 22:47.) but he neglected to inquire of the LORD, for which he was speedily rebuked. It is probable, that the army either missed the direct road, or was hindered in its march, and turned out of the way which the kings had intended to take, by some unforeseen impediments: or a great drought prevailed in that region, of which they had not been aware.

V. 10. Jehoram had planned this expedition, without any divine direction, for his own interest, and had drawn the other two kings into it. Had they succeeded, he would not have given God the glory; yet when calamities came upon him, through his own inadvertency, "his heart fretted against the LORD;" but he expressed neither repentance, nor faith, nor submission to the will of God. (Notes, 6:24-33. Prov. 19:3.)

V. 11, 12. Doubtless, the prophet was divinely directed to follow the camp on this occasion. The servant of Jehoram was better acquainted with Elisha, than his master was; and he was known, as having been the attendant of Elijah, to assist him in washing his hands, and other menial offices; yet as appointed to be his successor. (Note, 1 Kings 19:20, 21.) Jehoshaphat was now made sensible of his fault in neglecting to inquire of the LORD: and the three kings concurred in showing respect to Elisha; not ordering his attendance, but waiting on him. (Notes, 5:8-12. Ez. 11:8. Is. 60:10-14. Rev. 3:8, 9.)

V. 13, 14. It is probable, that Elisha meant to show Jehoshaphat the deficiency and hypocrisy of Jehoram's reformation, as his heart still went after the prophets and worship of Baal; and he had no real regard for the prophets of God, though he consulted him in his distress. He would not therefore show him any respect or honour, that he might understand how the LORD detested his iniquity; but he treated Jehoshaphat with respect, though he also was faulty. (Notes, Judg. 10:13-18. Ez. 14:1-5. 20:39.)—Doubtless he was directed to act in his public character, differently from what he would have done as a private subject of Jehoram's kingdom. This indeed is implied in the words of the oath, by which he confirmed what he spake. "As the LORD of hosts liveth, before whom I stand." (Marg. Ref. d.)

V. 15. The "minstrel" was one skilful in playing on a harp, or some other musical instrument: and it is probable

(Notes, 1 Sam. 10:5-6. 16:15-23.)

V. 16, 17. With the prophetic promise of a sufficient supply of water, for them, their cattle, and beasts of burden, a commandment was given which required considerable labour, and was a trial of the faith and obedience of the persons concerned. It is useless to inquire whence this water came: He, that caused the rock to pour forth rivers, could never want resources. (Note, Ex. 17:5, 6.) The supply, however, was evidently miraculous: and those who have insinuated the contrary, as if Elisha had merely known that there was water in the place, if they would only dig for it; must suppose that the prophet, whom they attempt to disparage, had more sagacity in matters of this kind, than these three kings, with all their officers, and counsellors, and soldiers.

V. 18, 19. (Marg. Ref.) Providence put in Jehoram's power to execute that severe vengeance upon the revolted Moabites, which he meditated. But it is not certain, whether the words of Elisha implied a permission to do so, or were merely prophetic of the event. (Deut. 20:19, 20.)—It is probable, that much of the land could not be cultivated, till the stones were gathered off: and these, lying in heaps upon the corners of the fields, would speedily be dispersed by a numerous army, and occasion great hindrance and difficulty in the future cultivation of the country.

V. 20. The time of the morning sacrifice at Jerusalem was chosen by the Lord for this miracle, to intimate to the whole company, that the deliverance was vouchsafed them through the sacrifices and the worship there performed. (Marg. Ref. r.)—It may here very properly be noted, that neither Elijah nor Elisha seems ever to have resorted to the worship at the temple, or to have required the people, under the government of the kings of Israel, to do so; though that worship was appointed by God, and it is evident that his spiritual worshippers had respect to it. The peculiar circumstances of Israel were such, that without uninterrupted miracles, or subverting the foundation of the civil establishment, the people could not exactly observe the ritual law. The prophets were therefore directed, by God himself, to accommodate their conduct to these circumstances, and to spend their lives in recovering or preserving the people from idolatry, and in teaching them the grand essentials of acceptable religion. In every age hitherto, considerate and faithful ministers have found it impracticable, for them to rectify every external deviation from what to them appeared most scriptural: but having adverted to the distinction between what is desirable, and what is attainable; and between the essentials of true religion in every age, and matters more circumstantial; they have accommodated themselves to that state of things which they could not alter; and endeavoured to bring men to repentance, faith in Christ, and holiness of life, and to as scriptural an external worship as they could. And, though some of their brethren have censured them, the Lord God of Elijah and Elisha has evidently pleaded their cause, by making them the instruments of numerous conversions, and great revivals of religion: whilst others, scrupulously exact in external forms and earnest to magnify them, have worn out their lives in vainly attempting to new model the church and the world, and have missed their opportunity of more essential usefulness. (Notes, 4:23. 1 Sam. 7:9, 17. 1 Kings 18:43, 37.) In due time the Lord will regulate every thing externally, as well as internally in the best manner: in 24 And when they came to the camp of Israel, the Israelites rose up and smote the Moabites, so that they fled before them: but they went forward smiting the Moabites, even in their country.

25 And they beat down the cities, and on every good piece of land cast every man his stone, and filled it, and they stopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees: "only in Kir-haraseth left they the stones thereof; howbeit the slingers went about it, and smote it."

26 ¶ And when the king of Moab saw that the battle was too sore for him, he took with him seven hundred men that drew swords, to break through even unto the king of Edom: but they could not.

27 Then he took his eldest son, that should have reigned in his stead, and offered him for a burnt-offering upon the wall. And there was great indignation against Israel: and they departed from him, and returned to their own land.

the mean while we must make the best of things: we must aim to be satisfied respecting our own conduct as in the sight of God; to be moderate and candid in our own judgment concerning those who differ from us, and patient under their censures of us; and, learning what that means, "I will have mercy and not sacrifice," to be careful not to lose sight of the great end of all religion, for the sake of some of the disputable means of attaining it. For at last nothing "availeth in Christ Jesus, but faith which worketh by love," and "a new creature" manifested in "newness of life." (Notes, Gal. 5:1-6. 6:11-16.)

The way of Edom.] Mount Seir was inhabited by Edom: and some think that plentiful rains on the mountains of Edom supplied the water. But this is uncertain; and mount Seir was not so distant, but that tokens of wind or rain would have been perceived by the army. (17)

V. 22, 23. The sun shining upon the water in ditches, probably in a red soil, had the appearance of blood; and deceived the Moabites, who knew that it was just before a dry valley, and that no rain had fallen: and as combined armies have often quarrelled, and destroyed each other, they hastily concluded this to be the case, and acted as if it had been fully proved to them. "The Moabites easily believing what they wished, imagined they had nothing to do, but to go and gather the spoil, and not to fight at all." Bp. Patrick. God permitted them to be thus infuriated for their destruction. (Note, Judg. 7:16-22. 2 Chr. 20:22-25.)

V. 24, 25. Marg. Ref. Notes, 18, 19, 27.

V. 26. The camp of the viceroy of Edom seems not to have been so well fortified as the camps of the other kings: and therefore the king of Moab, in his extreme danger, thought to force his way through in this direction; but he was not able.

V. 27. It has been supposed that the king of Moab offered in sacrifice the eldest son of the king of Edom, whom he had taken prisoner: but the narrative does not admit of this interpretation. It is evident, that he sacrificed his own eldest son, and the heir apparent of his crown, to procure the assistance of his idols, or to avert their indignation. It has been thought, that a tradition of Abraham's offering his son Isaac, nay, that even a distorted tradition concerning the sacrifice of the Redeemer, gave occasion to those horrid human sacrifices, which have been, and still are, very common in the Gentile world. But this at most could only be the occasion; the cause was twofold: the depravity and blindness of the human heart, and the subtlety and malignity of Satan; in whose worship, as directed by him, it must be a first principle, that the more costly, painful, unnatural, and cruel the oblation is, the more acceptable the sacrifice; because it best gratifies his pride, envy, and malice. (Notes, Lev. 20:2-5. Mic. 6:6-8.)—This horrid sacrifice the king of Moab offered in the sight of the combined armies, that they might see his desperate determination to endure and inflict all extremities, rather than be reduced: his remaining forces were thus fired with indignation against Israel; and perhaps Jehoshaphat, and the king of Edom, expressed their disapprobation of those severities which occasioned the dreadful deed. In this manner the minds of the assailants being filled with horror, and their measures disconcerted, they, by common consent, raised the siege of Kir-haraseth, the principal city of Moab, before the walls of which these transactions took place. Thus it escaped the destruction which had overwhelmed the other cities: (25) and the allied armies returned home, without having fully completed their design.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. Partial reformations often originate from the

CHAPTER IV.

At Elisha's word the oil of a poor prophet's widow is increased, to enable her to pay her debt, 1-7. He is hospitably entertained by a woman of Shunem, who is rewarded by having a son in her old age, 8-17. The dead rises, and is raised to life in answer to Elisha's prayer, 18-37. Elisha heals the pottage made with poisonous herbs, 38-41; and feeds a hundred men with twenty small barley loaves, 42-44.

NOW there cried a certain woman of the wives of the sons of the prophets unto Elisha, saying, Thy servant my husband is dead; and thou knowest that thy servant did fear the LORD: and the creditor is come to take unto him my two sons to be bondmen.

2 And Elisha said unto her, What shall I do for thee? tell me, what hast thou in the house? And she said, Thy handmaid hath not any thing in the house save a pot of oil.

3 Then he said, Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbours, even empty vessels; borrow not a few.

4 And when thou art come in, thou shalt shut the door upon thee, and upon thy sons, and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full.

hope of advantage in temporal things, by the favour of godly men; and even the self-will sometimes renounce those sins, which occasion them loss and trouble; and then detect their own hypocrisy by adhering to those which promise present advantage. True piety, however, disposes men to judge favourably; and this candour is apt to carry them too far; while they indulge the hope of drawing half-converts further into the ways of God, by complying with their inclinations, and cultivating their acquaintance. We should indeed endeavour, by kindness, both to win upon the affections of our neighbours, and to evince the tendency of our religion; yet our conduct in all things should be regulated by the word of God; and it is there declared that "evil communications corrupt good manners;" and we are commanded "to come out, and be separate" from the ungodly.—Worldly men are quicksighted to their temporal interests, but they seek nothing further; and often seduce pious persons to forget their own principles, and to "lean to their own understandings," instead of "acknowledging the LORD in all their ways." But whilst the wicked in their difficulties are ready to "fret against the LORD," as the author of those calamities which their own sin and folly have brought upon them; the believer will be humbled before him for neglect of duties, and disposed to inquire his will and seek his help. And when corrections have brought men to this temper, relief will be afforded them; and their ungodly connexions will often succeed the better on their account.—Those, who would be eminent in the church of the living God, must readily stoop to the meanest service and the hardest labour: for such as have thus distinguished themselves, have generally attained to singular honour and usefulness. (Notes, Matt. 20: 24-28.)

V. 13-27. Many show respect to the ministers of God under heavy trials, who despise them at other times. In that case, they might be justly left to seek help from the worldly idols, the vicious companions, the worthless forms, or infidel principles, which they have preferred to the favour and truth of God: and they should be shown, that with him "there is no respect of persons." The minister may also properly let them know, that he is no stranger to their character, and will pay no court to them, whatever he would do or suffer for their good: and he, who in private life is the allowed inferior, and willing to be the servant of all, when speaking in the name of the Lord, is commissioned to "rebuke with all authority." In all ordinary cases, however, it should be with evident affection and respect; and it is proper so to change the voice, and regulate the conduct, as decisively to mark the difference between the offending believer and the mere hypocrite.—Composure of mind favours the reception of heavenly communications: when the wickedness and misery of man have ruffled us, meditation on the glorious perfections and wonderful works of God is suited to restore the calm: and it is well, when the sweet, but much perverted arts of poetry and music, are used with such caution and propriety, as to favour communion with him.—The Lord will take occasion, from the distresses of his offending servants, to manifest the glory of his power, truth, and love: and, whilst all good gifts are from him alone, we must show our believing expectation, and prepare for their reception, by observing the directions of his word.—It is a light thing for him to preserve his people from becoming a prey to their enemies: he will make them more than conquerors over them all.—Our rule is to do good and not evil to our adversaries: but we shall hereafter behold and rejoice in the destruction of all the enemies of God. And they who are expressly commissioned by him, (as the Israelites of old, and magistrates at present,) to execute his vengeance upon the wicked, are authorized in those severities, which in others would be extremely criminal.—The Lord will put honour upon his own institutions: and sinners left to themselves are speedily infatuated; for if men could not believe what they wish to be true, without proof, and in defiance of demonstration, "the fool" would not "say in his heart, there is no God."—When sinners are promising themselves peace and safety, sudden and inevitable destruction comes upon them; desperation succeeds their mad presumption; and in Satan's service, and at his suggestion, such horrid deeds have been perpetrated, as cause even the natural feelings of humanity to recoil. We should, however, be careful not to urge the worst of men to extremities, lest we should occasion blasphemies, murder, or suicide: we ought rather to recede from our right, and leave them to the judgment of God.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1. The prophets were ministers by selection, and not by entail, as the priests were: yet they seem in general to have married and brought up families; though Elijah and Elisha are supposed to have continued in a single state.—Except the prophets had private fortunes, which probably was not often the case, their incomes must have been very precarious; and would arise either from the donations of pious persons, or from their own manual labour. The people perhaps sometimes gave them the first-fruits, and some other of the oblations, which would have belonged to the priests and Levites, if they had not departed from among them. (Note, 2 Chr. 11: 13-17.) Many of them, however, seem to have been very scantily provided for: and this servant of God, who was of approved piety, not only left his family destitute, but involved in debt. Yet the creditor paid no more regard to the distress of the widow, than to the character of the deceased; nay, perhaps he was the more severe in his demands, because of the attachment of the debtor to the worship of JEROBAH, and his zeal against idolatry. As therefore the widow had no effects, with which to discharge the debt, he proceeded to sell her sons for slaves in order to pay himself. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Ex. 21: 2. Neh. 5: 13. Matt. 18: 25-27.)—Elisha had no wealth from which to assist the widow: yet it was proper, for the honour of religion, that the creditor should be satisfied; and the Lord directed him to a method of effectually answering this demand, and of supplying her future necessities.

V. 2. The woman had parted with every thing of value, to satisfy other demands, or to supply her urgent necessities. Probably this oil was a present from some friend of her deceased husband, out of the produce of his olive-yard, but it was utterly insufficient to satisfy the creditor.

V. 3. Not a few.] As many, and as large, as she could procure. (Marg.)

V. 4. Shut, &c.] This direction was given, in order that the woman might avoid interruption and ostentation; and that in retirement, she with her sons might the more leisurely consider and adore the goodness of the Lord. (Note, Matt. 6: 6.)

V. 6. The woman was ordered "to borrow empty vessels not a few;" and, as her neighbours were willing to lend her, we may conclude that she borrowed as many as she thought could be wanted: yet the oil stayed not, till all the vessels were filled. Had her expectations been larger, the supply would have been still more abundant. (Note, 13: 15-19.)

V. 7. The woman would not make use of the miraculous supply, till she had received the prophet's direction: and by his orders she first discharged her whole debt, and then used the remainder for the subsistence of herself and her children. (Marg. Ref. Note, Rom. 13: 8-10.)

near mount Carmel: but he went his circuits through the land, to visit the seminaries of the prophets, and to instruct the people, which probably was his stated employment, when not sent on some special service. (Notes, 21. 1 Kings 19:20, 21.) At Shunem there lived a woman of wealth and piety, who invited him to come to her house, and with some difficulty prevailed on him. But when he became acquainted with her character, he never failed to call upon her when he journeyed that way. Her husband seems to have been a pious person, but not so zealous and active as she was; and as he confided his domestic affairs to her care, she is chiefly noticed. By his approbation she prepared for the prophet a retired lodging; perhaps perceiving that the hurry of a large family did not suit his contemplative mind.—The plain, simple manner in which the prophet's chamber was furnished, (though he was the patriarch, if I may so speak, of the whole church of Israel,) is worthy of our notice. There was nothing provided for ornament or indulgence, but merely for necessity, for study, and for devotion.—Shunem. (8) In the lot of Issachar. (Marg. Ref. m. Note, Josh. 19:17–23.)

V. 13. Elisha had no doubt acquired considerable influence with Jehoram, or his captains, by the singular deliverance and victory obtained through him: (Notes, 3:4–27.) and, though he would ask nothing for himself, he was willing to show his gratitude in behalf of his kind hostess, by interposing in her behalf, if she had any petition to present.—Perhaps Jehoram's soldiers or tax-gatherers might be oppressive or troublesome in the neighbourhood; and he thought she might desire to seek redress of this, or some other grievance. (Notes, 8:3–6.) Or perhaps he made the proposal, with an intention of manifesting her indifference to temporal interests. Accordingly she answered, that, living safe and contented among her friends and relatives, and those who behaved kindly to her, she had no request to make. Having said this, she seems to have withdrawn; but Elisha further conversed on the subject with Gehazi.

Thou hast been careful. חררה, חרר, tremere, turbare, commoveri cura. Robertson. Probably, the same word was used by our Lord to Martha, rendered ταραχῆς, art troubled, Luke 10:41.

V. 14–17. Gehazi, as having more leisure and opportunity to observe the affairs of the family than Elisha had, discovered what favour would be most acceptable; and he seems not to have doubted the prevalence of his master's prayers in this respect. In addressing his benefactors, Elisha used words, which some think implied, not only the time, but the very day, on which she should embrace a son. (Marg. Ref. Gen. 17:21, 18:14.)—Her answer reminded him of his character, and intimated that she could not suppose he would mock her with delusive expectations: especially as she had expressed no impatience under her trial, and had not so much as mentioned a desire of having children. (28. Notes, Gen. 30:1, 2. 1 Sam. 1:4–8.)

20 And when he had taken him, and brought him to his mother, he sat on her knees till noon, and then died.

21 And she went up, and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and shut the door upon him, and went out.

22 And she called unto her husband, and said, Send me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the asses, that I may run to the man of God, and come again.

23 And he said, Wherefore wilt thou go to him to-day? it is neither new moon nor sabbath. And she said, It shall be well.

24 Then she saddled an ass, and said to her servant, Drive, and go forward; slack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee.

25 So she went and came unto the man of God to mount Carmel. And it came to pass, when the man of God saw her afar off, that he said to Gehazi his servant, Behold, yonder is that Shunammite:

26 Run now, I pray thee, to meet her, and say unto her, Is it well with thee? is it well with thy husband? is it well with the child? And she answered, It is well.

27 And when she came to the man of God to the hill, she caught him by the feet: but Gehazi came near to thrust her away. And the man of God said, Let her alone; for her soul is vexed within her: and the Lord hath shewed it from me, and hath not told me.

V. 21. On the bed, &c.] This implied, that the woman had some expectation of her son's being restored to her; as he had at first been given her in so extraordinary a manner; (Notes, 1 Kings 17:17–24, Heb. 11:17, 19.) yet this hope was not sufficiently prevalent to exclude her anguish of spirit, under this unexpected and sudden affliction.

V. 22. The field, where the woman's husband superintended his reapers, was near to the house; as this request must have been made by some messenger.

V. 23. It appears, that on the sabbaths, new moons, and other solemnities, the people were accustomed to assemble in appointed places, to worship God, and to receive instruction from the prophets; and it was thought allowable to use the cattle on the sabbath-day, to go to the prophet, or to these places, if at a distance. (Notes, Ex. 20:8–11.)—It is not certain whether they assembled in synagogues, or private houses; but probably it was done in most parts of the land of Israel.—In Judah, pious people had the advantage of the temple-worship, and the instructions of the priests and Levites; they were generally countenanced and protected by their kings; and they thankfully availed themselves of these advantages. But in Israel, the ruling powers were against them: yet they served God according to their consciences, as their circumstances would admit. (Note, 3:20.)—The afflicted mother would not needlessly distress her husband, by informing him of the death of the child, still hoping, that the restoration of the child, by the miraculous interposition of Elisha, would prevent his grief; but merely said it would be well for her to go: and he had that confidence in her, that he required no further explanation.

V. 24–26. Mount Carmel was at some distance from Shunem; and the words, "Slack not thy riding," imply that the servant also rode or an ass. The word (ῥῆς), rendered Drive, properly means, Lead the way, or, Go before.—Elisha did not expect, to see her at this time: and, being afraid that some calamity had befallen her, sent Gehazi to make very particular inquiries; to which she answered, "It is well, or peace, (שָׁלוֹם)." Some suppose that she only meant to put off Gehazi with this answer, as in part true, in respect of herself and her husband, though not the whole of the case; but it is probable that it was also the language of her faith and submission; as she was persuaded, that the affliction was in mercy, and would terminate well, though her passions conflicted against her better judgment. (Marg. Ref. Note, Lev. 10:3.)

V. 27. (Marg. Ref.) It is plain from this verse, that the prophets derived all their supernatural knowledge from immediate communication; and not from any power of discerning, habitually inherent in them.

V. 28. Doubtless the acute feelings of the Shunammite mingled some impatience in these expostulations: yet she meant them as arguments, to prevail with the prophet to come to her relief; being satisfied of the prevalence of his

28 Then she said, "Did I desire a son of my lord? did I not say, 'Do not deceive me?'"

29 Then he said to Gehazi, "Gird up thy loins, and 'take my staff in thy hand, and go thy way: if thou meet any man, 'salute him not; and if any salute thee, answer him not again: and 'lay my staff upon the face of the child."

30 And the mother of the child said, "As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, 'I will not leave thee. And he arose, and followed her."

31 And Gehazi passed on before them, and laid the staff upon the face of the child; but there was neither voice nor 'hearing. Wherefore he went again to meet him, and told him, saying, 'The child is 'not awaked.

32 And when Elisha was come into the house, behold, 'the child was dead, and laid upon his bed.

33 He went in therefore, and "shut the door upon them twain, and 'prayed unto the LORD.

34 And he went up, and 'lay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands, and he stretched himself upon the child; and the flesh of the child waxed warm.

35 Then he returned, and walked in the house 'to, and fro; and went up, and stretched himself upon him: and the child sneezed seven times, and the child opened his eyes.

36 And he called Gehazi, and said, "Call this Shunammite. So he called her. And when she was come in unto him, he said, 'Take up thy son."

37 Then she went in, and 'fell at his feet, and bowed herself to the ground, and took up her son, and went out.

[Practical Observations.]

38 ¶ And Elisha 'came again to Gilgal. And there was "a dearth in the land; and 'the sons of the prophets were sitting before him: and he said unto his servant, 'Set on the great pot, and 'see the pottage for the sons of the prophets.

39 And one went out into the field to gather herbs, and found "a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap full, and came and shred them into the pot of pottage: for they knew them not.

40 So they poured out for the men to eat. And it came to pass, as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out, and said, "'O thou man of God, there is 'death in the pot. And they could not eat thereof."

41 But he said, 'Then bring meal. "And he cast it into the pot; and he said, 'Pour out for the people, that they may eat. And 'there was no 'harm in the pot.

42 ¶ And there came a man from 'Baal-shalisha, and brought the man of God 'bread of the first-fruits, twenty loaves 'of barley, and full ears of corn in 'the husk thereof. And he said, 'Give unto the people that they may eat.

43 And 'his servitor said, "What! should I set this before a hundred men? He said again, 'Give the people, that they may eat: for thus saith the LORD, 'They shall eat, and shall leave thereof."

44 So he set it before them, and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the LORD.

prayers. For, as she had not impatiently desired children, she could not think that her son had been given her without solicitation, merely to become the occasion of her far deeper distress. (Notes, 14-17, 21.)

V. 29-31. It is difficult to determine what the prophet meant by thus sending Gehazi. He had divided Jordan by using Elijah's mantle; and perhaps he thought his own staff, in the hands of Gehazi, would be as efficacious. (Note, 2:14.) Or perhaps he meant to make trial of the Shunammite's faith. Gehazi, however, was ordered to proceed as a man upon urgent business, who may not be delayed even by attention to ordinary civilities: (Luke 10:4.) and he would thus arrive at Shunem some time before Elisha could. He seems to have observed his directions punctually, but in vain; either through his own unbelief; (Notes, Matt. 17:19-21. Acts 19:13-20.) or because the woman had no expectations from him; or because Elisha was faulty in attempting to perform the miracle by a substitute; or, as some think, because the prophet altered his purpose, at the importunity of the woman, and so did not pray for Gehazi's success. (Notes, 5:20-27.)

V. 33-35. It is instructive to compare the manner, in which Elijah and Elisha wrought their miracles, especially in raising the dead, with that of Jesus Christ. Every part of their conduct expressed a consciousness of inability in themselves, and an entire dependence on another, and earnest application to him for his interposition: but Jesus wrought by his own power; "he spake, and it was done." "Young man, I say unto thee, arise;" "Talitha, cmi;" "Lazarus, come forth;" (Notes, Mark 5:35-43. Luke 7:11-17. John 11:41-46. Acts 9:36-43.)—On this occasion, Elisha by his great attention, showed his earnest desire of restoring the child to his afflicted mother: and the actions which he employed were significant expressions of his expectation, that God, by communicating life to the body, would enable each part to perform its proper office. The recovery of the child was gradual; life was communicated, and then one symptom and another of it appeared. As his disorder had been in his head, it has been observed that his sneezing might remove the cause of it, and restore him to health also. (Notes, Ex. 37:1-10. Mark 8:22-26.)

V. 36, 37. (Notes, 1 Kings 17:21, 22. Heb. 11:35-38.) The joyful mother not only expressed her high respect for the prophet, but worshipped God also, giving him humble thanks for his great goodness to her: for the words may be rendered, "She fell at his feet, and worshipped."

V. 38, 39. (Marg. Ref. Wild gourds. (39) These are supposed to have been gathered from the plant called colocynthis, which is of a most nauseous bitter, and, if taken improperly, operates as a fatal poison. The sons of the prophets seem to have fared very hardly; and in a season of urgent scarcity they were glad to gather what they could find, and thus one of them ignorantly brought the produce of this noxious plant.

V. 40, 41. It is probable that these men were alarmed, not only by the nauseous taste of the food, but by the effects produced on those who had begun to eat of it.—Yet we may take occasion to remark the goodness of God, in giving us the senses of smelling and tasting, to be, as it were, sentinels to keep watch, that nothing prejudicial may be received into the stomach.—The "meal cast into the pot," was only a token of the divine operation, in changing the taste and properties of the pottage, that his servants might not want a necessary refreshment. (Notes, 2:19-22. Ex. 15:25, 26. Mark 16:17, 18.)

V. 42-44. This would be a considerable present in a time of famine. (Note, 1:—) "Unto whom" (the prophets) 'it is probable, pious persons gave that portion, which was assigned by God for the priests, to whom they could not now carry their first-fruits, they being in the land of Judah. And I suppose the schools of the prophets might be partly maintained by this means.' Bp. Patrick. The loaves seem to have been small; perhaps each intended to be a meal or one man. The supply, however, was deemed greatly inadequate to the company: but the increase was little, compared with the miracles of this kind wrought by Jesus Christ. (Notes, Matt. 14:15-21. 15:32-38.)—The sons of the prophets seem at this time to have become very numerous: but perhaps some of the people, who came from a distance to receive instruction, shared the repast. And this might be one reason of the servant's objection to setting so little food before such a number of persons. (Notes, 1-7. 1 Kings 17:10-16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. It is incumbent on all Christians, and especially on ministers, to submit to Providence in respect of their temporal provision; and, while they trust in God for their daily bread, not to tempt him by negligence or extravagance. They ought not to contract debts for things not absolutely necessary, which they have not a reasonable prospect of discharging: for nothing tends more to bring reproach on the gospel, and excite prejudice against it; nothing more distracts men's minds whilst they live, or more distresses their families when they are dead, than a burden of debt, without effects with which to pay it. Many hardships therefore should be endured, and many pleasant things renounced, rather than that such injurious consequences should be occasioned. Yet, in the mystery of providence, this may sometimes unavoidably prove the case, even of those who are eminent for piety: nor can the strictest prudence avert the calamity; besides, many good men are deficient in worldly

CHAPTER V.

Naaman, captain of the host of Syria, is a leper. 1. By the report of a captive maid of Israel, concerning the prophet, he comes to the king of Israel at Samaria to be healed, 2-7. Elisha sends for him; he goes to him, and is ordered to wash seven times in Jordan: he is angry, but, persuaded by his servants, he complies and is cleansed, 8-14. He acknowledges the true God; offers presents to Elisha, who refuses them, and is sent away in peace, resolving to worship the LORD alone, 15-19. Gehazi, by a lie, obtains presents from Naaman, and is punished by leprosy, entailed also on his descendants, 20-27.

sagacity, and their unsuspecting simplicity exposes them to the designs of the artful. But, when this is a man's misfortune rather than his fault, he will have a testimony to his integrity in the consciences of all impartial persons; the Lord's people will be inclined to relieve him or his, according to their ability: and God himself will, in some way, interpose to clear up his character, and to provide for his wants.—He who has all hearts in his hand is able, without a miracle, to procure as effectual a supply, as the increase of the widow's oil: and when the ability is given, the creditor, though unreasonable and severe, must first be satisfied, after which the remainder may be enjoyed with comfort.—We should then be careful to perform our present duty, and to commit all our concerns to the Lord: we should study to adorn the gospel in our life and conversation, and he will take care of us and ours: and if he bring us into distress, he will manifest his power and truth in our deliverance. He generally supplies what is requisite for honesty and charity to his people, by blessing them while they are occupying with a little. And the best directed benevolence of man consists, in teaching and helping the poor to make the most of what they acquire by honest industry; but in every way we should show a readiness to relieve those in distress; and to give them our counsel and prayers, when we have nothing else.—If our hearts were more prepared to receive spiritual blessings, and if we, in retirement and fervent prayer, expected larger supplies, we should be more richly replenished.—At length all the vessels of mercy shall be filled with the Lord's goodness: and the Redeemer's all-sufficiency will only be stayed from supplying the wants and saving the souls of sinners, when there are no more inclined to come to him for salvation.

V. 8-17. The ministers of religion should not seek great things for themselves, or court the intimacy of the great, expect to do good to them, or by them: but they ought to be unwearied in their useful labours, like him "who went about doing good," that all may "perceive that they are holy men of God," simply dependent on him, walking with him, devoted to his service, and seeking his glory. Though backward to form connexions with their superiors, lest they should be taken off from their important work, and entangled in the world; they may yet find a few in that sphere, whose acquaintance may be deemed a privilege. But, whilst they do not refuse their countenance and friendship, they feel, that "it is more blessed to give than to receive;" and they will endeavour to make such returns of gratitude as are in their power, and especially they will seek the blessing of God upon their benefactors: nay, they will go further with man to ask favours in behalf of others, than for themselves. But it is a great happiness to know when it is well with us, and to be content among our friends and relatives, without coveting the splendour or pleasures of courts and public life: and when we have so learned submission to the will of God, as to express no desire for those objects, which others can perceive are wanting to our comfort. The Lord however sees the secret wish, which is suppressed in obedience to his will; and will hear the prayers of his servants in behalf of their benefactors, by communicating unsolicited and unexpected mercies: nor must the promises and engagements of the men of God be deemed fallacious, like those of the men of the world.

V. 18-37. Alas! all earthly comforts are sources of trouble and sorrow: anxious fears counterbalance our pleasure from our beloved children, when most hopeful: and their sudden sickness and death may turn all our joy into poignant anguish. On such occasions it is right to keep silence, or to say that "all is well:" nor must we think it hard to bring up children for the grave, or for the kingdom of heaven.—We indeed cannot expect a present resurrection of our deceased friends: but in many of our troubles we may find relief; in all of them peace and comfort, from the counsel and prayers of the Lord's faithful servants, who can teach us how to turn all our losses into the richest gain. Their company therefore, with the ordinances of God, and the throne of grace, should be doubly welcome to the afflicted and bereaved.—We should treat those with great tenderness whose souls are vexed in them; making allowance for improprieties in their conduct, and impatience in their expressions; and suffer them to open before us their griefs, as well as be ready to attempt their consolation: and in general we should not avoid trouble, nor affect state, by doing those things by others which we are able to do ourselves.—When we have used proper means with diligence and earnestness, we may expect the efficacious blessing of God, both in things temporal and spiritual; but not otherwise.—The gospel of salvation will no more effect the sinner's conversion, without the presence and blessing of God, than the condemning law will: and if the minister be a hypocrite, and destitute of faith, little good can be expected from the most exact external observances: the sinners are "not awakened" will generally be the doleful report. Not so, when the use of appointed means is accompanied by the spirit of fervent believing prayer, and persevering expectation from the Lord; then the change, which takes place in the conduct of many, shall evince that "they are quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins."—As the choicest comforts occasion the severest trials, so our heaviest afflictions make way for the sweetest consolations: and, notwithstanding appearances, the Lord will not needlessly grieve his true people, by giving them blessings in order to take them away from them; but it is a comfort under temporal losses to reflect, that we did not inordinately desire the object of which we are bereft.—It is happy and comely when harmony prevails in domestic life; when the husband's authority is tempered with affection and unsuspecting confidence; when the wife answers that confidence with deference and submission, as well as fidelity; and when each party consults the other's inclinations, and both unite in attendance on the ordinances of God, and supporting his cause.

V. 38-44. While the servants of the Lord are contented with mean accommodations, and put their trust in him, he can make their coarsest fare pleasant to them. Let them but observe his directions, and he will not only supply their wants, but extract the death, the evil, from such things as most alarm them. When he pleases, the scantiest provisions shall suffice; and whilst he communicates to us, we should in faith impart a portion to others; and thus all will be clean and salutary to us. But to those, who feed themselves without fear, their table becomes a snare, and perdition entwines around their sensual enjoyments. Aware of this danger, let us learn to use temporal good things with caution and moderation, in dependence on him, by whose blessing alone our food is made wholesome and nutritional.

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1. The Syrians were idolaters, and often oppressors of Israel; yet the deliverance of which Naaman had been the instrument, is here ascribed to the power and goodness of God. "By him JEHOVAH had given deliverance (or salvation, יְשׁוּעָה) to Syria." Such is the rational language of the sacred writers: whilst the arguments and phraseology of those in general, who compose what is justly called profane history, too evidently show that God is not in all their thoughts. (Notes, Josh. 10:9, 10. Ps. 144:10.)—The leprosy was a loathsome and distressing distemper: and though Naaman was not under the restrictions prescribed for Israel; yet doubtless, he found it a great deduction from the satisfaction which he might otherwise have found in his high preferences and honours. (Notes, Lev. 13:45, 46. Num. 12:11-15.)

V. 1-4. This young damsel, though taken captive, and torn from her relatives and country, and made a slave to Naaman, having, it is likely, been treated with kindness, and employed to wait on his wife, entertained a cordial affection for her master, and earnestly desired the removal of his affliction. Young as she was, she had heard of the piety and miracles of Elisha; and, though he had not cleansed any lepers, she was persuaded he would be inclined to show kindness even to a heathen, and be enabled to effect his cure. Nor did Naaman despise the information as coming from such a quarter. He had doubtless tried to the utmost, what the physicians could do for him, but in vain; and his earnest desire of a cure prevented him from disdaining an application to the prophet of Israel. (Note, Luke 17:11-19.) Either the prophet was at Samaria, when the damsel was taken captive; or the adjacent district is meant.

and six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment.

6 And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, saying, Now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith sent Naaman my servant to thee, that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy.

7 And it came to pass, when the king of Israel had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and said, Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? wherefore consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me.

8 ¶ And it was so, when Elisha the man of God had heard that the king of Israel had rent his clothes, that he sent to the king, saying, Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel.

9 So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha.

10 And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean.

V. 5, 6. Ben-hadad king of Syria, having heard, probably from Naaman himself, that there was a prophet in Israel, who, it was supposed, could heal the leprosy, seems to have concluded that he must be at the command of the king of Israel, and perform his miracles for his pleasure and advantage: and if the Israelitish maid knew so much of the prophet, the king must have him continually in his presence or in his thoughts. He therefore concluded, that he had only to ask it as a favour of Jehoram, that Naaman might be cured, and it would be granted of course. Naaman also would prefer going in state to the king of Israel, to becoming a supplicant to a poor prophet: yet it seems he intended liberally to reward Elisha for the service.

V. 7. Jehoram interpreted the ignorant language, and absurd request of the king of Syria, into blasphemy against God, as well as malice against himself, and a pretence for waging war against him. Though an idolater, and a very wicked man, he would be thought concerned about the honour of God: and as full of abhorrence of Ben-hadad's supposed crime, "he rent his clothes."—He had either for the moment forgotten the miracles wrought by Elisha; (Note, 3:16,17.) or he did not desire to witness any more of them; or he thought this beyond his power: for it seems it was deemed as impracticable, by human skill, to cleanse a rooted leprosy, as to raise the dead. (Note, Lev. 13:1,2.) By this concession of the king, the miracle wrought by Elisha became the more illustrious. (Marg. Ref. n.)

V. 8. It is probable, that Elisha was at or near Samaria, when Naaman arrived; and the report of what had occurred was directly brought to him. This induced him not to go to Jehoram, but to send, it may be supposed by one of the sons of the prophets, this message to him. Naaman had come into the land of Israel, expecting relief from a prophet of the God of Israel: and Elisha would by no means have him go back disappointed, lest he should conclude that JEHOVAH was like the gods of the nations, and as unable to do good or evil as they were. On the contrary, he would have it known that God had "a prophet in Israel," by whom he performed such cures, as none of the heathen prophets, priests, or physicians could effect; and which were far beyond all the power of the mightiest monarchs.

V. 9-12. The prophet knew how to stoop to the meanest service or person, when it was proper; but Naaman seemed to have come to him with great ideas of his own importance, as if he conferred a favour or honour upon him. Elisha was therefore directed to assume that superiority, which really belonged to him: and to show Naaman, that he was far from being elated by the presence of so great a man; and that he regarded not his rank, desired not his friendship, and would not accept his presents; though, for the honour of the God of Israel, his leprosy should be cleansed, if he would observe the simple direction which he sent him by a messenger. But Naaman thought that the prophet treated him with rudeness and neglect. He had previously formed an idea in his mind of the manner in which the cure would be performed, and this message did not at all answer his expectations. He wanted to be cured as a man of consequence, who was entitled to regard; and not as a poor pensioner, who 11 But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and said, Behold, I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the Lord his God, and strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper.

12 Are not Abana and Parphar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage.

13 And his servants came near, and spake unto him, and said, My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, Wash, and be clean?

14 Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God: and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean.

15 ¶ And he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came and stood before him: and he said, Behold, now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel: now therefore, I pray thee, take a blessing of thy servant.

16 But he said, As the Lord liveth, before is glad of his alms by whomsoever sent. Abana and Parphar were larger rivers than Jordan, and Naaman thought them more likely to effect a cure: but the rivers of Damascus had not been distinguished by miracles, as Jordan had been; (Notes, 2:7,8,14. Josh. 3:4.) and Naaman, in his haughtiness and wrath, forgot that JEHOVAH was to cleanse his leprosy by means of his own appointment, and not in a way of man's devising. (Notes, Num. 21:6-9. John 3:14,15. 2 Cor. 4:7.)

V. 13, 14. This Syrian was favoured with very prudent, respectful, and affectionate servants; and probably he was in general a kind and considerate master, who could bear to be reasoned with by his inferiors. (Note, 1 Sam. 25:14-17.) They had, it may be supposed, heard a great deal from the Israelitish maid of Elisha's miracles; and were very desirous that Naaman should make the trial. Being more calm and impartial than he, they perceived that the prophet's directions were simple, easy, and safe. Had the prophet prescribed nauseous medicines, a tedious regimen, or some painful operations, or even some burdensome religious observances; or had he demanded a large sum of money as the price of the cure; they knew that Naaman would have complied without hesitation: how much more then ought he, in reason, to go to Jordan, and wash seven times in its waters? This remonstrance was "a word spoken in due season," and had its full effect: (Note, Prov. 25:11,12.) and his cure immediately followed on his obedience; so that the decayed and loathsome parts of his skin and flesh became perfectly sound, and assumed the healthful appearance of the flesh of a child.—'This was the only cure of a leprosy that we read of, till Christ the great Prophet came into the world.' Bp. Patrick. Though the remark be not quite correct, it is entitled to consideration. Miriam was cleansed, in answer to the prayer of Moses; but no other instance is recorded. (Notes, Num. 12:9-15.)

V. 15, 16. Naaman, having received the cure, returned to Elisha, to express his gratitude, and to give glory to God: and now the prophet went out to confer with him. (Note, Luke 17:11-19.) His confession was very expressive and satisfactory. He not only allowed that JEHOVAH was the true God; but also, that there was "no God in all the earth, but in Israel;" the gods of all other nations being helpless, worthless idols.—What an awful representation does this give us of the state of the Gentiles, "without hope, and without God in the world!" (Note, Eph. 2:11-13.)—Naaman there fore urged the prophet to take a present, or blessing, of him, as a token of his gratitude; but he most decidedly refused. He did not scruple to receive presents from pious Israelites, and he seems to have accepted Ben-hadad's gift; (Note, 8:7-9.) but the case of Naaman was singular. It was of great importance what impressions he, at that crisis, should receive concerning the God of Israel and his worshippers. Elisha had sent for him to confer a benefit on him; and had he taken the present, Naaman might have ascribed this to a selfish motive, and imbibed prejudices; but perfect disinterestedness would have a contrary tendency. (Note, 1 Cor. 9:17-18. 2 Cor. 11:7-12.) 'He would have strangers to their religion know, how good the God of Israel was, who made no ser-whom I stand. I will receive none. And he urged him to take it; but he refused.

17 And Naaman said, Shall there not then, I pray thee, be given to thy servant two mules' burden of earth? for thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt-offering nor sacrifice unto other gods, but unto the LORD.

18 In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant, that when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myself in the house of Rimmon: when I bow down myself in the house of Rimmon, the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing.

19 And he said unto him, Go in peace. So he departed from him a little way.

[Practical Observations.]

20 ¶ But Gehazi, the servant of Elisha the man of God, said, Behold, my master hath spared Naaman this Syrian, in not receiving at his hands that which he brought: but as the LORD liveth, I will run after him, and take somewhat of him.

21 So Gehazi followed after Naaman. And when Naaman saw him running after him, he lighted down from the chariot to meet him, and said, Is all well?

22 And he said, All is well. My master hath

V. 17—19. Naaman in his first impressions conceived, that there must be a peculiar sanctity in the earth of Israel, having received such benefit from washing in one of its rivers: he therefore asked permission to carry home with him enough of it to build an altar, on which to offer sacrifices to JEHOVAH, whom alone he was determined in future to worship with burnt-offerings and sacrifices, as Israel did. Yet, as holding a high station in Ben-hadad's court, it would be expected that he should accompany him to the temple of Rimmon: and whilst the king, leaning on his arm, should bow before his idol, Naaman could not avoid bowing also. But as he meant to do this, not as an act of worship to Rimmon, but of service to his prince; he hoped the Lord would pardon him in it; and some learned men have thought that his conduct in this respect was justifiable; because he was not an Israelite, and so not under the law of Moses. It is evident, however, that the prohibition of every kind and degree of idolatry, belongs to the moral law, which is universally obligatory. Our strict rule of duty certainly forbids such a conformity; the gospel grants no dispensations; and, in similar circumstances, a Christian would be absolutely required to renounce every advantage and preferment, which could not be retained without such communion with idolaters, and countenance of idolatry: nay, to endure the utmost effects of the persecutor's rage, rather than make such compliances, however palliated by salves and mental reserves. (Notes, Dan. 3:8—18.) The prophet however seems to have perceived, that Naaman was convinced, that even bowing with the king in the house of Rimmon was not right, and he left those convictions gradually to produce their effects; if they were the result of regenerating grace, they would in time bring him to make a more public protest against idolatry, when his faith, judgment, and experience were matured. Moreover, as the whole work was from God in so extraordinary a manner, it is probable, that the prophet declined interposing his private judgment, when he had no immediate directions from heaven respecting it.—“In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant, that when my lord went into the house of Rimmon, to bow down himself there, and leaned on my hand, I bowed down myself there; that I bowed down myself—the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing.” (Whitby, Note on Luke 12:8.) This would imply, that Naaman had previously favourable thoughts of true religion, and had not been an idolater in other respects; though he had conformed in this particular, which now appeared to him the most heinous of his sins. Yet there is no intimation, that he had not been as gross an idolater as the other Syrians. This translation, which many learned men have endeavoured to establish, disregards the vau conversive, which generally changes the preterite into the future. All the versions or ancient translations understand the words of the future, and not of the past.—Elisha seems also to have been silent concerning the earth, which Naaman sent me, saying, Behold, even now there be come to me from mount Ephraim two young men of the sons of the prophets: give them, I pray thee, a talent of silver, and two changes of garments.

23 And Naaman said, Be content, take two talents. And he urged him, and bound two talents of silver in two bags, with two changes of garments, and laid them upon two of his servants; and they bare them before him.

24 And when he came to the tower, he took them from their hand, and bestowed them in the house: and he let the men go, and they departed.

25 But he went in, and stood before his master: and Elisha said unto him, Whence comest thou, Gehazi? And he said, Thy servant went no whither.

26 And he said unto him, Went not my heart with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee? Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and olive-yards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and menservants, and maidservants?

27 The deposity therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee and unto thy seed for ever. And he went out from his presence a leper as white as snow.

requested, and probably for the reasons before mentioned. (Note, Matt. 9:16, 17.) Nor was any thing proposed to him, concerning his embracing in other respects the religion of Israel.

V. 20—25. It is probable, that Gehazi was one of the sons of the prophets, had long had the advantage of the society of Elisha, and kept up a profession of piety; yet he remained an avaricious and wicked man, and far worse than the servants of Naaman the Syrian! (Notes, Matt. 26:14—16.) He deemed Elisha foolish, to miss so fair an opportunity of enriching himself, having a right to Naaman's money in return for the cure. But as for himself, he would not be so scrupulous; and with a solemn oath, (even when speaking to himself, which in this case was peculiarly profane,) he declared that he would take somewhat of him. To accomplish his covetous purpose, he soon devised a plausible lie; and Naaman's heart was so affected by the benefit which he had obtained; that he treated even the prophet's servant with the greatest respect, and pressed his acceptance of a larger sum than he petitioned for. In this manner Gehazi appropriated above seven hundred pounds sterling in silver, which he secreted in some convenient place; and he then returned to Elisha with another direct falsehood, as if he could have deceived God, as well as his prophet. (Notes, Acts 5:1—11.) His whole conduct was wicked in a most aggravated degree: he did what he could to disgrace the God of Israel, and to misrepresent his religion: he behaved in a manner most injurious to his master's character: and he not only robbed Naaman, of his property; but he took the most effectual method imaginable to prejudice him against the prophet and true religion, and to induce him to return to idolatry. (Notes, Jer. 7:8—11. John 12:1—8. 2 Cor. 12:16—21.)

Perhaps this was a sort of storehouse, for such provisions as were brought for the sons of the prophets; of which Gehazi was storekeeper. Like Judas, who kept the bag. (John 13:29.)

V. 26, 27. The Spirit of God showed Elisha what had passed, as plainly as if he had witnessed the whole transaction. (Note, 1 Kings 14:5, 6.)—Considering the distressed state of Israel by reason of the famine, and the low estate of religion, other interests and employments called for Gehazi's attention. The prophets of JEHOVAH were required to show themselves men of another spirit than the false prophets, by a disinterested indifference about the world; and the state of Naaman's mind, and the peculiarity of his case, rendered this action the most ill-timed that could be. (Note, 15:16.)—We may suppose, that Gehazi was inwardly contriving how to lay out his money, in purchasing an olive-yard, or vineyard, that he might exchange the service of Elisha for a more profitable occupation. (Notes, Josh. 7:.) And so he might; but it would be under the stigma and misery of a rooted and dreadful leprosy, entailed upon his posterity in perpetuity, or as long as one of them remained. This was the proper emblem of the polluted state of his soul. (Note, Prov. 21:6.)

CHAPTER VI.

The sons of the prophets prepare to enlarge their dwelling, and Elisha causes them to quit, 1-7. He discloses to Jezebel the counsel of the Syrian king, who sends troops to apprehend him, 8-14. Elisha's servant is terrified; but is encouraged by seeing horses and chariots of fire round his master, 15-17. The Syrians, at Elisha's prayer, are partially blinded; and he conducts them into Samaria, where they regain their sight, and by the prophet's proposal are entertained, and dismissed in peace, 18-33. Ben-hadad besieges Samaria, and reduces it to extreme famine, 24, 25. Women contest about eating their own children; and appeal to the king, who in a rage resolves to kill Elisha, 26-33.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. In whatever manner, or degree, a man is honoured and preferred by the princes of the earth, or made an instrument in Providence of public benefit to others, he can obtain no exemption from trouble. Some bodily infirmity, or distressing disease, or domestic affliction, will counterbalance his advantages, and imbibit his enjoyments: nor can we remedy this vanity and vexation, except by humble submission to the will of God, and believing confidence in his truth, wisdom, and mercy; and the enjoyment of that peace and consolation, which are communicated by "the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ."—The Lord overrules, to his own glory, those events which originate in man's wickedness: the young, or the poor, are often better acquainted with his servants and service, than the rich or aged; but as he works by despised instruments, so wise men will avail themselves of a useful hint from the lowest of their inferiors.—Kind behaviour to domestics generally ensures a valuable recompense: and no injuries or hardships should indispose us to seek the welfare, or to compassionate the sorrows, of those among whom our lot is cast; especially when they are kind to us. This "little maid" proved a richer treasure to Naaman, than any Ben-hadad could bestow: and good and pious servants are indeed invaluable benefits.—We carry our knowledge of God and of true religion with us, wherever we remove; none can deprive us of these true riches and this blessed liberty; and the meanest believer will find opportunities of glorifying God and being useful to man, if he act consistently with his character and profession: for such a conduct will attract regard from those who are ignorant or careless about religion, and dispose them to attend to his words, particularly in times of affliction. (P. O. Acts 8:1-8).—Those who know the servants of God, will not doubt their readiness to relieve the distressed; and such as know him, are sensible that in answer to their prayer of faith, he frequently removes calamities, and imparts temporal benefits, even to those who serve him not. In these concerns men have keen sensibility, and readily make trial of any probable means of relief, though expensive, laborious, painful, and even uncertain: it would be well if they were equally sensible of the power of the divine wrath to which they are exposed, the burden of guilt with which they are chargeable, and the loathsome leprosy of unmortified sin with which they are polluted. (Note, Matt. 8:1-4).—The great ones of the earth are apt to suppose, that wealth, authority, and influence can command every thing: but when they seek those blessings, which the Lord communicates in answer to the prayers of his faithful servants, they will find that nothing can be done in this way; but that they must act as poor and needy persons, and come as humble supplicants for a free gift, and not as lords to demand, or to purchase. (Notes, Matt. 5:3. Jam. 1:9-11.) For the ministers of God must obey man, only so far as the will of their great Master allows them; and in his service they must not be directed or dictated to by any human authority.—The ignorance of many, in spiritual things, is manifested by every part of their conversation: yet we should not impute that to a blasphemous or malevolent intention, which they utter merely because they know no better.—No judges are more severe towards their fellow-sinners, than those who themselves have no fear of God before their eyes: and they are especially quick-sighted to the atrocious conduct of those, whom they suspect of intentions to injure them; and vehement in their declamations against the crimes, of which themselves are not known to be guilty.

V. 8-19. The minister of God should seize every opportunity to evince the truth and importance of his religious principles, and to display the glorious perfections of the Lord: yet he should not appear greatly pleased with the respect shown him by great men; and he ought to be cautious lest, by his language and behaviour, he enhance that pride and vanity which need to be mortified. Rather he should aim to convince them of his earnest desire to do them good; and of his indifference about those external distinctions, which others envy, covet, or are delighted with.—All the commands of God are suited to make trial of men's spirits; especially those which direct a sinner how to apply for the blessings of salvation. These do not accord with the self-importance and self-sufficiency, the carnal prejudices and pompous ideas, of an unhumiliated heart: nor can they be cordially attended to, except by "the poor in spirit," or without that implicit faith which take thence every man a beam, and let us make us a place there, where we may dwell. And he answered, Go ye.

3 And one said, Be content, I pray thee, and go with thy servants. And he answered, I will go.

4 So he went with them. And when they came to Jordan, they cut down wood.

5 But as one was felling a beam, the axe-head fell into the water: and he cried, and said, Alas, master! for it was borrowed.

6 And the man of God said, Where fell it?

produces as implicit obedience. The way of a sinner's acceptance and sanctification, by the blood and Spirit of Christ, through faith alone in his name, does not sufficiently gratify or employ self, to please the sinner's heart. The method seems to many futile and inadequate: human wisdom and philosophy, (like Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus,) can furnish more rational and eligible methods of cleansing: nay, the oporese and austere devices of superstition appear to numbers preferable to "the Fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness;" and the very proposal shocks and affronts all the sons of pride and self-sufficiency. But the sinner, who is deeply burdened with guilt, and longs to escape the wrath to come, and the service of Satan, would do "great things," if required for that purpose. If pilgrimages, mortifications, and austerities could avail, they would not be evaded: to torture his body, to part with his wealth, or even lay down his life, would be deemed a low price at which to purchase forgiveness of sins and eternal salvation; but none of these things, in this use of them, can be accepted. (Note, Mic. 6:6-8.) As, however, the Fountain is opened, and the access free, he will "much more wash and be clean," as the Lord has directed.—Salvation is from the love and power of God, in the way of his appointing and revealing, for his own glory, and in the use of those means which he has instituted. In this manner the believer seeks for it, not neglecting, altering, or adding to the Saviour's directions; and by repeated washings he is made clean from the guilt and pollution of sin: whilst others, neglecting this great salvation, through proud contempt, sensual indulgence, covetousness, or sloth, live and die in their leprosy, and must for ever be excluded from the presence of a holy God. But when sinners are under serious impressions, and as yet prejudiced against the Lord's method of salvation, they should be reasoned with in meekness and love, and persuaded to make trial of it in simplicity. For he will not cast out the humble suppliant, however enormous his former crimes have been, or however weak and wavering his present faith may be.—If masters were courteous and condescending, and servants could give salutary advice with modesty and respect, many evils might be prevented, and the pernicious effects of hasty sallies of passion counteracted.—When temporal troubles and deliverances bring us acquainted with God, and lead us to his service, they are indeed precious blessings; and gratitude to the Lord will dictate liberality to the instruments of his mercies. But different circumstances will render it necessary to adopt different measures. "The man of God" will never allow himself to "covet any man's gold, or silver, or apparel;" but be content with daily bread, and learn to trust for to-morrow. Yet sometimes he will understand that the proffered kindness is the Lord's method of supplying his necessities, that it will be fruit abounding to the benefit of the donor, and that there is a propriety in accepting it as a token of love: (Note, Phil. 4:14-20.) but, at others, the gift will be looked on as a temptation; and he will perceive that the acceptance of it would degrade his character and office, dishonour God, and tend exceedingly to the injury of the giver. In this case he will decidedly refuse it. This is particularly to be adverted to in the case of the great, when they first turn their thoughts to religious subjects. From knowledge of the world, they are apt to suspect all their inferiors of mercenary designs, and naturally suppose that ministers are only carrying on a trade like other men; while the conduct of too many so called confirms them in this sentiment. There is but one way of counteracting this prejudice; and that is by evincing a disinterested spirit, and not asking any thing, and in many cases refusing to accept favours from them, until they have attained a further establishment in the faith; and by always persevering in an indifference to every personal interest.—It is not advisable violently to oppose every mistake which unites with men's first convictions, lest we should damp that earnestness which promises good fruit, when matured by experience, and duly regulated by the gradual teaching of the divine Spirit, attending suitable instruction. We cannot bring men forward faster than the Lord prepares them to receive instruction; and where he works, he will in time lead them to renounce every secular interest, and bear any cross rather than sin against him.

V. 20-27. No outward religious advantages ensure the renewing of the heart; and better servants are frequently found in ungodly families, than in the houses of the most eminent servants of God. "This true, that the latter must, or the but he was very respectful to the prophet who had put them in his power, and would not act without his permission. When Elisha therefore had shown him the impropriety of slaughtering prisoners of war, whom he had taken captive; much more that of smiting those whom God had led into that situation; he desisted from his purpose: nay, he obeyed the prophet's orders in liberally entertaining and then dismissing the whole army! Let them "go to their masters," and tell him what civility and kindness there is among the people of God.' Bp. Patrick. Yet this very man soon after determined to murder this same prophet! (Notes, 31. Matt. 14.3—11. Mark 6.15—29.) The Syrians, however, no more attempted to apprehend Elisha: and the soldiers were perhaps so won by his clemency, or afraid of his power, that they ceased from molesting the land by depredations; until Ben-hadad had collected his whole force to besiege Samaria some time afterwards.

V. 24. It seems that Ben-hadad met with little opposition, till he came to Samaria.

V. 25. If the pieces of silver here mentioned were shekels, above ten pounds sterling was, on this occasion, paid for the head of an unclean animal, not generally used in food, and affording very little sustenance; whilst about twelve shillings were given for about three pints of very mean pulse, called dove's dung; or, as some think, of the undigested corn taken from the crop, or craw, of that fowl. However this may be explained, the prices shew the extremity of the famine. It is sufficient to suppose, that each of these bargains was once actually made in the urgency of hunger.

V. 26. Help, &c. וְיִשְׁעָה: "Save my lord, O king," 'Save me from perishing by hunger by interposing thine authority in my behalf.'

V. 27. (Marg.) This may be understood as the language of passion, or desperation: as if Jehoram had said, 'The Lord will not, and I cannot, help thee; but we must all perish together.'

V. 28, 29. The truth and awful justice of God upon the idolatrous Israelites were displayed in this most horrible transaction. The extremity of hunger, inducing rage and madness, and extinguishing humanity and natural affection, prepared the way for such actions, as at other times the persons themselves would have abhorred the thoughts of. But this was repeatedly foretold as the punishment of Israel's apostasy from God; and more instances of it occur in their history, than in the records perhaps of all other nations. (Notes, Lev. 26.29. Deut. 28.49—57. Lam. 2.20—22. 4.10. Ez. 5.10.)

V. 30. The king mourned his own miseries and those of the people, and he assumed the garment of a penitent: (Notes, 1 Kings 21:27—29. Is. 58:3—7. Joel 2:12—14.) but he did not renounce his idolatries; and he grew more desperate in his rebellion, through the extremities to which he was reduced.

V. 31. Either Elisha had denounced this judgment upon whence shall I help thee? out of the barn-floor or out of the wine-press?

28 And the king said unto her, 'What aileth thee? And she answered, 'This woman said unto me, "Give thy son that we may eat him to-day, and we will eat my son to-morrow."

29 So we boiled my son, and did eat him: and I said unto her on the next day, Give thy son, that we may eat him: and she hath hid her son.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, when the king heard the words of the woman, that he rent his clothes; and he passed by upon the wall, and the people looked, and behold, he had sackcloth within upon his flesh.

31 Then he said, 'God do so and more also to me, if the head of Elisha the son of Shaphat shall stand on him this day.

32 But Elisha sat in his house, and the elders sat with him; and the king sent a man from before him: but ere the messenger came to him, he said to the elders, 'See how this "son of a murderer hath sent to take away my head? look when the messenger cometh, shut the door, and hold him fast at the door: is not "the sound of his master's feet behind him?'

33 And while he yet talked with them, behold, the messenger came down unto him: and he said, Behold, 'this evil is of the LORD; what should I wait for the LORD any longer?

Jehoram for his sins; or Jehoram supposed that it was sent in answer to his prayers; or he thought the prophet could help him if he would; or he blamed him, for inducing him to dismiss the Syrian army, when it was in his power; or perhaps Elisha had counselled him in the name of the Lord to hold out the siege, and that he should be delivered. His rage however, against God, vented itself in menacing violence to his faithful servant with an oath, and imprecation on himself, if he did not inflict it.—'He swore he should not live till night.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, 1 Kings 19.2.)

V. 32, 33. Elisha lodged at Samaria at this time, probably in the school of the prophets, sharing the hardships of that city during the siege and famine; and the elders had resorted to him to entreat his prayers, or to desire his counsel. The Lord revealed to him Jehoram's intentions; and Elisha called him, "the son of a murderer," as proving himself the genuine offspring of Ahab and Jezebel, who slew the Lord's prophets, and murdered Naboth. (Notes, 1 Kings 14:5. 18.4. 21:7—16.) At his desire the messenger of Jehoram was shut out, till his master, who as Elisha knew would follow him, perhaps to countermand his order, was arrived. And when he was entered, and perhaps exhorted to hope for deliverance; he in a blasphemous manner answered, that the calamity was from the LORD, who would not deliver them, and that it was in vain to wait for him any longer. Probably he meant to infer, that he might as well put Elisha to death, and surrender to Ben-hadad without further delay. (Notes, 25. Job 2:9—11. Jer. 2:25. Lam. 3:26—30.)—As the messenger was excluded till the king arrived, it is evident that the latter was the speaker of these words, and not his servant in his presence.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7. God has often increased his church, by the addition of faithful ministers and true believers, in times of great persecution: for the whole glory is secured to him, when the effect is produced without the aid, and notwithstanding the opposition, of human authority, by the preaching of his word, and the operation of the Holy Spirit. (Note, Zech. 4:4—7.)—Religion indeed always appears to advantage under the cross; when poverty and affliction are endured with cheerful meekness and patience, and when hard labour and mean fare excite no complaints. When men, honoured by the Lord as instruments of much good to souls, willingly earn their living by working at some honest calling, rather than burden the people; and yet will not entangle themselves with the affairs of the world to acquire riches for themselves or families; their conduct evidently accords to the spirit of true religion, and seldom fails to attract the attention of numbers to persons, who act upon principles, which are contrary to the general propensities of human nature.—Respect to seniors or superiors becomes those especially, who teach others to "render unto Cesar the things which are Cesar's, and to God the things which are God's;" and contentment with poor accommodations, those who inculcate mortification to the things of time and sense.—There is that pleasantness in the converse of the eminent servants of God, which can make men forget the pain and weariness of labour: and when condescension to the meanest unites with usefulness to the greatest, and with great eminence in the church of God, it confers a peculiar lustre on a man's character.—A pious and generous mind is more disquieted by occasioning loss to others, than by suffering it himself; and peculiar care should be taken of things borrowed.—Our heavenly Father cares for his people in their most minute concerns, and sympathizes with them in their fears and sorrows: (Note, Matt. 10:29-31.) and he peculiarly regards those persons, who are conscientiously afraid of dishonouring religion, through unavoidable poverty, and being unable to render to all their dues.

CHAPTER VII.

Elisha predicts great plenty in Samaria, and the death of an unbelieving lord, 1, 2. Four lepers venture into the Syrian camp, and bring word that it is entirely deserted, a terror from God having driven away the army, 3-11. Jehoram fears a stranger, sends messengers to examine, and finds the report true, 12-15. The people spoil the Syrian camp; the predicted plenty takes place; and the unbelieving lord, having charge of the gate, is trodden to death, 16-20.

V. 8-23. The Lord knows, and can easily defeat, the secret machinations of his enemies. And the profession of being his worshippers will sometimes for a season engage his external protection; in order to the confusion of his avowed enemies, and for the sake of that remnant of true believers with whom they are connected. (Notes, Ex. 32:7-14, Deut. 32:26, 27, Jer. 14:7-9, Ez. 20:7-9.)—Even the wicked are sometimes willing to be counselled by the servants of God in their temporal concerns, and they experience the advantage of this conduct; but they will not take warning "to flee from the wrath to come," or be persuaded to renounce their favourite sins! Wave this subject, do not trouble their consciences or interfere in those things, in which they choose to indulge themselves, and you may obtain their confidence; nay, they will give up their inclinations in other respects by way of compromise.—As prophets were not without honour save in their own country; so numbers profess to honour those that have obtained a good report in the word of God, who would treat them with scorn or enmity, if they could again revisit the earth. For distance of time or place breaks the force of their reproofs; and they can suppose that other sinners, and not themselves, are intended: but when near, they direct the word to the conscience, with "Thou art the man," and except this produce repentance, it must exasperate. Such men, however, prove the insincerity of their professed esteem, by living in habitual neglect of the truths and precepts, which were delivered by the persons, whom they would be thought to admire. (Notes, Matt. 13:54-58, 23:29-33.)—The obstinate rebellion and blindness of fallen man often induce him to strive and expect to prevail against those, whom he cannot deny to be the people of God: but as no outward miracles can extirpate the malignity of the heart, so nothing can injure those whom the Lord protects. Were our eyes opened to behold the world of spirits, we should perceive more formidable preparations against us, than those which alarmed the prophet's servant; even legions of malicious, powerful, and sagacious spirits combined for our destruction: but we should also see an innumerable company of holy angels encamped around us for our defence; and the Almighty God himself our Friend and Protector. Strong faith will supply the want of sight; it realizes both the danger and the security, and with a clear idea of the force of the enemy confidently answers, "Fear not, for they that be with us, are more than they that be with them." May God give us this faith, and especially strengthen it in the time of danger, and in the hour of death! But if we are "strong, we should bear the infirmities of the weak," and both encourage and pray for them.

—Increasing experience of the Lord's power and love, and those glimpses of heavenly things with which his people are favoured, gradually embolden them to walk by faith, and not by sight: nor is the power of prayer less, than it was in those ages of miracles, though the Lord answers it in a different way.—It is a mercy to be kept from gross crimes even by ignorance and blindness; and we may pray, that our enemies may be so bewildered and confounded, as to fail of accomplishing their malicious purposes. The gospel itself indeed often occasions the blindness and obduracy of obstinate unbelievers to increase: (Note, 2 Cor. 2:14-17.) yet we must pray for them, and persevere in our endeavours to win them over to be friends to us and to the Lord. We should also watch for opportunities to show our friendly disposition towards them; as well as to convince them, that they will be ruined by their own iniquities, if they persist in them.

V. 24-33. The regard which wicked men pay to the servants of God, when they seem to favour them, is frequently turned into bitter enmity under their troubles.—In extreme distress, if they recollect that their affliction is from the Lord, that rage against him, which vents itself in blasphemies, dictates also cruelly against his people. They blame any one as the cause of their calamities, rather than condemn themselves and renounce their sins. If rending their clothes, without a broken and contrite heart; and if wearing sackcloth, without being "renewed in the spirit of their mind," would avail, they would not refuse these external tokens of humiliation: but, while their own impotence alone retards the deliverance, they excuse their proceeding to still more desperate measures, by avowing, that it is in vain to "wait for the LORD any longer."—Alas! what miseries has sin entailed upon mankind! Little do we know what extremities we may be called to endure in this world: what then will be the everlasting wrath of God against his enemies, in the world to come? But if we are reconciled to him, he will help us when all human help fails; in the time of famine we shall be satisfied, and in peril we shall be safe: whilst all the curses of God's book will fall upon the head of presumptuous transgressors. Let us then "seek first the kingdom of God:" let us be thankful for our daily bread, and not contract habits of self-indulgence, nor set our affections on earthly objects; and may the whole word of God, being truly believed, combine to increase in us reverent fear and holy hope, that we may be "steadfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the LORD, knowing that our labour is not in vain in the LORD."

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1. This chapter is a continuation of the subject of the preceding; and immediately as Jehoram had spoken the profane and desperate words before considered, Elisha in his presence and before the whole company gave the merciful assurance contained in this verse. The measure here spoken of is supposed to have contained about a peck, or two gallons; and the prices specified, no doubt, were those of plentiful times: but that corn should be sold so cheap in Samaria, on the morrow, was impossible to any power but that of God. Jehoram however, notwithstanding his rage and desperation, was induced to wait one day longer, to make trial of the prophet's words. (Notes, 6:25, 31-33.)

V. 2. This lord was one of the king's most intimate friends, who waited on his person. It is probable that he was an idolatrous despiser of JEHOVAH and his prophet; and perhaps he wanted to persuade Jehoram, that Elisha amused him with the promise of an impossibility, to preserve himself from immediate death.

Thou shalt see, &c.] 'A just punishment of his unbelief. And shall be the portion of those, that believe not the promise of eternal life.' Ep. Patrick.

V. 3. While the weightier matters of the law were generally neglected, and idolatry prevailed, the prescribed rule about the exclusion of lepers seems to have been rigorously observed. (Notes, Lev. 13:45, 46, Num. 5:1-4.) These men resided in tents without the wall; but probably they were admitted within the gate, at the times when the Syrians made their assaults. Gehazi is by some supposed to have been one of them, by which means he became acquainted with the king. (Marg. Ref. Note, 8:4-6.)

V. 6, 7. The infatuation, which seized the mind of the and left their tents, and "their horses, and their asses, even the camp as it was, and fled for their life.

8 And when these lepers came to the uttermost part of the camp, they went into one tent, and did eat and drink, and carried thence silver, and gold, and raiment, and went and hid it: and came again, and entered into another tent, and carried thence also, and went and hid it.

[Practical Observations.]

9 Then they said one to another, We do not well: "this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: if we tarry till the morning-light, some mischief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king's household.

10 So they came and called unto "the porter of the city: and they told them, saying, We came to the camp of the Syrians, and, behold, there was "no man there, neither voice of man, but horses tied, and asses tied, and the tents as they were.

11 And he called the porters; and they told it to the king's house within.

12 ¶ And the king arose in the night, and said "unto his servants, "I will now show you what the Syrians have done to us. They know that we be hungry; therefore are they gone out of the camp, to "hide themselves in the field, saying, When they come out of the city, we shall catch them alive, and get into the city.

13 And one of his servants answered and said, Let some take, I pray thee, five of the horses that remain, which are left in the city, (behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel that are left in it: behold, I say, "they are even as all the multitude of the Israelites that are consumed: and let us send and see.

14 They took therefore two chariot-horses; and the king sent after the host of the Syrians, saying, Go and see.

15 And they went after them unto Jordan: and lo, all the way was full of garments and vessels, which the Syrians "had cast away in their haste. And the messengers returned, and told the king.

16 And the people went out, and "spoiled the tents of the Syrians. So a measure of fine flour was sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, "according to the word of the Lord.

17 ¶ And the king appointed "the lord on whose hand he leaned to have the charge of the gate; and "the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died, as the man of God had said, who spake when the king came down to him.

18 And it came to pass "as the man of God had spoken to the king, saying, Two measures of barley for a shekel, and a measure of fine flour for a shekel, shall be to-morrow about this time in the gate of Samaria:

19 And that lord answered the man of God, and said, Now, behold, if the Lord should make windows in heaven, might such a thing be? And he said, Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.

20 And "so it fell out unto him: for the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died.

whole Syrian army, was equal to the illusion put upon their senses. Probably, by the ministrations of angels, noises were made resembling those of a very large army with numerous chariots and horsemen marching speedily, and ready directly to fall upon them at once, while they were unprepared for battle. But the excessive terror must have been caused immediately by supernatural influence on their minds. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 197. Ex. 15:14-16. Deut. 2:24, 25. 1 Sam. 14:11-15.) It is not known who the kings of the Hittites were, or where they reigned. (Note, Judg. 1:22-26, v. 26.) Indeed the whole of the supposition was improbable; and in their trepidation the Syrians left even their horses, which might have accelerated their flight!

V. 8, 9. Having satisfied their hunger, and secured as well as they could a rich booty, they began to reflect upon their conduct. They were conscious of having not acted properly, in respect of the distressed inhabitants of the city; and were afraid, lest some evil should come upon them, if they further delayed to make known the good tidings to those concerned.—Some mischief would befall them: either some judgment from God; or some punishment from the magistrates, for prolonging the miseries of the people. (9. marg.)

V. 12. If Jehoram had firmly expected that Elisha's words would be verified, he would have concluded that this event was the effect of a miraculous interposition in his favour; though he might properly have taken every prudent precaution against a surprise. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1.) But he seems to have had little expectation of that kind, notwithstanding all the miraculous interpositions of God, by means of the prophet, in his behalf.

V. 13, 14. This person strenuously urged in favour of his counsel, that these men and their horses would be no more exposed, than those who remained in the city. Many had been already consumed, and all the rest must die with hunger in a few days, if no relief were afforded: and they might as well be cut off in examining the real state of the Syrian camp, and discovering what had become of the besiegers, as perish tamely and timidly in the city.—It seems, only two horsemen were sent; perhaps no more horses being found fit for the service; or the king would venture no more out of the city.

V. 15. Notes, Is. 2:19-21. Phil. 3:8-11.

V. 16-20. The people being extremely hungry, and vehemently eager for food, thrust down this nobleman, whilst he attempted, perhaps in a harsh manner, to restrain them from rushing out to plunder the Syrian camp: or, as some think, to regulate the market, which was held at the gate and supplied from the camp. Thus he was trodden to death; and the truth and justice of God were clearly seen in that event. (Notes, 1, 2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. In extreme distress unexpected relief is often preparing; and whatever unbelievers may imagine, it is not in vain to wait for the Lord, how long soever he seems to delay his coming.—No temporal deliverances and mercies will eventually profit sinners, except they are led to repentance; and in that case, "where sin hath abounded, grace will much more abound."—We are all prone to judge of God's promises by human probabilities, and to limit his power of performance by our capacity of discerning how it can be done; and whatever increases pride and self-confidence proportionably augments this propensity. Hence the rich, the noble, the wise, and the learned of the world, have generally been the most backward in implicitly crediting the sure testimony of God, and expecting promised mercies in the way of his appointment, and in single dependence on his power, truth, and love, without regarding those apparent impossibilities which lie in the way. But all those who persist in despising either his promised blessings, or this method of obtaining them, will see the felicity of believers without partaking of it. For, though he will pardon the infirmities of his people's faith, while they pray, "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief;" yet he will not spare those, who harden themselves and others in rebellion, through their infidel objections and enmity against the truth, however they may enjoy the confidence of earthly princes, or the admiration of mankind.—Men reason justly in their secular concerns: the least probability of preserving life is preferred to certain death, and the lowest condition is considered as better than perishing by hunger. Yet, in the concerns of their souls, they will not be so convinced, even by demonstration, as to bestow pains and put themselves to inconveniences, to escape the wrath to come and obtain eternal life. But the awakened sinner fears an evil infinitely worse than death; and under the greatest discouragements, even when tempted to despair, he learns to argue, "If I go on in sin, or sit down in sloth, or run into worldly dissipation, or have recourse to superstitions, or attempt to establish my own righteousness, I must perish. The mercy of God in Jesus Christ is my only refuge. If I cast myself at his feet and wait his time, who knows but he may save me? And if at last he spurns me, I can but be lost. All else is comparatively worthless: if then I must perish, I will perish under the means of grace, and supplicating his mercy and salvation." (Eth. 4:16.) In like manner the believer exposed to the terrors of persecution, reasons with himself: "If I am faithful to the Lord, I can but die, and he will give me the crown of life: but if I deny Christ through dread of death, he will refuse to acknowledge me another day; and I "fear him who is able to destroy body and soul in hell," more than those "who can only kill the body." Thus believers venture themselves into the Saviour's hands, and cleave to him with purpose of heart; whilst others neglect or forsake him.—The Lord can effect his designs by various methods: a terror from him can drive men from their purpose, as effectually as the destroying sword of vengeance; (Note

CHAPTER VIII.

On her return, she applies to the king who is conversing with Gehazi on Elisha's miracles; and he restores her land, 3-6. Elisha goes to Damascus: Hazael is sent by Ben-hadad to inquire of him concerning his sickness: he predicts Hazael's cruelty to Israel, as destined to be king of Syria, 7-13. 19:35.) and we absolutely depend upon him for the due exercise of our senses and faculties, as well as for the continuance of our lives, and the salvation of our souls.—While some, when life is at stake, readily relinquish all which they before held dear; others, when wearing away by incurable or loathsome disease, are as rapacious of gain, as if their lives were secured to them, with every other requisite for enjoyment! (Note, 5:26, 27.)

V. 9-20. Natural humanity, and fear of punishment, are powerful checks on the selfishness of the ungody, and tend to preserve some order and regularity in the world. Those however, who have found "the unsearchable riches of Christ," will not delay to report the good tidings to others, that they may partake of that blessedness which is sufficient for all: and from love to him they will gladly communicate their temporal good things to their brethren.—True faith consists with prudent precautions: but unbelief suggests endless and unreasonable suspicions, and puts away those blessings, which are brought nigh to the soul, by the invitations and promises of God. The believer, on the other hand, makes trial of them, and experience confirms his faith: and a change, immensely more felicitating than that which is here recorded, takes place in his state, prospects, comforts, and character. But every word of God, concerning judgment as well as mercy, will speedily be accomplished; and earthly honours will accelerate the ruin of the ungody. May God help us seriously to inquire, whether we are now exposed to his awful threatenings, or interested in his exceedingly great and precious promises; that so we may profit by the warning, or by the encouragement, resulting from that knowledge of our own state and character, compared with the warnings and promises of the holy Scriptures.

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1, 2. This famine seems to have been sent in the latter part of Jehoram's reign, as a punishment of the pernicious idolatry of both king and people, notwithstanding the miracles which they had witnessed, and the mercies which they had experienced. (Am. 7:4.) It continued twice as long as that in the days of Ahab, but was not so extreme. (Note, 1 Kings 17:1.)—Elisha was warned of its approach, and counselled his benefactress, now, as it appears, laid a widow, to remove till it was over. (Notes, Gen. 12:10. 26:1-5. Ruth 1:1-5.) There was a measure of plenty in the land of the Philistines, whilst Israel was visited with famine: but either they could spare none to sell to their neighbours, or their old enmity made them unwilling to do it. They did not, however, molest such as went to sojourn among them.—Had not Judah also felt the effects of the famine, it is likely that this pious woman would have gone thither to sojourn.

V. 3. As this pious woman firmly believed the words of Elisha, predicting the famine, and acted accordingly; so, when the seven years assigned for its continuance were ended, she returned into her own land, in confidence that the famine would then terminate.

To cry, &c.] Either the lands of the Shunammite had been and for her land. And Gehazi said, "My lord, C king, this is the woman, and this is her son, whom Elisha restored to life.

6 And when the king asked the woman, she told him. So the king appointed unto her a certain officer, saying, "Restore all that was hers, and all the fruits of the field since the day that she left the land, even until now.

[Practical Observations.]

7 ¶ And Elisha came to Damascus: and Ben-hadad the king of Syria was sick; and it was told him, saying, "The man of God is come hither.

8 And the king said unto Hazael, "Take a present in thy hand, and go, meet the man of God, and inquire of the LORD by him, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?

9 So Hazael went to meet him, and took a present with him, even of every good thing of Damascus, forty camels' burden, and came and stood before him, and said, "Thy son Ben-hadad king of Syria hath sent me to thee, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?

10 And Elisha said unto him, Go, say unto him, Thou mayest certainly recover: howbeit, the LORD hath showed me, that he shall surely die.

11 And he settled his countenance steadfastly, until he was ashamed: and the man of God wept.

seized, as forfeited to the crown by her emigration; or some of her neighbours or relations had violently seized upon them; or those, to whom she had left the management of her affairs, would neither restore her estate, nor come to account concerning the profits of it. She had therefore at this time occasion to apply to the king, though not formerly; (Note, 4:13.) and it was commendable in Jehoram, that he was accessible to such a claimant.

V. 4-6. (Notes, 5:20-27.) It was not unlawful to speak to a leper, provided it was done without touching him; and Jehoram, from curiosity, was willing to converse, concerning Elisha's miracles, with so mean a person as Gehazi was; who likewise bore an infamous character, and was covered with a loathsome disease! yet he did not court the prophet's acquaintance, because he disliked his counsels and admonitions, and dreaded his warnings and rebukes. The Lord, however, thus prepared his mind to do this pious woman justice; and his providence is especially to be noted in the singular coincidence of apparently casual events from which most important consequences frequently follow.

V. 7, 8. The prophet doubtless was divinely directed to go to Damascus. Some suppose that he went to counsel and encourage Naaman; and others, that he retired thither during the famine.—Some indeed think that he went to anoint Hazael; but it is probable, that Elijah had performed that service, though Hazael, being young and destitute of power to seize on the kingdom, seems not to have much regarded the transaction. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Kings 19:15-17.) Ben-hadad, however, was no longer disposed to injure Elisha. The report of the prophet's miracles had excited respect and veneration for him, and perhaps his sickness had softened his mind, so that he welcomed him to his capital, and, according to the custom of the day, sent his chief minister to inquire of him concerning his recovery. (Notes, 1:2. 1 Kings 14-4.) It would have been far more rational to request the instruction and prayers of "the man of God."

V. 9. We may infer from the silence of Scripture, that the prophet accepted of this royal present, which must have been of very great value, as the provision which the Lord assigned him in a foreign country, and to enable him to assist the poor Israelites, and the sons of the prophets in their poverty and distresses. (Note, 5:15, 16.)

V. 10. Ben-hadad's disease was not of itself mortal, though his life was near its end from another cause. But the prophet either did not know, or did not think it proper to inform Hazael, what that cause would be.—The Hebrew text however is, "Thou shalt not surely recover," or live; "for the LORD," &c. though ancient expositors, both Jews and Christians adopting the reading of the margin, render it as it stands in our version; and indeed this appears to be the true reading. as the prophet's answer was probably intended to be obscure and ambiguous.

V. 11. The prophet fixed his eyes on Hazael's countenance, and for so long a time, that Hazael was scandalized, and Elisha himself, in the foresight of Hazael's wickedness, and 12 And Hazael said, Why weepeth 'my lord? And he answered, Because I know 'the evil that thou wilt do unto the children of Israel: their strong-holds wilt thou set on fire, and their young men wilt thou slay with the sword, and wilt 'dash their children, and rip up their women with child.

13 And Hazael said, But what 'is thy servant 'a dog, that the should do this great thing? And Elisha answered, 'The LORD hath showed me that thou shalt be king over Syria.

14 So he departed from Elisha, and came to his master; who said to him, What said Elisha to thee? And he answered, 'He told me that thou shouldst surely recover.

15 And 'it came to pass 'on the morrow, that he took a thick cloth, and dipped it in water, and spread it on his face, 'so that he died; and 'Hazael reigned in his stead. [Practical Observations.]

16 ¶ And in the fifth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel, Jehoshaphat being then king of Judah, 'Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah 'began to reign.

17 Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

18 And he walked 'in the way of the kings of Israel, as did 'the house of Ahab: for 'the daughter of Ahab was 'his wife: and he did evil in the sight of the LORD.

19 Yet the LORD would not destroy Judah, 'for David his servant's sake, as he promised him to give him always a light, and to his children.

20 ¶ In his days 'Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah, and 'made a king over themselves.

of the miseries of Israel, burst into tears. (Note, Luke 19:41—44.)

V. 12, 13. Hazael felt at that time no inclination to the brutal ferocity and cruelty of which Elisha spoke; and he wondered that the prophet should suppose him capable of tearing and devouring, like some fierce and greedy dog, rather than a rational creature. But Elisha answered, "The Lord hath showed me, that thou shalt be king over Syria." Or, "The Lord hath made me to see thee king over Syria." And when advanced to the throne, being engaged in war with Israel, and exasperated by their resistance, he would be tempted to cruelties, of which at present he had no thought. (Note, Jer. 17:9,10.) Some indeed think Hazael only meant, that he was high rank under Ben-hadad would have enabled him to perform them, had his passions been sufficiently excited; and he was evidently startled at the mention of the cruelties, which the prophet predicted would be perpetrated by him. (Marg. Ref. Note, Am. 1:3—5.)

V. 14, 15. Hazael misreported Elisha's answer, having doubtless already formed the intention of murdering Ben-hadad, and seeking an opportunity of effecting his purpose. By the method that he employed of murdering him, he prevented any alarm, or any marks of violence appearing on the body.—Elisha's intimation might give Satan an occasion of suggesting this villany to Hazael; but it was not the cause of his crime, and formed no excuse for it. Had he been of David's disposition, he would have waited in the path of duty, till the Lord had performed his word, in that manner which pleased him. (Notes, 1 Sam. 24:4—7. 1 Kings 11:37. 12:2,3,26—29.) Thus he soon manifested the rapacity and cruelty of the dog, of which he desired to be thought incapable. (Notes, 12:13. Is. 56:9—12. Mic. 3:5—7.)—It is supposed, that Ben-hadad had no son; that Hazael was in great favour with the people, and with the army especially; and that, for a time at least, he escaped the suspicion of having murdered Ben-hadad.

V. 16, 17. Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat, began to reign with his father before the death of Ahab, so that Ahaziah the son of Ahab died in the second year of his reign, or in the eighteenth of Jehoshaphat. About five years after he seems to have been more solemnly admitted to the exercise of the royal authority, within two years of his father's death. This took place when Jehoram was thirty-two years old, and from that time he reigned eight years; though he reigned only five or six, as sole king after the death of his father. (Note, 1:17.)

V. 18. The daughter, &c.] Perhaps Jehoshaphat hoped 21 So Joram went over to Zair, and all the chariots with him: and he rose by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him about and the captains of the chariots: and the people fled into their tents.

by thus marrying his son to Ahab's daughter, to cement a peace between the two kingdoms, and to bring back the Israelites to the worship of God at Jerusalem: but it was an unhalloved measure, and produced a contrary effect, in introducing idolatry into Judah, and most ruinous consequences to Jehoshaphat's posterity. (Notes, 1 Kings 22:2. 2 Chr. 19:2. 21:4. 22:5.) This affinity gave occasion to the same names in both families. Each had a Jehoram and an Ahaziah; but they all took after the house of Ahab.

V. 20—24. (Notes, 3:8,9. 1 Kings 22:47.) Notwithstanding Jehoram's decisive victory over the Edomites, he could not re-establish his authority over them. Perhaps he was hindered by the revolt of Libnah; (Note, 2 Chr. 21:8—11.) and by fears of further insurrections in his own kingdom, where he was become extremely odious. Thus the prophecy of Isaac was fulfilled, after Edom had been subject to Israel about a hundred and fifty years: nor did the Jews again acquire the dominion over Edom, till long after the Babylonish captivity. (Marg. Ref. y. a. Note, Gen. 27:39,40.)—Jehoram was buried in Jerusalem, but not in the sepulchres of the kings. (Notes, 2 Chr. 21:12—20.)

V. 26. Perhaps Omri adopted and educated Athaliah, who was his granddaughter, and the daughter of Ahab.

V. 28, 29. (Notes, 9:21—28.) Ahaziah was Jehoram's youngest son; his other sons having all been slain before his death. (Note, 2 Chr. 22:1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. Temporal deliverances are only respites, and, "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee," is a warning of universal application. (Note, John 5:10—14.)—When the Lord calls for judgments; famines, pestilences, wars, tempests, and earthquakes, obey his word: and if he contends he will overcome; for he will prolong the affliction, and make it more and more severe, until the sinner be either humbled or destroyed. (Note, Lev. 26:24.) When he "rendereth a fruitful land barren for the wickedness of them that dwell therein," he takes care of the remnant of his people, and abundantly recompenses their kindness to his servants for his sake; and they will also gladly embrace opportunities of requiting their benefactors, especially by their counsels and prayers: but open enemies sometimes escape better, than hypocrites or apostates.—Where the moral law of God is not violated, a real necessity will justify many deviations from the letter of ritual appointments: but believers will not choose to "reside longer among ignorant and ungodly people than is needful, even when they behave kindly to them; but gladly return to the ordinances of God, and the communion of the saints. (Notes, Ruth 1:4-10.)—We know not what changes await us: we may soon be deceived by those who have hitherto been faithful to us, and need the help of those on whom we have not heretofore had any dependence.—The love of worldly riches induces men to various methods of fraud and oppression, and breaks through the most powerful obligations, or the strongest relative ties. Hence the benefit of magistracy, to preserve equity and order among mankind. Believers may, on important occasions, avail themselves of their privileges as members of the community; provided they are not actuated by covetousness or resentment, do not manifest a contentious spirit, and make no appeal in a doubtful cause, or in matters of no great importance. (Note, Matt. 5:38-42.) and rulers should award justice without respect of persons, and compel the injurious to restitution.—But the Lord himself will plead the cause of the defenceless and the oppressed, of the fatherless and the widow: he often effects his purpose by influencing the hearts of princes in their favour; and the most casual or trivial incident, which conduces to it, may prove an occasion of exciting praise and gratitude for his providential goodness.—The gratification of curiosity is more pleasing to the carnal mind, than the mortification of worldly lusts: and hypocrites, apostates, or profligates, on some occasions, will be pleased with conversation on religious topics, provided they have no reference to their own conscience, character, or conduct. (Notes, John 4:16-20. P. O. 16-26.) Thus they countenance each other in ungodliness, or buoy up presumptuous hopes: whilst they cannot endure the instructions, and will not imitate the example, of those teachers whom they most profess to admire.

CHAPTER IX.

A young prophet, by Elisha's orders, goes to Ramoth-gilead; anoints Jehu as king over Israel, and directs him to exterminate Ahab's family, 1-10. Jehu acquiesces the captains, in procuring wine, and marches in haste to Israel against Joram, 11-16. Joram sends messengers to Jehu, who detain them, 17-20. He and Ahaziah meet Jehu; who kills Joram, and casts him into the field of Naboth, 21-25. Ahaziah is slain at Gur and buried at Jerusalem, 21-25. Jezebel, by Jehu's orders, is thrown out of the window, and trampled under foot, 30-33. She is eaten by dogs, as Elijah had predicted, 34-37.

V. 7-15. The Lord can procure his people a welcome, and spread them a table, even amidst their enemies; who, on some occasions, and especially in affliction, may be inclined to show them great kindness and respect. Yet few, even in that case, derive real benefit from their instructions, and disposition to do them good: but some honour redounds to God, and outward advantages accrue to his servants; who may without scruple receive them, as from him, when they are not required to flatter, or in any other way to act inconsistently with their profession.—Those who love God and man, must often weep upon a survey of the wickedness and misery of mankind; and a particular foresight of the state of the church, and of the world, would augment their sorrow. But little are men, when not exposed to temptation, aware of the desperate wickedness of their own hearts! They do not conceive themselves capable of those enormities, to which at present they feel no inducement; and it is deemed an insult upon them to suppose they are. But when the powerful attraction of great imaginary advantages approaches the carnal mind, the latent depravity begins to move; and they will surely come into contact, unless hindered by external obstructions, or by the power of God upon the heart. Then, the greedy dog, the ravening wolf, the subtle fox, the poisonous serpent, or the filthy swine, form feeble emblems of human depravity: the persons, who before were most inoffensive, become guilty of far greater rapacity, treachery, or cruelty, than the worst of these animals; and in their cooler moments doubtless often reflect with horror and astonishment at their awful progress. Those who, as mortified limbs, are continually cut off from the body politic, once no more thought of such criminality and condemnation, than any reader of these observations: and we are any of us capable, if left to ourselves, of the worst crimes perpetrated by the vilest pests and scourges of the world! This should remind us, "not to be high-minded but to fear," and to trust only in the Lord to preserve us from the deceitfulness of our own hearts. As the desire of greatness is a dangerous temptation, which has induced many to perpetrate the basest crimes; so power, however obtained, generally alters men's manners for the worse; and their inclinations to vice commonly increase, in proportion as they are able to commit it, without control, and with impunity. We ought therefore to be content and thankful in more obscure situations; and those, who are called to this dangerous pre-eminence, have need of double watchfulness and fervency in prayer.—When iniquity is conceived in the heart, means will be devised for its perpetration: and flattering language often cloaks the most malignant purposes: for sinners in general are satisfied with concealing their crimes from man, regardless of the all-seeing eye of God.—It is, in every case, an awful cruelty to flatter those with the hope of life, whom we suppose to be near dissolution: because they ought to be preparing for that important change, and to be counselled and warned so to employ their few remaining days or hours.

V. 16-29. When pious men choose wives for themselves, or take any measures in the marriage of their children, they should remember that their remote posterity are concerned, and that an improper choice may entail misery and ruin upon them.—Indulged children seldom prove wise or good men; and it is not often expedient to advance young people, needlessly and prematurely, to authority. Inferiors and dependents are often employed to chastise our rebellion against God, by their ill behaviour to us. He will not, however, break his promise or forsake his cause; but, whilst wicked men, from generation to generation, perish in their sins, the Son of David, the Light of his church, and of the world, ever lives to protect, bless, and comfort his people. May all the changes, troubles, and wickedness of the world, make us more earnest in securing an interest in his great salvation!

NOTES.—CHAPTER IX. V. 1. Elijah, many years before, had been commissioned to anoint Jehu, as a king of a new family, immediately appointed by God to reign over Israel, and to execute vengeance on the family and adherents of Ahab. (Note, 1 Kings 19:15-17.) But, a respite having been granted that prince, when he externally humbled himself before God, it seems, the anointing of Jehu was deferred likewise. (Note, 1 Kings 21:27-29.) so that this service now devolved on Elisha, as Elijah's successor and representative. But it required secrecy, and it was not proper he should perform it in person: as one of "the sons of the prophets," who was little known, might have a far better opportunity of escaping, if suspected by Jehoram's friends.—Elisha lived above forty years after this: (Note, 13:14.) and, probably, was not incapacitated by age or infirmities, for the labour and activity required on this occasion, but was for other reasons induced, or directed, to send a deputy. (Marg. Ref.)—When the ancients used great expedition, they girded up the skirts of their long upper garments with a girdle round their loins. (Note, 1 Pet. 1:13-16.)

V. 2, 3. Jehoram having retired from the army, (8:29.) Jehu seems to have been left first in command, having been long employed by Ahab's family. The directions given this young prophet were explicit; especially as to the secrecy to be observed, and the measures to be adopted for his own safety. (Marg. Ref.) The service was indeed peculiarly perilous: and Samuel had used caution, in a measure much less offensive. (Note, 1 Sam. 16:1, 2.)

V. 5-10. Jehu was engaged in converse or consultation with the other captains, when thus addressed by a person, it is probable, of mean appearance: yet when the young prophet said, "I have an errand" (or a word) "to thee, O captain," he readily went aside with him to learn his business. And immediately the prophet anointed him, explained the meaning of that transaction, and gave him an express commission from God. In all this, no doubt he exactly adhered to his instructions. (Marg. Ref. n.s.)—Israel, though generally idolatrous, was still "the people of the Lord." They were called by his name, and had a remnant of his worshippers among them: and Jehu was thus warned to use his authority in

8 For the whole house of Ahab shall perish: and I will cut off from Ahab him that pisseth against the wall, and him that is shut up and left in Israel:

9 And I will make the house of Ahab like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and like the house of Baasha the son of Ahijah:

10 And the dogs shall eat Jezebel in the portion of Jezreel, and there shall be none to bury her. And he opened the door, and fled.

[Practical Observations.]

11 ¶ Then Jehu came forth to the servants of his lord: and one said unto him, Is all well? wherefore came this mad fellow to thee? And he said unto them, Ye know the man, and his communication.

12 And they said, It is false; tell us now. And he said, Thus and thus spake he to me, saying, Thus saith the Lord, I have anointed thee king over Israel.

13 Then they hasted, and took every man his garment, and put it under him on the top of the stairs, and blew with trumpets, saying, Jehu is king.

14 So Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat, the son of Nimshi, conspired against Joram. (Now Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead, he and all Israel, because of Hazael king of Syria.)

obedience to God, and to promote true religion. The family and adherents of Ahab were criminals condemned by the Supreme Judge; Jehu was appointed to execute the sentence; the kingdom was his recompense for the service: and, as far as he acted according to the instructions given him, he needed not fear contracting guilt, or regard any reproach or opposition to which he might be exposed. The murder of the prophets and worshippers of God was more insisted upon, in this indictment, than even the worship of Baal. Jehoram had been spared many years, but he continued impenitent; though not so wicked as Ahab, who was punished in his posterity. Jezebel had retained her authority, and persisted in idolatry, and in her enmity to JEHOVAH and his servants; though less spoken of in the reigns of her sons, than in that of her husband. Long space had been given her, but she had not repented; and her measure of iniquity was now full, and her awful doom most expressly denounced. (Marg. Ref. 35, 36. Notes, 1 Kings 21:23. Rev. 2:20-23.)

V. 11. This mad fellow. It is probable, that there were some peculiarities in the young prophet's manner and address, which made the captains conclude that he was one of the "sons of the prophets," and speak of him in this language; and some reference might be had to those vehement actions, which the prophets sometimes used, when influenced by the Spirit of prophecy: (Note, 1 Sam. 19:19-24.) but it seems rather to have resulted from profane contempt of religion, as it may be supposed they were generally idolaters. Indeed, without excepting him who "spake as never man spake," those, who have faithfully delivered the Lord's message to sinners, have in all ages been treated as madmen. (Marg. Ref. y.) They are so indifferent about those objects, which attract the senses, and which man naturally desires and pursues; and so engaged about those things which are invisible, and therefore generally neglected as if unreal; their judgment, conversation, maxims, and conduct are so contrary to those of other men; and they venture and endure so much, in pursuit of interests and objects of which others have no conception; that worldly men naturally conclude them to be mad, when they deem them honestly in earnest. (Notes, Mark 3:20, 21. 2 Cor. 5:13-15.) The charge however is often brought in self-defence: for, admitting the principles and practice of the devoted servants of God to be reasonable, wise, and necessary to happiness, the inference is undeniable; that the ambitious, the sensual, the covetous, the dissipated, the worldly, and the ungodly of every description, are fools and madmen to all intents and purposes.

Ye know, &c. Perhaps Jehu meant, that the captains knew the man to be a prophet; and must suppose that he came to admonish and instruct him: or he might intend to evade the question, as if the prophet's errand had nothing peculiar in it: but they would not be thus satisfied, knowing that something more was communicated to him. This is the common interpretation.—It may, however, be questioned, whether Jehu did not suspect that the young prophet acted in concert with the captains: and that they were previously acquainted with the man and his communication.

V. 12, 13. When the captains urged Jehu further, he 16 So Jehu rode in a chariot, and went to Jezreel; for Joram lay there. And Ahaziah king of Judah was come down to see Joram.

17 And there stood a watchman on the tower in Jezreel, and he spied the company of Jehu as he came, and said, I see a company. And Joram said, Take a horseman and send to meet them, and let him say, Is it peace?

18 So there went one on horseback to meet him, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu said, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me. And the watchman told, saying, The messenger came to them, but he cometh not again.

19 Then he sent out a second on horseback which came to them, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu answered, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me.

20 And the watchman told, saying, He came even unto them, and cometh not again: and the driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously.

declared the business of the young prophet, with a frankness and boldness, which seem to have arisen from a divine energy on his mind; for, if the captains had not coincided with him, the discovery might have proved fatal to him. Some kind of faith in the word of God, spoken by the prophet, seems to have animated him to this hazardous undertaking, of which it does not appear that he had had any previous intention: and the minds of his companions also were surprisingly disposed to concur with him, by making him a kind of throne, and proclaiming him king with sound of trumpets. It is probable, that this was done on the top of some edifice, from which the people were generally informed of such public transactions as were proper to be communicated to them. Thus the conspiracy was openly avowed. While Jehoram had rendered himself odious by his crimes and oppressions to the nation in general; it may be supposed, that he was also unpopular in the army, through his severity and cruelty.

V. 14. It is evident that Ramoth-gilead was at this time in the hands of the Israelites: (15) but it is not certain, whether they had just taken it; or whether Hazael had raised the siege of it, having attempted in vain to retake it.—Jehoram's absence from the army proved of fatal consequence to him: he "escaped the sword of Hazael, but Jehu slew him." (1 Kings 19:17.)

V. 15-17. (8:28, 29.) Jezreel lay at a considerable distance from Ramoth-gilead, with the river Jordan between. Yet Jehu concerted his plan with such prudence, and executed it with such despatch; his adherents came so cordially into his interests, and so faithfully kept his counsel; and the people in the neighbourhood were either so ignorant about his intentions, or so regardless of them; that Jehoram received no tidings of his march, till Jehu's distant approach was perceived by the watchman! But the matter was of the Lord, and could not fail of success.

I see a company. (17) A troop, or army, as the word נֶחֱם signifies.

V. 18, 19. Perhaps Jehoram feared, lest the Syrians had obtained the victory over his troops, and driven them away from Ramoth: but Jehu, by compelling his messengers to turn behind him, prevented his obtaining any information, and increased his perplexity.

V. 20. Furiously. Some have rendered this, He driveth slowly. But Jehu was a vehement man, yet keen and sagacious, a fit instrument for his peculiar work. His approach might be seen at a great distance from a watchtower, as he came with an armed force; and it is most probable, that he travelled with as much celerity as he could.—The original word is exactly rendered in the margin, in madness; or from the same root as that above translated, mad fellow. (11.)

V. 21. Jehoram had no sufficient force to oppose Jehu's army, and he seems to have acted rashly in going out to meet him. But he still dreamed of peace, and was impatient to know, whether Jehu returned defeated by the Syrians, or triumphant over them. Thus Jehu's design was facilitated, and perhaps bloodshed prevented: and thus, according to the chariot was made ready. And ^aJoram king of Israel and Ahaziah king of Judah went out, each in his chariot, and they went out against Jehu, and ^amet him in ^athe portion of Naboth the Jezreelite.

22 And it came to pass, when Joram saw Jehu, that he said, ^aIs it peace, Jehu? And he answered, ^aWhat peace, so long as ^athe whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel, and her witchcrafts are so many?

23 And Joram turned his hands, and fled, and said to Ahaziah, ^aThere is treachery, O Ahaziah.

24 And Jehu ^adrew a bow with his full strength, and smote ^aJehoram between his arms, and the arrow went out at his heart, and he ^asunk down in his chariot.

25 Then said Jehu to Bidkar his captain, Take up, and cast him in the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite: for remember how that, when I and thou rode together after Ahab his father, ^athe Lord laid this burden upon him;

26 Surely I have seen yesterday the ^ablood of Naboth, and the blood ^aof his sons, saith the Lord; and ^aI will requite thee in this ^aplat, saith the Lord. Now therefore take and cast him into the plat of ground, according to the word of the Lord.

27 ^aBut when ^aAhaziah the king of Judah saw this, he fled by the way of the ^agarden-house. And Jehu followed after him, and said, Smite him also in the chariot. ^aAnd they did so at the going up to Gur, which is by ^aIbleam. And he fled to ^aMegiddo, and died there.

purpose of God, Jehoram was slain in the portion of Naboth; probably near the place where he and his sons had been put to death. (Notes, 25, 26. 1 Kings 21:17-19.)

V. 22. Idolatry is in Scripture called whoredom; and, when committed by the professed people of God, adultery, to denote the Lord's abhorrence of it. Jezebel's idolatries had been manifold and long-continued; and, as some think, attended by prostitution, according to the shameless practices of the Gentiles in their worship: of Jezebel's personal character in this respect nothing further is recorded. (Notes, Rev. 2:20-23. 14:8. 17:1, 2.) The words, witchcrafts, may allude to the fascinating artifices that harlots use to allure men to wickedness; by which her various methods of seducing the Israelites to idolatry seem to be intended. For this purpose she doubtless employed promises, presents, caresses, and flatteries; and on the other hand, frowns, threats, and persecutions; by which great multitudes were induced to conform to her religion, and join in her spiritual whoredom. As Jehu had been long unsuspected, in the court of Ahab and his sons, he probably had never before in any way protested against the worship of Baal.—Jehoram was answerable for Jezebel's crimes, because he countenanced and imitated them, instead of using his authority to repress them. (Note, 1 Kings 15:10-13.)

V. 23, 24. Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Kings 22:32-35. V. 25, 26. In the vineyard of murdered Naboth, of which Jehoram seems to have kept possession, his body was left unburied, to be devoured by dogs, or beasts of prey: and the dogs, in some sense, licked the blood of Ahab, as flowing from the wounds of his son. (Note, 1 Kings 21:17-19.)—The words of the prophets were called burdens, as predicting a heavy burden of misery to the guilty party, which he could neither endure nor remove. (Marg. Ref. t. Note, Jer. 23:33-40.)—It is probable that Jehu had seldom reflected on Elisha's words during the intervening years, till these events brought the substance of them fresh to his recollection.

Rode together. (25) Ahab's guard were wont to ride in pairs, two and two; and Jehu and Bidkar rode at that time together, and heard Elijah's words. Bp. Patrick.

The blood of his sons. (26) This evidently implies that Naboth's sons were put to death along with him: for to suppose, that the words only mean that they were deprived of their estate, and so impoverished, and as it were starved, is altogether unreasonable. (Note, 1 Kings 21:8-14.)

V. 27, 28. Ahaziah was Ahab's grandson by Athaliah; and being also an idolater, he was within Jehu's commission. So that, being found with Jehoram, he shared his punishment; though, as son to pious Jehoshaphat, he was allowed an honorable burial. The circumstances elsewhere recorded concerning his death, render it probable that he was not 32 And he lifted up his face to the window, and said, ^aWho is on my side? who? And there looked out to him two or three ^aeunuchs.

33 And he said, ^aThrow her down. So they threw her down: and ^asome of her blood was sprinkled on the wall, and on the horses: and he trode her under foot.

slain, till Jehu had inflicted vengeance on Jezebel at Jezreel. (Notes, 30-37. 2 Chr. 22:7-9.)

Garden-house. (27) It seems, that Ahab, notwithstanding Elijah's awful message to him, and his external humiliation, proceeded with his plan of forming Naboth's vineyard, or part of it, into a garden of herbs; and this house is supposed to have been built on it, for the accommodation of those who kept it. (Notes, 1 Kings 21:1, 2, 27-29.)—Died there. Ahaziah was taken at Megiddo, and brought to Jehu, who slew him, probably at Jezreel. But he died with the others of the house of Ahab, which is supposed to be here meant.

V. 29. Jehoram began to reign over Judah, in the fifth year of Jehoram king of Israel: it is probable, in the very beginning of it; and he died, and was succeeded by Ahaziah, in the eleventh or twelfth year of Jehoram; that is, the close of the eleventh, or beginning of the twelfth. This space is called eight years, as comprising six whole years, and a portion of two others, computed according to the reigns of the kings of Judah. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 30-37. Jezebel had no way of escaping or resisting Jehu: she therefore aimed to outrage and intimidate him. Instead of assuming the habit of a mourner, or a suppliant, she arrayed herself in all the magnificence of royalty, and stationed herself in a conspicuous place to wait his arrival. She used the method, customary in the east, of giving herself a majestic appearance, by a kind of paint which dilates the eyebrows, and makes the eyes look large and bright. And when Jehu approached the place, she accosted him by saying, "Had Zimri peace, who slew his master?" Zimri had destroyed the house of Baasha, and had soon after fallen before Omri the father of Ahab: (Note, 1 Kings 16:8-19.) but Zimri had had no commission for what he did; and Jehu was expressly ordered to take vengeance on the house of Ahab. He was not therefore to be thus intimidated: for finding upon inquiry, that her chamberlains were ready to join him; (being either mercenary men who were willing to purchase his favour, or being weary of Jezebel's imperious and haughty disposition;) he ordered her to be thrown from the window, and thus she was dashed to pieces, and trodden under foot by the horses. "See how suddenly courtiers change with the fortune of their master." Bp. Patrick.—Afterwards, when he thought of burying her, in honour of her royal extraction, he found himself disappointed; for her mangled body, (having probably been plundered of its costly attire,) was entirely torn in pieces, and devoured by dogs. This reminded him of the word of the Lord by Elijah, which he had before forgotten: and he observed that her carcass was to become as dung upon the face of the earth.—This was a dreadful and most ignominious end, worthy of one who ^aled been such a

CHAPTER X.

Jehu, by letters to the elders, causes Ahab's seventy sons to be slain at Samaria, and their heads to be brought to Jezreel, 1-7. He shows this to be a fulfilment of Elijah's prophecy, and destroys all Ahab's kindred in Jezreel, 8-11. In his way to Samaria he slays forty-two of Ahab's brethren, 12-14. Attended by Jehonadab, he slays all that remained to Ahab in Samaria, 15-17. He assembles all the worshippers of Baal by stratagem, puts them to death, and breaks down Baal's images and temple, 18-28. He follows the sins of Jeroboam; yet the kingdom to the fourth generation is promised him, for destroying the house of Ahab, 29-31. Hazael smites Israel, 32, 33. Jehu dies, and Jehoahaz succeeds him, 34-36.

AND Ahab had seventy sons in Samaria. And Jehu wrote letters, and sent to Samaria, unto the rulers of Jezreel, to the elders, and to them that brought up Ahab's children, saying,

2 Now as soon as this letter cometh to you, seeing your master's sons are with you, and there are with you chariots and horses, a fenced city also, and armour;

3 Look even out the best and meekest of your master's sons, and set him on his father's throne, and fight for your master's house.

4 But they were exceedingly afraid, and said, Behold, two kings stood not before him: how then shall we stand?

5 And he that was over the house, and he that was over the city, the elders also, and the bringers up of the children, sent to Jehu, saying, We are thy servants, and will do all that thou shalt bid us; we will not make any king: do thou that which is good in thine eyes.

curse to Israel and Judah, but had brought the heaviest curses upon herself; and who was a specimen, and in some respects a type, of all ringleaders in idolatry, and tempters to that crime. Yet "this cursed woman," the daughter of a king, was also the wife of a king, the mother of two kings, the mother-in-law of a king, and the grandmother of a king, all in her own life! So vain are all earthly honours and distinctions!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. The long-suffering of God enhances the condemnation of those who are not led by it to repentance. (Notes, Rom. 2:4-6. 9:22, 23.)—In his appointed time he will raise up and qualify suitable instruments for performing his purpose, whether of vengeance or of mercy.—The faithful servants of God must stand prepared for arduous and perilous undertakings; and obedience to his commandments must have the precedence before all other duties. But, as the written word is at present our only rule of duty, it seldom happens, that we are required to act, even in apparent violation of our relative obligations to princes, parents, masters, or other superiors; except in professing those truths, and attending on those ordinances, which they may disapprove, discountenance, or prohibit, or in keeping aloof from those superstitions, or worldly places and practices, which they would enjoin.—Yet if, after all endeavours "to render honour to whom honour is due," we should be reproached or ill-treated for our conscientious obedience to God, we must bear it with meekness and patience: (Notes, Acts 4:13-22, 19:23-28. 5:29-31, 41, 42.) and when in danger of persecution, we are allowed to flee from it. They, who are employed as ministers, will be the most exposed in these respects: for the message of the Lord, meeting sinners in the midst of their worldly pursuits, singles them out, by an application to their hearts and consciences, as if they were addressed by name: (Note, 2 Sam. 12:7.) and while some are thus separated from their companions, and by the union of the Holy Spirit, prepared for the service of God; others are marked out, in the midst of their prosperity, as in danger of eternal misery. Whilst, however, we conscientiously adhere to our instructions, we shall be accepted, and preserved as long as is really good for us.

V. 11-29. Every man should well consider to what work the Lord calls him, and in what manner and for what ends he ought to do it. His special commission justifies the severest executions of his enemies: but our general instructions to do good, and to bless, and to overcome evil with good, point out to us more delightful services, in which we should thankfully abound from day to day. Yet the vengeance of God will fall with peculiar weight upon the head of those that oppress and persecute his people and ministers; who may deem themselves highly favoured, if they are only reviled, and reproached as fools and madmen. Satisfied with the testimony of their conscience, and the Lord's gracious acceptance, they may rejoice and be exceedingly glad, at being thus ranked with prophets, apostles, and the Saviour himself: and instead of resenting the opprobrious terms, as an intolerable affront, may glory in them as the most honourable distinction. (Notes, Matt. 5:10-12. 1 Pet. 4:12-16.) They should, however, be extremely careful to avoid all ridiculous and unreasonable words and actions, that they may give no just occasion to such malignant and injurious charges; which, when unmerited, cannot possibly injure them, except they make them angry, contentious, discontented, or reluctant to their duty.—The Lord often secretly disposes men to concur in his designs, in a manner contrary to their former conduct, and to all human probabilities: and then such events, as would otherwise have been impracticable, are speedily and easily accomplished, and to ask advice, is often the readiest way of obtaining concurrence and assistance. Prudence, united with vigour and despatch, promises success in the most arduous designs; and a disposition to "drive furiously," may sometimes fit a person for peculiar services, which would not so well suit the temper of more sedate and amiable persons: yet in general it is no commendation of a man's character, or qualification for the most desirable kinds of usefulness.—While sudden destruction is rapidly approaching, sinners are still saying, Peace, peace: but what peace can there be to the impenitent workers of iniquity, and to those who have tempted others to join them in rebellion against God?—Notorious sinners entail judgment on their posterity unto the third and fourth generation, especially when these walk in the steps of their progenitors.—The circumstances of temporal judgment are sometimes remarkably calculated to call to remembrance the crimes for which they are inflicted: so that the most superficial observers must perceive the justice of God in them, and acknowledge that the Scriptures are fulfilled. How will it then be in "the day of wrath, and the revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render unto every one according to his works?" And if we would escape the destruction of the ungodly, we must avoid all intimate acquaintance with them; for "a companion of fools shall be destroyed."

V. 30-37. Some haughty transgressors have so long prospered in their crimes, and domineered over all around them, that they suppose they can outbrave all opposition, and defy even the justice of God himself. Their hearts grow more hardened and insolent, when they are evidently upon the brink of destruction: and an unhumiliated spirit, in alarming and humiliating circumstances, is a distinguishing mark of those, who "are appointed unto wrath."—They who carefully adorn their persons "by painting the face," "tiring the hair, and putting on of apparel," whilst their souls are polluted with the guilt and deilement of innumerable, unrepented, unpardoned, unmortified iniquities, should sometimes turn aside to view themselves in this mirror, and to contemplate the conduct and fate of Jezebel: especially those who use these arts to seduce others from the ways of truth and righteousness. Such persons, however noble, wealthy, beautiful, or successful, are emphatically accursed; under the curse of God themselves, and the cursed instruments of bringing others into the same condemnation.—Persons of royal extraction or authority, naturally annex the idea of sacred to their distinctions; yet they often pay no regard to the sacred service and honour of the King of kings: but how can they expect the conscientious obedience of their subjects, whilst they are in a state of actual rebellion against their Sovereign; and attempting to corrupt the morals and principles of the people? Indeed traitors are justly execrated, and seldom prosper: but the Lord often uses them as the instruments of his righteous vengeance against ungodly princes.—Court-favourites are commonly a fickle, uneserving people. For the sake of emolument, they are very assiduous and lavish in their flatteries: but when a revolution takes place, they often betray, or even murder, the same unhappy persons, to secure themselves, or to obtain still greater preferment! This is especially to be feared by those who render themselves odious through insolence and wickedness; and who are only served out of slavish fear or mercenary hope.—Let proud tyrants and oppressors study this chapter with fear and trembling: the loftiest will be brought low, and every one of them, in his turn, must give an account unto God, with whom "is no respect of persons." The anguish of Jezebel's death, and the disgrace of her mangled limbs, faintly shadow forth the misery and contempt, which at and after death will be the portion of those, who have been "the terror of the mighty in the land of the living;" whose very memory shall rot in infamy. This the believer will foresee and expect; and at length all the world shall witness it with astonishment. May we flee from that "wrath which is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men;" and seek to secure an interest in those precious promises, that will assuredly be performed in due season!

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 1-7. These seventy persons were Ahab's descendants by several wives, probably including the sons of Jehoram. They resided at Samaria, as a more secure situation than Jezreel: or as some think, they fled thither from Jezreel, when Jehoram was slain: attended by the rulers or elders of Jezreel, who might be supposed most attached to the interests of the family; and by those who had superintended their education. Doubtless, many of the elders were the same persons, who had put Naboth and his sons to death in obedience to Jezebel; and, their consciences and principles having been debauched by such services, they were equally ready to murder the family of Ahab at Jehu's command. (Note, 1 Kings 21:8-14.) Jehu seems to have been aware of their base disposition; and he wrote letters to

6 Then he wrote a letter the second time to them, saying, If ye be mine, and if ye will hearken unto my voice, take ye the heads of the men your master's sons, and come to me to Jezreel by to-morrow this time. (Now the king's sons being seventy persons, were with the great men of the city which brought them up.)

7 And it came to pass, when the letter came to them, that they took the king's sons, and slew seventy persons, and put their heads in baskets, and sent him them to Jezreel.

8 ¶ And there came a messenger, and told him, saying, They have brought the heads of the king's sons. And he said, Lay ye them in two heaps at the entering in of the gate until the morning.

9 And it came to pass in the morning, that he went out, and stood, and said to all the people, Ye be righteous: behold, I conspired against my master, and slew him: but who slew all these?

10 Know now that there shall fall unto the earth nothing of the word of the Lord, which the Lord spake concerning the house of Ahab: for the Lord hath done that which he spake by his servant Elijah.

11 So Jehu slew all that remained of the house of Ahab in Jezreel, and all his great men, and his kinsfolks, and his priests, until he left him none remaining.

12 ¶ And he arose and departed, and came to Samaria. And as he was at the shearing-house in the way, 13 Jehu met with the brethren of Ahaziah king of Judah, and said, Who are ye? And they answered, We are the brethren of Ahaziah, and we go down to salute the children of the king and the children of the queen.

14 And he said, Take them alive. And they took them alive, and slew them at the pit of the shearing-house, even two and forty men; neither left he any of them. [Practical Observations.]

15 ¶ And when he was departed thence, he lighted on Jehonadab the son of Rechab coming to meet him: and he saluted him, and said to him, Is thy heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? And Jehonadab answered, It is. If it be, give me thy hand. And he gave him his hand; and he took him up to him into the chariot.

16 And he said, Come with me, and see my zeal for the Lord. So they made him ride in his chariot.

17 And when he came to Samaria, he slew all that remained unto Ahab in Samaria, still he had destroyed him, according to the saying of the Lord, which he spake to Elijah.

18 ¶ And Jehu gathered all the people together, and said unto them, Ahab served Baal a little; but Jehu shall serve him much.

19 Now therefore call unto me all the prophets of Baal, all his servants, and all his priests; let them, that by killing the young princes by their hands, he might avoid odium, and prevent further bloodshed, and forward the completion of his purpose: for as Samaria was strongly fortified, and defended by a much more powerful garrison than Jezreel; it might have stood out against him for a long time, and at last have been reduced with great difficulty, if the princes had courageously defended it. He was indeed commissioned to destroy all the house of Ahab, and he was not at all scrupulous about the means of doing it: otherwise he would have hesitated at employing men to serve him, with such base treachery and murder. But regardless of this, he, by an intimidating challenge, assured them, that if they attempted to protect their royal charge, the matter must be decided by the sword. He knew their strength, and he would have them to be aware of his resolution. As, however, they did not fear the vengeance and power of God, but the courage and success of Jehu, whom they despaired of resisting, they unreservedly submitted to him. Nor did they, when they received his second letter, so much as beg that others might be appointed to slay the young princes; but, as it seems, without reluctance, at the first word, beheaded them all. Doubtless they had brought them up delicately, repeatedly avowed their attachment to them, and bestowed many flattering encomiums upon them. (Note, 9:30-37.) They probably expected a reward from Jehu; but they seem to have been slain among the other adherents of Ahab's family. (17)—Most of these princes must have been grown men, though some might be minors or children.

V. 8-10. The heads of Ahab's sons, having been laid in a place of public concourse, would occasion much amazement and many inquiries: which gave Jehu an opportunity of addressing the multitude on the subject. He meant to abate the odium of his own conduct towards the family of Ahab, by contrasting it with the atrocious treachery and cruelty of those professed friends, who had been so entirely confided in by Ahab and his family. At the same time he reminded them, that the whole was a performance of the word of the Lord by Elijah, which would receive a still more exact completion: instead, therefore, of condemning the persons employed in this bloody work, they ought to adore the truth and justice of God, and submit to his will. Thus he likewise avowed his purpose of going on with what he had begun: but, as the commission given him by the prophet was not publicly known, he did not mention it. (Notes, 9:5-10, 25, 26. 1 Kings 21:17-26. Hos. 1:4, 5.)

V. 11. Priests.] These seem to have been the priests, or prophets, of Baal and other idols, who had eaten at Jezebel's table, and who presided over all the others. As they were strongly attached to Ahab's family, Jehu may be supposed to have put them to death from reasons of state, rather than from zeal against idolatry.

V. 13, 14. All the sons of Jehoram, the father of Ahaziah, had been slain by the Philistines, during the life of Jehoram; (Notes, 2 Chr. 21:16-20. 22:1.) but these persons seem to have been the sons of Ahaziah's brethren, or his nephews. They belonged however to the family of Ahab, and fell within Jehu's commission. (Marg. Ref. x.) They supposed Jehoram and Jezebel to be still living in prosperity, and were going in a company to see them: and thus they met their doom, and were slain by Jehu.

V. 15, 16. (Notes, Jer. 35.) Jehonadab was eminent for his cordial attachment to the worship of JEHOVAH, and for a life of strict piety, and deadness to the world. Having therefore heard that Jehu was executing the predicted vengeance upon the house of Ahab, he seems to have entertained hopes of a thorough reformation, and was desirous of giving his cordial support to so good a work: and he went to meet Jehu, who, with apparent piety, pronounced a blessing upon him; inquiring whether he met his sincere affection with reciprocal cordiality. (Marg. Ref.) Indeed some think, that Jehonadab first blessed Jehu, as Jacob had blessed Pharaoh; and that then Jehu addressed him. (Note, Gen. 47:7.) Being, however, satisfied with Jehonadab's answer, he took him up into his chariot; secretly elated, as it seems, with the concurrence of so pious a person, and expecting by his influence to acquire the full confidence of the people. But, had he intended effectually to reform religion, he would doubtless have sent for Elisha, to counsel him and concur with him; and his neglect, in that particular, was no favourable indication of his designs. He seems to have ostentatiously boasted of his "zeal for the Lord," and wanted to have it noticed: (Notes, Num. 24:16. Prov. 27:2.) but in reality he was influenced by carnal policy, united with a temporary conviction, and not by genuine, pious zeal.

V. 17. The rulers and elders of Samaria readily allowed Jehu and his company to enter the city, and surrendered all its strong-holds and forces up to him: but as no exception is mentioned, when, it is said, "He slew all that remained unto Ahab in Samaria," it is generally and probably concluded, that he slew the traitorous rulers and elders also. Many love the treachery, who despise or detest the traitors; and none, when their purpose is answered, afterwards trust them. (Note, Matt. 27:3-5.)

V. 18-20. The kings of Israel, who had seized the throne by conspiring against their predecessors, had commonly invited or exceeded their idolatry; and this gave plausibility to Jehu's stratagem: but it was a measure which cannot be justified or at all excused. It would have been sufficient, if he had destroyed the temples and images of Baal, and put to death the known abettors and ringleaders of his worship, and every one who should afterwards attempt to revive it. But to draw them into a snare, by a direct falsehood, and to tempt them to commit idolatry, that he might slay them in the very act, was "to do evil, that good might come," and resembled the abhorred maxim of those who maintain, that faith is not to be kept with heretics. (Notes, Josh. 9:19, 20. 2 Sam. 13:22-29. Rom. 3:5-8.)

V. 21. Numbers doubtless had been drawn in to bow the none be wanting: for I have a great sacrifice to do to Baal: whosoever shall be wanting, he shall not live. ^aBut Jehu did it in subtlety, to the intent that he might destroy the worshippers of Baal.

20 And Jehu said, ^aProclaim a solemn assembly for Baal. And they proclaimed it.

21 And Jehu sent through all Israel: and all the worshippers of Baal came, so that there was not a man left that came not. ^aAnd they came into the house of Baal; and the house of Baal was full from one end to another.

22 And he said unto him that was over the vestry, Bring forth ^avestments for all the worshippers of Baal. And he brought them forth vestments.

23 And Jehu went, and Jehonadab the son of Rechab, into the house of Baal, and said unto the worshippers of Baal, Search, and look that there be here with you none of the servants of the LORD, but the worshippers of Baal only.

24 And when they went in to offer sacrifices and burnt-offerings, Jehu appointed fourscore men without, and said, ^aIf any of the men whom I have brought into your hands escape, he that letteth him go, his life shall be for the life of him.

25 And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, that Jehu said to the guard and to the captains, ^aGo in, and slay them; ^alet none come forth. And they smote them with the edge of the sword; and the guard and the captains cast them out, and went to the city of the house of Baal.

26 And they brought forth the ^aimages out of the house of Baal, ^aand burned them.

27 And they brake down the ^aimage of Baal and brake down the house of Baal, and made it ^aa draught-house unto this day.

28 Thus Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel.

29 ^aHowbeit, from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who ^amade Israel to sin, Jehu departed not from after them, to wit, the golden calves that were ^ain Beth-el, and that were in Dan.

30 And the LORD said unto Jehu, ^aBecause thou hast done well in executing that which is right in mine eyes, and hast done unto the house of Ahab ^aaccording to all that was in my heart, thy children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel.

31 But Jehu ^atook no heed to walk in the law of the LORD God of Israel with all his heart: for ^ahe departed not from the sins of Jeroboam, which made Israel to sin.

32 ^aIn those days the LORD began to ^acut Israel short: and ^aHazeel smote them in all the coasts of Israel;

33 From Jordan ^aeastward, all the land of ^aGilead, the Gadites, and the Reubenites, and ^athe Manassites from Arzer, which is by the river Arnon, ^aeven Gilead and Bashan.

34 Now ^athe rest of the acts of Jehu, and all that he did, and all his might, ^aare they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

35 And Jehu ^aslept with his fathers: and they buried him in Samaria. And ^aJehoahaz his son reigned in his stead.

36 And ^athe time that Jehu reigned over ^aIsrael in Samaria was twenty and eight ^ayears.

knee to Baal, in order to obtain the favour, or escape the displeasure of their rulers, who did not cordially approve of that idolatry, though indifferent about the worship of JEHOVAH. And these would keep away till Jehu's intentions were more manifest: but the zealous idolaters were judicially infatuated, and attended. Their number must have been small, compared with the state of things in the first days of Elijah: but Jehoram was not so zealous for the worship of Baal, as Ahab had been; and the incessant labours of Elisha, and the sons of the prophets, must have produced very great effects.—Some expositors, however, think that by the servants of Baal, (as in the original,) his worshippers in general are not meant, but the persons who ministered to the prophets and priests of Baal, as the Levites and Nethinims did to the sons of Aaron.

V. 22. Vestments.] The prophets, priests, and servants of Baal wore distinguishing garments, in which they were accustomed to perform their religious services. (Marg. Ref. Note, Zeph. 1:4.)

V. 23. None of, &c.] This was spoken in a dissembled zeal to preserve the purity of the worship of Baal: but had not the idolaters been judicially infatuated, they must have suspected some design concealed under such a precaution.

V. 24, 25. (Note, 1 Kings 20:41, &c.)—Perhaps, all the servants of Baal were not collected, nor all others separated, till the sacrifices were placed upon the altar; and therefore they were permitted to go through with their worship.—We may suppose that Jehonadab so much approved the substance of Jehu's service, that he was willing to allow for the informality with which it was performed: otherwise he certainly could not approve of his dissimulation, or his attendance on an idolatrous sacrifice with apparent satisfaction. When the captains and men, employed by Jehu, had slain all the priests and servants of Baal, within the precincts of the temple, (which a small company of armed men might readily do, some watching at the gates to intercept those who attempted to escape, and others entering sword in hand among a defenceless confined company;) and had made themselves sure that they were all dead, by casting out their bodies; they hastened to "the city of the house of Baal" to complete Jehu's design. For it seems that the buildings around the temple of Baal and the courts of the temple, which had been erected for the accommodation of his priests and their attendants, were so numerous, as to form a kind of city by themselves.

V. 26, 27. Marg. Ref.—A draught-house. (27) The citizens thenceforth made a practice of carrying all the filth and rubbish of Samaria to that place, in contempt and abhor-rence of the idolatry which had been there committed. (Marg. Ref. &c.)

V. 28. After this, the worship of Baal does not appear to have ever been restored in the kingdom of Israel, though other idolatry abounded.

V. 29-31. Had Jehu acted from genuine zeal for the honour of God, in destroying the worship of Baal, he would also have put down the worship of the golden calves; that idolatry being as expressly forbidden by the second, as the other was by the first commandment. But that was a politic and profitable sin, and it appeared dangerous to attempt any thing against it. In his general conduct also "he took no heed to walk in the law of the LORD . . . with all his heart," so that his religious zeal was partial, politic, and selfish. The LORD, however, sent a prophet to assure him, that he had done right, in executing vengeance on Ahab's family, as well as in destroying the worship of Baal; and to promise him a suitable recompense. Accordingly, his family sat on the throne of Israel longer than any other family did, either before or after: as the fourth generation reached to above one hundred years from the time when Jehu ascended the throne. (Notes, 15:8, 12.) Yet, in other respects these very actions of Jehu were deemed deserving of punishment. (Note, Hos. 1:4, 5.) The repetition used concerning Jeroboam, "who made Israel to sin," emphatically shows the extreme criminality of his conduct in the sight of God, as thus opening the way, and setting the example, for all the idolatries of Israel, till that kingdom was subverted. He was, in some respects, answerable for the whole.

V. 32-36. Hazeel smote that region, which lay east of Jordan: but he did not desolate it: this was afterwards done by the kings of Assyria. (Note, 1 Chr. 5:25, 26.) At this time he committed those barbarities which Elisha had predicted, and we may suppose that the miseries of Israel were very great. (Notes, 8:12, 13. Am. 1:3-5.) But from the period, when Jehu ceased to do the work assigned him by God, his actions and might are no further noticed in sacred Scripture, and the account of his reign is very compendious. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14. How soon are the most flourishing families and kingdoms desolated, when God arises to execute his judgments!—Such as bequeath his blessing to their children in answer to their prayers, and as a gracious recompense of their faith and charity, provide in a far better manner for them, than those who leave estates to their evil descendants, burdened with the indignation of the Lord, for their injustice, oppression, and impiety.—The selfishness of the human heart gives peculiar energy to those temptations, which powerfully assail their hopes and fears as to this life. Where this principle has the ascendancy, men may be induced to such treachery and cruelty, as before they never thought of; and those, who influence their inferiors to practise iniquity for them, need not to be surprised if they commit similar crimes against them. But nothing except faith, fear of God, love to his name, and the hope of eternal life, can give a decided victory over all temptations; and enable us to obey the Lord, and venture all consequences in his service.—Those who have done things really, or apparently evil, are often disposed to draw in others to act in a manner more evidently and grossly iniquitous; and then to conclude, that they shall be acquitted by righteous judges, not being themselves so atrociously criminal. Yet the law of God, and not any conduct of man, is the rule by which our actions are to be judged; and, though tempters generally prove accusers, a moiety of the guilt of every crime perpetrated at their instance, properly belongs to them.—We readily perceive the propriety of submitting where we are unable to withstand, and of taking warning by the examples of those who have in vain opposed the will of earthly princes; at least we are naturally disposed at any price to pacify their displeasure. But are not sinners sensible that they cannot stand against the indignation of the Almighty? And yet they persist in rebellion against him, and will not take proper measures, or make proper submissions, to avert his wrath and recover his favour!—If we call ourselves the servants of earthly potentates, they expect that our obedience to their mandates should evince the sincerity of our professions; and if we are the Lord's, we must show that we are devoted to him by doing his will; and he never did, nor can command any thing unjust or unreasonable.—In the most awful transactions however, even though attended by the basest villanies, the truth and justice of God ought to be acknowledged; nay, true faith assures us of them, even when to us imperceptible: for no word of God can fall to the ground, but all will be performed; and then his glory will be conspicuous to the whole world.—We should dread and abhor the man who had murdered our parents or children, the wife of our bosom, or our beloved friends; and who had aimed a dagger at our hearts, and having repeatedly wounded us, still avowed his purpose of assassinating us. But when we look back upon our deceased relatives, or forward to our own dissolution; when we reflect on the sufferings which we or ours endure or fear, or on those miseries which render the earth like one great hospital, slaughter-house, and burying-ground; when we consider the innumerable millions of human bodies, which have been consigned to the tomb, and are reverted to the dust; and the immense multitudes daily following: yea, when our believing thoughts make excursions into the invisible world, and survey the miseries of fallen angels, and departed souls consigned to the place of torment: or when we look forward to the resurrection and the final judgment, and view the innumerable millions of the wicked, appalled with horror and despair, attending to the awful sentence, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil, and his angels:" in short, when the aggregate of all the misery in the whole creation, through eternal ages, has been considered, and the question occurs, "Who slew all these?" the answer will be, SIN! TRANSGRESSION OF GOD'S LAW has made all this havoc, and introduced all this misery into his most perfect creation; and, worse than all this, SIN has crucified the LORD OF GLORY. Shall we then lodge this viper in our bosom, and madly seek for happiness from the cause of all possible misery? Rather we should abhor and dread it with that complete detestation, which would render its distant approach more formidable to us than any temporal pain or affliction imaginable.

V. 15-36. Men of eminent godliness should countenance every work of public reformation; and wise men will value their presence and assistance. But they are frequently too hasty in their concurrence, and too sanguine in their expectations, when those in exalted stations stand forth as the professed friends of religion: and thus they are drawn in to sanction those wrong measures which they are unable to prevent, to the discredit of the common cause.—Hypocrites and self-deceivers are often ready to say to eminently pious persons, "Come and see our zeal for the LORD;" when they are only aiming, by the assistance of a party, to establish their own authority and reputation, or other secular interests. And when men's professions are very strong, their progress very rapid, and their zeal tarnished with ostentation, or leavened with subtlety and a fickle or ferocious demeanour; they may justly be suspected, and need to be watched and admonished by those, who would avoid subsequent painful reflections. Vehemence and severity indeed were in some measure consistent with the awful executions which a righteous God commanded in these ancient times: yet the manner, in which his orders were performed, might indicate a very improper spirit. Zeal, however, in the cause of God, is worthless, except it be tempered with humility, meekness, kindness, and a peaceable frame of mind: as furious contentions and bitter recriminations cannot adorn the gospel, or meet the divine acceptance; for neither the wrath nor the falsehood of man can "work the righteousness of God." (Notes, Luke 9:51-56. Jam. 3:13-18.)—Hypocrites betray themselves by their earnestness about one part of religion, and their indifference about others: and generally profitable or plausible sins are spared, while those, which would injure them with their party, are cast off. Yet the church, and the world, may reap advantage from their partial obedience: and God will not remain as it were indebted to them; but will recompense their external services with external rewards, and at the same time visit their sins with deserved punishments. Much more then will he recompense the upright services of his believing people, who may be encouraged by this consideration to abound in his work.—The servants of Satan are often open enough in avowing what master they serve; it is therefore shameful and deplorable, when the servants of the Lord are unwilling that men should know that they are employed by him.—If the wicked could so separate the people of God from their company, as to let none remain in it, we might be sure that destruction was preparing for them: but what blessed ordinances should we have, if no servants of sin and Satan crept in among the worshippers of the Lord! Generally, if not always, we must say, "Ye are clean, but not all." Nay, many are useful to the souls of others, who themselves prove apostates and cast-aways. The Lord grant that this may not be the case with the writer, or any of the readers, of these observations!

NOTES.—CHAP. XI. V. 1, 2. (Notes, 9:27, 28. 10:13, 14.) It is probable that Athaliah was left in authority, when Ahaziah went to visit Jehoram: and, being informed that he was slain, she proceeded to destroy "all the seed royal," or the seed of the kingdom; that is, all who could claim the kingdom, as descended from David's royal race. This seems to include all the males whom Athaliah knew to belong to that family, especially in the line of Solomon and Rehoboam, without excepting even her own grandchildren by Ahaziah. Some think, an impious revenge actuated her; and that, as God had ordered the family of Ahab, (whose daughter she was), to be destroyed; so she was determined to extirpate that family which he especially favoured. But it is more certain that she was influenced by ambition, and desired to reign without a competitor; and to be able to defend herself against Jehu, by whom she must think herself marked for destruction. By this concurrence of events, Jehoshaphat's alliance with the house of Ahab proved almost the total ruin of his family; and of the house of David, from whence the Messiah was to descend! To appearance, and in Athaliah's intention, it was exterminated; and indeed that branch, which descended from Jehoshaphat, was so interwoven with Ahab's devoted family, that without a favourable construction of the sentence, none of them could have been spared: for Jehoshaphat's other sons had been slain by Jehoram, as soon as he had got possession of the throne, so that all who survived were the descendants of Ahab as well as of Jehoshaphat. (Note, 2 Chr. 21:4.) But by an act of grace, as it were, Joash, being both a branch of the house of David, and of that of Ahab, was considered as belonging to the former family, and snatched as "a brand from the burning." (Notes, 3:7. 1 Kings 22:1-4.)—Some think that he was left for dead among the other victims of Ahab's ambition; but being taken away, he revived and was recovered: or else he was removed when they were slaying the others, and either was not sought for, or could not be found. Jehoshaba, though the daughter of Jehoram, (whether by Athaliah, or some other wife is not certain), had been married some time before to Jehoiada the high-priest; God, thus preparing for the protection of Joash, before the danger became apparent.—Jehoshaba concealed Joash in some of the chambers set apart for the use of the priests, within the precincts of the temple, where he remained in safety; Athaliah not suspecting that any male branch of the family survived.

V. 3. It seems that the degenerate race of Judah did not oppose the usurpation of this vile woman! We are informed of nothing respecting Athaliah's conduct, during her continuance in authority, but that she supported the worship of Baal, as a genuine daughter of Jezebel.

4 ¶ And ^{the} seventh year Jehoiada sent ^{and} fetched the rulers over hundreds, with the captains and the guard, and brought them to him into the house of the Lord, and made a covenant with them, and took an oath of them in the house of the Lord, and showed them the king's son.

5 And he commanded them, saying, This is the thing that ye shall do: a third part of you that enter in on the sabbath shall even be keepers of the water of the king's house;

6 And a third part shall be at the gate of Sur; and a third part at the gate behind the guard: so shall ye keep the watch of the house, that it be not broken down.

7 And two parts of all you that go forth on the sabbath, even they shall keep the watch of the house of the Lord about the king.

8 And ye shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand: and the that cometh within the ranges, let him be slain. And be ye with the king as he goeth out and as he cometh in.

9 And the captains over the hundreds did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest commanded: and they took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that should go out on the sabbath, and came to Jehoiada the priest.

10 And to the captains over hundreds did the priests give king David's spears and shields, that were in the temple of the Lord.

V. 4. Jehoiada, as high-priest, and as having the lawful heir to the crown under his care, was fully authorized to act on this occasion. Indeed Jehosheba herself had a far better right to the throne, than Athaliah.—All the persons, whom Jehoiada first employed, seem to have been Levites; though others, by their means, were afterwards brought to concur. (Note, 2 Chr. 23:1,2.) For the Levites were numbered, and arranged in companies under their several heads, called captains, or leaders; and they attended upon the service of the temple, in rotation, by weekly courses. (Notes, 1 Chr. 23:2—p. 25:1—6. 26:6—12, v. 6.) These were first informed by Jehoiada, that the king's son was in the temple, and that he intended to place him on the throne; and he proposed to make a solemn agreement with them before God, to which they readily assented, and bound themselves by oath to fidelity. Perhaps Athaliah's government had grown intolerably oppressive; or Jehoiada perceived that its continuance threatened the destruction of religion: therefore the priests, and the chief of the Levites, as most immediately engaged for the support of that cause, went among their brethren, to prepare their minds to attempt a deliverance.

V. 5—9. The Levites attended in their courses every week; one company coming in at the beginning of the sabbath, and another going out at the close of it. But Jehoiada employed both companies on this occasion; such only excepted, as were only necessary to perform the ordinary services.—By "the king's house" some understand the chamber in which Joash resided; others the royal palace, from which there was an entrance into the court of the temple. This was guarded by one division of those who came in on the sabbath to prevent a surprise; another was set to guard "the gate of Sur," or, the foundation; and another to protect the temple and courts from injury; or, as the original may mean, to guard the breach, which had been made in the temple, or its out-buildings. (2 Chr. 24:7.) Others of those Levites who went out on the sabbath, were stationed to guard the king himself, with orders to slay any one who attempted to come within their ranks. Two-thirds are mentioned of these Levites, as some of them might have urgent calls to return to their families. These arrangements no doubt were supposed suitable, and sufficient to secure the temple from being polluted by the guards or favourites of Athaliah, whilst Jehoiada and his sons were engaged in crowning and anointing Joash. (Notes, 12. 2 Chr. 23:11.)—By employing the Levites almost exclusively, all suspicion was precluded: and, as the throne belonged to the family of David, not only by hereditary succession, but by the special appointment of God; and as these rights, and all the interests of the kingdom of Judah, and even the worship of God, were basely trampled upon by a murderous and idolatrous woman, 11 And the guard stood, every man with his weapons in his hand, round about the king, from the right corner of the temple to the left corner of the temple, along by the altar and the temple.

12 And he brought forth the king's son, and put the crown upon him, and gave him the testimony: and they made him king, and anointed him; and they clapped their hands, and said, God save the king. [Practical Observations.]

13 ¶ And when Athaliah heard the noise of the guard and of the people, she came to the people into the temple of the Lord.

14 And when she looked, behold, the king stood by a pillar, as the manner was, and the princes and the trumpeters by the king, and all the people of the land rejoiced, and blew with trumpets. And Athaliah rent her clothes, and cried, Treason, treason!

15 But Jehoiada the priest commanded the captains of the hundreds, the officers of the host, and said unto them, Have her forth without the ranges: and him that followeth her kill with the sword. For the priest had said, Let her not be slain in the house of the Lord.

16 And they laid hands on her; and she went by the way by the which the horses came into the king's house: and there was she slain.

17 ¶ And Jehoiada made a covenant between the Lord and the king and the people, that they should be the Lord's people; between the king also and the people.

of the devoted house of Ahab; they were fully justified in these devoted measures against her. Perhaps they were likewise assured of the concurrence of the people, when matters were ripe for their interposition.

V. 10. It is probable, that these were arms which David had taken from his conquered enemies, and dedicated to the Lord, by way of ascribing the honour of his success to him. (Marg. Ref. x.) This tends to confirm the interpretation before given, concerning these captains: namely, that they were not military officers, as some suppose; but the leaders of the several courses and companies of the Levites, who did not usually wear the weapons of war. (Note, 4.)

V. 12. Coronation is not before this expressly mentioned, in the appointment of any king, either in Judah or Israel; but it seems to have been customary: for the crown, as one of the insignia of royalty, is repeatedly mentioned. (Marg. Ref. b.) No doubt, "the testimony" signifies the book of the law; and Joash was instructed by this significant action, that he received his authority from God, and was accountable to him for it, according to the rule of his word. (Note, Ez. 31:18.) He was also anointed, in token of his divine appointment to the kingdom; as Athaliah's usurpation had interrupted the succession. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Kings 1:38, 39, v. 39. 1 Chr. 29:21-25.) When this had been done, not only the priests and Levites, but the people who had witnessed the transaction, shouted for joy and clapped their hands, and wished their king life and prosperity. (Marg. Ref. Note, Matt. 21:8-11.)

V. 13—16. Athaliah, after the manner of her mother Jezebel, instead of fleeing with feminine timidity, when she heard the noise and suspected the occasion; went directly into the temple, unattended by a guard, as if she could by her presence over-awe and confound the conspirators; but by this rashness she rushed upon her death. (Note, 9:30-37.)—The people, it seems, were assembled, perhaps to celebrate some of their solemn feasts; and they, with their princes or magistrates, cordially united with Jehoiada, and the priests and Levites. When Athaliah saw Joash stand in the place appropriated to the king's use, she was aware of what had taken place; and expressed her abhorrence of the supposed treason by word and deed, in hopes of inducing the people to take her part. But her conduct had been so odious and unnatural, that none favoured her: and at the word of Jehoiada she suffered the punishment due to her complicated crimes. Doubtless, Jehoiada acted in all this business by the direction and according to the will of God.—It is probable that the Levites executed the sentence; and great care was taken not to pollute with blood the court of the temple.

V. 17—20. Jehoiada embraced this opportunity of engag giving the young king and the people, in the most solemn manner, to renew their national covenant with the Lord, that they would worship and serve him alone; as well as perform their reciprocal duties to each other in the fear of God. As the protector and near relation of Joash, he was authorized to act for him, and the whole compact was deliberately ratified, as in the presence of God. (Notes, 23:3. Deut. 29:10-15. Josh. 24:25. 2 Chr. 15:12-15. Neh. 10:1.) When this was concluded, they proceeded to destroy the worship of Baal, which Athaliah had established in Judah; breaking down the idolatrous temple and images, and slaying the priest of Baal at his altars; without imitating or emulating Jehu's subtlety in detecting his worshippers. (Note, 10:18-20.) The people were greatly rejoiced at this happy revolution, and matters were soon brought to a quiet settlement. (Notes, 2 Chr. 23.) Nothing is recorded of the burial of Athaliah; but in every respect she was treated with neglect and abhorrence.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. When the thirst of dominion predominates, it extinguishes both common humanity and natural affection, and steels the hearts of parents, yea of mothers, against their own children or descendants. Nor can the most humane conceive how they should act, if brought within the magnetic influence of powerful temptations, through opening prospects of gratifying ambition and the thirst after power and dignity, united with fear, envy, resentment, or other vehement passions. We should therefore repress the first emotions of this aspiring temper, and pray without ceasing to be kept out of the way of temptation. And we may also learn to be thankful to God, for restraining others and ourselves, from acting forth all the desperate wickedness of the human heart, which otherwise would produce effects unspeakably horrid.—What fatal consequences flow from matrimonial connexions, or intimate acquaintance with atrocious sinners! The mischiefs, which may thus be entailed upon children and remote posterity cannot be ascertained; and may extend even to the ruin of the interests of true religion, in those places where before it flourished. These reflections should add energy to the Lord's prohibition of these incongruous alliances. Yet, he mixes his severest judgments, upon his professed people and offending servants with mercy: in the midst of opposition he provides for the performance of his promises: and the extremities, to which his cause may be reduced, are permitted, to illustrate the glory of his power and truth, in preserving and recovering it.—The most successful villany will be short-lived: and, though in that little time dreadful havoc may be made in society, and irreligion or false religion may apparently be established upon the ruins of true godliness; yet the cause of God cannot be kept down, but, like the fabled phoenix, it will revive from its ashes with renewed youth and vigour.—One pious man may, on some emergencies, become an instrument of most extensive good: especially when regard to the glory and worship of God, is united with prudent contrivance, and well-concerted measures.—In urgent cases, general rules of external propriety may be dispensed with: and ministers ought always to lead the way in opposing the prevalence of wickedness, and in promoting equity, and submission to lawful governors, as well as in promoting true religion.—To what peculiar dangers are those in exalted stations exposed, through the ambition, treachery, and cruelty of men! We may therefore be thankful to be placed with our families in an obscure situation, beneath envy or jealousy.—Princes should be reminded, when intrusted with authority, of their accountableness to God for the use of it: and every opportunity should be embraced to enforce a conscientious regard to his word.

V. 13-21. Evil will hunt out the wicked to destroy them; and they are often hardened and infatuated to rush upon their own destruction.—The most abandoned, on some occasions, express abhorrence at the supposed crimes of others, especially when committed against themselves; but it is neither treason, nor cruelty, to execute vengeance upon usurpers and paricides, and to restore the authority to its rightful possessor.—As "one sinner destroyeth much good;" so the removal of one ringleader in iniquity may prepare the way for great reformation.—It is our duty to engage ourselves and each other, and all those over whom we have acquired influence, in as firm and solemn a manner as possible, to be the Lord's people: and when we begin with a due regard to religion, relative duties will be the better understood and performed. Yet they should be plainly declared and enforced, without the exception of those which subsist between the prince and people.—The rectifying of scandalous abuses, and the punishment of notorious criminals, form an introduction to the revival of true godliness. External regularity will afterwards more easily be re-established; and the effectual blessing of God may be expected. The way for a people to be joyful and at peace, is to engage cordially in the service of God; for "the voice of joy and thanksgiving, is in the dwellings of the righteous;" but "there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked."

NOTES.—CHAP. XII. V. 2, 3. Jehoiada acquired such influence over Joash, or Jehoash, by his services and counsels, in his younger years, as retained him in good behaviour, so long as he lived to give him advice. But the latter part of his life, after Jehoiada's death, was extremely wicked; and all the good of his best days, was of that kind which springs from transient convictions, and external influence, or that which hypocrites do to be seen of men. (Notes, 2 Chr. 24:17-26.) His reign, however, should by no means be numbered with those of the worst kings of Judah: for he repressed idolatry, and maintained the worship at the temple; though he did not abolish the irregular worship of God in the high places; which indeed was never done till the days of Hezekiah. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 18:4, 22.) Jehoiada lived and retained his influence, during two thirds at least of the years that Joash reigned.

V. 4, 5. The temple had been suffered to go to decay, during the reigns of Jehoram and Ahaziah, and the usurpation of Athaliah; and her sons, doubtless encouraged by her had impiously broken down some part of the buildings, to adorn the house of Baal with the most costly materials of the temple; as well as spoiled its consecrated treasures to enrich those of their idols. (2 Chr. 24:7.) But Jehoash, having had his life preserved in the precincts of the temple, seems to have had a strong desire of seeing it restored to its ancient splendour: whilst Jehoiada perhaps was more intent to promote the internal part of true religion.—The money, which Jehoash ordered the priests to collect from the people, seems to have arisen from the sale of such furnishings as were not fit for sacred use; from the half shekel apiece levied of all the people; from the redemption of things dedicated; from the redemption of those who were vowed to the Lord by a singular vow; and from voluntary contributions. (Marg. Ref. g, h. Notes, Ex. 13:11-16. 30:11-16. Lev. 27:2-27.)—As some of these were the dues of the priests, whose incomes must have been greatly diminished by the defection of the ten tribes; that circumstance might render them more disaffected to the business, and negligent in it.

V. 6-12. Jehoash's orders must have been very long neglected; for nothing was done effectually, till the twenty-third year of his reign, or the thirtieth of his life. It is probable, that the priests appropriated considerable sums to their own use, which they received for the repair of the temple; till the people lost all confidence in them, and would give them no more money on that account. Jehoiada himself appears to have been remiss in this affair; but his great age would necessarily render him less capable of active services. (Note, 2 Chr. 24:15, 16.) The priests, however, readily consented to the alteration proposed by Jehoash; and a proclamation having been made for the collection of a half shekel from each male above twenty years of age; (2 Chr. 24:6, 9. Note, Ex. 30:11-16.) and a chest so placed, that the money might be either put in by those that brought it, or by the priests in their presence; large sums were soon collected, and money of the 'dedicated things that is brought into the house of the LORD, even the money of every one that passeth the account, the money that every man is set at, and all the money that cometh into any man's heart to bring into the house of the LORD,

5 Let the priests take it to them, every man of his acquaintance; and let them repair the breaches of the house, wheresoever any breach shall be found.

6 But it was so, that in the ³⁵⁵three and twentieth year of king Jehoash the priests had not repaired the breaches of the house.

7 Then king Jehoash called for Jehoiaha the priest, and the other priests, and said unto them, Why repair ye not the breaches of the house? now therefore receive no more money of your acquaintance, but deliver it for the breaches of the house.

8 And the priests consented to receive no more money of the people, neither to repair the breaches of the house.

9 But Jehoiaha the priest took a chest, and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of the LORD: and the priests that kept the door put therein all the money that was brought into the house of the LORD.

10 And it was so, when they saw that there was much money in the chest, that the king's scribe and the high-priest came up, and they put up in bags, and told the money that was found in the house of the LORD.

11 And they gave the money, being told, into the hands of them that did the work, that had the oversight of the house of the LORD: and they laid it out to the carpenters and builders, that wrought upon the house of the LORD.

12 And to masons, and hewers of stone, and to buy timber and hewed stone to repair the breaches of the house of the LORD, and for all that was laid out for the house to repair it.

13 Howbeit, there were not made for the house of the LORD bowls of silver, snuffers, basins, trumpets, any vessels of gold, or vessels of silver, of the money that was brought into the house of the LORD:

14 But they gave that to the workmen, and repaired therewith the house of the LORD.

15 Moreover they reckoned not with the men, into whose hand they delivered the money to be bestowed on workmen: for they dealt faithfully.

16 The trespass-money and sin-money was not brought into the house of the LORD: it was the priests'.

17 ¶ Then Hazael king of Syria went up, and fought against Gath, and took it: and Hazael set his face to go up to Jerusalem.

18 And Jehoash king of Judah took all the hallowed things that Jehoshaphat, and Jehoram, and Ahaziah, his fathers, kings of Judah, had dedicated, and his own hallowed things, and all the gold that was found in the treasures of the house of the LORD, and in the king's house, and sent it to Hazael king of Syria: and he went away from Jerusalem.

19 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Joash, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

20 And his servants arose, and made a conspiracy, and slew Joash in the house of Millo, which goeth down to Sila.

21 For Joazachar the son of Shimeath, and Jehoabab the son of Shomer, his servants, smote him, and he died; and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David: and Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.

applied by Jehoiaha and the king's secretary to the repairs of the temple. (Marg. Ref.)—As the chest is said in Chronicles to have been "set without at the gate," and that the "princes and people cast" the money into it; it has been thought, that the chest was at first placed in the inner court; so that the money still generally passed through the hands of the priests; but that not being satisfactory, it was removed to a situation, where all had ready access to it. (2 Chr. 24:8, 10.)

V. 13-15. It seems that orders were given to the workmen, that the repairs of the temple should first be completed, before any vessels were made; though it is probable that these were much wanted; but when the workmen had set the temple "in its state," they punctually brought the surplus of the money to the king and Jehoiaha, without requiring to be called to an account; and then such vessels were made as had been taken away by Athaliah and her sons. (2 Chr. 24:7, 14.) The conduct of these workmen was highly commendable; and formed a contrast to that of the remissness and selfishness of the priests and Levites as above noticed.—Silver. (13) Notes, Ex. 25:33-30. Num. 7:13, 14.

V. 16. (Marg. Ref. c.) Besides the money paid as amends to the priests for trespasses committed in holy things; it is thought that persons, living at a distance, sent money to them to purchase trespass-offerings and sin-offerings, and sacrifice them in their name. And, as they commonly sent more than the sacrifice cost, the surplus became a perquisite, under the name of trespass-money and sin-money. (Hos. 4:8.)

V. 17, 18. Probably, the expedition of Hazael, here intended, is the same as that of the Syrians, which is recorded in Chronicles: (2 Chr. 24:23, 24.) and, if so, the success of it, and the calamities brought on Judah by it, were far greater, than this short account seems to describe them. It took place, however, after Jehoash's apostasy; and he made no scruple of spoiling the temple of the remains of its treasures, to purchase Hazael's departure. (Notes, 2 Chr. 24:17-22.)

V. 20, 21. The Syrians left Jehoash "in great diseases;" and his servants (probably some relations or friends of Jehoiaha, who deeply resented the murder of his son Zechariah) took that opportunity of slaying him.—Joash was buried in the city of David, but not in the sepulchres of the kings;

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Wise and pious instructors and counsellors are a singular benefit to young persons, especially when called to fill up important stations: and it is a happy case, when they acquire a proper influence, and make an unexceptionable use of it. Indeed, restraining men from outward crimes, and inducing them to external good actions, does not imply conversion of the heart to the love of God, and delight in his holy service: yet it prevents much mischief, and occasions extensive benefit to the community; and often precedes, and is made the means of, men's internal renovation.—A too favourable regard to customary violations of the divine law, and the fear of consequences in making innovations, often influence pious men to let slip the favourable opportunity of effecting still greater good: and mere formalists have frequently exceeded true and eminent believers, in their active earnestness about the externals of religion: for, in old age especially, they are apt to yield to the love of ease and peace, or to discouragement through reiterated disappointments, and so to become remiss. —The building or repairing of convenient places for divine worship falls peculiarly within the sphere of princes and nobles: and, if done from a proper principle, it is a good work which will not lose its reward: yet many abound in such useful services, whose hearts are not right in the sight of God.—Too often have nominal ministers been convicted of seeking their own interests, rather than those of religion. As a body, they must be suspected: and therefore should carefully avoid the appearance of this evil, lest they lose the confidence of the people, and become useless and contemptible. (Notes, Md. 1:9-11. 24-29.) It is most grievous, that the disinterested fidelity and punctuality of tradesmen and mechanics should shame the mercenary conduct of priests; or that the activity and zeal of laymen should expose the lukewarmness and indifference of the clergy! These things are not the fault of the ministerial office, but of the human nature, which that office will not change. But the collective body is placed in a conspicuous station, and their faults are not easily concealed; and, as more is expected from them than from others, they meet with less allowance, and indeed their misconduct admits of less excuse. It is therefore most for their own credit and comfort, and for the honour of their profession, to stand aloof from those concerns in which large sums of money are employed. (P. O. John 12:1-8. 2 Cor. 8:16-24.) At least all works of piety and charity should be so managed, that those who contribute to them, may be assured their money is honestly and prudently expended: and they deserve commendation, who are faithful in such matters. —May the Lord preserve us from the disgraceful and wretched doom of the hypocrite and apostate! May our hearts be sound in his statutes; and may our "path shine more and more unto the perfect day!"

NOTES.—CHAP. XIII. V. 1. Joash king of Judah began to reign in the seventh year of Jehu; (12:1.) but it was probably in the beginning of the year; and if Jehu reigned a little above twenty-eight years, Joash might have entered on his twenty-third year, when Jehu died and was succeeded by Jehoahaz.

V. 3. All their days.] Or, "all his days;" for there is nothing answering to their in the original; and Joash the son of Jehoahaz delivered Israel from Ben-hadad. (22-25.)

V. 4, 5. Jehoahaz, while he deprecated the wrath of God, and entreated the removal of his heavy judgments, seems not to have attempted any reformation. If, however, this took place towards the conclusion of his life, his faith and repentance might not have time to produce their genuine fruits; and this is probable; for the deliverance, in answer to his prayer, was not granted till the reign of his son Joash, the "saviour" or deliverer, here spoken of; as it appears from the subsequent narration.—Yet some think Joash began to deliver Israel during the life of his father. (22-25.)

V. 6. Either the grove, which Ahab had dedicated to Baal, was still used in idolatry, or another was prepared for that purpose. (1 Kings 15:13, 16:33. Notes, 17:16. Deut. 16:22.)

V. 7, 8. Jehoahaz seems to have defended himself valiantly against Hazael, though without success: this might provoke the cruelty, which Elisha had foretold: and it eventually increased the miseries of Israel. (Marg. Rf. Notes, 8:12, 13. 10:32-36. 1 Sam. 13:13-15.)

V. 10. The seventeen years of Jehoahaz reach to the thirty-ninth or fortieth year of Joash king of Judah; but Jehoahaz of Israel began to reign in the thirty-seventh year of Joash of Judah: Jehoash must therefore have reigned some time along with his father.

V. 12. Notes, 14-19. 14:8-14. 2 Chr. 25:17-24.

V. 14. If Elisha was called to follow Elijah no more than seven years before the death of Ahab; and if he died as soon as Joash mounted the throne, he prophesied at least sixty-six years! but many think that this took place towards the close of the reign of Joash. From the beginning of the reign of Jehu to Elisha's sickness and death, (that is, at least, for more than forty-five years,) his name is never once mentioned; but without doubt he was very usefully employed, especially in superintending the schools of the prophets. There is ground to conclude, that great numbers were converted to God by his labours; though the bulk of the nation conformed to the idolatry established by authority. (Note, 10:21.) Neither Jehu nor Jehoahaz paid any attention to the prophet: yet they were not persecutors, and probably they respected his character. Being, however, employed in state affairs, and determined to maintain the idolatry of the golden calves, they were not disposed to hearken to his admonitions: and he expressed his disapprobation of their conduct by keeping at a distance. (Notes, Eph. 5:8-14. 2 Thes. 3:6-9.) But when Joash heard that he was apparently near death, at a time when Israel was brought very low by iniquity, he seems to have considered the dispensation as a divine rebuke; and, under the prevalence of present convictions, he visited and lamented over him, in the very words which Elisha had used when Elijah was removed; (Note, 2:12.) acknowledging him to be the chief deliverer of Israel, whose death would more expose them to ruin, than all Hazael's successes. Yet we read of nothing, in the character or conduct of Joash, to warrant a conclusion, that this was more than a transient impression upon his mind, which soon wore off without producing any abiding good effect.

V. 15-19. In this prophetic transaction, the use of the "bow and arrows" denoted that Joash was to be the instrument of Israel's deliverance, by military valour and enterprise: the prophet's directing the king in shooting, and laying his hands upon him, implied that he was to follow the direction of the prophet, and that God would give him success. The 18 And he said, Take the arrows. And he took them. And he said unto the king of Israel, 'Smite upon the ground. And he smote thrice, and stayed.

19 And the man of God was wroth with him, and said, 'Thou shouldest have smitten five or six times; then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it: whereas now thou shalt smite Syria but thrice.

20 ¶ And Elisha died, and they buried him. And the bands of the Moabites invaded the land at the coming in of the year.

21 And it came to pass, as they were burying a man, that behold, they spied a band of men; and they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha: and when the man was let down, and touched the bones of Elisha, he revived, and stood up on his feet.

22 ¶ But Hazael king of Syria oppressed Israel all the days of Jehoahaz.

23 And the Lord was gracious unto them, and had compassion on them, and had respect unto them, because of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and would not destroy them, neither cast he them from his presence as yet.

arrow shot eastward, marked the situation of the place where the deliverance was to be wrought, and intimated that the eastern coasts of the land of Israel would be rescued from the king of Syria; (Note, 10:32-36.) though his dominions, which lay chiefly to the north of Canaan, would not be taken from him: and the smiting of the arrows upon the ground was significant of the use that Joash would make of his first victory, by which his enemies were cast down to the ground before him, whether he would effectually crush their power, or imitate the impolitic lenity of Ahab. (Notes, 1 Kings 20:31-43.) Probably Joash was not informed that his victories would equal the times, which he smote with the arrows; and perhaps considering the action as trivial and unmeaning, he smote but thrice, which displeased the prophet, and, as it were, limited the king's successes. His conduct expressed the state of his mind, as not firmly believing the words of the prophet, or not duly valuing the promised deliverance. (25)

In Aphek. (17) Aphek was near to Philistia to the west of Samaria: (Marg. Ref. h.) but a decisive victory over Hazael and the Syrians, in that place, made way for Joash's rescuing the regions towards the east out of their hands.

V. 20, 21. 'They laid the body by Elisha's, for fear, if they proceeded to the sepulchre prepared for this man, they should fall into the hand of the Moabites. . . . God restored him, in an instant, to perfect health: for he stood upon his feet; and, it is likely, walked home with those who brought him to be buried.' Bp. Patrick.—This extraordinary miracle, wrought by the touch of the dead body of Elisha, (which by the ritual law could only render a man unclean,) declared that he was as much beloved as Elijah, though he had not been translated; and that the Lord was his God, after death as well as before; and thus intimated both the immortality of the soul, and the final resurrection of the body. It might also intimate that many mercies were reserved for Israel, in answer to Elisha's prayers, and in consequence of his labours for them in his lifetime. (Notes, Luke 20:27-38, v. 36. Acts 5:12-16. 19:8-12.)

V. 23. The reason here assigned, for the deliverance granted to Israel, seems to imply that there was nothing either in Joash, or his subjects, (except their miseries,) to induce the Lord thus to favour them. (Marg. Ref. t-y.) The deliverance was granted, not from regard to the covenant ratified at mount Sinai, which had been grossly violated; but out of respect to the covenant ratified with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, long before the entrance of the Mosaic law. (Notes, Lev. 26:41-45.) Nor was the success of Joash any thing more, than a respite for the present from the judgments which impended over them. (Notes, 4:5. Judg. 10:15,16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

"The Lord is slow to anger and of great mercy;" yet he will by no means acquit obstinate transgressors; and his just anger is the cause of all human misery. When deep affliction excites a cry for deliverance, he will hearken; for he is gracious and compassionate, and delights in mercy, and can speedily give a deliverance out of every trouble. But if he answer the mere cry of distress for temporal relief, much more will he regard the prayer of faith for spiritual blessings: and, as he so long remembered his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and spared the posterity for the sake of their pious ancestors, notwithstanding their manifold provoca-

24 So Hazael king of Syria died; and Ben-hadad his son reigned in his stead.

25 And Jehoash the son of Jehoahaz took again out of the hand of Ben-hadad the son of Hazael the cities, which he had taken out of the hand of Jehoahaz his father by war. Three times did Joash beat him, and recovered the cities of Israel.

CHAPTER XIV.

Amaziah reigns well, yet not like David, 1-4. He justly punishes his father's murderers, 5, 6. He gains a victory over Edom, 7. He readily challenges Jehoash king of Israel, and, obstinately persisting, is vanquished and taken prisoner by him; the wall of Jerusalem is broken down, and the treasures of the temple spoiled, 8-14. Jehoash dies, and is succeeded by Jeroboam, 15. Amaziah is slain by conspirators, 17-20. His son Azariah is made king, and builds Elath, 21, 22. Jeroboam's wicked reign, 23, 24. He restores the coast of Israel, 25-27. He dies and is succeeded by his son Zachariah, 28, 29.

IN the second year of Joash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel reigned Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah.

2 He was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.

3 And he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, yet not like David his father: he did according to all things as Joash his father did.

tions; much more will he remember Jesus and the covenant which he mediated, and for his sake pardon the abundant transgressions of all, who by true faith stand in a spiritual relation to him. All other privileges and distinctions can only avail to retard the deserved vengeance: the Lord may not destroy sinners, or cast them from his presence "as yet;" but without being "partakers of Christ" the Saviour, they must at length perish.—The true believer, though chastened for his transgression, shall not be left to perish for ever; but being "delivered from the hand of his enemies, he shall serve God without fear, in righteousness and holiness, before him all his days."—Wicked men prosper in their schemes, till the Lord's purposes respecting them are accomplished; and then they are removed, or ruined, without any difficulty. There is such excellency in true and eminent godliness, that it often excites the esteem and respect of those, who cleave to their sins. Persons even of this character, while under convictions, will feel and acknowledge, that the servants of God are their best friends, and the most valuable part of society. But this language of conscience is soon silenced by the clamorous voice of their passions.—Some parts of the lives of eminent believers are more conspicuous than others; but in the general tenor of them, they aim to glorify God and do good to man. Yet the most devoted will be ashamed, that they have not been more earnest; and the most useful must regret, that the world has received so little benefit from them. Indeed, reflection on the prevalence of wickedness and misery, on every side, with the prospect of still more dreadful judgments upon all the workers of iniquity, must fill the heart of every pious and benevolent man with deep concern.—Yet the good seed, which faithful ministers sow in their lifetime, may spring up after their death; and they may often take encouragement from the prospect of their prayers being answered after they are removed: yet their removal is frequently the signal for calamities to break forth; as the recall of an ambassador precedes a declaration of war. However, living or dying, the true people of God are blessed, and blessings to others: and those who, like the Saviour, pass through death and the grave to glory, are not less favoured, than if they were immediately received up to heaven in the body.—But the death and burial of Jesus alone has efficacy to disarm the king of terrors of his power to hurt, and to sanctify the tomb, as a safe repository for the believer's body, till the general resurrection. Through him all blessings come from a reconciled God to believing sinners: if we use his appointed means in the obedience of faith, and be not straitened in our desires and expectations of help from him, through unbelief, we shall not be straitened in him, but shall be "able to do all things through Christ who strengtheneth us." Then shall we beat down our enemies, and trample them as the mire in the streets, till our deliverance be complete, and our rejoicing in the Lord abundant. May he give us strong faith, that our hearts may be established and comforted; and that we may greatly glorify his name, and be serviceable to his people on earth, in our way to the heavenly inheritance!

NOTES.—CHAP. XIV. V. 1. Joash king of Israel began to reign about four years before Amaziah king of Judah: but he is supposed to have reigned part of the time with his father Jehoahaz; and Amaziah succeeded to the throne of Judah in the second year after the death of Jehoahaz king of Israel. See, as Amaziah survived Joash only fifteen years, 4 Howbeit, *the high places were not taken away: as yet the people did sacrifice, and burnt incense on the high places.

5 ¶ And it came to pass, as soon as the kingdom was confirmed in his hand, *that he slew *his servants which had slain the king his father.

6 But the children of the murderers he slew not: according unto that which is written in the book of the law of Moses, wherein the Lord commanded, saying, *The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children be put to death for the fathers; but every man shall be put to death for his own sin.

7 He *slew of Edom in the valley of salt ten thousand, and took *Selah by war, and called the name of it *Joktheel unto this day.

8 ¶ Then *Amaziah sent messengers to Jehoash the son of Jehoahaz, son of Jehu king of Israel, saying, *Come, let us look one another in the face.

9 And Jehoash the king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, *The thistle that was in Lebanon sent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, saying, Give thy daughter to my son to wife: and there passed by a wild beast that was in Lebanon, and trode down the thistle.

10 Thou hast indeed smitten Edom, and *thy heart hath lifted thee up: *glory of this, and tarry at home: for *why shouldst thou meddle to thy hurt, that thou shouldst fall, even thou, and Judah with thee?

11 But *Amaziah would not hear. Therefore Jehoash king of Israel went up; and he and Amaziah king of Judah looked one another in the face at *Beth-shemesh, which *belongeth to Judah.

(17) either the sixteen years of Joash's reign must be reckoned from his father's death; (Note, 13:10.) or, as some think, Amaziah's reign is computed from the time that his father Joash became incapable of managing public affairs. (2 Ch. 24:23-27.)

V. 3, 4. Amaziah, like his father Joash, began apparently well, and ended very ill. He supported and regularly attended the worship of JEHOVAH; yet not with the fervent piety of David: neither did he destroy the high places; where, probably, priests and Levites officiated in sacrificing and burning incense. (Marg. Ref. Note, 12:2, 3.)

V. 5, 6. Amaziah did not at first venture to punish the conspirators, who had slain his father; and it seems they continued at court as if they had done no wrong, and feared no danger; having only avenged the death of Jehoahaz's son on Jehoash, without attempting to injure Amaziah, or deprive him of the kingdom. (Note, 12:20, 21.) But when he found himself sufficiently established in authority, he very properly punished them: but in doing this he strictly adhered to the command of God, in not punishing their children with them. (Note, Deut. 24:16.)—These references to the very words of the law, as they now stand in the books of Moses, should not be unnoticed. Undoubtedly these books were extant, and well known, when this history was written.

V. 7. The name which Amaziah gave to Selah, signifies Obedience to God; in which it is probable, he referred to his obedience to the word of God by the prophet in dismissing the auxiliaries of Israel, and considered his victory as the reward of it: but his behaviour, in the whole transaction, and afterwards, very little agreed with this name. (Notes, 2 Ch. 25:5-16.) Valley of salt. Marg. Ref. i.

V. 8. The peace between Judah and Israel had continued from the time of Asa, during above a hundred years: and, though the affinity formed by Jehoshaphat with the house of Ahab had been of fatal consequences to the royal family of Judah; yet, on the whole, peace had been far more conducive to the welfare of both nations, than the ruinous wars which preceded and ensued. Perhaps Amaziah bore resentment against the family of Jehu, for the slaughter of his relations: he had also received injurious treatment from the Israelites, whom he had engaged in his service, and sent back, having been forbidden to employ them. (Notes, 2 Ch. 25:6-10, 13.) Perhaps he hoped to reduce Israel again under the dominion of the family of David. But, if he had not been actuated by a vain ambition, he would have made his complaints, and demanded satisfaction, and not have sent this foolish challenge. In effect, he informed Joash, that he scorned to attack

12 And Judah was *put to the worse before Israel; and *they fled every man to their tents.

13 And Jehoash king of Israel *took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Jehoash the son of Ahaziah, at Beth-shemesh; and came to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem from *the gate of Ephraim unto *the corner-gate, four hundred cubits.

14 And he took *all the gold and silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of the Lord, and in the treasures of the king's house, and hostages, and returned to Samaria.

[Practical Observations.]

15 ¶ Now *the rest of the acts of Jehoash which he did, and his might, and how he fought with Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

16 And *Jehoash slept with his fathers, and *was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel; and *Jeroboam his son reigned in his stead.

17 ¶ And *Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah lived after the death of Jehoash king of Israel fifteen years.

18 And *the rest of the acts of Amaziah, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

19 Now *they made a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem: and he fled to Lachish; but they sent after him to Lachish, and slew him there.

20 And they brought him on horses: and *he was buried at Jerusalem with his fathers in the city of David.

21 ¶ And all the people of Judah took *Azariah, which was sixteen years old, and *made him king instead of his father Amaziah.

V. 9, 10. Joash rebuked Amaziah's pride, with an arrogance equally unreasonable. The thistle, a useless weed, which may by chance wound the foot of the incautious passer, was made the emblem of the kingdom of Judah, and of the ancient and honourable house of David; while the house of Jehu was represented as a stately cedar! The thistle 'having drawn blood on some poor traveller, and sorely afflicted him, (as Amaziah had done the Edomites,) grew very proud, and would be no longer one of the shrubs, but equal to the most goodly trees.' Bp. Patrick. Joash intimated, that if Amaziah, upon his casual success against the Edomites, had presumed to solicit an alliance with him, he would have considered his proposals in the same light, as if the thistle should aspire to unite families with the cedar; and the meanest of his soldiers should have chastised his insolence, and crushed him, as easily as a wild beast of the forest could trample down the thistle: how much more then, when Amaziah dared to challenge him to battle, would he bring destruction upon himself!—There was, however, much good sense in Joash's counsel. Let Amaziah rest satisfied with the reputation which he had acquired, and not meddle or rashly involve himself in a contest with his neighbour, who was disposed to peace, which would terminate in the disgrace and ruin of himself and his kingdom. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11-14. As Amaziah prepared for war, it became necessary for Joash to oppose him: in consequence Amaziah's army was completely routed, many lives were thrown away, Amaziah was made prisoner, Jerusalem was taken, and its fortifications to a large extent demolished, and the very temple plundered of its treasures and sacred vessels, by the rapacious and profane conqueror.

V. 17-20. Joash, it seems, set Amaziah at liberty; and he survived Joash fifteen years. But the ill success of his rash expedition rendered his people disgusted to him, which at length produced a conspiracy, or open revolt, which drove

V. 21. Azariah, or Uzziah, (words of similar meaning, the one signifying, The help of the Lord, and, the other, the strength of the Lord.) is thought by some to have been very young, not more than four years of age, when his father was slain; and they suppose that he was not made king till about twelve years afterwards. Thus he began to reign in the twenty-seventh year of Jeroboam; though his father was slain in the fifteenth year of Jeroboam. (23. 15:1.) But the years of Azariah's reign are reckoned from his father's death; and therefore others suppose, that Jeroboam reigned along with his father Joash eleven or twelve years; so that reckoning his reign from this time, Azariah began to reign in his twenty-seventh year, though only fifteen or sixteen years after he began to reign alone. (23. 15:1. margins.)

V. 22. Elath.] This was a town upon the Red Sea, convenient for commerce, which the Edomites or Syrians had taken away from the kings of Judah. (Marg. Ref.) It is supposed that Amaziah had taken it, when he conquered the Edomites; but had not been able to derive much advantage from it, because of subsequent troubles; and that Azariah, after Amaziah's death, rebuilt and fortified it.

V. 23, 24. Jeroboam the second reigned much longer than any other of the kings of Israel.—^aAs he had the name, so he trod in the steps of him, who first corrupted Israel with idolatry. ^b*Bp. Patrick*.—Joash, in giving this name to his son, seems almost to have pointed out to him the conduct, which he would have him adopt.

V. 25. The various enemies of Israel had encroached on their borders, from the northern to the southern extremity of the country belonging to the ten tribes; from Lebanon to the dead or salt sea, which had been the plain of Sodom: but, Jeroboam, encouraged by the predictions of Jonah, drove back these enemies, and recovered the country. (Preface to Jonah.)

V. 26, 27. Joash had been successful, both against the Syrians and Judah. But probably the Syrians, not being totally subdued, still carried on destructive hostilities against Israel: and the neighbouring nations, as the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, made continual incursions, and plundered whatever they could seize upon; so that the most valuable treasures of the Israelites were pillaged, those who seemed to have taken refuge in the safest places were destroyed, and there were none to help them. But as the time for their final dispersion was not yet come, the Lord saved them by the hand of Jeroboam, notwithstanding his idolatries.—Blot out. (27. Notes, Ex. 32:30-33. Deut. 29:19, 20.)

V. 28. Damascus and Hamath belonged to Judah, in the reigns of David and Solomon. (Notes, 2 Sam. 8:3-11. 1 Kings 4:21.) and Jeroboam so effectually subdued the Syrians, that he obtained possession of them for Israel; which called recovering them, because, though divided in government, Judah and Israel were still to be considered as one people.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14. Many appear righteous unto men, whose inward parts are very wickedness, and whose base conduct at length betrays their hypocrisy. Yet the Lord gives due commendation to the actions which accord to his law, because they say they honour him.—Where his judgments are most evidently righteous, the wickedness of the instruments may Azariah's good reign, 1-4. He is smitten with leprosy; and Joash his son governs for him, and succeeds him, 5-7. Zachariah reigns ill, and is slain by Shallum; and the fulfilment of the word of God to Jehu is noticed, 8-12. After one month, Shallum is slain, and succeeded by Menahem; who treats his opposers with savage cruelty; reigns wickedly; becomes tributary to Pul, king of Assyria; dies, and is succeeded by his son Pekahiah, 13-22. Pekahiah reigns ill, and is slain, and succeeded by Pekah, 23-26. Pekah imitates the sins of his predecessor; Tiglath-pileser of Assyria, carries captive part of Israel; and Hoshea kills and succeeds Pekah, 27-31. Jotham reigns well in Judah, 32-35. He dies, and is succeeded by his son Ahaz, 36-38.

deserve punishment by the sword of the magistrate: and "the Judge of all the earth" may do many things consistently with his justice, and in his omniscience, unerring wisdom, and all-sufficiency, which would not be right for shortsighted, feeble mortals to imitate. It will appear, however, in the day of final retributions, that no one has suffered who did not deserve it, and that none perish but for their own sins.—Unsanctified success increases pride; pride excites contentions; and these are the sources of trouble and iniquity in private life: but when they arise between princes, they become the misery of whole kingdoms; and the blood of thousands is lightly esteemed by vainglorious mortals, who seek to be admired and extolled by men as foolish and worthless as themselves.—The effects of pride in others are often insufferable, even to those who are equally proud themselves; and all naturally delight in expressing contempt for such, as avowedly aim to outshine their neighbours.—We might smile at the ridiculous methods, which arrogant worms take to vaunt themselves, and to express their contempt of their rivals for fame; did not the fatal effects of such competitions call for our lamentations, and the vain boastings of those who follow peace are most tolerable, because most harmless. But did men consider from whom, and for what, their talents and successes were given, and how prone they are to abuse them, and did they understand how mean, guilty, and polluted man is, at his best estate, their boastings must needs be excluded. In reality, all the distinctions between one sinful man and another would not be worth noting, except for the sake of relative obligations, and the peace of society: but what images can shadow forth the absurdity and madness of those, who by their daring crimes seem to challenge the Almighty to the conflict, and to rush upon the thick bosses of his buckler? Or, who could have conceived such an amity and union, as the Lord invites us wretched sinners to enter into with himself, through the mysterious union of the divine and human nature in our Emmanuel?—In all our undertakings, we should previously consider our ability to accomplish them: and rather rest satisfied with moderate advantages, or inferior reputation, than risk the consequences of beginning what we are not able to finish, which is indeed to "meddle to our hurt." (Notes, Prov. 17:14. Luke 14:28-33.) But caution is especially needful, when if we fail of success, we cannot suffer alone, but must involve many in our calamities: and those who will not take fair warning and good advice, even from an insulting enemy, may too late wish they had.

V. 15-29. Wicked princes and nations are frequently successful, because opposed by others more guilty than themselves.—The proud are often visited with most humiliating providences; and if not humbled by them, their destruction is inevitable. Yet even in those places, where ungodliness is generally prevalent, the Lord takes notice of the extreme bitterness under which men groan, and spares them from time to time, that his goodness may lead them to repentance. Especially, is he thus long-suffering to those nations, where he has a remnant of true believers.—But the lives and successes of wicked men are contracted within narrow limits, and they are soon "driven away in their wickedness," one after another. And though the Lord will never blot out the name of his true Israel from under heaven, but will always raise them up helpers, that the enemy may never prevail against his cause on earth: yet there is an appointed period to his patience and long-suffering; beyond which he will no longer bear with impenitent sinners, corrupt professing churches, or wicked nations; but will proceed to deal with them according to the most awful denunciations of his holy word

NOTES.—CHAP. XV. V. 1. Marg. Notes, 14:21.

V. 2-7. (Notes, 2 Chr. 26:1—Two and fifty years.) (2) The long reign of Azariah must be considered as very advantageous to Judah, when contrasted with the state of Israel during the same period.

A several house. (5) Retired, but spacious, where he had liberty to recreate himself, though excluded from public business.

V. 8. Amaziah reigned fifteen years after Jeroboam came to the crown of Israel; (14:17.) so that the death of Jeroboam, who reigned forty-one years, coincided with the twenty-sixth or twenty-seventh year of Azariah. An interregnum of about eleven years must therefore be allowed for, in the kingdom of Israel, between the death of Jeroboam, and the succession of his son: either because of his youth, or through the factious temper of the people. (Marg.)

V. 12. Notwithstanding the wickedness of Israel, and the persevering idolatry of Jehu and his descendants, the Lord would not proceed to execute vengeance upon them, till the predicted period. (Marg. Ref. Note, 10:29—31.) And bad as Jehu's family was; the times, during which they reigned, were by far the best that Israel experienced from their separation from the family of David to their final dispersion.

V. 13-16. Marg. Ref.—Tiphshah. (16) A city called Tiphshah, near the Euphrates, was one boundary of Solomon's dominions. (Note, 1 Kings 4:24.) But that was so far distant from Tirzah, that some other city of the same name, situated in Canaan, is supposed to be here meant. If, however, Menahem attempted to recover all that had been lost to Israel, after the death of Solomon, he might march to Tiphshah, on the Euphrates; and this might give occasion to the king of Assyria to invade his dominions.—All the women, &c.] This savage barbarity was exercised by Menahem against the inhabitants of those cities, which did not immediately submit to his usurped authority.—Things were now hastening to a fatal crisis in the kingdom of the ten tribes. After the death of Elisha, true religion evidently began to decline; and neither the labours, nor the writings, of the succeeding prophets could stop the rapid increase of immorality, idolatry, or profaneness, which inundated that people. This chapter gives such an account of their public affairs, as will afford the attentive reader great assistance in 14 For Menahem the son of Gadi went up from Tirzah, and came to Samaria, and smote Shallum the son of Jabesh in Samaria, and slew him, and reigned in his stead.

15 And the rest of the acts of Shallum, and his conspiracy which he made, behold, they are written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel.

16 ¶ Then Menahem smote ^aTiphshah, and all that were therein, and the coasts thereof from Tirzah: because they opened not to him, therefore he smote it; and ^ball the women therein that were with child he ripped up.

17 In ^cthe nine and thirtieth year of Azariah king of Judah began Menahem the son of Gadi to reign over Israel, and reigned ten years in Samaria.

18 And he did that which was ^devil in the sight of the LORD: he departed not all his days from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

19 And ^ePul the king of Assyria came against the land; and ^fMenahem gave Pul a thousand talents of silver, that his hand might be with him ^gto confirm the kingdom in his hand.

20 And Menahem ^hexacted the money of Israel, even of all ⁱthe mighty men of wealth, of each man fifty shekels of silver, to give to the king of Assyria. So the king of Assyria turned back, and stayed not there in the land.

21 ¶ And ^jthe rest of the acts of Menahem, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

22 And Menahem slept with his fathers; and Pekahiah his son reigned in his stead.

23 ¶ In the fiftieth year of Azariah king of Judah, Pekahiah the son of Menahem began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned two years.

24 And he did that which was ^kevil in the sight of the LORD: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

understanding the writings of those prophets, who lived during that period, viz. Isaiah, Hosea, Micah, and Amos.

V. 19, 20. The king of Assyria, coming to invade Israel, seems to have found the people much disaffected to Menahem, who must have been odious for his cruelties; but he, having made submission to Pul, and engaged for the payment of one thousand talents of silver, (nearly four hundred thousand pounds,) obtained his assistance in subjugating the Israelites, and was thus confirmed in the kingdom; and then by force he extorted the money from his richer subjects. Thus the kingdom was impoverished, and the people exasperated; and that powerful prince having been so well paid for invading the land, left an example to his successors, which they followed till they had totally desolated the country.—The kingdom of Assyria is here mentioned, for the first time, after the building of Nineveh by Nimrod. (Note, Gen. 10:8—12.) And this shows, that the history, given by many writers, of a very prosperous and large monarchy, lasting for much above a thousand years previous to this time, is in great measure a romance. David and Solomon met with no opposition from the kings of Assyria, in establishing their kingdom, even to the Euphrates. Nor is Assyria once mentioned in their history. Assur indeed helped the Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites, on some occasions; but yet the very connexion implies, that it was of itself not very considerable. (Note, Ps. 83:6—8.) But it seems that Nineveh had by this time become a very great city, and no doubt the king of Nineveh had acquired a considerable territory. (Jon. 1:2. 3:3, 4. 4:11.) And some think that Pul was the king, when Jonah prophesied against Nineveh. It is not, however, agreed, whether he was one of the ancient line of Assyrian kings; or whether he was one of those who effected that revolution, which, all allow, took place about this time; and so was the father of Tiglath-pileser. The latter indeed seems most probable; but such darkness and uncertainty rest on this part of ancient history, that the most learned men differ exceedingly in their opinions on the subject. (Notes, 1 Chr. 5:25, 26. 2 Chr. 28:16—18.)

B. C.] 25 But ⁷⁸⁶ Pekah the son of Remaliah, ⁷⁸⁶ captain of his, ⁷⁸⁶ conspired against him, and smote him in Samaria, in the palace of the king's house, with Argob and Arieah, and with him fifty men of the Gileadites: and he killed him, and reigned in his room.

26 And ⁷⁸⁶ the rest of the acts of Pekahiah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel.

27 ¶ In the two and fiftieth year of Azariah king of Judah, ⁷⁸⁶ Pekah the son of Remaliah began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned twenty years.

30 And Hoshea the son of Elah ⁷⁸⁶ made a conspiracy against Pekah the son of Remaliah, ⁷⁸⁶ and ⁷⁸⁶ smote him, and slew him, and ⁷⁸⁶ reigned in his stead ⁷⁸⁶ in the twentieth year of Jotham the son of Uzziah.

CHAPTER XVI.

Ahaz reigns very wickedly, 1-4. Rezin and Pekah war against him; and Rezin takes Elath, 5, 6. Ahaz hires Tiglath-pileser against them, who takes Damascus and slays Rezin, 7-9. Ahaz sends a pattern of an altar from Damascus; and Urijah, the high-priest, makes one like it for burnt-offerings; restoring the brazen altar, for Ahaz to inquire by, 10-18. Ahaz builds an idolatrous temple for the king of Assyria, 17, 18. He dies, and is succeeded by his son Hez-ekiah, 19, 20.

IN the seventeenth year of Pekah the son of Remaliah, Ahaz the son of Jotham king of Judah began to reign.

2 Twenty years old was Ahaz when he began to reign, and reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem, and did not that which was right in the sight of the Lord his God, like David his father.

3 But he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, yea, and made his son to pass through the fire, according to the abominations of the heathen, whom the Lord cast out from before the children of Israel.

4 And he sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places, and on the hills, and under every green tree.

5 ¶ Then Rezin king of Syria and Pekah son of Remaliah king of Israel came up to Jerusalem to war: and they besieged Ahaz, but could not overcome him.

6 At that time Rezin king of Syria recovered Elath to Syria, and drove the Jews from Elath: and the Syrians came to Elath, and dwelt there unto this day.

7 So Ahaz sent messengers to Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, saying, I am thy servant and thy son: come up, and save me out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the king of Israel, which rise up against me.

8 And Ahaz took the silver and gold that was found in the house of the Lord, and in the treasures of the king's house, and sent it for a present to the king of Assyria.

9 And the king of Assyria hearkened unto him: for the king of Assyria went up against Damascus, and took it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Rezin.

10 ¶ And king Ahaz went to Damascus to meet Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, and saw an altar that was at Damascus: and king Ahaz sent to Urijah the priest the fashion of the altar, and the pattern of it, according to all the workmanship thereof.

11 And Urijah the priest built an altar according to all that king Ahaz had sent from Damascus: so Urijah the priest made it against king Ahaz came from Damascus.

12 And when the king was come from Damascus, the king saw the altar: and the king approached to the altar, and offered thereon.

13 And he burnt his burnt-offering and his meat-offering, and poured his drink-offering, and sprinkled the blood of his peace-offerings upon the altar.

14 And he brought also the brazen altar, which was before the Lord, from the forefront of the house, from between the altar and the house of the Lord, and put it on the north side of the altar.

15 And king Ahaz commanded Urijah the priest, saying, Upon the great altar burn the morning burnt-offering, and the evening meat-offering, and the king's burnt-sacrifice, and his meat-offering, with the burnt-offering of all the people of the land, and their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings; and sprinkle upon it all the blood of the burnt-offering, and all the blood of obtained and secured by doing mischief and diffusing misery. Yet in these horrid scenes, the truth and justice of God are manifest: they perfectly accord to the character of human nature given in the Scriptures, and form a confirmation of their divine original.—“For the wickedness of the land many are the princes thereof,” whose crimes and sufferings are the punishment of the sins both of the governors and governed. (Note, Prov. 28:2.) “A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person, shall flee to the pit; let no man stay him.” (Note, Prov. 28:17.) For a time wicked men may prosper, to execute the vengeance of God on other sinners, and then others will be raised up to execute vengeance on them; as criminals, or the refuse of society, are commonly employed for public executions.—The most innocent sufferers from man's wickedness must plead guilty before God, and may often read his just displeasure in the injustice and cruelty of their oppressors.—Proud men cannot endure contradiction, and the ambitious are exasperated by opposition: yet often, in aiming at independence and supreme authority, they crouch with the basest submissions, and bring themselves into the most abject dependence on strangers and enemies, who from mercenary motives, at first assist, and then enslave them.—Death in various forms hurries men to God's judgment-seat: the righteous are then taken from the evil to come, and enter into rest; and it is a mercy to be spared the anguish of witnessing the miseries that are coming on corrupted churches and nations. But the wicked are stopped in their career, that they may do no more mischief, and their lamp is put out in utter darkness.” May we live the life of faith and holiness, and die the death of the righteous, that “an entrance may be ministered to us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.”

NOTES.—CHAP. XVI. V. 2. “He did not that which was right in the sight of the Lord his God, like David his father.” “as might have been expected from the good education, which no doubt, so pious a man as Jotham his father gave him; who left him an excellent example.” Bp. Patrick. Ahaz was an entire contrast to his ancestor David, and a disgrace to his family.

V. 3, 4. Ahaz imitated the kings of Israel, in worshipping idols and rebelling against the Lord. It is said in Chronicles that he “burnt his children in the fire,” and here that he “made his son to pass through the fire,” to consecrate him to the demon which he worshipped. (2 Chr. 28:1-4. Notes, Lev. 18:21, 20:3-5.) In short he copied the crimes of the Canaanites, whom God had destroyed by Israel; (Note, Lev. 18:24-30.) and not only allowed, but set the people an example of, a variety of idolatrous practices. Hezekiah was born some years before the death of Jotham; if he was the son here intended, he was past his infancy at the time. (Note, 18:2.) He, however, proved an eminently pious prince, and an entire contrast to his most wicked father. (Notes, 18:-20.)

V. 5. The Lord brought these enemies against Ahaz for his crimes: their successes, and the miseries of Judah were very great, immense numbers being slain and taken prisoners; and Ahaz was extremely terrified. But they could not take Jerusalem, dethrone Ahaz, and destroy the family of David, as they had intended: for this was contrary to the purpose, the promises, and the prophecies of God. (Notes, 2 Chr. 28:5-19. Ps. 76:10. Is. 7:1-9.)

V. 6. (Note, 14:22.)—The word “Jews” is here first used. It is literally the Judeans; that is, the men of Judah; as all those, who adhered to the family of David, were called, to distinguish them from the subjects of the kings who reigned over the ten tribes, called Israel.—The general custom among even learned writers, of calling the nation of Israel Jews, from the days of Moses, and even before, is inaccurate and unscriptural.

V. 7-9. (Notes, 15:19, 20, 29.) As the king of Assyria brought Ahaz into abject dependence on him, and both weakened him and drained his treasury, it is said that “he distressed him, but strengthened him not.” (2 Chr. 28:20, 21.) though he averted the present storm.—From this time Syria ceased to be a kingdom; and the region formed successively a part of the kingdom of Assyria, of Chaldea, or of Persia; till it was subjugated by Alexander the Great; after whose death a new kingdom of Syria was formed, which with all his other dominions, at length became a part of the Roman empire. (Note, Dan. 7:6.) Ahaz feared danger to his kingdom from Syria, and sought help from Assyria; whence indeed the greatest danger was to be apprehended. (Note, Is. 7:17-25.)

Kir. (9) ‘A place in ... the upper Media, as Josephus tells us.’ Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10-16. (Notes, 2 Chr. 25:14-16. 28:22, 23.) Ahaz sacrificed to the gods of the vanquished Syrians, perhaps when he went to Damascus to congratulate Tiglath-pileser on his success. There he saw an altar, in the temple of some of their idols, which appeared to him more magnificent or convenient than that which Solomon had made according to the the sacrifice: and the brazen altar shall be ^{for} me to inquire by.

16 Thus did ^Uurijah the priest, according to all that king Ahaz commanded.

17 ¶ And king Ahaz ^{cut off} ^{the} borders of the bases, and removed the laver from off them; and took down ^{the} sea from off the brazen oxen that were under it, and put it upon a pavement of stones.

18 And ^{the} covert for the sabbath that they had built in the house, and the king's entry without, turned he from the house of the Lord for the king of Assyria.

will of God. At the command of Ahaz, with which he sent a model of the altar from Damascus, probably adorned by many figures of idols, the wretched high-priest, Urijah, without scruple or hesitation, prepared one like it, with which he profaned the court of the temple; and when Ahaz returned, the altar of God was removed to make way for it. It is uncertain whether sacrifices were offered to the gods of Damascus on this altar, or whether the oblations were presented to JEHOVAH alone.—It seems that Ahaz professed a purpose of converting the former altar into an oracle, at which he might inquire: as the church of Rome, by adoring the host, has converted the Lord's supper into the most absurd and detestable idolatry, under the pretence of honouring it. (Note, 18:4.) Some however think that Ahaz only meant, that he would take advice what to do with the altar: and tradition reports that he demolished it, and made a sundial (called the sundial of Ahaz) of the brass. (20:11.) But this is uncertain, and not probable: for we do not read, that Hezekiah made any altar, as in that case he must have done. In the whole transaction, the high-priest was willing to oblige the king by servile compliances; and did not, as far as it appears, need either menaces, or promises, or even bribes, to procure his concurrence! 'There are always some men to be found, that will comply with the most wicked commands.' Bp. Patrick. He might have said, some priests, and chief priests and high-priests. (Note, 2 Chr. 26:16—23.)

V. 17, 18. Ahaz pillaged and defaced the temple, and its courts, and sacred utensils, in various ways, either to supply his necessities with the plunder, or to express his enmity against the worship of the Lord. (2 Chr. 28:24, 25.) The covert of the sabbath, and the entry, seem to have been accommodations for the king and his attendants to repair to the temple-service. To please the king of Assyria, who it is probable paid him a visit, he turned these another way, or to other uses. (Notes, 1 Kings 10:5. Ez. 46:1—3.)

V. 20. Ahaz died young; and it has been observed that no king of Judah reached David's age of seventy years, though some of them reigned longer than he had done: but the age of Asa is not recorded.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The word of God affords abundant encouragement to pious parents to give their children good instructions, enforced by good examples, and to pray for them: and these means are so generally made effectual, as sufficiently to verify the proverb, "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Note, Prov. 22:6.) Yet there are exceptions recorded in the Scriptures, to remind us, that every man is born in sin, and that the grace of God alone can change the heart: in order that we may expect the blessing from him only. On the other hand some who have been, as it were, early dedicated to Satan, and initiated into his service, have, by the victorious grace of God, been made eminent examples of faith and piety: and every accurate observer of mankind, in places favoured with the light of the gospel, has remarked instances of both. The infatuated slaves of sin heedlessly proceed in those paths, whence others have been hurried into destruction. But we need not wonder that men violate the law of God, in the indulgence of their natural passions, when they cannot be restrained from disobeying him in the most unnatural cruelty to themselves and their own children: nor should the insolence and obstinacy of prosperous sinners excite astonishment; seeing so many sin more and more, while severely suffering under the effects of former crimes!—Such is man's carnal enmity against God, that he will have recourse to any expedient, or make the most abject submission to his fellow-creatures, rather than humble himself before God, and seek help from him! But the relief thus obtained, tends to enfeeble and enslave men the more; and it often accelerates, as well as increases, that ruin which it seemed to retard.—Our natural propensity to some sort of religion is not easily extinguished: but, except it be regulated according to the word and by the Spirit of God, it produces the most absurd superstitions, or the most detestable idolatries, or at best it quiets the sinner's conscience, and amuses his mind, with a round of unmeaning ceremonies, frequently connected with the most immoral practices. Even infidels have been remarkable for credulity; and the capacity of believing, when not exercised on the truth, frequently embraces the most ridiculous falsehoods. But whether kings are impious, or superstitious, or infidel, or sacrilegious, they generally meet with priests of their own stamp, who court their favour by assisting their iniquities or idolatries! Yet such mercenary timeservers and men-pleasers, who bear the name and wear the garb of ministers, are guilty of a greater breach of trust, and the prostitution of a more sacred character, than even the wicked princes whom they flatter and embolden in their sins: as their conduct is, in the highest degree, dishonourable to God, and ruinous to man, they merit the deepest contempt and detestation; and assuredly they will "receive the greater damnation," except by a miracle of grace they are brought to repentance.—The arrogant self-wisdom, which induces men to new model divine ordinances after their own vain imaginations, is insufferably provoking to that "God, who resisteth the proud;" and that external magnificence, which carnal minds affect in his worship, obscures the real glory of heavenly things, excites false ideas of the divine character, and turns men aside from that spiritual service, which alone the Lord accepts and delights in. (Notes, John 4:21—24.) Thus new ways of worshipping God very speciously introduce gross idolatries; as the church of Israel, and that of Rome, among other examples, have abundantly evinced. But when men forsake God, they forsake their own mercies: and if those who have been trained up in the ways of God, forsake his house and ordinances; and, affecting to be wiser than their pious parents, turn things into another channel, associate with more fashionable companions, and seek to acquire the favour, assistance, or commendation of ungodly men; there is reason to fear that sudden destruction is coming upon them, from which they shall by no means escape. (Notes, 21:1—3. 1 Kings 12:6—15. Ez. 2:18—23.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XVII. V. 1. (Note, 15:30.) During more than eight years after the slaughter of Pekah, Hoshea was kept out of possession of the kingdom, or was unsettled in it: and the years of his reign are reckoned from his establishment on the throne, and not from the death of his predecessor.

V. 2. We are told by the Jewish writers, that the golden calf had before this been carried away from Dan; (Notes, Hos. 10:5—8.) that Hoshea did not enforce that idolatry as his predecessors had done; and that he allowed the Israelites, who were so disposed, to go up to Jerusalem to worship. (Note, 2 Chr. 30:6—9.) He, however, did "evil in the sight of the Lord;" though he was not in all respects so wicked as his predecessors. Whether an idolater, or not, he was ungodly; and his murder of Pekah, and usurpation of the kingdom, merited the punishment which he endured: whilst the people were fully ripe for destruction; and the guilt, which had been accumulating for ages, was punished in that generation. (Note, Zech. 5:5—11. P. O.)—In finally destroying the kingdom of Israel, during the time of that king, who was less wicked than the rest; the Lord showed that he punished the crimes of the people at large, and not those of their princes only, as many might be ready to imagine. (Note, 2 Sam. 24:1, 2.)

V. 3. It is most probable that Shalmaneser was the son of Tiglath-pileser.—Menahem had given his predecessor Pul footing in the land, and encouragement to come again; by raising a large sum of money for him, and by rendering his kingdom dependent on him. Ahaz king of Judah likewise, by purchasing the help of Tiglath-pileser, had procured the de-year by year: therefore the king of Assyria shut him up; and bound him in prison.

5 ¶ Then the king of Assyria came up throughout all the land, and went up to Samaria, and besieged it three years.

6 ¶ In the ninth year of Hoshea the king of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes.

[Practical Observations.]

7 For so it was, that the children of Israel had sinned against the LORD their God, which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt, from under the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and had feared other gods.

8 And walked in the statutes of the heathen whom the LORD cast out from before the children of Israel, and of the kings of Israel, which they had made.

9 And the children of Israel did secretly those things that were not right against the LORD their God, and they built them high places in all their cities, from the tower of the watchman to the fenced city.

10 And they set them up images and groves in every high hill, and under every green tree:

11 And there they burnt incense in all the high places, as did the heathen whom the LORD carried away before them; and wrought wicked things to provoke the LORD to anger:

12 For they served idols, whereof the LORD had said unto them, Ye shall not do this thing.

13 Yet the LORD testified against Israel, and against Judah, by all the prophets, and by all the seers, saying, Turn ye from your evil ways, and keep my commandments, and my statutes, according to all the law which I commanded your fathers, and which I sent to you by my servants the prophets.

14 Notwithstanding they would not hear, but hardened their necks, like to the neck of their fathers, that did not believe in the LORD their God.

15 And they rejected his statutes, and this covenant that he made with their fathers, and this struction of the kingdom of Syria, which was of small extent and force, compared with that of Assyria: and thus every rampart was broken down, which could exclude the Assyrians from the land of Israel and Judah. (Notes, 15:19, 20. 16:7—9.)

V. 4. So is supposed to be the same person as is called Sabacus, or Sabacon, in pagan writers. He was king of Ethiopia; but he invaded Egypt, took possession of the kingdom, and reigned there for a long term of years.—About this time, or rather earlier, the rivalry began between the kings of Egypt and the monarchs of different nations, who successively were powerful in Asia, to the north, or northeast of Canaan; which, lying between the contending powers, was for many ages brought into dependence on the one or the other of them. (Notes, 2 Chr. 35:20—24. Dan. 11:5. Zech. 9:3.) But the people, contrary to the commands of God, were more disposed to unite with the Egyptians, than with any of their opponents.—Had Hoshea endeavoured to effect a thorough reformation in Israel; and then, in dependence on God, had he openly attempted to shake off every foreign yoke; he might possibly have succeeded. But the manner, in which he attempted to change one yoke for another, without returning to the LORD, or seeking his assistance, formed a mixture of perfidy, impolicy, and ungodliness; and proved the immediate occasion of his ruin and that of his people. It seems probable, that Shalmaneser by some means took Hoshea prisoner, before he laid siege to Samaria: and that Hoshea ended his days in a prison. His name is the same as that by which Joshua was at first called: (Notes, Num. 13:16,) so that the settlement of Israel in Canaan, and the expulsion of the ten tribes from it, occurred under the government of persons originally of the same name.

V. 5, 6. The inhabitants of Samaria doubtless endured great extremities, in the long siege and terrible destruction of the city: but the brevity of the sacred historian seems significantly to intimate, that the LORD did not now notice their affliction as he had done before the measure of their iniquities was filled. (Notes, 14:26, 27. 18:9—12. Hos. 8:7, 8. 10:14, 15. 13:15, 16. Mic. 1:5—7.)—When Shalmaneser had taken Samaria, and become absolute master of the whole land, he formed the project of changing the inhabitants, and in part accomplished it; but it was more fully completed by Esarhaddon, his grandson, several years afterwards. (Ezra 4:2.) It is, however, here spoken of by anticipation. Yet it seems, that some of the poorer Israelites were at last left in the land, many of whom were incorporated with the new inhabitants. (2 Chr. 34:6, 7.) But, as the northern part of the country, called Galilee, was in the time of Christ inhabited by persons acknowledged to be of the seed of Israel, who went up to Jerusalem to worship; whilst the middle of the country was occupied by the Samaritans, who were of another origin and religion; it is probable that the new inhabitants did not so fully occupy the northern, as the middle parts of the land.—Probably, the Israelites, who were carried captive to a great distance, in the dominions of the conqueror, were chiefly incorporated among the nations: yet some of them seemed to have retained the knowledge of their original, and of part of their religion; and either to have returned with their brethren after the Babylonish captivity, or to have united with those Jews, who were afterwards dispersed in many different countries of the world. (Note, Ezra 2:64. Luke 2:36—38.)—Some, nowever, think, that incorporated bodies of them are still existing.

V. 7—11. The iniquities of Israel were many and aggravated: but their apostasy from God to idolatry especially formed the violation of the national covenant. The LORD had, as it were, graciously espoused them to himself: but this spiritually adultery excited his jealousy; and, by persisting in it, they provoked him to give them a writing of divorce, and to put them away. (Note, Jer. 3:6—11.) They had, as a nation, experienced his power and love in delivering them from Egypt, and giving them Canaan; and they had witnessed and executed his vengeance upon the idolatrous Canaanites; yet, in disobedience to express and repeated commandments, they had ungratefully and absurdly worshipped their idols. They had also willingly obeyed the orders of idolatrous kings to worship the golden calves and Baalim. (Note, Hos. 5:11, 12.) They had likewise committed much secret idolatry, in addition to that which was established by law; and especially they had worshipped the sun, moon, and stars, which as the hosts or armies of God, stationed in the visible heavens, are employed to fulfil his will: (Note, Deut. 4:19.) and finally, they so multiplied their temples, or altars, that they were found in every village, and at every shepherd's lodge, where he watched his flocks and fruits. (Is. 1:8. Note, Hos. 12:10, 11.) as well as in the fenced cities. Thus "they wrought wicked things," as if they had expressly intended "to provoke the LORD to anger;" so that at length the predicted and denounced judgments came upon them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12—14. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Neh. 9:26—30. Zech. 1:5, 6.) The people rejected the testimonies of God which he testified against them; and they did not believe in him, or depend on him for protection, according to his promises. They hoped to sin with impunity, and concluded that the service of the LORD would be unprofitable. They not only violated the law, by presumptuously doing those things, concerning which "the LORD had said unto them, Ye shall not do this thing;" (Note, Num. 15:30, 31.) but they persisted in their rebellion and idolatry, and hardened their hearts in impenitency. (Notes, Jer. 8:4—7. Ez. 18:30—32. Rom. 2:4—6.) "To harden the neck," is a metaphor taken from the stiffness of the neck of an ox, when with his full strength he resists the attempts of the husbandman, to put the yoke upon him, or to bring him to draw in it: and it aptly represents the self-will, earnestness, and stubbornness, with which the presumptuous sinner sets himself to rebel against God, in the midst of warnings, convictions, judgments, and mercies. (Note, 2 Chr. 30:8—9. Prov. 29:1. Is. 48:3—5.) "This was the original of all the sins they committed; they did not believe God's prophets, but hearkened to deceivers." Ep. Patrick.

V. 15. Became vain.] By making and worshipping lifeless images, the people became senseless, like unto them: and by worshipping imagined deities under these images, they learned to imitate all the vices ascribed to those demons. Thus among the Greeks and Romans, the worshippers of Bacchus revelled in intemperance, those of Venus rioted in licentiousness, and those of Mars delighted in shedding human blood. The case is the same with modern idolaters. By worshipping Satan under all these names, they were conformed to the very nature, and imbibed all the hateful qualities, of that arch-apostate and rebel. (Note, Rom. 1:24—32.)

V. 16. It is probable that the words (אִשִּׁימָה וְאִשִּׁימָה) rendered a grove and groves, (10) mean some kind of images testimonies which he testified against them; and they followed ^avanity, and ^bbecame vain, and went after the heathen that ^cwere round about them, ^dconcerning ^ewhom the LORD had charged them, that they should not do like them.

16 And they left all the commandments of the LORD their God, and made them ^amolten images, even two calves, and made ^ba grove, and ^cworshipped all the host of heaven, and served ^dBaal.

17 And ^athey caused their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire, and ^bused divination and enchantments, and ^csold themselves to do evil, ^din the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

18 Therefore the LORD was very angry with Israel, and ^aremoved them out of his sight: there was none left but ^bthe tribe of Judah only.

19 Also ^aJudah kept not the commandments of the LORD their God, but ^bwalked in the statutes of Israel which they made.

20 And the LORD ^arejected ^ball the seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and ^cdelivered them into the hand of spoilers, ^duntil he had cast them out of his sight.

21 For ^ahe rent Israel from the house of David: and ^bthey made Jeroboam the son of Nebat king: and ^cJeroboam drave Israel from following the LORD, and made them sin ^da great sin.

22 For the children of Israel ^awalked in all the sins of Jeroboam which he did; they departed not from them;

23 Until ^athe LORD removed Israel out of his sight, ^bas he had said by all his servants the prophets. ^cSo was Israel carried away out of their own land to Assyria, unto this day.

[Practical Observations.]

24 ¶ And ^athe king of Assyria brought men from ^aBabylon, and from Cuthah, and from ^bAva, and from ^cHamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed them in the cities of Samaria, instead of the children of Israel: and they possessed Samaria, and dwelt ^din the cities thereof.

25 And so it was at the beginning of their dwelling there, that ^athey feared not the LORD; therefore ^bthe LORD sent lions among them, which slew ^csome of them.

26 Wherefore they spake to the king of Assyria, saying, The nations which thou hast removed, ^aand placed in the cities of Samaria, ^bknow not the manner of the God of the land: therefore he hath sent lions among them, and behold, they slay them, because they know not the manner of the God of the land.

27 Then the king of Assyria commanded, saying, Carry thither ^abone of the priests whom ye brought from thence; and let them go and dwell there, and let him teach them the manner of the God of the land.

28 Then one of the priests whom they had carried away from Samaria came and dwelt ^ain Beth-el, and ^btaught them how they should fear the LORD.

29 Howbeit, every nation ^amade gods of their own, and put them in the houses of the high places which the Samaritans had made, every nation in their cities wherein they dwelt.

30 And the men of Babylon made Succoth-benoth, and the men of Cuth made Nergal, and the men of Hamath made Ashima, 31 And ^athe Avites made Nibhaz and Tartak, and the Sepharvites ^bburnt their children in fire to Adrammelech and Anammelech, the gods of Sepharvaim.

32 So they feared the LORD, and ^amade unto themselves of the lowest of them priests of the

V. 24. (Note, 5, 6.) Shalmaneser seems to have carried away all the chief men, and the bulk of the nation; but to have left some poor remains of the Israelites, who dwelt in the land, during the remainder of his reign, and the busy reign of Sennacherib. But Esarhaddon more entirely removed the old inhabitants, and peopled the country from different parts of his dominions: and by that time Babylon, which had formed a distinct kingdom, was brought under the government of the king of Assyria, and some of these new inhabitants were removed from thence. (Notes, 2 Chr. 33:11. Ezra 4:10).—The cities in the region of Samaria had not been destroyed, but reserved for the new inhabitants. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 25, 26. These colonists had met with no remarkable judgments, when they served idols in their own countries; but they now possessed the land, which JEHOVAH had called by his own name; and he was pleased to show them, that Israel had not been dispossessed, because he was not able to defend them, but because he had given them up to ruin for their sins. It was also proper they should be convinced, that they had no right to their new possessions, except by JEHOVAH's allowance; and that he expected that they should do him homage for their estates: and therefore a number of lions were let loose upon them, as soon as they entered the land. The desolations of war would naturally make way for the increase of wild beasts: but these lions assaulted the people in so remarkable a manner; that they reasonably and truly concluded, that they were sent by "the God of the land" to punish them for not serving him. (Notes, Judg. 16:23, 24. 1 Kings 20:23-25. Dan. 5:1-4.)

V. 27, 28. It is not at all probable, that this instructor was a priest of the family of Aaron, or that he taught the people from the book of the divine law, as some have thought. One of the priests "carried away from Samaria" is expressly mentioned. And the person selected, had, most likely, been one of the priests, either of the golden calf at Beth-el, or of some high place in that neighbourhood: accordingly he resorted to Beth-el as his residence, when sent to teach the people to worship the God of the land, having doubtless assistants in the business.—It is, however, probable, that he did not teach them to worship JEHOVAH by images; though we can only know what he taught, by the result: but it is evident they were led to consider JEHOVAH as the local tutelary god of the land, one among a group of other deities; instead of worshipping him as the one, true, eternal, almighty, and glorious Creator, Governor, and Judge of the world. (Note, Jer. 10:6-8, 11. Zeph. 2:11. Zech. 14:4-9.) They probably learned to offer sacrifices, with some external regard to the ceremonies of the Mosaic law, but without understanding the meaning and use of the sacred ordinances: but it is not certain whether circumcision was introduced among the Samaritans at this time, or at a later period. (Notes, 41. Neh. 13:23-30.) Along with these and such like observances, they were allowed, or they assumed, the liberty of serving their own idols, according to the customs of their several tribes.

V. 29-31. Learned men have framed many conjectures concerning the meaning of the several names here made use of, and the idols and idolatries signified by them. But such obsolete abominations, with which every thing brutal, cruel and licentious was connected, are not worth understanding. (Notes, Ex. 23:13. Josh. 23:7. Jer. 10:11. Zech. 13:2, 3.)

V. 32. After the example of Jeroboam, these men chose the priests of JEHOVAH from the lowest of the people; (1 Kings 13:33.) whilst probably, the chief nobles were ambitious of the honour of being priests to their favourite idols!

V. 33-40. The new inhabitants of the land imitated the idolatrous Israelites, by associating their idols with JEHOVAH high places, which sacrificed for them in the houses of the high places.

33 They feared the LORD, and served their own gods, after the manner of the nations whom they carried away from thence.

34 Unto this day they do after the former manners: they fear not the LORD, neither do they after their statutes, or after their ordinances, or after the law and commandment which the LORD commanded the children of Jacob, whom he named Israel;

35 With whom the LORD had made a covenant, and charged them, saying, Ye shall not fear other gods, nor bow yourselves to them, nor serve them, nor sacrifice to them:

36 But the LORD, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt with great power, and stretched-out arm, him shall ye fear, and him shall ye worship, and to him shall ye do sacrifice.

37 And the statutes, and the ordinances, and the law, and the commandment which he wrote for you, ye shall observe to do for evermore; and ye shall not fear other gods.

38 And the covenant that I have made with you ye shall not forget; neither shall ye fear other gods.

39 But the LORD your God ye shall fear; and he shall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies.

40 Howbeit they did not hearken, but they did after their former manner.

41 So these nations feared the LORD, and served their graven images, both their children and their children's children: as did their fathers, so do they unto this day.

VAH, as the objects of worship. The remainder, however, of the verses seems to relate to the Israelites after they were carried captive. They still persevered in idolatry and disobedience; and not being purified, were left to be consumed in the furnace.—It is said, that the Israelites “did not fear the LORD” (34) yet the heathens, who followed their example, are said “to have feared the LORD.” (32, 40.) The Israelites did not so much as fear the wrath of the almighty God: but on the other hand the poor Pagans feared the power of his wrath, and to avert it paid him some ignorant worship, according to the wretched instructions given them. As this was an external acknowledgment of his power and Godhead, and a homage paid to him, he was pleased in consequence to withdraw his judgments from them.

V. 41. Some ascribe these words to Jeremiah, the supposed writer of this part of the history, others to Ezra after the captivity. However, these Cuthcans, (as the Jews call them from Cuthah, 24.) maintained this mongrel religion till after that later period, and so were proper successors of idolatrous Israel, the professed people of God. About four hundred years before Christ, a temple was built by them, in competition with the temple at Jerusalem: for, having been joined by a number of apostate Jews, and a priest of the family of Aaron, they renounced gross idolatry, and became schismatical worshippers of JEHOVAH, receiving some parts, and rejecting others, of the Jewish Scriptures.—(Notes, 27, 28. Neh. 13:23-30.) It is not requisite to decide, whether there were any true godliness among them: but, as a people, “they knew not what they worshipped, for salvation was of the Jews.” (Notes, John 4:19-24.) Christ commanded his disciples, whom he sent forth in his lifetime, not to enter into any city of the Samaritans: yet he himself spent two days at Sychar, one of their cities; (Note, John 4:39-42.) and the apostles after the day of Pentecost did not regard the Samaritans as Gentiles; for they preached in their cities before the conversion of Cornelius. (Notes, Acts 1:4-8. 8:5-8. 10:1, 2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. The long-suffering of God, instead of leading sinners to repentance, often renders them more secure: for, having long transgressed with impunity, they conclude that there is no danger; and thus they “treasure up wrath against the day of wrath.” (Notes, Ec. 8:11-13. Rom. 2:4-6.)—Ungodly men are not all alike abandoned to flagrant enormities: but the least criminal deserve worse than the most severe temporal calamities; and consequently none have any right to complain, if God, the righteous Sovereign shall see good, in their days to execute upon a guilty people the accumulated vengeance of many generations. For when the appointed measure of iniquity is filled up, the Lord will forbear no longer. Then kings and people reciprocally suffer on account of each other's crimes; and their causes and interests are no more separable, in the great concerns of national judgments and mercies, than those of the head, or heart, and the several members of the human body. (P. O. 2 Sam. 24:1-9.)—When the service of God, which is perfect freedom, is renounced, men become slaves to the vilest and most tyrannical of masters; and sinners, left to themselves, never attempt any thing more than a change of one tyrant for another; not having the most remote idea or expectation of complete liberty in the service of God. The extravagant profligate sometimes, in advancing years exchanges the bondage of his sensual lusts, for the yoke of avarice or ambition; and the immoral and profane may commence Pharisees, or hypocrites: but mere nature can advance little further than this. Yet the gospel calls us, not only to break our league with every lust, and to renounce every sinful connexion, however formed, confirmed, or palliated by specious pretences; but to efuse obedience to every superior who would require us to sin against God: which if we would do, we must seek the effectual assistance of his special grace. In all other cases the Lord marks with disapprobation men's violations of agreements, and refusal of obedience to those whom his providence has placed over them: and peridious attempts for deliverance, from trouble or thralldom, commonly terminate in deeper misery and ruin.

V. 7-23. When God arises to judgment, all opposition is vain, and only tends to prolong or increase misery. He keeps an exact register of our advantages, as well as of our sins and their aggravations: and when the day of retribution arrives, he will produce the whole account; that all the world may see “he hath not done without cause, all that he hath done” against the workers of iniquity: for the day of his wrath will be the revelation of his righteous judgment; and indeed his justice in the temporal sufferings of guilty nations is frequently evidenced in the same manner. (Note, Ez. 14:22, 23.)—No authority or example can bear men out in breaking the commandments of God: but the judgments which they have known to be executed upon sinners; the favours conferred on themselves; and the testimony of the Lord's ministers, warning, exhorting, and inviting them to repent and to turn to God, will aggravate the guilt of those, who harden their hearts in disobedience.—Enormous as the outward wickedness of the world evidently is, the secret crimes, and sinful thoughts, desires, and purposes of mankind are immensely worse.—Murders, rapines, adulteries, thefts, robberies, and treason, are atrocious evils, which, for the good of society, are marked with a black brand of infamy: yet, in the balance of unbiassed reason, as well as in holy writ, ingratitude and enmity to God, proud rebellion against him, and contempt, neglect, or defiance of him; and all the idolatry, or impiety, which result from these propensities, violate still higher obligations, with far deeper malignity, and spring from the worst state of the heart imaginable. These evils will therefore be peculiarly considered, in the condemnation of the wicked—especially of such as have been favoured with revelation, and the ordinances of God; and who have been his professed people, outwardly dedicated to him, and admitted into covenant with him.—Without turning from every evil way, and unreservedly keeping the commandments and statutes of God, there can be no true godliness: yet, this conversion must spring from a belief of his testimony, both concerning “his wrath revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men,” and concerning his mercy in Jesus Christ, to all who repent and embrace this salvation. The rejection of his statutes and covenant is always the effect of unbelief; through which sinners harden their hearts against the fear of God, exclude the desire of his favour, and obstinately set themselves to break his commandments; and thus following lying vanities, become worthless and base, like their worldly idols.—When sinners have resolutely turned away from God, they not only commit those sins, which promise present advantage or gratification; but they transgress without any conceivable temptation, as if they purposely devised to provoke the Lord to anger: and, having sold themselves to do evil, they serve Satan, with greater self-denial, and violence done to their most rational natural affections, than ever could be required of them in the service of God. He peculiarly abhors those, who seduce or drive others, by any means, from following him, and cause them to sin against him; and generations yet unborn may curse the inventors of any false religion, or plausible system of infidelity, as the occasions of their everlasting perdition: nay, bad examples alone, may render men chargeable with this tremendous guilt of murdering the souls of others; for human nature is far more ready to copy the evil than the good, and to listen to tempters than to monitors. How circumspcctly then should we walk, seeing such dreadful consequences may ensue, for ages to come, in various ways, from our misconduct!

V. 24-41.—When the Lord casts off his professing people, or delivers them into the hands of their enemies, he will take care of his own glory: and he can let their mighty conquerors know, that they have not prevailed against them for 9 ¶ And it came to pass in the fourth year of king Hezekiah, which was the seventh year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel, that Shalmaneser king of Assyria came up against Samaria, and besieged it.

B. C. 720. ¶ And at the end of three years they took it; even in the sixth year of Hezekiah, (that is, the ninth year of Hoshea king of Israel,) Samaria was taken.

11 And the king of Assyria did carry away Israel unto Assyria, and put them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes:

12 Because they obeyed not the voice of the LORD their God, but transgressed his covenant, and all that Moses the servant of the LORD commanded, and they would not hear them, nor do them.

B. C. 713. ¶ Now in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah did Sennacherib king of Assyria come up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them.

14 And Hezekiah king of Judah sent to the king of Assyria to Lachish, saying, I have offended; return from me: that which thou puttest on me I will bear. And the king of agreements to that prince, would not stand to the agreement which his father had formed. (Notes, 16:7-9. 17:3,4.) Having set about a complete reformation of religion, and confiding in the Lord's assistance, he refused submission to any foreign potentate: and, as the king of Assyria would call this rebel-ling against him, that term is here used. But it does not appear that Hezekiah violated any treaties; and the king of Assyria could have no just claim to rule over the king of Judah. Some think, however, that he was too precipitate in this measure; being rather elated by his prosperity in other transactions.

V. 8. (Marg. Ref.) The Philistines had recovered strength, in the unsettled state of affairs in Israel and Judah; but Hezekiah again reduced them to subjection. (2 Chr. 28: 18. Is. 9:12. Note, Is. 14:28-32.)

V. 9-12. Shalmaneser began the siege of Samaria, in the beginning of the fourth year of Hezekiah, and the seventh of Hoshea; so that the three years' siege was concluded, by the end of the sixth of the former, and the ninth of the latter prince. (Notes, 1. 17:1-11.)—The desolations of Israel would tend to dispose the Jews to concur with Hezekiah, and thus facilitate his endeavours for reformation, as well as quicken him in them.

V. 13. A few years after the reduction of Samaria, Shalmaneser died, and was succeeded by his son Sennacherib. Shalmaneser doubtless would have attempted to subjugate Hezekiah; but he was otherwise employed, and this leisure was given to Hezekiah, to effect his reformation without interruption. (Notes, 2 Chr. 29:—31.) Sennacherib, as soon as he mounted the throne, emulated his father's military honours, and imitated his example. He therefore purposed to treat Jerusalem and Judah, as Shalmaneser had done Samaria and Israel; and it pleased God to chastise the lukewarmness, hypocrisy, or reluctance, with which many of the Jews concurred in Hezekiah's reformation, and to try his faith, and that of other believers, by permitting this potent monarch to reduce the other fenced cities and strong holds of Judah, and to threaten Jerusalem with a siege. (Notes, 2 Chr. 32:1. Is. 7:17-25. 8:8-8. 10:5-14,28-34. 36:1,2.)

V. 14-16. Some expositors charge Hezekiah with criminality, in revolting from the king of Assyria; but he seems rather to have sinned by yielding to him in so timid a manner. He evidently distrusted God's protection: (Note, Gen. 12:11-16.) and by confessing to the haughty conqueror that he had offended, and was ready to submit to any imposition that he laid upon him; and by hiring his departure with his own treasures, and the gold of the temple, he invited and encouraged his further impositions. The event shows, that if he had boldly stood out, and committed his cause to God, he would have been protected. But though Hezekiah's conduct might perhaps be reprehensible; yet it served to render Sennacherib's subsequent violence more inexcusable. Probably, Assyria appointed unto Hezekiah king of Judah three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold.

15 And Hezekiah gave him all the silver that was found in the house of the LORD, and in the treasures of the king's house.

16 At that time did Hezekiah cut off the gold from the doors of the temple of the LORD, and from the pillars which Hezekiah king of Judah had overlaid, and gave it to the king of Assyria.

[Practical Observations.]

17 ¶ And the king of Assyria sent Tartan, and Rabsharis and Rabshakeh from Lachish to king Hezekiah with a great host against Jerusalem: and they went up, and came to Jerusalem: and when they were come up, they came and stood by the conduit of the upper pool, which is in the highway of the fuller's field.

18 And when they had called to the king, there came out to them Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph the recorder.

19 And Rabshakeh said unto them, Speak ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

20 Thou sayest, (but they are but vain words,) I have counsel and strength for the war. Now on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me?

Ahaz had cut off the gold from the doors and pillars of the temple, and Hezekiah had replaced it: yet he too, in this emergency, cut it off to purchase peace. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Chr. 32:3-8.)

V. 17. This second invasion is computed by some learned men to have been three years after the former agreement; during which time Sennacherib was occupied in other wars. But it seems more probable from the narrative, that he returned the ensuing year. (Note, Is. 36:2.) Having, however, accomplished his other projects, and being lifted up with pride, he was determined, without provocation, to reduce Judah and Jerusalem, and to treat the inhabitants as his father had done those of Samaria. (Notes, Is. 10:8-14. 33: 5-9.) He therefore sent his commanders with a large army to camp against that city, being himself engaged in besieging Lachish; (2 Chr. 32:9.) and they were instructed to summon Hezekiah to surrender at discretion, having doubtless particular orders what to say to him or his envoys, on that subject.

Stood by the conduit, &c.] 'They took up their headquarters, as we now speak, by the conduit, or canal, into which water was derived from the upper fishpond or pool, which was in the highway to the field, where the fullers, after they had washed their clothes in the pool, were wont to spread them.' Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18. Hezekiah, though summoned to a personal conference, did not choose to trust himself with his perfidious and domineering invaders; and therefore he appointed commissioners, or deputies, to attend in his name. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Sam. 8:15-18. Is. 22:15-25. 36:3.)

V. 19. Rabshakeh, &c.] This man is reported by tradition to have been an apostate Jew; which supposition, if well grounded, may account both for his fluency in speaking the Hebrew tongue, and concerning the God of Israel; and for his unblinded enmity against true religion.

V. 20, 21. It does not appear that Hezekiah, after the preceding agreement, had refused to pay tribute to the king of Assyria, or had attempted to shake off his yoke; but when he found him determined to destroy Jerusalem and enslave its inhabitants, he refused to surrender at discretion, and prepared to stand a siege; and this was deemed rebellion and the most unreasonable presumption! (Note, 1 Kings 20:2-11.) Rabshakeh supposed that Hezekiah had neither counsel nor strength for such a war; and indeed he did not place his dependence on his own wisdom, or on the number and valour of his troops.—Hoshea had confided in the king of Egypt, and had been deceived and ruined by that confidence. (Note, 17:4.) and if Hezekiah had done the same, he might have proved to him like a bruised cane, which deceives those who lean upon it, and not only lets them fall, but pierces or wounds their hands. (Note, Ez. 29:6,7.) He, however, did not put his trust in Egypt for chariots and horsemen; though, of this bruised reed, even upon Egypt, on which if a man lean, it will go into his hand and pierce it; so is Pharaoh king of Egypt unto all that trust on him.

22 But if ye say unto me, We trust in the LORD our God: is not that he whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and hath said to Judah and Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar in Jerusalem?

23 Now therefore, I pray thee, give pledges to my lord the king of Assyria, and I will deliver thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

24 How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

25 Am I now come up without the LORD against this place to destroy it? The LORD said to me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

26 Then said Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, to thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and talk not with us in the Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

27 But Rabshakeh said unto them, Hath my master sent me to thy master, and to thee, to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men which sit on the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?

28 Then Rabshakeh stood and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and spake, saying, Hear the word of the great king, the king of Assyria:

29 Thus saith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you out of his hand:

30 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us, and this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

31 Harken not unto Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me, and then eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his cistern:

32 Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards, a land of oil-olive and of honey, that ye may live, and not die: and hearken not unto Hezekiah, when he persuadeth you, saying, The LORD will deliver us.

33 Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered at all his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

34 Where are the gods of Hamath, and of Arpad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah? have they delivered Samaria out of my hand?

35 Who are they among all the gods of the countries that have delivered their country out of my hand, that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

probably many of his nobles were disposed to that measure, and some engagements of that kind had before been attempted. (Notes, Is. 30:1-7. 31:1-5.)—Vain words. (20) "Word of the lips." Marg.

V. 22. The Assyrians had learned that Hezekiah professed to confide in God: and Rabshakeh combatted that confidence, by inquiring how he could presume to expect assistance from him, whose altars and high places he had destroyed? (Notes, 4. 2 Chr. 31:1.) For he ignorantly supposed that the Lord would be pleased, and deem himself honoured, in proportion to the number of the temples and altars dedicated to him, though erected contrary to his express command; and therefore he concluded that Hezekiah had forfeited God's protection, by that very reformation which ensured it. (Notes, Num. 23:1, 2, 4-6. 1 Cor. 2:14-16.) As none of the kings who supported the worship of JEHOVAH, and reformed religion, had ventured to take away the high places, this gave the greater plausibility to the objection. (Note, 4.)

V. 23, 24. If Hezekiah would give security, that he would submit in case of failure, Rabshakeh vaunted that he would send him two thousand horses, provided he could find men to ride them. By this he meant to insult and expose Hezekiah's inability to resist the immense army of Sennacherib; or even a small detachment of it, under the command of the least of his captains. But the Israelites were forbidden to multiply chariots and horses, and Hezekiah had learned to depend on a firmer support. (2 Chr. 32:6-8. Notes, Deut. 17:16. Ps. 20:6-8.)

V. 25. Rabshakeh intended to discourage the people, and to induce them to a revolt. Samaria had been destroyed according to the denunciations of JEHOVAH, and Shalmaneser had been considered as his instrument in that destruction. The Jews also were menaced with judgments for their sins, and Rabshakeh affected to believe, that Sennacherib was commissioned to execute similar vengeance on Jerusalem. (Note, 2 Chr. 35:20-24. Is. 36:10.) But there was no truth in his assertion, which the late effectual reformation might inspire the people with confidence to disregard; and the implicity of pretending, that Sennacherib came by the command of JEHOVAH, when he was entirely instigated by ambition, resentment, and rapacity, and when he treated God himself in the most blasphemous manner, was horrible profaneness. (Notes, 19. 4:25-28. 2 Chr. 32:9-16, v. 15. 17-22, v. 19. Is. 10:5-15.)

V. 26. The ambassadors fully understood the drift of Rabshakeh's discourse, and reasonably and mildly required him to make his proposals to them in the Syrian language; and not to address himself to the people, who were not proper judges in such matters, by speaking in the language of the Jews. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 27. These were hyperbolic expressions, denoting the utmost extremities of famine, which the people must expect to endure, in case they dared to resist the king of Assyria. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)

V. 28-35. Rabshakeh supposed that the Assyrian monarch had overpowered the gods, as well as the kings, of all the nations which they had subjected; and that JEHOVAH was no more powerful than the rest of them: and therefore if the Jews regarded Hezekiah's persuasions, and expected help from the LORD, they would certainly be deceived, for he would never be able to deliver them. What mean thoughts of the infinite God, and what arrogant thoughts of himself, must have possessed the mind of Sennacherib, who doubtless had instructed his servant to speak of him in this style! The gods of Hamath, &c. were mere idols, not able to do good or evil. The people of Samaria had provoked the Lord to sell them into the hands of their enemies; and the idols, which they had chosen, were indeed unable to defend them: but, soon after, the new inhabitants experienced to their loss, that the God of their land could, if he had so pleased, have delivered Samaria out of the hand of the king of Assyria. (17:25, 26. 19:17-19. 2 Chr. 32:19.) Surely, if this proud worm had not been intoxicated with success, he must have admitted, that somewhere in the universe there was a power superior to that of mortal man! and if so, it must be highly irrational thus to set at defiance "all that was called God, or worshipped!" But, by this blasphemy the Lord was expressly engaged in the cause; and his honour required him to crush the self-important wretch, who dared to exalt himself against him; so that the greatest kindness imaginable was done to the king and the people of Judah, by this language of impiety and defiance. (Notes, 19:14, 14-19, v. 19. 25-29. Ps. 79:8-13. Is. 10:15-19.)—The proposal made to the people was not very alluring, unless they could be previously terrified with the dread of impending destruction: for Rabshakeh avowed the intention of extorting more money from them, and only of permitting them to continue in their own land, till the king had leisure to remove them to another: and the fertility of that other country was not likely to be very useful to those, who were to be captives and slaves in it. But who could have depended upon the word of such a man, if he had made more equitable proposals?—Rabshakeh, however, argued very plausibly on his own principles, and his eloquence has been much admired: but when a man addresses himself to an uninformed populace, and has sufficient effrontery, and no reserves as to what he says, be it ever so false, impious, or malignant, provided it is suited to inflame their passions, to excite their fears or terrors, and to set them against the rulers whom God has placed over them; eloquence requires comparatively no great talent or genius.

V. 36, 37. Hezekiah was aware what sort of language

36 But the people ^{held} their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

Rabshakeh would employ, and had wisely counselled his envoys, and commanded the people, to hold their peace; lest they should get engaged in a reviling contention, or provoke him to further impiety. 'This was a wise order; . . . and it was no less pious: for Hezekiah believed that God would answer for himself, not in words, but in such deeds as would demonstrate that he was above all gods.' Bp. Patrick. In abhorrence, however, of his blasphemy, and in grief for the afflicted estate of the nation, the ambassadors rent their clothes, and returned to the king. (Notes, Is. 33:7—13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8. In times of increasing impiety we should not despond, as if things must necessarily proceed from bad to worse; for the Lord is able to give them an unexpected and effectual turn. From the most abandoned families he sometimes raises up the brightest ornaments and most useful friends of true religion, to illustrate the sovereignty and power of his grace: and when parents have been notoriously profane and wicked, their children should not hesitate to express, by an opposite conduct, a decided disapprobation of their crimes, and to counteract to the utmost the effects of them on others; whether they have occupied a public, or a more private station in society: for, when the honour of God is concerned, the reputation of the nearest relatives is entitled to a very subordinate regard. (Notes, Matt. 10:37—39. Luke 14:25—27. 2 Cor. 5:16. Note and P. O. 1 Pet. 1:17—21.)—It is not enough, that we do not imitate the conduct of atrocious offenders, or that we tread in the steps of those, who have upon the whole served God sincerely: but we should aim high; and, in aspiring at that eminence which the Scripture proposes, we should set before our eyes the most approved patterns, whose actions are there recorded; that we may follow those who have most nearly followed Christ, and most effectually served God and their generation; and thus become good examples for others to copy. (Note, 1 Thes. 1:5—8.)—In attempting personal or public reformation, those things should be removed or avoided, which have proved occasions of evil, though not sinful in themselves. Human depravity is prone to pervert the bounty of Providence into fuel for sinful lusts; and, in some circumstances, is equally propense to abuse the peculiar mercies of God into occasions of superstition and idolatry. It is natural to fallen man to put the creature in the place of the Creator, and to regard the instrument, rather than the Author, of our comforts: and though this is more evidently absurd when the instrument is irrational or inanimate: it is equally idolatrous, when the most exalted of intelligent agents are thus unduly honoured. However excellent, useful, or deserving of honour, such creatures have been; when they are thus idolized, their comparative meanness and worthlessness ought to be exposed, and the abuse of them treated with the deepest indignation and abhorrence: nay, it were better that the most exalted creature should perish, than that God should be dishonoured by having the least of his glory given to another. Much more then, should every monument of his former mercies be extirpated, when it becomes the occasion of fatal delusions: and the perversion cannot otherwise effectually be prevented; but the propriety of such a measure is still more conspicuous, when the relic, or the custom, was originally the creature of superstition, a mere human invention, perhaps the result of fraud and imposture. True faith needs not such aids to devotion: the word of God, daily meditated upon, leads the mind to realize past, future, and invisible things, as if present: thus every good end proposed by other expedients is answered, without the danger to which they expose us: and the simple scriptural use of the sacramental signs, and pledges of heavenly things, may effectually be preserved from such abuse, and answer every purpose, which can be obtained by presenting the objects of our faith to our bodily senses, in any way not warranted by the word of God; which only tends to distract the mind, to interrupt the simple exercise of faith, to excite spurious affections, to deprave the imagination with gross and false notions of heavenly things, and to introduce, either absurd superstition, or wild enthusiasm.—Those, who most entirely trust in God, will feel themselves most effectually emancipated from other dependences, and from the dominion of every other master: and will be encouraged to resist every enemy and rival, "that they may cleave to the LORD, and not depart from following him, and keeping his commandments."

V. 9—16. While the interests of religion decline or are run down in one place, the Lord takes care that they shall revive and flourish in another. The judgments, which desolate degenerate churches and nations, instead of injuring his cause, tend to warm, animate, and embolden others in personal religion, and in attempting public reformation: nay, they often facilitate the work of active instruments in religious revivals, by intimidating opposers, and exciting those who were indifferent, or reluctant to assist.—Yet, the believer, when pursuing heavenly things, and seeking the glory of God, with the greatest simplicity and most vigorous affections must stand prepared for trouble. For a time, he may enjoy the sunshine of peace and prosperity, to encourage him in his labour of love, and to enable him to bring it to some establishment; and "whatsoever he doeth" shall eventually "prosper." But, when the Almighty is pleased to remove his restraining hand, Satan and wicked men will assault him, with rancour and vehemence proportioned to his zeal and success: and the Lord often permits them to do this: for he regards not so much the present transient feelings of his beloved servants, as the final happy and glorious event of their trials and conflicts. Nations also may meet with public calamities, when true religion is most vigorously and successfully promoted, by the general concurrence of all orders of men. (Notes, 2 Chr. 20:1—4. Ps. 44:17—22.) The secret dislike, the hypocrisy, and the lukewarmness of numbers, require correction: while trials tend to purify the faith and hope of upright persons; to bring them to greater simplicity in their zeal for the honour of God, and in their dependence on his help; and to increase the fervency of their addresses at the throne of grace: and thus they make way for the fuller display of the glory of God in their deliverance. Yet, in such trying situations the strongest believers are apt to waver, to make improper concessions, and to speak and act unadvisedly.—Whatever is withheld or withdrawn from God, which has been or ought to be devoted to him, in order to purchase exemption from trouble, or peace with the enemies of his church, will eventually occasion our shame, and involve us in greater difficulties.

V. 17—37. No dependence can be placed on the engagements of the covetous or ambitious: and all attempts to purchase their favour, or to sooth them into peace, are vain. When it is in their power, they will find some pretence for seizing on those possessions which they covet, while every acquisition increases their insatiable rapacity. Success in wickedness elates them with pride and insolence; they forget that they are men, or have any superior; and treat all as enemies or rebels, who do not implicitly comply with their exorbitant demands. Our only safety then consists, in committing our persons, property, connexions, reputations, liberty, and every thing which we value, into the powerful keeping of our God, in the exercise of faith, and by adhering to the path of duty.—"The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison; it setteth on fire the whole course of nature, and is set on fire of hell." What pride, reproaches, lies, impiey, atheism, and blasphemy have, in all ages, been vented by it, to the dishonour of God, and the unutterable injury of mankind. We may form some estimate of the desperate wickedness of the human heart, from the horrible language which is uttered by the lips of men: "for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." (Notes, Matt. 12:31—37. Jam. 3:3—6.) May the Lord replenish our hearts with his grace, that out of that good treasure we may speak such things, and such only, as may "minister grace unto the hearers!" If, indeed, "as the fool hath said in his heart, there were no God," it would in general be vain and presumptuous for the weaker to resist the stronger: but, as "the Lord doeth what he will in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth;" so, "the race is not always to the swift nor the battle to the strong." All confidence in man may justly be exploded, as leaning on a broken staff, which will not only fail, but also wound: and dependence on our own counsel and might, whatever proportion they may bear to those of our opponents, is equally vain and fallacious. But our God never fails those who trust in him: in this confidence the believer, when more conscious of his own extreme debility, than his insulting foes can conceive, may boldly defy the most potent of them; and if they deride this dependence on the omnipotent God, they only engage him, "for his own name's sake," the more decisively to fight against them; and to turn their vauntings and threatenings into confusion, dismay, and ruin.—When they, who have domineered over their fellow worms, presume to assault those whom the God of heaven protects; they will soon feel their inability to resist his power, or to endure the weight of his indignation. Yet many who atheistically, or impiously, deny his existence, blaspheme his truths, or condemn his authority; inconsistently, upon other occasions, advance claims to his favour, and express their expectations that he will prosper their wicked devices! Because they have succeeded in exposing or seducing hypocritical and degenerate professors of Christianity; they triumph as if they had, or soon should, completely ruin the cause of vital godliness, and prevail against the house of David and his king dom, which is founded upon an immovable foundation. Numbers also, ignorantly and absurdly, suppose those things to be pleasing to God, which he most abhors; because they form their judgments on the deductions of their own understandings, or on the traditions and authority of men, and not on the plain and sure testimonies of the sacred Scriptures. "For the things of the Spirit of God are foolishness to the natural man." Hence they embolden themselves, and endeavour to discourage scriptural worshippers, upon the mos false and preposterous grounds. Such cavils, objections, and arguments have no weight with the established believer: and therefore these men pretend to despise him, that they may address the prejudices and passions of the ignorant, unstable, and unthinking multitude, with whom their specious declamations go further than either solid arguments or scriptural testimonies. They endeavour to insinuate, that the persons, who labour to prevail with them to trust and serve God, according to the plain meaning of his holy word, are deceivers, to whom they cannot safely attend: and, while they are only aiming at the gratification of their own ambition or avarice, they profess great compassion and kindness for them, are lavish of good words, and set before them alluring prospects of felicity. But, it is often best to leave persons of this description to rail and blaspheme, without directly answering; because such attempts ordinarily increase their self importance, and tend to disseminate still more widely the effect of their poisonous tenets; while a decided expression of abhorrence of their guilt generally forms the best testimony against them. The matter must be left to the Lord, who has all hearts in his hands: he will plead his own cause, and that of his truth and people; and our safety and duty consist in committing ourselves into his hands, by humble submission, believing hope, and fervent prayer.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIX. V. 1. Hezekiah, by rending his garments and clothing himself in sackcloth, expressed his abhorrence of Rabshakeh's blasphemy; his grief for the afflictions of his people; and his humble consciousness of his own and his people's unworthiness, and need of pardoning mercy; while he wholly depended upon God for protection.

V. 2. Isaiah had at this time prophesied almost fifty years, if he entered upon that office only a short time before the death of Uzziah: for he prophesied, in the days of Uzziah, who died about 758 before Christ; and these transactions occurred about 712. (Notes, Is. 1:1. 6:1-4, v. 1.) It must be supposed that Hezekiah had often consulted him: and the nature of this message implies a previous acquaintance, and a mutual confidence. (Note, 18:4.) Isaiah's visits to Hezekiah, at and after his sickness, are thought by some to have taken place before this, though recorded afterwards; (20:) and many parts of his prophecy evidently refer to these events.—In this emergency therefore Hezekiah sent to Isaiah the prophet, rather than to the high-priest; though he had employed the priests and Levites in his reformation. Perhaps Urijah was still living, or some other high-priest too much resembling him in character. (Note, 16:10-16.) There seems, however, to have been an intended silencing upon the high-priest. Some learned men indeed think, that the appointed method of inquiring of God by the high-priest, was disused from the time that the temple was built: but this can only be collected from the silence of Scripture, as no express declaration to that effect is recorded.—Shebna, who was employed on this occasion, as well as in receiving the message of Rabshakeh, is elsewhere represented in an unfavourable light. (Notes, Is. 22:15-19.) For pious persons cannot always employ such characters, and such only, as they approve. The elders of the priests accompanied the chief officers of the king, in going to the prophet: and they all went to him in the habit of mourners and penitents.

V. 3. It was not only a season of great distress to Israel;

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 ¶ And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say to your master, Thus saith the LORD, "Be not afraid of the words which thou hast heard, with which the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 ¶ So Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And when he heard say of Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, Behold, he is come out to fight against thee: he sent messengers again unto Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, "Let not thy God in whom thou trustest deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands, by destroying them utterly: and shalt thou be delivered?

but the confidence of the king, in the protection of God, was rebuked by Rabshakeh in the name of Sennacherib, as a groundless presumption, and the name of JEHOVAH was blasphemed on that account. Indeed the affairs of Judah were come to a crisis: every thing valuable was at stake. As the woman in travail, who has not strength to bring forth, must die, if she be not speedily assisted; so, Hezekiah and his people, in their pressing necessity, were utterly unable to do any thing effectual to extricate themselves, and must perish without immediate help from God. (Note, Hos. 13:12, 13.)

V. 4. Hezekiah's confidence in God was in some respects encouraged by the blasphemy of the Assyrians. For though he and his people were unworthy of the divine favour; yet it was proper for the Lord to rebuke and silence the reproachful words which had been spoken. In this hope therefore he entreated and required the prophet to "lift up his prayer," with earnestness and importunity, for the remnant which was left, that the people of God might not be swallowed up and extirpated. Israel had been carried into captivity, and dispersed; and Judah was reduced to extremities; and would God suffer his blasphemers finally to prevail against his worshippers, and entirely to destroy his holy religion? (Notes, Is. 8:6-8. 10:5, 6.)

V. 7. A blast, &c.] Some have supposed that this expression related to the manner in which the Assyrian army was destroyed: viz. by exciting one of those scorching winds which in those countries have been known to destroy great multitudes almost instantaneously. But this is uncertain, and perhaps it only means, that the Lord would destroy all his prosperity, as easily as the pinching gale of wind blasts the tender vegetables: while the death of his numerous forces, probably attended by a report, that Tirhakah and the Ethiopians were marching to assault him, as a terrifying rumour in his ears, would hurry him home with dismay and disgrace. (Notes, 35-37. Job 20:10-29, vv. 23-26.)—As the word, rendered blast, is often translated spirit; some explain the expression to mean, that God would send an angel, or spirit, to destroy Sennacherib's army; but others think it signifies, that God would fill his heart with terror by some supernatural agent. "I will infuse a spirit into him."—The phrase never signifies any thing, but putting a spirit into a person, this was πνευμα δουλίας; (a spirit of fear.) Seeker in By Louth.

V. 8. It is probable, that Rabshakeh marched the army back from Jerusalem to join Sennacherib, when he found that Hezekiah would neither surrender, nor return any answer to his insulting message. (32) For Jerusalem was so advantageously situated, and so well fortified, that, with a moderate garrison, it might have made a stout resistance against any detachment of the Assyrian army: (Notes, 25:1-5. 2 Sam. 5:6-8. Ps. 48:12, 13. 125:2. Lam. 4:12.) though it must probably at length have shared the fate of Samaria, if the Lord had not immediately interposed. The siege, however, was postponed, or not carried on with vigour, till Sennacherib had leisure to come against it in person. In the mean time he had withdrawn from Lachish, (it is not known whether he had taken that city or not;) and was besieging Libnah, another city, which refused to open its gates to the conqueror.

V. 9-13. When Sennacherib had, the first time, levied contributions upon Hezekiah, he marched his army into 14 ¶ And Hezekiah received the letter of the hand of the messengers, and read it; and Hezekiah went up into the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah prayed before the LORD, and said, "O LORD God of Israel, which dwellest between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; thou hast made heaven and earth.

16 LORD, bow down thine ear, and hear: open LORD, thine eyes, and see: and hear the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent him to reproach the living God.

17 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have destroyed the nations and the lands.

18 And have cast their gods into the fire: for they were no gods, but the work of men's

Egypt; probably in resentment against the king, for forming alliances with the vassals of the Assyrians, as he regarded the Jews and the Samaritans to be. After several successes there, while he was besieging Pelusium, an important fortress in that country, he heard that Tirhakah king of Ethiopia was marching against him with a great army: and, not choosing to wait his approach, he raised the siege; and returning into Judea, began to commit hostilities there, as it has been before related. But, finding that Tirhakah pursued him as a fugitive, he marched back to encounter him; and, having totally routed his army, he returned to wreak his vengeance on Hezekiah and Jerusalem. This gave the Jews some respite for preparation and for prayer; and afforded Sennacherib an occasion for more deliberately uttering his blasphemy, s, by a letter sent to Hezekiah, when detained for a time from marching against him.—Learned men differ in opinion concerning Tirhakah; whether he were king of Ethiopia, or Cush, to the south of Egypt in Africa, or of the Cushites in Asia. He was however an ally of the king of Egypt. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 18:20, 21, 28-35. 1 Kings 10:1, 2.)

V. 14-19. Notes, 3, 4. 1 Kings 8:33, 34. 2 Chr. 14:9-15. 20:6-12.—Spread it, &c. (14) By this action Hezekiah referred the matter entirely to God, intimating that as his honour was immediately assaulted, he was chiefly concerned to defend it; and by this appeal the king meant to shelter himself and his people under the shadow of the Almighty; that while the Lord pleaded his own cause, he might also deliver them from their enraged enemies. (Notes, 2 Chr. 20:14-17. Ps. 21:13.)

Thou art the God, &c. (15) JEHOVAH, the God of Israel, who dwells between the cherubim, on the mercy-seat, was considered by Sennacherib and Rabshakeh as merely the local deity of a small region; but Hezekiah prayed, that he would arise, and make it appear that he was the God of all the kingdoms of the earth, and the Creator of the world.

Hath sent him, &c. (16) That is Rabshakeh, who probably was sent with this letter.—Cast their gods, &c. (18) Notes, 2 Sam. 5:21. Ps. 115:3-8. Is. 44:12-20. 46:1, 2, 5-9. Jer. 10:3-11. Hos. 8:5, 6.

Now, &c. (19) It would have been comparatively a small matter for Hezekiah and his people to perish; but it would be an evil of infinite magnitude, for all the nations to conclude that JEHOVAH was no more powerful than their worthless idols: and it would be unspeakably honourable to the name of God, to show the difference between the Creator of the world, and these his puny rivals; and to prove, that he only was the LORD almighty, able to save and to destroy. Sennacherib's blasphemous challenge gave a fair opportunity of publicly demonstrating this most important truth; and a plea grounded so directly on the honour of God could not but prevail. (Notes, Ez. 32:11-14. 1 Sam. 17:45-47. Is. 37:20. Matt. 6:9, 10, 13.)

V. 21. The virgin, &c. The inhabitants of Jerusalem, as forming or representing the visible church of God, having his temple and instituted worship among them, are called in one body, "the daughter of Zion," or of Jerusalem. (Marg. Ref. c.) They were safe under his protection and care as a virgin-daughter in the house of a wise and tender parent: and, though the Assyrian attempted brutal violence, they might treat his efforts with disdain and defiance; might despise them and laugh them to scorn, and menace his destruction by shaking their heads at him. Perhaps the term, virgin, might refer to the state of Jerusalem, as free from idolatry, and reserved for the Lord alone; (2 Cor. 11:1-6, v. 2,) or as having never been exposed to the ravages of an enraged victor. (Notes, Is. 23:12. 47:1-3.) The city of David, or Zion, seems never to have been taken by any assailant, from the time when David got possession of it, till the Babylonish captivity.—The former part of this message is addressed not to Hezekiah, but to Sennacherib, as if present; first by the daughter of Zion, and then by the Lord himself.

V. 22. Sennacherib had both exalted his voice, in reproach and blasphemy against God; and lifted up his eyes, in pride and ambition; as if he even aspired to his throne, and affected equality with him, or even superiority above him. (Notes, 2 Chr. 32:9-16, v. 15. 17-22, v. 19. Is. 10:15-19. Ez. 28:2-10. Dan. 5:18-24. 2 Thes. 2:3, 4.) But he did not consider whom he had thus affronted: not the idols of the heathens, which being wood and stone, he had easily cast into the fire; but Israel's holy Protector, who would execute signal vengeance upon him for his bold presumption; and who being the Creator of heaven and earth, could crush as a moth the feeble worm, which had set him at defiance.

V. 23. The Assyrian monarch was elated by his successes; and, on account of the number and valour of his troops, his chariots, and other military preparations, supposed that nothing would be too hard for him to accomplish. He is here introduced as glorying in what he had done, and would do. No mountain, was so inaccessible but he could drive his chariots over it; no forest so impervious but he could level it with the ground; no place so fortified, but he would force his way into it. Some suppose he meant, that he had marched his army through the defiles, or over the craggy summits of mount Lebanon: but others think that by these expressions the temple on mount Zion is intended; and that he gloried, as already indisputably master of the whole land, and as if he had marched his army, and driven his chariots into the mountain of the Lord's house, and dispossessed him of his habitation. The temple may be called Lebanon either because difficult of access, or because it was built with cedars of Lebanon: the removal of all obstructions, by slaying the bravest of Hezekiah's captains, may be denoted, by cutting down the cedars and choice fir-trees; and, "the lodgings of his borders, and the forest of his Carmel," may mean the strong-holds upon the borders of the land; and the fruitful fields, which would come into the possession of the conqueror. For Carmel being situated in a very fruitful part of the land, every fruitful spot seems to have been called by that name. (Marg. Notes, Is. 10:12-15.)

V. 24. Hezekiah had before taken measures to prevent the Assyrians from finding water near Jerusalem. (Note, 2 Chr. 32:3, 4.) But this haughty conqueror boasted, that wherever his armies marched to besiege cities, that by digging deep wells he found water where none had ever been found before, so that he and his army had "drunk strange waters;" and likewise that they dried up all the rivers by which the cities were defended, either by the numbers who drank of them, or by diverting their course into other chan-fir-trees there! : and I will enter into the lodgings of his borders, and into the forest of his Carmel.

24 I have digged and drunk strange waters, and with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of besieged places.

25 Hast thou not heard long ago how I have done it; and of ancient times that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldst be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps.

26 Therefore their inhabitants were of small power, they were dismayed and confounded; they were as the grass of the field, and as the green herb, as the grass on the housetops, and as corn blasted before it be grown up.

27 But I know thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

28 Because thy rage against me and thy tumult is come up into mine ears, therefore I will put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.

bowstrings in pieces, so that they could not fight. So studious were they to pervert the truth, and corrupt the sacred story! BP. Patrick.

V. 36, 37. Sennacherib is supposed to have survived this catastrophe for some time; and to have lived under great contempt, but exercising the most odious cruelty towards his subjects. Though he had had such awful demonstration of the power of JEHOVAH, and the impotence of his own idols; yet he adhered to the latter, and died in an act of idolatrous worship: a striking example of the difference between the God in whom Ezekiah trusted, to whom he prayed, and by whom he was miraculously delivered, in the most urgent extremity; and the god of Sennacherib, who could not defend him in his own capital, during profound peace, from the sword of his sons, even while employed in acts of religious worship!—Some have conjectured, that Sennacherib had vowed to sacrifice his sons to his idol, and that they murdered him in self-defence: and then escaped into the adjacent mountains of Armenia, or Ararat. (Note, Gen. 8:4, 5.)—Esarhaddon seems to have been a man of much better character than his father. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. In times of great distress and prevailing impiety, strong expressions of poignant sorrow and deep humiliation are peculiarly seasonable: for, "the LORD calls to weeping, and mourning, and girding with sackcloth," and the contrary spirit and conduct are irrational, offensive, and tokens of a profane, sensual, and selfish heart. (Note, Is. 22:8-14.)—They, who best know the efficacy of fervent believing prayer, will most desire the supplications of others for them; and especially of those, who have long been eminent for piety and simplicity, and zealous for the glory of God. Alas! few kings are very earnest to form alliances with the faithful and devoted ministers of religion, against their hostile invaders; yet, they are of more real utility than increasing numbers of brave and disciplined troops: and whenever princes, prophets, and people unite in prayer, in real dependence on God, and a disposition to give him the praise; a prosperous event may be confidently expected, notwithstanding their own weakness, and the rebukes and insults of haughty enemies.—The Lord "resisteth the proud," and will vindicate his own cause against those who reproach, defy, or blaspheme his name; or who rival him, and rob him of his glory.—The more we are humbly conscious that we cannot help ourselves, but must be miserable and perish without his aid; the more simple will be our dependence on him, and the more fervent our applications to him, whether in temporal or spiritual exigencies.—"Man's extremity is therefore God's opportunity;" and while his servants can speak nothing but terror to the proud, the profane, and the hypocritical; they have comfortable words to say to the discouraged believer. "Be not afraid: thine enemies are God's enemies, and thy cause is his cause: in glorifying himself, he must protect and save those who trust in him. He delights in giving the very blessings for which thy soul is athirst: and with the breath of his mouth he can slay the wicked, and blast all the machinations of earth and hell against his church."—The Lord finds wicked men other employment, when he would give his servants a respite from conflict and persecution: and even those projects, which are in themselves most trifling or most detestable, often so engross the minds, occupy the time, and fill the hands of the ungodly, as to detain them from attempting that mischief to the cause of God, to which otherwise they would be disposed. But their pursuits of wealth, of honour, of pleasure, or of learning, do not prevent their discovering the enmity of their hearts, or filling up the measure of their sins: and when this is done, they are taken away, and their place knows them no more.—The blasphemies which many utter, are not unmeaning words, as they suppose, but the natural produce of their depraved hearts: and therefore they reiterate them, and grow more outrageous in them, when recent occasions are afforded. Absurd as it appears, worldly men do really think, that those who trust in God will be deceived; and they presume upon success, while they despise him, and set him at defiance! Impunity and prosperity inspire confidence and arrogance; and men expect to prevail against all who resist them, because in some instances they have been successful! (Note, Ec. 8:11-13.)

V. 14-22. We can easily say, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" but in the crisis of danger, when the eye of sense perceives no way of escape, without removing mountains, and effecting apparent impossibilities, faith is constrained to maintain a severe conflict against unbelief, even in the experience of the most established believers. But prayer is the never-failing resource of the tempted Christian; whether he be called to struggle with outward difficulties, or to engage in the more distressing warfare with his inward enemies. At the mercy-seat of his almighty Friend he opens 37 And it came to pass, as he was wor-^[n.c.] shipping in the house of "Nisroch his god, ^[709.] that Adrammelech and Sharezer "his sons smote him with the sword: and they escaped into the land of "Armenia. And "Esarhaddon his son reigned in his stead.

his heart; before him he particularly spreads the case; to him he makes his appeal: and when he can discern that the glory of God is engaged on his side, his faith gains the victory, and he again exults in the assurance, that he never shall be moved. He knows the difference between JEHOVAH, whose mysterious nature and harmonious perfections are revealed in the sacred Scriptures; and all those idols, which are the work of men's hands, or the creatures of their imaginations. Infidels may indeed triumph over superstition, hypocrisy, and every form of worthless profession: and they may vaunt and boast, as if they could, with equal ease and certainty, prevail against the truths and spiritual worship of God our Saviour. But, whether they employ the terrors of persecution, or the more specious armour of blasphemous reproaches, sarcastic wit, or proud reasonings; their assaults are vain against the faith and prayers, the holy lives, and scriptural preaching of the Lord's true servants. "The weapons of our warfare are mighty through God," not only to repel the assaults of Satan and his ministers, whether they assume the form of the roaring lion, the subtle serpent, or the angel of light; but to subvert his strong-holds, and "to cast down imaginations," (or reasonings,) "and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and to bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." (Note, 2 Cor. 10:1-6.) No weapon that is formed against the church can prosper: and the daughter of Zion, whilst untainted with idolatry or hypocrisy, and faithfully reserving herself for him, who has "espoused her in righteousness, and faithfulness, and loving kindness," may despise and defy the feeble efforts of all assailants, and confidently predict their speedy and terrible destruction. Oh, that such persons would consider, "whom they have reproached and blasphemed!" whom they have opposed and provoked to wrath! "against whom they have exalted their voice, and lifted up their eyes on high!" They may think that he is altogether such a one as themselves: but they will find, that he is "the Holy One of Israel." He sees their inmost thoughts; he discerns the rage and enmity of their hearts; as well as hears the stout and arrogant words, which they instigate each other to speak against him: and what will they do, when from his awful tribunal he shall give the mandate, "These mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me!" (Note, Luke 19:11-27, v. 27.)

V. 23-37. The greatest exploits of men are unworthy of notice, compared with the most ordinary works of God: the most powerful and successful of his enemies undesignedly accomplish his secret purposes, or express predictions; and prosper only till they have filled up their part of his universal plan. Some the Lord employs, contrary to their own intentions, as executioners of his vengeance, "to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps;" and therefore their opposers prove weak, timid, or infatuated; but, when they have accomplished their work, (perhaps with hearts full of rage against him, who had exalted and prospered them;) their turn comes next, and others execute vengeance upon them: or he deals with them by his own hand, as with some great Behemoth or Leviathan, and restrains, confines, or enfeebles them, as he sees good. But his believing people, safe under his protection, and living upon his grace and providential bounty, are employed as willing instruments to perform his works of goodness and mercy, which when finished shall meet a sure reward. Whilst all creatures here below subserve their good; and nature itself is made to transcend her usual limits, or alter her settled course, to supply their wants; and while the mighty angels are administering spirits, sent forth to protect them, or avenge them on their enemies: they, in their places, would imitate the prompt obedience, and "delight to do the commandments" of God, "hearkening unto the voice of his word."—But all creatures, yea, the holy angels, and the Lord of angels himself, fight against those who fight against his church: nay, those objects on which they chiefly depend, and those persons from whom they expect the greatest kindness, will concur in effecting their destruction; and every respite will finally add to their infamy and misery.—The cause of God, however reduced, will surely revive: the remnant of every generation will yield an increase to that which succeeds; and at length "Israel shall blossom, and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." The zeal of the Lord of hosts, which appointed and sent the mighty Saviour, is engaged to make his salvation triumphant over all opposers, and to fill the earth with the knowledge of his glory: not now for "his servant David's sake," but for the sake of his "beloved Son, in whom he is well pleased." May our hearts be prepared as good ground, that his word may strike root in them, and bring forth fruit in our lives! then we shall witness the full completion of all those prophecies, of which he has already given us so many signs and earnest, while with exulting millions we shall sing "Hallelujah! toe Lord God omnipotent reigneth." and "the

CHAPTER XX.

Hezekiah, when sick, is warned by Isaiah to prepare for death; 1; but praying, he receives the promise of fifteen years added to his life, and of deliverance from the Assyrians, 2-7. In confirmation the shadow on the wall's dial goes back ten degrees, 8-11. The king of Babylon sends to congratulate Hezekiah, who shows the ambassadors all his treasures, 12, 13. Isaiah reproves him for this, and foretells the Babylonian captivity, 14-19. Hezekiah dies, and is succeeded by Manasseh, 20, 21.

IN those days ^awas Hezekiah sick unto death. And ^bthe prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz came to him, and said unto him, thus saith the Lord, ^c'Set thine house in order; for ^dthou shalt die, and not live.

2 Then ^ehe turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto the Lord, saying,

3 ^fI beseech thee, O Lord, 'remember now how ^g'I have walked before thee ^hin truth and with ⁱa perfect heart, and have done ^jthat which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah ^kwept ^lsore.

4 And it came to pass, afore Isaiah was gone out into the middle ^mcourt, that the word of the Lord came to him, saying,

5 ⁿ'Turn again, and tell Hezekiah, ^o'the captain of my people, Thus saith the Lord, ^p'the God of David thy father, ^q'I have heard thy prayer: ^r'I have seen thy tears: behold, ^s'I will heal thee; on the third day ^tthou shalt go up unto the house of the Lord.

6 And ^u'I will add unto thy days fifteen years; and I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria; and ^v'I will defend this city for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

7 And Isaiah said, 'Take a lump of figs. And they took and laid ^wit on the bile, and he recovered.

8 And Hezekiah said unto Isaiah, ^x'What ^yshall be the sign that the Lord will heal me, and that I shall go up into the house of the Lord the third day?

9 And Isaiah said, ^z'This sign shalt thou have of the Lord, that the Lord will do the thing that he hath spoken: shall the shadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees?

10 And Hezekiah answered, ^{aa}'It is a light thing for the shadow to go down ten degrees: nay, but let the shadow return backward ten degrees.

11 And Isaiah the prophet ^{ab}cried unto the Lord: and ^{ac}'he brought the shadow ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down in the ^{ad}dial of Ahaz.

NOTES.—CHAP. XX. V. 1. Hezekiah reigned twenty-nine years, and he lived fifteen after this sickness: it must therefore have happened in the fourteenth or beginning of the fifteenth year of his reign; about the time of Sennacherib's first invasion of Judea. (18:13.)—It is not likely, that all the events recorded in the two preceding chapters occurred within a part of one year; yet, this must have been the case, if Hezekiah's sickness was subsequent to the destruction of the Assyrian army. (Notes, 2 Chr. 32:24-26. Is. 38:6.)—The expression, "Set thine house in order," ^aor, ^bcommand concerning thine house, was a direction to Hezekiah, to make without delay, a full and final settlement of his domestic and civil concerns, that nothing might interrupt his mind, or take it off from the exercise of devotion, in the nearer approaches of death; and yet, that nothing might be neglected, which related to the interests of survivors. Hezekiah's disorder was in itself mortal, and must have terminated in death, without a miracle: the prophet therefore spoke according to the natural tendency of the disorder, and not according to the Lord's secret purposes. Hezekiah's prayer showed, that he did not consider the sentence to be irreversible.

V. 2. It is probable that Hezekiah turned his face to the wall of his chamber, (which might be towards the temple,) merely that he might have more freedom and privacy in pouring out his heart before God.

V. 3. Hezekiah evidently prayed, that he might recover, though he expressed himself with submission to the will of God: and doubtless he was very unwilling to die at that time. To account for this, it has been said, that believers under the Old Testament, having dark views of the eternal world, might be expected to die with more regret than those under the New: but facts by no means support this supposition; for Abraham, Jacob, Aaron, Moses, Joshua, David, and others, seem to have left the world with as much joyfulness as Paul himself. We must, therefore, ascribe Hezekiah's reluctance to die, either to the state of his mind, or to the circumstances of his family and the nation. Nothing appears peculiarly to have distressed him, in the view of immediate death, as to the state of his own soul. But the circumstances of his family, and the state of affairs in Israel seem to solve all the difficulty. Probably, at that time Hezekiah had no son; for Manasseh, who succeeded him, was not born till three years after. (21:1.) By his death, therefore, this branch of David's family would have been extinct, and the succession must have been continued in a more remote and obscure branch of it: and this would have been a discouraging rebuke to him, as if he had forfeited the covenant of royalty. It is a general and probable opinion, that the nation was at this time threatened with an assault by the whole force of the king of Assyria; they therefore needed a commander, who united wisdom, courage, and faith, to head them in such an emergency: and if he were removed, and they were left to a disputed succession, and the weakness of an usurped or opposed government, there could be little prospect, but that Jerusalem would share the fate of Samaria. With great earnestness and perseverance, Hezekiah had wrought his reformation to a hopeful establishment: but he might fear, lest the instability of the people, and the dissensions of the nobles, would subvert all, if he were taken away at this crisis. He therefore desired to live, not for his own sake so much as for that of his family and people, especially for the interests of true religion; and he prayed to that effect, with many tears, as well as with great fervency. (Notes, Is. 38:1-3, 9-20.) The Lord knew, and Hezekiah could appeal to him, that he had walked before him in sincerity and uprightness of heart; having used all his authority and influence, with zeal and earnestness, to suppress idolatry and wickedness, and by every scriptural means to promote the worship and service of God; and that he had done what was good in his sight, being an example to his people. The consciousness of his integrity gave him confidence; and he begged the Lord to remember the fruits of grace which had been produced, and to spare him, that he might be yet more fruitful and useful. (Notes, 2 Chr. 30:23-27. 31:20, 21. Neh. 13:14, 31. 2 Cor. 1:12-14.)

V. 4, 5. Notes, 2 Sam. 7:1-5.—The captain. (5) This title implies that Hezekiah was spared, that he might lead the people to victory, by the prevailing weapons of faith and prayer. (Marg. Ref. Note, Josh. 5:13-15.)—I have heard, &c. (Note, Is. 65:24, 25.) The Lord knew his heart, and saw that he would be disposed, in the first place, after his recovery, to go up to his courts to return thanks for the mercy, and therefore he suited the message to his secret desires and intentions. (8) He should recover his strength so fast, as to be able in three days' time to go up to the temple, and give God thanks for his cure. Bp. Patrick.

V. 6. Hezekiah was the only person, that we read of, who was previously informed how long he was to live. Such information would be of very bad tendency to ungodly men; and it would not be either comfortable or useful to a believer unless animated with vigorous faith, and glowing zeal for the honour of God. Doubtless, this pious king made a good use of his knowledge, and waited the appointed period of his days with calm resignation; but we need not envy him this peculiar privilege. He was not more than fifty-four years old when he died.—God would also defend Jerusalem, as with a shield, against all the power and rage of the Assyrian king, for the glory of his own name, and for the sake of his servant David. (Notes, 19:34. Is. 38:5.)

V. 7. It seems that Hezekiah's sickness was a species of the plague, accompanied with a bile of fatal tendency: whether this application was medicinally proper, or not, doubtless it was rendered effectual by miracle; or rather, it was a token of the divine operation by which he was healed.

V. 8. As the Lord was graciously pleased frequently to confirm his promises by signs, Hezekiah desired one in this case; not in unbelief, but for the confirmation of his wavering faith. (Notes, Josh. 6:36-40. Is. 7:10-12.)

V. 9-11. The dial of Ahaz, it is probable, was placed full in Hezekiah's view, and the sun shining upon it: and he was allowed to choose, whether the shadow should go forward, or backward, ten degrees; that is, half hour lines, as it is conjectured. The progression of the shadow with accelerated speed, though evidently miraculous, seemed not so extraordinary to Hezekiah as its retrograde motion, which he preferred, and which accordingly took place. We are not concerned to determine how God produced this effect: if he saw good, he was able to cause a temporary change in the motion of the earth and heavenly bodies: (Note, Josh. 10:12-14.) and some think that the same effect was produced in other places, especially at Babylon. (Notes, 2 Chr. 32:30-33, v. 31. Is. 38:8.)—It appears from Herodotus, that the Egyptians had observed some few instances, in which the course of the sun and moon was very different from what was usual; though their traditions of them were greatly distorted, and wholly unlike the real facts, as recorded in Scripture.

V. 12, 13. The king of Babylon seems at this time to have reigned independent; but he was in danger of being reduced under the power of the Assyrian monarch: yet, in process of time Babylon acquired the pre-eminence, and swallowed up the Assyrian empire. (Notes, 17:18. 17:24. 23:29, 30. 2 Chr. 33:11. Is. 39:1.) This prince, having heard of Hezekiah's sickness, and the miraculous circumstances of his recovery, and knowing that he had refused submission to the Assyrians, seems to have proposed to enter into a confederacy with him against that potent nation, "and Hezekiah hearkened unto them," as inclined to accede to their proposals. He was too well pleased with this flattering embassy; and, in order to convince the ambassadors, who brought the letters, that he was a desirable ally, he showed them all his treasures, and armour, and preparations for war of every kind. This resulted from pride and ostentation, and might have led to an improper alliance with an idolatrous prince. He seems likewise to have missed the opportunity of instructing the Chaldeans concerning the perfections of ¹JEHOVAH, who had wrought the miracles which had excited their attention; and concerning his authority, law, and worship; and of showing them the absurdity and evil of idolatry, especially their worship of the sun, which was evidently the creature and servant of the God of Israel. (Notes, 2 Chr. 32:24-26. Is. 39:2.)—Though Hezekiah's sickness preceded Sennacherib's invasion and overthrow, it is probable that this embassy arrived after that event; when Hezekiah's exhausted treasures had been abundantly replenished by the spoil of the Assyrians. (Note, 2 Chr. 32:27-29.)

V. 14, 15. Hezekiah did not resent the prophet's interference in state affairs; (Notes, 2 Chr. 16:7-10. 25:14-16.) for he revered his person, confided in his prudence and affection, and desired to hear the will of God from him. In his answer, he intimated, that he had counted it an honour to receive ambassadors from a far country. (Note, Josh. 9:3-15.)—Perhaps, he was not at first conscious of having done wrong; yet, in reviewing and relating his conduct, he was made deeply sensible of his sin and folly. (Note, 2 Chr. 32:30-33, v. 31.)

V. 17, 18. Considering the small and unsettled power of the king of Babylon, at this time, compared with that of the Assyrian kings, who seemed about to establish a permanent dominion over all the adjacent countries; nothing could be more unlikely, than the accomplishment of this prediction; yet in somewhat more than a hundred years it was exactly fulfilled!—All the remaining treasures and the vessels of the temple, and furniture made by Solomon, or supplied by subsequent kings, with all the treasures of the palace, and riches of the city, were carried to Babylon; and Daniel and his companions, some of whom were descended from Hezekiah, became eunuchs in the king of Babylon's palace. (Note, Dan. 1:3-7.)—Hezekiah dreaded the power of the Assyrians; but he was more disposed to expect help, than to fear ruin, from the king of Babylon. If this transaction occurred before Sennacherib's overthrow, as many suppose, (Note, 12:13.) it took place previously to Hezekiah's emptying his treasures, to hire Sennacherib's departure, on his first invasion of the land. (Note, 18:14-16.) The chief reason for assigning this date to it, is, that the power of the Assyrians, after the destruction of Sennacherib's army, ceased to be formidable; yet Hezekiah's conduct implied, that he chiefly feared danger from that quarter. But indeed, after that blow, the Assyrian power was far greater than that of any of the neighbouring countries; and Hezekiah might desire to form a league to defend himself and his kingdom against it.

V. 19. Hezekiah humbly and submissively allowed the justice of the sentence, and the goodness of God in the respite; and gratefully acknowledged his unmerited kindness, in the peace, prosperity, and continuance of true religion in his days. Yet the prospect, respecting his family and nation, must have occasioned him many painful sensations. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. 'In the midst of life we are in death':—happy then are they, and they alone, who are habitually prepared for that event! Yet even to them, it is desirable to be apprised of its immediate approach: that they may settle all their temporal concerns, for the peace and benefit of their survivors; and then meet the separating stroke, with that calmness, and in that frame of spirit, which may most impress and edify surrounding friends.—If the Lord seem in his providence to command us "to set our house in order, for we must die, and not live;" and yet afterwards unexpectedly prolong our days; our preparation in that case will neither mar the comfort, nor lessen the usefulness, of our future lives.—It is frequently required of ministers, to intimate to sick persons the probability, or supposed certainty, of their approaching dissolution; as well as to assist them in improving the visitation, and in preparing for the event: and should such intimations afterwards prove erroneous, they ought not to be censured; for they can only speak according to their judgment, and deliver that message from God, which appears to them suited to the case of those whom they address.—Though miracles, properly so called, have ceased; yet the Lord hears the prayer of faith for the sick, and sometimes remarkably prospers simple means, used in dependence on his blessing. And though physicians, (for prophets are not now sent from God to inform us in these matters,) should give little encouragement respecting the recovery of beloved and useful persons; we may still continue to pray for them: for, "with God all things are possible," and the most sagacious of men are often found mistaken. In respect of ourselves, it is generally best to be willing to depart, and to pray especially for spiritual blessings in behalf of ourselves and others. Yet there may be cases, in which men may with propriety be importunate for the continuance of life and health, in order to complete designs of public and allowed utility, which appear likely to be frustrated if they should be removed; or when in any way the important interests of families, churches, or nations appear to them connected with their lives. Yet, as we are all liable to mistake in these concerns, submission to the divine will ought invariably to be united with such petitions: and nothing else should make any man desirous to live in this wretched world, who knows that he is ready for a better.—The mercy of our God, and the merits of our heavenly Advocate, form the sinner's never-failing plea at the throne of grace: yet, the consciousness of sin in our professed faith and piety, gives confidence in this; of trial; and may, on some occasions, be pleaded before him, without the imputation of pride or self-righteousness.—Secret earnest prayer is the approved and successful method of obtaining relief and comfort, in seasons of the deepest distress. and sometimes the Lord immediately turns the mourning of the humble supplicant into joy and thanksgiving. He always hears the prayers and sees the

CHAPTER XXI.

Manasseh reigns very wickedly and idolatrously, 1-9. Prophets are sent to predict judgments upon Judah because of his wickedness, 10-16. He dies and is succeeded by Amon, 17, 18. Amon reigns wickedly, 19-22. He is slain by his servants; the people put the conspirators to death, and make his son Josiah king, 23, 24. Amon's acts and burial, 25, 26.

MANASSEH was twelve years old when he began to reign, and reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hephzi-bah.

2 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, after the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

tears of the broken in heart; and will give health, length of days, and temporal deliverances, as much, and as long, as they are truly beneficial.—The minister of Christ must deliver his Lord's message, even when it contains alarms and rebukes; but he delights to be the messenger of joy and consolation, to those whom his word has previously wounded.—If we would have promised mercies, we must observe the instituted means; for these, being connected with the end by the express promises of God, are far more certainly efficacious, when used properly, than any of these means which produce their effect in the ordinary course of Providence: and yet, the latter ought not to be neglected, lest we tempt rather than trust the Lord.—Recovery from sickness should always be publicly acknowledged, by first "going up to the house of the LORD," to render the sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving, if it can be done: yet alas! few observe this rule, and many of those few do it as a formal task; while re-established health is employed in scenes of diversion or business, if not more directly devoted to the service of Satan by licentious pleasures. (Note, Luke 17:11-19.) But the true believer values the ability and opportunity of attending on the ordinances of God, and will go up with a glad and thankful heart; (Notes, Ps. 118:17-24.) and will value that, more than any other privilege of health.—True faith is not without its misgivings, so that the strongest believers desire to have theirs more strengthened: and in their experience, the Lord is pleased sometimes to give those evidences of his power, truth, and love to them, which establish their hearts as effectually as miraculous signs did of old. All creatures are his servants, to minister to the good of his children; and in answer to their prayers he can, in innumerable ways, render them subservient even to their spiritual benefit.

V. 12-21. Alas! how seldom do we make suitable returns to the Lord for his condescending mercies to us! Ambition and ostentation too generally intrude, where thankfulness alone should occupy the heart; and we are often chargeable with pride, vanity, and carnal confidence, when we do not suspect ourselves.—It is very difficult to possess distinctions in rank, wealth, elegant furniture, or any thing valued by men, without a secret self-preference, and a desire that others should admire the possessor's ingenuity, taste, magnificence, or felicity. This foolish pride the Lord will rebuke and correct in those whom he loves; and especially when they idolize the opinion of ungodly men, and court their acquaintance, because they profess to esteem and admire them. But it is hopeful, when persons in superior rank will endure to be reasoned with, and reproved by those, who in outward circumstances are greatly their inferiors: for generally such interference, however well meant and prudently conducted, excites resentment. If we could look into futurity, it would damp our joy in present prosperity: and we may expect vexation from every object, in proportion as we have been inordinately pleased with it.—Our regard to posterity, and our grief for the gloomy prospects before us, in the church or the world, must not render us unmindful of our present mercies, or induce impatient murmurs. Our God has wise and righteous reasons for all he does, or permits to be done; and if we enjoy peace, and the advantages of true religion in our days, we should be very thankful. Shortly, our trials and services will end together. Our space is limited, though its limits are unknown to us, and then we shall sleep with our fathers. And "blessed are the dead, which die in the Lord; . . . for they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them!"

NOTES.—CHAP. XXI. V. 1, 2. It is uncertain whether Hezekiah had any other children than Manasseh, or any other wives than Hephzi-bah, whose name signifies My delight is in her. (Is. 62:4.) Doubtless, Manasseh had been properly educated during the lifetime of his father; and the rudiments of religious knowledge which he then imbibed, though they exceedingly aggravated the guilt of his enormous impiety, idolatry, and cruelty, might prove the seeds of his subsequent repentance: at least we may be sure, that his pious father offered many prayers for him, which at length were answered. (Notes, 2 Chr. 33:12-17.)—It would be pleasing to his youthful mind to inherit a prosperous kingdom

4 And he built altars in the house of the LORD of which the LORD said, In Jerusalem will I put my name.

5 And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the house of the LORD.

6 And he made his son pass through the fire, and observed times, and used enchantments, and dealt with familiar spirits and wizards: he wrought much wickedness in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

7 And he set a graven image of the grove that he had made in the house, of which the LORD

so early in life; but this circumstance proved extremely prejudicial to him, and was still more ruinous to his people. (Notes, P. O. Luke 15:11-16.) The event, as well as the testimony of the prophets, evinces, that Hezekiah's reformation had been complied with in a reluctant and hypocritical manner, especially by many of the chief men: and that the nation was ripening fast for destruction. The nobles, upon whom the regency, or the counselling of the young king, must necessarily devolve, seem to have been disposed to idolatry and by humouring and flattering Manasseh, they trained him to concur with their wishes, and probably to go much beyond them. (Notes, 2 Chr. 24:17, 18. Matt. 23:15.) Soon after Hezekiah's death, his reformation was subverted; and the king proceeded from bad to worse, till he was carried captive to Babylon. Thus Hezekiah, though a prince of eminent piety and excellence, was the son of a very wicked father, and the father of a still more wicked son! (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. It is probable, that Manasseh was taught to consider his father's attachment to the temple, as the effect of a weak and bigoted mind. It appeared to the nobles more convenient, liberal, and magnificent, to have a variety of temples and altars; than to be confined to meet with the poorest of the people, from all parts of the land, at Solomon's temple. (Notes, 1 Kings 12:26-29. 2 Chr. 24:17, 18. Is. 29:13-16.) In contempt therefore of his father's memory, the king rebuilt the high places, which had been piously destroyed. (Notes, 18:1, 22. 2 Chr. 31:1. Ec. 2:12-17.) Yet this seemed but a light thing, and he soon proceeded to copy Ahab's idolatry, and even greatly to exceed it. (Note, 1 Kings 16:30-33.)

V. 4, 5. In order, as it were, the more directly to insult the God of Israel, Manasseh built altars to his idols, and to the host of heaven, the sun, moon, and stars; (Note, Deut. 4:19.) not only in Jerusalem, where the Lord had recorded his name; but even in the courts of the temple itself; both that into which the priests and Levites, and such as brought sacrifices entered, and that in which the other worshippers assembled. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Chr. 33:6-8.)

V. 6. His son. "His children." 2 Chr. 33:6. Amon was not born till the thirty-third year of Manasseh's reign, which is generally computed to have been subsequent to his captivity and repentance. (1, 19.) If so, some other son was thus dedicated to his idol, perhaps with some of his daughters likewise, of whom nothing is recorded. But it may be doubted whether Manasseh's captivity was so long before his death: the general character of his reign in Scripture, and the very imperfect reformation which afterwards took place, seem to render that opinion improbable; and there is no scriptural information concerning the date of his captivity, or even the name of the Assyrian king who carried him captive: so that perhaps Amon was the son here peculiarly intended. (Note, 2 Chr. 33:1.)

Observed times, &c.] (Notes, Ex. 22:18. Deut. 18:9-12.) The persons who practised, or pretended to, these several methods of holding correspondence with invisible agents, or obtaining information from them, were Manasseh's oracles: and he inquired of them, instead of consulting the Lord by his prophets, or by the high-priest. No doubt, they humoured his vanity, and aimed to gratify his curiosity, without teaching him his duty, or reproving him for his sins. In this he went beyond all his predecessors. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Chr. 10:13, 14. 2 Chr. 33:3, 10.)

V. 7, 8. Notes, 2 Sam. 7:8-11. 1 Kings 6:11-13. 9:3-6. Ps. 78:69.

Of the grove. (7) אֲשֶׁר־עָשָׂה. Perhaps this was a model of some grove, used for idolatrous worship: though it is commonly supposed to have been the image of one of Manasseh's idols. (Note, 17:16.) Some think that it was a wooden image of Ashteroth, or Astarte. (Note, Judg. 2:11-13.)—Manasseh seems to have placed this image in the temple itself. Thus he purposely affronted the Lord, and set him at defiance; making the idol his rival, to intercept the adoration of his worshippers.

V. 9. Manasseh proposed one idolatry after another; and the people in general readily complied, both to obtain his said to David, and to Solomon his son, "In this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen out of all tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever :

8 Neither will I make the feet of Israel move any more out of the land which I gave their fathers ; only if they will observe to do according to all that I have commanded them, and according to all the law that my servant Moses commanded them.

9 But they hearkened not : and Manasseh seduced them to do more evil than did the nations, whom the Lord destroyed before the children of Israel.

[Practical Observations.]

10 ¶ And the Lord spake by his servants the prophets, saying,

11 "Because Manasseh king of Judah hath done these abominations, and hath done wickedly above all that the Amorites did, which were before him, and hath made Judah also to sin with his idols :

12 Therefore thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Behold, I am bringing such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah, that whosoever heareth of it, both his ears shall tingle.

13 And I will stretch over Jerusalem the line of Samaria, and the plummet of the house of Ahab : and I will wipe Jerusalem, as a man wipeth a dish, wiping it, and turning it upside down.

14 And I will forsake the remnant of mine inheritance, and deliver them into the hand of their enemies ; and they shall become a prey and a spoil to all their enemies ;

15 Because they have done that which was evil in my sight, and have provoked me to anger, because the day their fathers came forth out of Egypt, even unto this day.

CHAPTER XXII.

Josiah reigns well, 1, 2. He provides for the repairs of the temple, 3-7. Hilkiah finds the book of the law, which is read to the king; who is alarmed, and sends to inquire of God, by Huldah, the prophetess, 8-14. She foretells the destruction of Jerusalem, but speaks peace to Josiah, 15-20.

JOSIAH was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned thirty and one years in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Jedidah the daughter of Adaiah, of Boscath.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, and walked in all the way of David his father, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left.

B. C.] 3 ¶ And it came to pass in the eighteenth year of king Josiah, that the king sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, the son of Meshullam, the scribe, to the house of the LORD, saying, their own masters, and of obtaining early possession of riches or power, that they may indulge their inclinations and self-importance; and too often, from such motives, are secretly rejoiced at the death of their parents. But this generally ruins the comfort of their future lives, and renders them the instruments of immense mischief to those who are unhappily connected with them. It is much safer and happier, when youth is sheltered under the fostering care of affectionate and prudent parents, or of faithful guardians and tutors; till greater maturity of age and experience gives a more hopeful prospect of discretion. Though such young persons are less indulged, caressed, and flattered, and are laid under restrictions unpleasant at the time; they may live to be thankful for the restraints, under which at present they are impatient.—None are more abandoned than those, who become wicked after a religious education; for they cannot have quietness in vice, till by desperate courses they have effectually stupified their consciences: and in every case, the greater the obstacles which are surmounted, before men attain to the undisturbed indulgence of their lusts, the more lost they are afterwards to all sense of shame or decency. But the Lord will put his fear into the hearts of his true people, that they shall not finally depart from him: (Note, Jer. 32:38-41.) yet in the reformation of collective bodies, numbers are mere time-servers, such as “believe for a season, but in temptation fall away.” (Note, Matt. 13:20, 21.)—The mind of man is disposed to vibrate from one extreme to another; as the descending stone falls with a force proportioned to the height to which it was raised: so that times of remarkable revival in religion have often been succeeded by those of most notorious infidelity, impiety, and profligacy.—The ambition of excelling prompts sinners to aspire after pre-eminence even in crimes: and men are capable of glorying in having gone beyond all their predecessors in iniquity, and in refining upon the blasphemy and sensuality of former times, or of contemporary rivals in vice!—An infidel neglect of true religion, is often connected with the most absurd credulity and ridiculous superstitions!—Some daring sinners not only seek to gratify their lusts, but seem desirous of forcing their crimes upon the notice of the Almighty; as if ambitious of provoking his indignation by every token of contempt and defiance! and they peculiarly delight in seducing others to commit the same wickedness, as if ambitious also of promoting the ruin of their souls!—The vain glory of young persons often appears in affecting to be wiser than their prudent and pious parents, by reversing all their plans, and especially by treating with contempt their religious singularities, as they suppose them to be.—But these are the ways in which men expose their own folly, and bring ruin upon themselves: thus they forfeit the Lord's favour and protection, and fall under his dreadful indignation: and all the mischief which they have done to others will recoil upon themselves, to their increasing guilt and condemnation; except a timely repentance prevent the fatal consequences.

V. 10-26. If temporal judgments are so dreadful when foreseen or reported; what will be the horror of that day, when “the earth shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain!” (Note, Is. 26:20, 21.) Yet, in the severest vengeance, the Lord proceeds by rule and measure, and does not punish either nations or individuals beyond their deserts.—External privileges, instead of benefiting those who neglect the obedience of faith, will immensely enhance their guilt and punishment.—The Lord will cast off any professing people, who dishonour him by their crimes, and who persecute his servants: but he will never desert his cause on earth.—When sinners disregard the invitations and exhortations of God's ministers, they are constrained to denounce his awful vengeance. Then resentment will be awakened in the hearts of the proud and rebellious, and faith and patience will be peculiarly requisite: but the servants of the Lord will overcome all, “by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony.”—It is inconceivable what wickedness some men may ‘sum the silver which is brought into the house of the LORD, which the keepers of the door have gathered of the people:

5 And let them deliver it into the hand of the doers of the work, that have the oversight of the house of the LORD: and let them give it to the doers of the work, which is in the house of the LORD, to repair the breaches of the house,

6 Unto carpenters, and builders, and masons, and to buy timber and hewn stone to repair the house.

7 Howbeit, there was no reckoning made with them of the money that was delivered into their hand, because they dealt faithfully.

8 ¶ And Hilkiah the high-priest said unto Shaphan the scribe, I have found the book of the law in the house of the LORD. And Hilkiah gave the book to Shaphan, and he read it.

have lived to commit, who yet have not only been spared, but pardoned: (Notes, Dan. 4.) such transgressors cannot forgive themselves, but would live and die covered with shame and self-abhorrence for all their crimes.—Whether the Lord bear long with presumptuous offenders, or whether he more speedily cut them off in their sins; all those who persist in forsaking him, and in refusing to walk in his ways, must perish: and the wickedness of the parent often occasions the destruction of the children. It is well, however, when the removal of the ungodly makes way for better characters: yet those who, instigated by any corrupt passion, execute deserved vengeance upon wicked men, will bring deserved vengeance upon themselves also.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXII. V. 1, 2. Josiah was seated on the throne by those, who brought his father's murderers to justice, and who doubtless were friends to the family of David: for “the people of the land,” must be understood to mean, at least, a majority of the elders and great men assembling, and, with the approbation of the people, declaring to whom the right of succeeding to the throne belonged. It may be supposed, that some of the nobles were concerned in the conspiracy against Amon, or favoured the cause. (Note, 21. 20-24.) We may therefore conclude that the persons, intrusted with Josiah's education, were at least averse to idolatry, and favourable to the worship of JEROVAH. Perhaps his mother was a pious person, and instilled good principles into his tender mind. By the blessing of God, however, on the means used, he was very early brought under religious impressions, and set about the work of public reformation: and the event of his succession when a child was widely different from that of Manasseh. (Notes, 21:1-3.) For his character was most excellent: he copied the faith, zeal, and piety of his ancestor David, and kept the middle path, without diverging to any of those extremes to which human nature is prone. (Notes, 18:3, 5, 6.) And had the people as cordially concurred in his reformation, as he entered upon and persevered in it, blessed effects would have followed: but they were given up to the most infatuated idolatry and wickedness, and his efforts only served to evince the incurable wickedness of that generation. (Notes, Jer. 3:6-11. 6: 27-30. Ez. 24:12, 13.)—We can obtain but a superficial knowledge of the state of Judah from these compendious historical records, unless we compare them with the writings of the contemporary prophets.

V. 3-7. Josiah began to seek the Lord in the eighth year of his reign, and to attempt a public reformation in the twelfth; so that considerable progress had before been made in destroying the idols, which filled Judah and Jerusalem to an almost inconceivable degree: but in his eighteenth year he proceeded to reinstate the temple and its worship in their former splendour, and the principal reformation in his reign was effected at this time. (Note, 2 Chr. 34:3-7.)—The money was collected by voluntary contributions, as in the time of Jehoshaphat: but the Levites proved more active and faithful, than the priests had then been; and the workmen were no less worthy of confidence. (Notes, 12:4-15. 2 Chr. 34:8-13.)

V. 8-11. The inquiries and controversies, which this account of finding the book of the law has occasioned, seem to have been quite unnecessary. If it were conceded, that no other complete copy existed in all the world, at the time when this book was found, it would not in the smallest degree invalidate the authenticity of that part of holy writ: because all the succeeding writers of the Scriptures, with Christ himself and his apostles, have given the sanction of their testimony to its divine original. All the cavils and objections therefore of infidels, grounded upon this circumstance, mean nothing; except they are intended to demonstrate their inbred enmity to the sacred Scriptures.—It is highly probable, that copies of the law were at that time very scarce, through the idolatry of the former reigns, and the lamentable ungodliness of the people. It may also be reasonably conjectured, that the priests had made abstracts from it, of the outlines of their

9 And ²Shaphan the scribe came to the king, and brought the king word again, and said, Thy servants have gathered the money that was found in the house, and have delivered it into the hand of them that do the work, that have the oversight of the house of the LORD.

10 And Shaphan the scribe showed the king, saying, Hilkiah the priest hath delivered me a book. And ²Shaphan read it before the king.

11 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, that he rent his clothes.

[Practical Observations.]

12 And the king commanded Hilkiah the priest, and ²Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and ²Achbor the son of ¹Michaiah, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asaiah a servant of the king's, saying,

13 Go ye, inquire of the LORD for me, and for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found: for great is the wrath of the LORD that is kindled against us, because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according unto all that which is written concerning us.

14 So Hilkiah the priest, and Ahikam, and Achbor, and Shaphan, and Asaiah, went unto Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of ²Tikvah the son of Harhas, keeper of the wardrobe, (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the college;) and they communed with her.

15 And she said unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Tell the man that sent you to me,

16 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the words of the book which the king of Judah hath read.

17 Because they have forsaken me, and have burnt incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be kindled against this place, and shall not be quenched.

18 But to the king of Judah which sent you to inquire of the LORD, thus shall ye say to him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, As touching the words which thou hast heard;

19 Because thy heart was tender and thou hast humbled thyself before the LORD, when thou heardest what I spake against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, that they should become a desolation and a curse, and hast rent worship, without specifying particulars, or inserting the solemn sanctions annexed to each of them. This would spare them the trouble of transcribing, or studying, or reading to the people, the whole book; and, as these abstracts would come into common use, few people would look any further. But had not a universal traditional recollection of the law, and in general of its contents, prevailed in the nation; how could the book, when found, have obtained proper and implicit credit as the word of God by Moses? In the dark ages of popery this was precisely the case: the liturgies and rituals contained a few selected portions of Scripture; and not only were the people kept in the dark as to the entire contents of the Bible, but few even of the priests had ever read it through, and numbers of these had never seen a complete copy of it. The same naturally becomes the case still, (notwithstanding the multiplication of copies of the Bible by the art of printing, and its public allowance in the vulgar tongue, and the commendable pains bestowed by pious persons to disperse them;) whenever any set of men become strenuous for one part of religion in preference to the rest. They, who are the oracles of each party, insert in their writings those portions of Scripture, which are supposed to inculcate the doctrines for which they contend; but keep out of sight, perhaps without design, those passages which as strongly declare what they undervalue, overlook, or are prejudiced against. And these writings form the religion of the zealous friends of that party, while the rest of the Scripture is comparatively neglected or forgotten. Indeed we all are disposed to have favourite passages of Scripture, to which we are more attentive than to the rest: so that without great care we shall be led into this error.—And may it not be hinted with propriety, that some text-books, which were well designed, are yet capable of a dangerous abuse? I mean those books, which give a text of Scripture for every day, with pious observations upon it. Many read these in family worship, instead of the Bible itself; and others, it is likely, do the same in their closets: but numbers are thus undesignedly led to substitute a part for the whole; the abstract with an exposition, instead of the book of the law: whereas “all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.” (Note, 2 Tim. 3:14-17.) The proper use of such books is to suggest subjects for pious meditations and ejaculations, in the intervals of conversation and business.—The book, which Hilkiah found, seems to have been the original book of the law, deposited by Moses at the side of the ark; (Note, Deut. 31:26.) but which in those distracted times had been removed, either for concealment, lest it should be destroyed by the idolaters, or in contempt by those who were turning every thing into confusion. Some argue that this circumstance occasioned Josiah's consternation: but he certainly acted like a man who had never seen the law before; and this most likely was the case, though there might be copies dispersed among his subjects. It is probable his reformation had hitherto been conducted by such abstracts, as have been mentioned, or by traditional knowledge. If the kings of Judah had observed the rule of transcribing the law with their own hands, very salutary effects might have been produced; but it seems to have been entirely neglected, as well as the command to read the law publicly to the people, every year at the feast of tabernacles. (Notes, Deut. 17:18. 31:9-13. Neh. 8:1-18. 9:3.)

—It is supposed that the portion, which was first read to Josiah, was the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth chapters of Deuteronomy: and these were doubtless well suited to convince him, that the guilt and danger of his people was much greater than he had apprehended, and to induce the expressions of fear, sorrow, and humiliation, which he showed. We may conclude, that he afterwards conducted his reformation with more exactness; as he now wrought by rule, and was aware of the imminent danger to which he and his subjects were exposed.

V. 12, 13. Very little is recorded concerning the high-priests, as active instruments in reformation, and reviving true religion. Hilkiah indeed seems to have been a man of good character; though it is likely, not well acquainted with the divine law. (Marg. Ref.) Josiah, however, never proposed inquiring of the Lord, by him and the breastplate of judgment; nor did Hilkiah object, when sent with others to inquire of a prophetess. Either he was ignorant, that to inquire of God was one distinguishing part of his office; or he humbly thought himself unworthy to perform it; or this method of inquiry was considered as obsolete; having fallen into disuse, perhaps, from the too general want of true piety in the high-priests, who had been superseded in this respect by the prophets raised up in constant succession. (Note, 19:2.)—²Ahikam. (12) Note, Jer. 26:24.

V. 14. Huldah, &c.] Jeremiah and Zephaniah prophesied at this time; but perhaps being young, and newly entered on their work, they were of inferior note; or they were elsewhere employed. (Notes, Jer. 1:1-3. Zeph. 1:1.)—The ordinary ministry, both under the Old and New Testament, is confined to men: but the Lord is not bound by those restrictions which he imposes upon us; and he has often conferred on women the spirit of prophecy. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, 1 Cor. 14:34, 35. 1 Tim. 2:11-14.)—Huldah was doubtless a person of eminent piety, and well known to be a prophetess. She was a married woman, and her husband being keeper of the wardrobe, might make her better known to Josiah, who perhaps had before this consulted her.—Whether the word rendered “the college” means an institution at Jerusalem, in some respects similar to the schools of the prophets in Israel; or whether it only denotes, according to the marginal reading, the part of the city in which she lived, is not agreed. The latter opinion, however, seems most probable, as the same word (מִכְשֶׁר) is in the next chapter translated “of the second order.” (Note, 23:4.)

V. 15-20. The sentence denounced concerning the desolations of Jerusalem was irrevocable: but as Josiah acted in a manner which showed that he was a man of a broken heart and a tender conscience, a true penitent, and a real believer, he would be spared the anguish of witnessing those dire calamities. (Notes, 1 Kings 21:27-29. Is. 17:15, 16. 66:1-2. Jer. 36:20-25. Ez. 9:3, 4.) Though he was slain in battle, yet he died in peace with God, and went to glory. thy clothes, and wept before me; 'I also have heard thee, saith the LORD.

20 Behold therefore, 'I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou shalt be 'gathered into thy grave in peace; and thine eyes shall not see all the evil which I will bring upon this place. And they brought the king word again.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Jeoliah reads the law in a solemn assembly gathered for that and similar purposes, 1, 2. He enters into covenant with God; and abolishes idolatry in Judah, 3-14. He burns men's bones on the altar at Beth-el; fulfils the prediction of the prophet sent to Je-ohaz; destroys the high places in Samaria, and slays the priests, 15-20. He celebrates a solemn passover, 21-23. He puts away wizards, &c. 24; and reviveth all his predecessors, 25. The wrath of God against Judah is yet unquenched, 26-28. But as his piety and zeal could not avail to prevent that catastrophe, he was mercifully 'taken away from the evil to come.' (Marg. Ref. Note, Is. 57:1, 2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. Those who have been favoured in their tender years, with prudent and pious instructors, have very great cause for gratitude: for that circumstance is immediately ordered in Providence, without their even appearing to choose it for themselves, and frequently in opposition to their inclinations; yet it commonly proves the means of determining both the comfort and usefulness, and the happy close, of their future lives.—The Lord frequently demonstrates the sovereignty of his grace, by raising up the brightest ornaments of his church from the most degenerate families.—It is a peculiar favour to be brought to seek and serve God in early life, and to be led to copy closely the best examples.—It is incumbent on us to keep the narrow way, and to avoid the extremes which are found on the right and on the left: and great watchfulness is requisite so to shun self-righteous pride, as to keep clear of antinomian abuse of the gospel. In escaping from superstition, we are in danger of running into inexpedient indulgence, or irreverence to things sacred. Fierce and contentious zeal, in some men, leads others to sooth themselves in lukewarmness, indolence, and timidity: and in numberless ways, when avoiding one evil, we are prone to run into another; or so to attend to one part of religion, as to neglect others, and thus to mar that proportion and symmetry, which are its peculiar ornament. But if, with all our circumspection, we are kept from great and mischievous mistakes; we must give all the praise to him, who leads his people "in the midst of the paths of judgment." (Prov. 8:20.)—The interests and passions of men raise up so many obstructions, that public reformatations commonly move heavily; and can only be effected by perseverance, gradually, and as the zealous reformers obtain influence, and establish their characters by "patient continuance in well-doing."—Yet, in the worst of times, we meet with examples of liberality, fidelity, and integrity, which are worthy of praise and imitation.—The prevalence of impiety, infidelity, superstition, or licentiousness, renders the word of God a neglected book; and that neglect reciprocally augments these evils. And when professed ministers grow careless, selfish, or superstitious, the people of course become generally ignorant of the sacred oracles: and far more, when they employ their influence, and exert their authority, to keep the Scriptures, as translated into the language of their several countries, out of the hands of the common people; and to discountenance the study of them; and when they endeavour to obstruct those who would circulate, and encourage the study of, the oracles of God. Alas! that this stigma of popery should disgrace so many rulers and teachers of our protestant church! But whenever the clergy in general, and those of superior authority and reputation in particular, shall make it their great business, to call the attention of the people to the Scriptures, and to bring them acquainted with the whole of them; their conduct will have a most extensive effect, in preventing the influx of vice, and in promoting true knowledge and genuine piety. "For the word of God is quick and powerful;" and being "sharper than any two-edged sword," it penetrates the heart and conscience with irresistible energy. (Notes, Jer. 23:28, 29. Heb. 4:12, 13.) By the holy law is the knowledge of sin, and by the blessed gospel is the knowledge of salvation. When the former is understood, in its strictness, extent, excellency, and awful sanction, the sinner perceives his guilt, is convinced that the great wrath of the Lord is kindled against him for his transgressions; and begins to inquire, "What must I do to be saved?" This excites his attentive regard to the ministry and ministers of the gospel: who point out to him "Jesus Christ, as the end of the law for righteousness, unto every one that believeth." And when the sinner has been taught to trust and love the Saviour, he will thenceforth walk in newness of life.—The scarcity of the written word did not excuse Israel's degeneracy and idolatry, because it was the effect of it; "the people loved to have it so;" but the abundance of Bibles with which this land is favoured, will exceedingly aggravate the guilt of our national impiety, infidelity, and licentiousness: for what greater contempt of God can we show, than to refuse to read his word, when put into our hands; or reading it, to refuse to believe and obey it?

V. 12-20. The ministers of religion must communicate to the people whatever they have learned respecting the will of God, whether alarming or encouraging: otherwise they do not "declare his whole counsel," nor "keep themselves pure from the blood of all men."—Kings and rulers being personally as much concerned as their subjects to humble themselves before God, to know his will, and to seek his salvation; and their conduct being of still greater importance to others; those who minister before them in sacred things, should especially instruct them in the whole of divine revelation: and they are guilty of the basest and most cruel unfaithfulness, to them and to millions, if from regard to their own safety or emolument, they keep back offensive truths.—Those princes who are acquainted with able and faithful servants of God, and who are not deterred by evil counsel from consulting them, and from encouraging them without needless ceremony to speak the whole truth, best consult their own good, and that of their subjects.—It is also becoming when superior stated pastors and rulers of the church discard prejudice and jealousy, respecting those among their inferiors, or of other orders in society, whom God endows with peculiar spiritual gifts for the edifying of his people; when, instead of standing upon character and precedence, and hindering others from regarding their advice, they take the lead in honouring the grace of God in them, and gladly receive their profitable instructions. Such are wise men, and will daily grow wiser; because they are conscious that they have not attained, but need continual accessions to their measure of divine knowledge and grace: but those who are too great or too proud to learn, even from their inferiors, are likely to live and to die without true wisdom.—In communicating his special blessings, the Lord does not restrict himself to age, or sex, or order, or condition in society; but "divideth severally to every one, as he will;" and true sanctity consists in separation from sin, and devotedness to God; and not in seclusion from society, or from that state which he has pronounced honourable.—There are kinds and degrees of guilt, which the Lord will not pardon, either in individuals or nations; and the discovery of men's iniquities will fully demonstrate the justice of his most tremendous vengeance on them. But a tender, broken, and contrite heart, a humble consciousness of having deserved wrath, and an earnest application for mercy, are things which "accompany salvation," and will never be rejected by our gracious Lord and Saviour. (Note, Heb. 6:9, 10.) Whatever persons of this character ear, suffer, or witness, or in what way soever they are removed out of the world, they shall be gathered to the grave in peace, and shall enter into the rest reserved for the people of God.

V. 1, 2. Note, Deut. 31:10-13.—The prophets. (2) It may be supposed, that Jeremiah, Zephaniah, Huldah, and others were present on this occasion, encouraging and assisting the king in his pious undertaking: yet it is probable, that the king neither employed them, nor the priests, in reading the law to the elders of the people, at least not exclusively; but that he performed the service personally as the principal reader, though others might be employed in the same manner, in different stations; 'for it is not likely that one man's voice could reach so great a multitude.' *Bp. opinion, that he only engaged others to rend the law, seems to be taken from modern refinements, and sentiments of royal dignity; and not from facts, good sense, or the examples of pious princes in those days. (Notes, 2 Sam. 6:12-22. 1 Kings 8:10-61. Ex. 1:1.) For such is human nature, that so trivial a circumstance as the rank of the reader or speaker, will frequently excite greater attention than matters of acknowledged superior importance.—Though Josiah was assured that no reformation could prevent the desolations of Jerusalem; yet he would do what he could to prolong her state, to rescue a remnant as brands out of the burning, and to sow good seed, which might afterwards produce a reformation even among the dispersed captives.

V. 3. (Marg. Ref.) The prophets, priests, and elders, and through them the whole nation by their representatives, bound themselves at this time, in the most solemn manner, to renounce and abolish every species of idolatry, to re-establish the worship of God according to the law, and to serve him in righteousness and true holiness. We learn from the event, that the most of those present, who "stood to the covenant," were hypocritical in the transaction; being induced to concur, in order to please the king, or to avoid his displeasure and the reproach of singularity; or by some transient impression upon their minds. Yet Josiah did well in requiring them thus to engage, as far as they could be prevailed on without compulsion. A great deal of outward wickedness would be prevented; many individuals would receive essential benefit; and in every way the name, worship, and law of God were honoured: while those who acted hypocritically, and violated their engagements by apostasy, were accountable to God for their conduct. (Notes, 11:17-20. Deut. 29:10-15. Neh. 10:1.) Indeed, no effectual means can be used of doing extensive good, which will not eventually prove an occasion of deeper guilt and condemnation to many. (Notes, John 15:22-25. 2 Cor. 2:14-17.)—Pillar.] (Marg. Ref. e.) "At the entrance of the court of the priests, by a marble pillar." Bp. Patrick.

V. 4. "The priests of the second order," seem to have been the heads of the several courses, which served in rotation, under the person next in succession to the high-priesthood, who acted upon emergencies as deputy to the high-priest. These were the chief priests mentioned so often in the New Testament. (Notes, 1 Chr. 24:1-19. Ezra 2:36-39.)—Josiah in his former well-meant attempts for reformation, had probably removed the idols, and abolished the worship of them in Jerusalem: but perhaps he had supposed, that the vessels and other valuables might be reserved for the use of the temple. Being, however, now more fully instructed in the law of God, he destroyed all these vessels, however costly, by fire; and in his progress through the land, he carried the ashes to Beth-el, the beginning of idolatry to Israel, as established by public authority; in order to render both the place, and these ashes contemptible and abominable to the people. (Notes, 1 Kings 12:26-33. 13:1-10.)

V. 5. Chemarim, the name of these priests, (marg.) is supposed to be derived from the black garments which they wore, and by which they were distinguished from the priests of JEHOVAH, who wore garments of white linen. (Notes, Ex. 28:40. Hos. 10:5, 6. Zeph. 1:4.)

V. 6. Marg. Ref. Note, Ex. 32:20.—The graves, &c.] The graves of the worshippers of these idols are meant. This was another expedient, to render these idols and the idolaters alike vile and abominable to the spectators.

V. 7. Note, 21:7, 8, v. 7.—Hangings, &c.] It is supposed that these hangings were intended for tents, in which the devotees of the demons perpetrated the most detestable species of lewdness, as a part of their religion, and as near as possible to the house of the Lord itself! This was even worse than making that holy place a den of thieves. (Notes, Ex. 8:7-14. Matt. 21:12, 13. P. O. 12-16.)

V. 8. It is probable that these high places were defiled, by casting the bones or dead bodies of men into them. Thus the people in general would be preserved from going thither, where they had so expressly been declared abominable; though presumptuous persons should rebuild them.—Josiah showed his impartiality, when he destroyed those high places at the gates of the city, which seem to have been erected under the patronage of a considerable person, entitled "the governor of the city."

From Geba, &c.] (Marg. Ref. y, z.) The northern and southern borders of the kingdom of Judah.

V. 9. It does not appear that these priests had been guilty of idolatry, but of irregularly and illegally worshipping JEHOVAH in the high places, instead of at the temple. To deter others from this inveterate practice, they were excluded from their sacred functions; but not put to death, or deprived of their maintenance, though it is uncertain what portions were allotted them. (Notes, Lev. 21:17-24. Ex. 44:10-16.)

V. 10. Notes, Lev. 18:21. 20:2-5.—Topheth, &c.] This place derived its name from a word, which signifies a drum; because they used to drown the cries of the children, who there passed through the fire, or were burned in it, by the sound of drums. (Notes, Is. 30:33. Jer. 7:32, 33.)

V. 11. The worshippers of the sun represented that luminary, by a man seated in a chariot drawn by swift and furious horses; and therefore they dedicated to him horses and chariots. The kings of Judah had imitated this custom, and kept the horses of the sun at the entrance of the temple: and a person, who, as it seems, was very honourably provided for, was employed to take care of them! But Josiah took away the horses and burned the chariots.

V. 12-14. Manasseh, after his repentance, had removed the altars from the courts of the Lord: but it is probable that Amon had replaced or rebuilt them, and they retained the name of their original deviser. (Notes, 2 Chr. 33:15-17, 21-25.) The high places which Solomon had built, had doubtless been in part at least demolished: but the idolatrous kings had rebuilt or repaired them, and dedicated them to the same idols, and called them by Solomon's name; perhaps glorying that they copied the example of so illustrious a prince. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Kings 11:1-8.) The sacred writer seems to call the hill on which these high places were erected, and which is supposed to have been the mount of Olives, "the mount of corruption," because of the abominations there committed. All these, as well as the altars, which had been made mination of the Moabites, and for ^mMileom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king detile.

16 And as Josiah turned himself, he spied the sepulchres that were there in the mount, and sent, and took the bones out of the sepulchres, and burned them upon the altar, and polluted it, according to the word of the LORD which the man of God proclaimed, who proclaimed these words.

17 Then he said, What title is that that I see? And the men of the city told him, ⁱIt is the sepulchre of the man of God which came from Judah, and proclaimed these things that thou hast done against the altar of Beth-el.

18 And he said, Let him alone; let no man move his bones. So they let his bones ^halone, with the bones of the prophet that came out of Samaria.

on the flat roofs of their houses, for more retired idolatrous worship, Josiah cleared away entirely, and used every method of rendering the places, where idolatry had been committed, contemptible and vile.

V. 15-20. Josiah had evidently some authority over a great part of the country, which the ten tribes had occupied; (2 Chr. 34:6.) but it is not certain, whether this was by grant from the king of Assyria, or by the willing subjection of the inhabitants: the former, however, appears the more probable. (Note, 29:30.) On this occasion he exactly accomplished the prediction of the man of God concerning him, delivered about three hundred and sixty years before: and though he may be supposed to have designed that accomplishment; yet so wicked a man as his father could have had no such intentions, in giving his son the name of Josiah. (Notes, 1 Kings 13:2, 23-32.)—It seems that many Israelites had collected together in several parts of the land; and especially, that the idolatrous priests had resorted to Beth-el to renew their old idolatry. (Notes, 17:24-28.) These Josiah put to death, perhaps with others from the land of Judah who were notoriously guilty. By burning men's bones upon their altars he endeavoured to render their idolatry detestable to all the inhabitants; that they might be induced to join themselves to the Jews in the worship of God at Jerusalem: for nothing was so polluting by the ceremonial law, as a dead human body, or any part of one. (Note, Num. 19:11.)—It has been justly observed, that if Josiah had entertained the same notions of the sanctity of relics, which have so long prevailed among professed Christians; he would have bestowed at least as much pains in honouring the bones of the old prophet from Judah, as he did in disgracing those of the idolatrous priests. But he thought it enough to let the bones of the man of God lie quietly in his grave.

V. 21-23. Having made all necessary preparation, Josiah proceeded to lead the attention of the people to their solemn feasts; and this first passover was celebrated with extraordinary zeal and exactness, and by immense multitudes; so that in all respects it exceeded every passover which had been observed from the days of Joshua. It must be supposed, that in the reigns of the idolatrous kings, this and the other sacred festivals were often entirely neglected; yet, under the judges, and during the reign of the pious kings, they were observed; but in no instance, with such regularity and zeal, and by so great numbers as at this time. (Notes, 2 Chr. 30: 18.)

21 [¶] And the king commanded all the people saying, ^hKeep the passover unto the LORD your God, ^has it is written in the book of this covenant.

22 Surely ^hthere was not holden such a passover from the days of the judges that judged Israel, nor in all the days ^hof the kings of Israel, nor of the kings of Judah;

23 But in the eighteenth year of king Josiah ^{wherein} this passover was holden to the LORD in Jerusalem.

24 [¶] Moreover, ^hthe workers with familiar spirits, and the wizards, and the ⁱimages, and the idols, and all the abominations that were spied in the land of Judah and in Jerusalem, did Josiah put away, ^hthat he might perform the words of the law, which were written in ^hthe book that Hilkiah the priest found in the house of the LORD.

25 And ^hlike unto him was there no king before him, ^hthat turned to the LORD with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, ^haccording to all the law of Moses; neither after him arose there any like him.

26 [¶] Notwithstanding, the LORD turned not from the fierceness of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled against Judah, because of all the ^hprovocations that Manasseh had provoked him withal.

V. 24. (Marg. Ref.) The whole narrative marks the care with which this pious prince had studied "the book of the law," after it was found; the diligent investigation which he made to detect and destroy every thing forbidden in it; and the exactness, as well as earnestness, with which his reformation was conducted. Had the princes and people been as sincere and zealous as their king, the happiest effects would have followed. (Notes, Jer. 3:6-11. Zeph. 1:5-8.)

V. 25. Hezekiah excelled all the kings of Judah for entire confidence in God; and Josiah surpassed all others in zeal for reformation, and in an unblemished life, being attentive to obey the precepts, and promote the glory of God, with his whole heart and soul. (Note, 18:5, 6. 2 Chr. 31:20, 21.) 'Hezekiah himself was not so exact, and did not make such a thorough search as he did after all idolatrous practices.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 26, 27. Josiah lived above thirteen years after this great reformation, and to the end retained the people in the external worship of God: (2 Chr. 34:33.) but in general they relapsed secretly into many of their former idolatries and iniquities; and, as a collective body, they were not greatly amended in the sight of a heart-searching God.—They had heartily concurred in the idolatries and crimes of Manasseh, but they had not imitated his repentance: on the other hand they had hypocritically joined in Josiah's reformation, and were ripe, upon his removal, to join the apostasy of his sons. (Note, 25.) Manasseh's wickedness therefore was accounted national, and filled up their measure of iniquity; whereas Josiah's piety was personal, and the hypocrisy and apostasy of the people aggravated their guilt and hastened their ruin. (Notes, 21:13-16. 22:15-20. 24:3, 4.) But though the Lord did not turn from the fierceness of his great wrath, so as to spare Jerusalem from desolation, and the Jews from captivity; yet this event proved a kind of crisis in their disease: and while the wicked perished in vast numbers, the remnant was purified; and Josiah's reformation probably had a very happy effect, in raising up many persons to join this small remnant, which proved the precious seed of their future church and nation.

V. 29, 30. Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, assisted by the Medes, is supposed, before this time, to have conquered the Assyrians and destroyed Nineveh. Thus he became king of Assyria also: and some learned men are of opinion, that after Manasseh was freed from captivity, the kings of Judah reigned over the country formerly possessed by the ten tribes the river Euphrates: and king Josiah went against him; and he slew him at Megiddo, when he had seen him.

30 And his servants carried him in a chariot dead from Megiddo, and brought him to Jerusalem, and buried him in his own sepulchre. And the people of the land took Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, and anointed him, and made him king in his father's stead.

31 ¶ Jehoahaz was twenty and three years old when he began to reign; and he reigned three months in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

32 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his fathers had done.

33 And Pharaoh-nechoh put him in bands at Riblah, in the land of Hamath, that he might not reign in Jerusalem; and put the land to a tribute of a hundred talents of silver, and a talent of gold.

34 And Pharaoh-nechoh made Eliakim the son of Josiah king in the room of Josiah his father, and turned his name to Jehoiakim, and took Jehoahaz away: and he came to Egypt, and died there.

35 And Jehoiakim gave the silver and the gold to Pharaoh; but he taxed the land to give the money according to the commandment of Pharaoh: he exacted the silver and the gold of the people of the land, of every one according to his taxation, to give it unto Pharaoh-nechoh.

36 ¶ Jehoiakim was twenty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah.

37 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his fathers had done.

as tributaries and allies to the kings of Babylon.—Josiah might therefore consider himself as under engagements to the king of Assyria, as well as unwilling that the contending parties should march their armies through his country: he however lost his life in the attempt. Megiddo was situated in the lot of Manasseh, in a northern part of the land: (Judg. 1:27.) but at this time it seems to have been under Josiah's government. Perhaps Josiah disguised himself, that the king of Egypt might not know him; but he, having discovered him, singled him out for slaughter. When he had received his mortal wound, he was carried out of the battle, and he died by the way to Jerusalem. (Note, 2 Chr. 35:20—24.)—It has commonly been observed that our young king Edward VI. greatly resembled Josiah. He gave indeed singular evidence of wisdom and piety far beyond his years: but he was taken away at the age when Josiah first began to seek the Lord; and we can only conjecture what he would have been and done, if he had been spared to reach the age at which Josiah was slain.—The people of the land placed Jehoahaz, or Shallum, the second son of Josiah on the throne in preference to his elder brother Jehoiakim: (Note, 22:1, 2.) probably, because he was deemed to be of a more active and martial temper. And to confirm their irregular proceedings, they anointed him, as if he had been immediately appointed by God: (Note, 1 Kings 1:38, 39, v. 39.) but alas! the season of the Lord's graciously giving them pious kings to reign over them was elapsed, and all Josiah's sons proved wicked, impolitic, and unsuccessful. As Zedekiah was no more than twenty-one years old, when he was made king, after Jehoakim had reigned eleven years, and Jeconiah his son a short time; (24:18.) he of course was younger than Jehoahaz, though mentioned before him in Chronicles. (1 Chr. 3:15.)

Josiah went against him. (29) 'Being afraid he intended to invade his country in his passage, or to divert him from his expedition against the Babylonians, with whom he was in league: it is likely the latter was the reason.' Bp. Patrick.—Pharaoh-necho: ... Megiddo.] 'Whom Herodotus ... calls Nekos; (Necos) and mentions the fight which he had with the Syrians en Mygdalum.' (Magdolum.) Bp. Patrick.

V. 33. Jehoahaz had assumed the regal authority without Pharaoh's consent, and perhaps attempted to continue the war against him; which appears probable, because he was bound at Riblah, at the northern extremity of the promised land. Pharaoh, by some means, took him prisoner, deposed him, and sent him bound into Egypt, where he ended his days: (Notes, Jer. 22:10—12. Ez. 19:2—9.) and the land was put under tribute, in token of its subjection to the king of Egypt. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 34. 'Jehoiakim' means the same as 'Eliakim;' except that the latter is compounded with the word translated God, the former with a part of the name JEHOVAH. Pharaoh seems not to have wished Jehoiakim to renounce his religion; but chose to distinguish him, as the ruler of that people, who professed to worship JEHOVAH.—Hitherto the kingdom of Judah had descended in a direct line from father to son: and this is the first instance of one brother succeeding another. (Preface, 1 Kings.)

V. 37. In the prophecy of Jeremiah the extreme wickedness of Jehoiakim is fully shown. (Notes, Jer. 26: 36.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14. Nothing ought to discourage our endeavours to promote a revival of true religion. If declining churches and nations cannot be rescued from impending judgments, a few individuals may be snatched as "brands from the burning;" and if ministers, in their several stations, fail of general or aching usefulness, and have continually the prospect of being removed: many a one may, in the mean time, receive important benefit, and prove the seed of a future revival, even in that very place.—As sinners cannot be preserved from eternal destruction, without repentance; so degenerate nations cannot be rescued from public calamities, without general reformation. To effect this it is the interest of princes to promote the knowledge of God in their dominions; and it is no degradation of their dignity, personally to take an active part in such attempts; which will induce numbers of every order in the community to concur.—All external obligations to the service of God may be entered into with a hypocritical, or self-righteous spirit: yet this should not make us object to such engagements ourselves, or averse to propose them; but only make us cautious in what manner we do it, and careful to inculcate the same caution upon others. It is safe to bind ourselves solemnly to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments; because these are previous indispensable duties, (Note, Num. 30:2.) and some are thus rendered more earnest in attending to them: but the word of God must be the rule and standard in every thing; not only as to the duty itself, but also as to the motive and manner of doing it.—In those nations, which profess to worship God, and which are favoured with the light of revelation, we need only to investigate with diligence, and compare the result of our observations with the word of truth, to discover such enormous and multiplied abominations, as could never have been conceived upon a distant and superficial view, or a judgment formed by other rules. Even in worshipping congregations, an exact scrutiny would commonly bring to light such evils, as before were never suspected; but the most humiliating discoveries will be made, by an exact inquiry into our own hearts and conduct. That man, who previously deemed his behaviour unexceptionable and his heart good, if he can be engaged in diligent self-examination and watchfulness, daily beholding himself in the mirror of God's word, and for a long time comparing with it his thoughts, intentions, dispositions, words, and actions; will experience increasing convictions of the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of his heart, and of the exceeding sinfulness of his whole life. And if he set about amendment, in dependence on the mercy and grace of God in Jesus Christ, and according to the rule of the Bible, he will, as he proceeds, find still more and more to be done; and to the end of his life perceive, that he is very far off from the perfect righteousness of the holy law. Nor are any persons disposed to object to this unfavourable statement, but such as are either unacquainted with the rule, or strangers to a serious examination of their conduct by it. (Note, Jer. 17:9, 10. P. O. Ez. 8: Notes, Rom. 7:7—12. Jam. 1:22—25.) Imperfection is stamped upon all human goodness, and the greatest reformations hitherto seen on earth, have left many things unreformed.—The scriptural history may well excite the hatred and disgust of the proud admirers of the human heart and understanding; as it presents to our view a very mortifying picture of the blindness of man's mind, as well as of the perverseness of his will, and the depravity of his affections. But suppose the appeal made to other histories, or to universal observation and experience:—if the records of Greece and Rome were presented to our view, as a detail of facts, without the varnish of declamation and panegyric; if the conduct of these celebrated nations, in public and private life, throughout their term of notoriety, were impartially compared with the just and holy law of God; would not their idolatries and immoralities be found to exceed even those of Israel? (Note, Rom. 1:28—32.) Would they not picture human nature as blind and depraved as the Bible does? And do not all the enormities bestowed on them, arise from man's disposition to "call good evil, and evil good, to put darkness for light, and light for darkness?" (Note, Is. 5:20.) Pride, ambition, rapacity, cruelty, and revenge, have even been canonized by poets, and orators, and historians; and idolatry, impiety, brutal excess, and unnatural lusts have been called by soft names, and excused, if not vindicated by these elegant and ingenious ancients. CHAPTER XXIV.

Jehoiakim submits to Nebuchadnezzar, but afterwards rebels, 1. God hastens the fulfilment of his predictions against Judah, 2-4. Jehoiakim dies, and is succeeded by Jehoiachin, 5, 6. The king of Babylon prevails against the king of Egypt, 7. Jehoiachin reigns wickedly, 8, 9. Jerusalem is taken; as the king, with his family and treasures, and the sacred vessels, and chief persons of Judah, is carried captive to Babylon, 10-16. Zedekiah is made king, reigns wickedly, and rebels against the king of Babylon, 17-20.

In his days Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up, and Jehoiakim became his servant c. c. three years: then he turned and rebelled 608. against him.

2 And the Lord sent against him bands of the Chaldees, and bands of the Syrians, and bands of the Moabites, and bands of the children of Ammon, and sent them against Judah, to destroy it, according to the word of the Lord, the conclusion is as irrefragable from the study of profane history, as from the records of God's word, that "the imagination of man's heart is only evil from his youth;" and that all the real godliness, or goodness, which has ever been found on earth, has been derived from the new creating Spirit of Jesus Christ.—Persons of eminence, of whatever kind, have need to be very careful what they sanction: for numbers, in distant ages and nations, may be emboldened to transgress, by acceding to their sentiments, or by imitating their examples: and the reflection, of doing extensive mischief for generations to come, would in that case, be a painful prerogative of superior talents, rank, or reputation.—In using all our influence decidedly to suppress abuses, and to oppose iniquity, we should show all allowable tenderness to the persons of men: yet man must not pretend to more mercy than his Maker, by sparing those whom he orders to be punished.—In reducing our conduct, or that of others, to the standard of Scripture, in evident and important matters, no allowance must be made for customary, reputable, ancient, or fashionable abuses: difficulties also must be encountered, hardships endured, self-denial exercised, and opposition and every worldly interest disregarded: no man must be known after the flesh; nor any attention paid to persuasions, complaints, remonstrances, or reproaches; nor even to prejudices, except in matters of subordinate consequence. Therefore courage, constancy, and patience, are requisite for such attempts; and these, when genuine, can only spring from grace and faith, and be given in answer to prayer, without which every undertaking of this kind will be fruitless.—Not only should gross abominations be precluded; but every temptation or occasion of sin should be removed, whatever be the secular loss or expense, if we would effectually glorify God, and do good: and every method should be adopted to fill men's minds with abhorrence of iniquity, and to show plausible abuses in a contemptible and detestable light: especially where godly people are liable to be seduced into pernicious compliances.

V. 15-37. The predictions of Scripture may be so long ere they are accomplished, that the expectation of the event may seem to expire; but they will all be punctually fulfilled in their season: and it must give singular encouragement to the pious, when they find themselves evidently employed in bringing about that accomplishment.—Ungodly persons may, even after death, be more respected for their connexion with the servants of God; but the Judge of all will not regard such distinctions.—When gross iniquities are renounced, and a credible profession of faith, repentance, and devotedness to God are made, men may be deemed prepared for the most solemn ordinances of his worship: though no human care or penetration can exclude formal hypocrites; such attendance on the worship of God is externally honourable to him, and useful to numbers: and, as he will know how at last to separate between the tares and the wheat, we must leave them to grow together till the harvest. The scrutinizing eye of the zealous servant of God will continually find many abuses to be rectified: and we must still press forward, both in personal and public reformation. Those who attempt this with their whole heart, in humility and simplicity, may hope to be useful to others, and shall certainly be accepted themselves; and as there are degrees of excellency among true believers, so they will receive a proportionable recompense. But when the sins of a collective body are come to a crisis, no human endeavours can avert the wrath of God: and when eminent and useful persons are prematurely taken away, it forebodes public calamities. (Note, Is. 57:1, 2.) The best of men may be misled into unadvised meddling with matters not properly belonging to them: but if we are habitually living by faith, and walking with God, even should we be taken away in consequence of any indiscretion, it will not prevent our dying in peace, and being received to glory.—Piety is personal, the effect of special grace. The children even of the most pious parents inherit original depravity; nor can education, instruction, or example prevent its effects, without regeneration: yet abundant encouragement is given to the diligent use of the appointed means of grace, in respect of our children.

3 Surely at the commandment of the Lord came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his sight, for the sins of Manasseh, according to all that he did;

4 And also for the innocent blood that he shed, (for he filled Jerusalem with innocent blood,) which the Lord would not pardon.

5 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

6 So Jehoiakim slept with his fathers: [B. C. 609.] and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

(Notes, Ec. 2:18-23. 9:13-18.) Blessed be God, that good work, which he begins by his regenerating Spirit, cannot be disannulled; but, notwithstanding all changes and temptations, shall be performed unto the day of Jesus Christ.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIV. V. 1. Pharaoh-nechoh, after Josiah's death, obtained a victory over the king of Babylon, and for some time retained Judea and Syria in subjection. But not long after, Nabopolassar seems to have associated his son Nebuchadnezzar with him in the kingdom, that by him the war with the Egyptians might be conducted with greater vigour. For when Daniel had been three years under tuition at Babylon, and had afterwards been introduced to Nebuchadnezzar, he interpreted the dream of that prince in the second year of his reign: yet Daniel had been carried captive by Nebuchadnezzar the king. (Note, Dan. 2:1.) Two distinct dates respecting the beginning of his reign must therefore be admitted; and it appears that he was made king two or three years before his father died.—Nebuchadnezzar having obtained decisive advantages against the Egyptians, attacked Jehoiakim, as an ally of Nechoh, and, having taken him prisoner, he "bound him in fetters to carry him to Babylon;" (2 Chr. 36:6, 7.) but upon his submission he released him, and carried away some of the gold and silver vessels of the temple, and some of the most considerable persons of the land. Among the latter were Daniel and his companions. (Notes, Dan. 1:1-7.) This is the first epoch of the seventy years of the Babylonish captivity. Nebuchadnezzar left Babylon in the third year of Jehoiakim, and he reduced that prince in his fourth year. After this, Jehoiakim served the king of Babylon three years, and in his eighth year he rebelled against him, about three years before his death. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. It may be supposed, that these nations had been subjected to the king of Babylon; and were encouraged by him to attack the revolted Jews, while he was otherwise employed. But the Lord's secret disposal of their hearts to these attempts alone is noticed. It is probable that Jehoiakim was harassed by them during the remainder of his days; and perhaps he was at last slain in some sally against them, when they approached Jerusalem; and so left unburied, or otherwise very disgracefully treated. But some think, that after the transactions here recorded, Nebuchadnezzar carried him to Babylon, and at length put him to death, and treated his dead body most ignominiously. (Note, Jer. 22:13-19. 36:30, 31.)

V. 3, 4. Manasseh's idolatry became a national sin, as publicly enforced by persecution, which filled Jerusalem with the innocent blood of those who refused compliance. The chief men of Judah were involved in this guilt, and had neither repented, nor been brought to justice for it: thus, accumulated and atrocious murders remained unpunished, as a load of guilt upon the land: (Notes, Num. 35:31-34. Deut. 21:1-9. Ez. 22:3-5, 24-28.) and both the princes and people were in general more disposed to imitate Manasseh's idolatries and persecutions, than his repentance. Therefore, though the Lord had pardoned the personal wickedness of penitent Manasseh, he would not pardon the unrepented national guilt, of which he had been the occasion, and in some sense the author. (Note, 23:26, 27. 2 Chr. 33:11-19.)

Out of his sight. (3) Out of that land in which his worship had been established, and the special tokens of his gracious presence so wonderfully vouchsafed. (Notes, Deut. 11:12. Ps. 51:11.)

Would not pardon. (4) לאֶחֱפֹאֵר. The Lord, in his wisdom and righteousness, did not see good to pardon this national guilt, in those circumstances; but judged it proper to inflict condign punishment for it: but the personal sins of such as repented and sought mercy, were pardoned notwithstanding this determination. (Notes, Ez. 18:34, 19-32.)

[Practical Observations.]

8 ¶ Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem three months. And his mother's name was Ne-hushita, the daughter of Elnahath of Jerusalem.

9 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father had done.

10 ¶ At that time the servants of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up against Jerusalem, and the city was besieged.

11 And Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came against the city, and his servants did besiege it.

12 And ¶ Jehoiachin the king of Judah went out to the king of Babylon, he, and his mother, and his servants, and his princes, and his officers: and the king of Babylon took him in the eighth year of his reign.

13 And he carried out thence all the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house, and cut in pieces all the vessels of gold which Solomon king of Israel had made in the temple of the LORD, as the LORD had said.

14 And he carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour even ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and smiths: none remained save the poorest sort of the people of the land.

15 And he carried away Jehoiachin to Babylon, and the king's mother, and the king's wives, and his officers, and the mighty of the land, these carried he into captivity from Jerusalem to Babylon.

16 And all the men of might, even seven thousand, and craftsmen and smiths a thousand, all that were strong and apt for war, even them the king of Babylon brought captive to Babylon.

17 ¶ And the king of Babylon made Mattaniah his father's brother king in his stead, and changed his name to Zedekiah.

18 Zedekiah was twenty and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Harputal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

19 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that Jehoiachim had done.

20 For through the anger of the LORD it came to pass in Jerusalem, and Judah, until he had cast them out from his presence, that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

ass;" the expression, "slept with his fathers," can only mean that he died, without determining what became either of his soul or body. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2.)

V. 7. The king of Egypt having been driven back into his own land, and confined there; the kings of Judah were left entirely at the mercy of Nebuchadnezzar: so that policy, as well as their most solemn engagements, demanded their peaceable submission, and their resignation to the correcting hand of God in that dispensation. (Notes, Ez. 17:2-21.)

V. 8-16. Jehoiachin, or Jechoniah, seems to have mounted the throne on the death of his father, without waiting for the king of Babylon's consent. But it was like going on board a sinking ship. He had just time enough to manifest his evil disposition, and was then attacked by the king of Babylon: who probably, was provoked by his thus assuming the authority, and suspected him of designing to revolt: so that Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem, first by his captains, and then personally. And either by surrender, or upon some deceitful engagement, Jechoniah went forth to him, and was carried captive to Babylon. After all the depredations to which the temple had been exposed, some of the vessels that Solomon had made, remained in the treasures of the temple: but all, except what were in immediate use, seem at this time to have been seized, and some of them cut in pieces, and sent to Babylon. And those, afterwards mentioned, might be such as had been before this carried away, or such as were found at the complete destruction of the temple and city. (25:14, 15. Ezra 1:7-11. Jer. 28:3, 6. Dan. 5:1-4.) It is no where said, what became of the ark of the covenant and the mercy-seat: but in some way these were destroyed; for all allow, that there was no ark in the temple built after the captivity; and it is not improbable, that at this time the gold of the ark, &c. was cut off, and taken away. This event took place in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, (12) and forms a second epoch to be regarded in computing the duration of the captivity. (Notes, 2 Chr. 36:21. Ezra 1:1-4. Dan. 1:1, 2.)—The chief and the most useful of the people were carried to Babylon, that the land might be reduced to absolute dependence on Nebuchadnezzar. Seven thousand soldiers, one thousand craftsmen and smiths, and two thousand persons of superior rank, may make up the sum total of ten thousand. Some learned men, however, suppose, that there were ten thousand carried captive from Jerusalem alone, besides a thousand craftsmen and smiths; and also seven thousand from the rest of the land.—Jeremiah speaks of three thousand and twenty-three, who seem to have been carried away the year before, out of the open country. (Note, Jer. 52:24-30.) Among the rest Ezekiel was at this time made a captive. (Note, Ez. 1:1-3.)

V. 17. Jehoiachin was succeeded by his uncle, the youngest son of Josiah.—"Mattaniah" signifies the gift of JEHOVAH: "Zedekiah," the righteousness of JEHOVAH: and the king of Babylon, by giving him this name, meant either an appeal to the justice of God against him, if he violated his engagements; or to refer to the judgments, which he had heard were denounced against Jerusalem by a righteous God.

V. 20. "God was so highly displeased with this wicked people, that he permitted Zedekiah to break his faith with

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. When the Lord leaves men to the blindness of their own minds, and to the lusts of their own hearts; some are inflated to adopt and obstinately persist in the most destructive measures, and others are hurried on by ambition, avarice, or resentment, to execute upon them the vengeance which had been predicted.—Multiplied murders, sanctioned by authority, and persevered in with impunity, form a species of national wickedness which the Lord will not pardon; especially when false religion is established by law, and persecuting statutes are enacted or revived, and executed against his true worshippers: and when this is not merely the act of a few oppressors, but the people in general "love to have it so." Yet, even this may be endured by the long-suffering of the Lord for many generations; till the whole accumulated load falls upon a devoted people, with direful destruction.—Blessed be God, there is no degree or kind of personal guilt, which he will not pardon to the true penitent; for it is "impossible to renew unto repentance" such as have committed "the sin unto death." (Notes, Heb. 6:4-6. 1 John 5:14-18.) But it is very distressing for those who have obtained forgiveness of their own transgressions, to reflect that they have been the guilty occasion to others, by their examples, influence, or persuasions, of those sins, which, being continued in, the Lord will not pardon; and of which they have no power to bring them to repent. The good Lord preserve us from sin and temptation, and above all from being tempters to others! And may this reflection stir up young persons to seek and serve God without delay, lest they should do that mischief, which, if they themselves should live to repent, they will never be able to undo.—When God arises to judgment all resistance will be ineffectual; and the folly, as well as the wickedness, of every worldly dependence, will be manifest: but his justice will never appear in its full glory, till that day, when "he will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts." (Note, 1 Cor. 4:3-5.) In the mean time, we are incompetent judges of the divine procedures; and ought to wait with silent patience.—Wicked men soon discover the temper of their hearts, and give evidence of what they would do if they were spared: therefore the Lord often cuts them off, to prevent further mischief; and thus hinders them from "treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath." But when their power is taken away, and their lives are spared, though in poverty and misery, it may be an infinite mercy to their souls. (Notes, 25:27-30. Jer. 24:4-7.)

V. 8-20. The gradual approach of divine judgments affords sinners space for repentance, and believers leisure to prepare for properly meeting the calamity: but it only evinces the desperate obduracy and obstinacy of those, who are not deterred from their sins by all which they witness or experience.—God delights in his ordinances, so long as they prove means of grace to those who are favoured with them; but he abhors them, when they degenerate into a lifeless form. and that, which to the carnal eye appears most glorious in reli-

Jerusalem is besieged and taken; Zedekiah flees, and is made prisoner; his sons are slain, his eyes are put out, and he is carried in chains to Babylon.

The residue of the sacred vessels and treasures are carried away, 13-17. The nobles are slain at Riblah, 18-21. Gedaliah who is left governor, being treacherously slain, the rest flee into Egypt, 22-25. After many years, Balthazar shows great kindness to Jehoiachin, 27-30.

AND it came to pass ^ain the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, ^bthat Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came, he, and all his host, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it; and they built forts against it round about.

^{a, c} 2 And the city was besieged unto the ^{eleventh} year of king Zedekiah.

3 And on ^{the ninth day of the fourth month} the famine prevailed in the city, and there was no bread for the people of the land.

4 ¶ And the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled by night by the way of the gate between two walls, which is by the king's garden: (now the Chaldees were against the city round about;) and the king went the way toward the plain.

5 And the army of the Chaldees pursued after the king, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho: and all his army were scattered from him.

6 So they took the king, and brought him up to the king of Babylon to Riblah; and they gave judgment upon him.

7 And they slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes, and put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon.

8 ¶ And in the fifth month, on the seventh day of the month, (which is the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon,) came Nebuzar-adan, captain of the guard, a servant of the king of Babylon, unto Jerusalem:

9 And he burnt the house of the Lord, and the king's house, and all the houses of Jerusalem, and every great man's house, burnt he with fire.

10 And all the army of the Chaldees, that were with the captain of the guard, brake down the walls of Jerusalem round about.

11 Now the rest of the people that were left in the city, and the fugitives that fell away to the king of Babylon with the remnant of the multitude, did Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carry away.

12 But the captain of the guard left of the poor of the land to be vine-dressers and husbandmen.

13 And the pillars of brass that were in the house of the Lord, and the bases, and the brazen sea that was in the house of the Lord, did the Chaldees break in pieces, and carried the brass of them to Babylon.

14 And the pots, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away.

15 And the firepans, and the bowls, and such things as were of gold, in gold, and of silver, in silver, the captain of the guard took away.

16 The two pillars, one sea, and the bases which Solomon had made for the house of the Lord; the brass of all these vessels was without weight.

17 The height of the one pillar was eighteen cubits, and the chapter upon it was brass: and the height of the chapter three cubits; and the wreathen work, and pomegranates upon the chapter round about, all of brass: and like unto these had the second pillar with wreathen work.

18 ¶ And the captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door:

gious worship, is often in his account a vile abomination.—Wicked men become curses to each other; and the nearer their intimacy or relation, the greater will be the anguish of those who sin and perish together.—External pre-eminence, in times of public calamity, often gives the precedence in suffering; but riches, dignity, authority, and superior abilities, will assuredly increase the sinner's condemnation; for to whom much is given, of him will the more be required. Let us then neither envy nor covet such precarious advantages, but be warned to improve every talent intrusted to us. Let us in these awful events contemplate the truth of the Scripture, and "flee from the wrath to come;" embrace and plead the precious promises of God; and by patient continuance in well-doing, wait for the Saviour's mercy unto eternal life!

NOTES.—CHAP. XXV. V. 1-5. Jerusalem was so fortified by nature and art, that notwithstanding the enfeebled state of the inhabitants, and Nebuchadnezzar's great power and military skill, it could not be taken till the besieged were incapacitated by famine to make any further resistance. (Notes, Lam. 4:10, 12.) In the Prophecy and Lamentations of Jeremiah, we shall have an opportunity of more fully considering the circumstances of this catastrophe, and indeed the whole of this compendious history: it suffices in this place to observe, that the obstinacy, impiety, and misery of the besieged were alike great, and almost unparalleled. (Notes, Jer. 37:38, 39:1-10.)—The king and his remaining forces endeavoured to escape by some private gate, which the enemy had not observed, or did not guard; but his attendants were dispersed, and he was taken prisoner. (Notes, Lam. 4:20. Ez. 12:1-16.)

V. 6, 7. Nebuchadnezzar, having placed Zedekiah on the throne, and made him engage to be faithful to him, tried and condemned him as a traitor, in the presence of his ministers and counsellors (Notes, 2 Chr. 36:13. Jer. 39:1-10. Ez. 17:15-21, 21:25-27.) and, having slain his sons in his sight, as the last spectacle which he should ever behold, and which might ever after haunt his afflicted imagination, he put out his eyes, and sent him in chains to Babylon. (Notes, Jer. 32:4, 5, v. 5. 34:1-5. 38:1-6, 20-23. Ez. 12:8-16.) Here he ended his life, probably not long after; for no more is recorded concerning him. Zedekiah left daughters at Jerusalem, who went down with Johanan to Egypt; and doubtless died there. (Jer. 41:10, 43:6.)

V. 8-10. Nebuzar-adan seems to have arrived at Jerusalem on the seventh day of the month, but he began to execute his commission on the tenth. (Jer. 52:12.)—The king of Babylon, enraged at the long and obstinate defence, which the Jews had made, determined that this city should be no more inhabited, to cause him or his successors so much trouble and expense in future. (Notes, Ezra 4:12-24.) He therefore gave orders to level the city with the ground, without sparing even the temple, either for its sanctity, antiquity, or magnificence! Thus he performed the words both of the later prophets, and likewise the predictions of Moses. This is computed to have been four hundred and twenty-four years from the time when Solomon laid the foundations of the temple. Josephus informs us, that the second temple was destroyed by the Romans, on the same day of the same month.

V. 12. Note, 22-26.

V. 13-17. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Kings 7:13-51. Jer. 52:17-23.) By this it appears, that Nebuchadnezzar did not purpose wholly to desolate the land; but by destroying Jerusalem to deprive the nation of the power of resistance, and so to continue in it a feeble company of men to cultivate the earth.—But his design, in this respect, was defeated, that the purpose and predictions of God might be accomplished. It is not known what became of the ark; but it was not afterwards found. (Notes, 24:6-16. Ezra 1:7-11. Hag. 2:6-9.)

Without weight. (16) The quantity of brass was so great, that its weight was not ascertained. (1 Kings 7:47.)

V. 18-21. Marg. Ref.—Five. (19) Seven men are mentioned by Jeremiah; (Note, Jer. 52:24-27.) but perhaps five were of superior rank to the others; or were more distinguished as the favourites and counsellors of Zedekiah. All these persons were put to death as accessories to his rebellion.

V. 22-26. Nebuchadnezzar is ended to preserve some inhabitants in the land; but it was he Le d's purpose that it them that were in the king's presence, which were found in the city, and the principal scribe of the host, which mustered the people of the land, and threescore men of the people of the land that were found in the city:

20 And Nebuzar-adan captain of the guard took these, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah:

21 And the king of Babylon smote them, and slew them at Riblah in the land of Hamath. So Judah was carried away out of their land.

[Practical Observations.]

22 ¶ And as for the people that remained in the land of Judah whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon had left, even over them he made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, ruler.

23 And when all the captains of the armies, they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah governor, there came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan the son of Careah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth the Netophathite, and Jaazaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

24 And Gedaliah swore to them, and to their men, and said unto them, Fear not to be the servants of the Chaldees: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you.

25 But it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed of Royah, came, and ten men with him, and smote Gedaliah, that he died, and the Jews and the Chaldees that were with him at Mizpah.

26 And all the people, both small and great, and the captains of the armies, arose, and came to Egypt: for they were afraid of the Chaldees.

27 ¶ And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon in the year that he began to reign did lift up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah out of prison;

28 And he spake kindly to him, and set his throne above the throne of the kings that were with him in Babylon;

29 And changed his prison-garments: and he did eat bread continually before him all the days of his life.

30 And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king, a daily rate for every day, all the days of his life.

should be desolated. (12. Notes, Jer. 25:8—10.)—Ishmael, being of the royal family, could not endure to see any shadow of authority possessed by another, while he was excluded; and therefore he murdered Gedaliah, who seems to have been a wise and good man. His father Ahikam had been Jeremiah's protector; and the prophet had by choice joined his company. (Notes, Jer. 26:24. 40:6.)—After this event, the Jews, rejecting the word of the Lord by Jeremiah, fled into Egypt, for fear of the resentment of the king of Babylon; and there they either miserably perished, or were lost among the natives, and thus God performed his purpose and predictions of desolating the country, contrary to the intentions of the instruments, which he had hitherto employed. (Notes, Jer. 39:—42.) The small numbers, mentioned in all the accounts of these events, lead the mind to a most melancholy reflection on the multitudes who must have perished, and been driven into other lands, by the distresses of the Jews, previous to this catastrophe.

V. 27—30. It is recorded that Nebuchadnezzar, after his recovery from the miraculous insanity with which he had been visited, committed his son to prison for maleadministration during that period; (Notes, Dan. 4:28—37.) and that there he contracted an acquaintance with Jehoiachin. God had foretold, that the captives at Babylon would be more favoured, than those who remained at Jerusalem: and thus Jehoiachin was at length more favoured than Zedekiah. (Notes, Jer. 24:)—Many captive or tributary kings abode at Babylon, but Jehoiachin was treated with greater kindness and respect than any of them, either out of personal affection, or from regard to the ancient race of the kings of Judah. (Note, Jer. 52:31.)—As Evil-merodach reigned but two years, it is probable Jehoiachin did not live long after this. (Note, Ezra 1:1—4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—21. If repeated warnings and afflictions leave the sinner's heart more obdurate than before, it is an evidence that his ruin is at hand. (Note, Prov. 29:1.)—Those advantages, which inspire confidence in the ways of wickedness, will eventually aggravate the possessor's misery: for no power can resist, no craftiness can elude, those whom God appoints to be the executioners of his vengeance.—If rebellion against earthly princes deserve penalties so severe, as by common consent have, in all ages and nations, been inflicted upon those who were guilty of that crime: who can estimate what or how much punishment is due to rebellion against our Creator, Benefactor, and Sovereign!—Precious as our eyes are to us, they may possibly be reserved to witness such scenes, as may make us wish, that they had been previously closed, in darkness or in death. But surely no sight can be so distressing, as the misery of our children, when occasioned by our own misconduct!—God overrules, and imperceptibly guides, even the anger and the resentment of men to execute his righteous purposes for his own glory. In the day of his indignation, he utterly disregards populous cities, magnificent palaces, and fertile countries: nay, he permits his avowed enemies to destroy his sanctuaries, to prevent the administration of his ordinances, and even to extinguish the very light of his gospel, in those places, where these estimable advantages have long been despised, neglected, or perverted. But he will still preserve his true religion, though perhaps among the poor and despised alone.—As the Lord "spared not the angels, that sinned;" as he has doomed the whole race of fallen men to the grave, and all unbelievers to hell; and as "he spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all;" we need not wonder at any desolation or miseries which, for sin, he may see good to bring upon guilty nations and churches.

V. 22—30. The secret working of Providence disappoints the politic or humane purposes of such as purpose to spare those whom God intends to destroy: and, while some are left to their ungoverned passions, and others to their groundless fears and infatuated devices, "his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure."—No state of misery on earth can be called absolutely hopeless or comfortless. In hell alone this blackness of darkness is to be found for ever. During our most dismal and tedious nights of adversity, we may hope for the cheerful dawning of prosperous days; especially, if our afflictions lead us to repentance: for God has all hearts in his hands, and, as he sees good, can incline them to kindness.—The believer in this world is, as it were, imprisoned with sins, temptations, and tribulations, sometimes for many a tedious year: but death, as the servant of Jesus Christ, comes for his enlargement. Then, the prison-door is opened, his fetters are loosed, his prison-garments changed for the robes of salvation and glory; his head is lifted up, and his throne advanced above the chief of the kings of the earth; and he shall be eternally feasted upon the fulness of joy, which is to be found in the presence and favour of the Almighty. Indeed, even here, the Saviour grants to the trembling, distressed, and enslaved sinner, who comes and trusts in him, a blessed release from condemnation and bondage: he bestows on him liberty, change of raiment, royal immunities, and heavenly provisions, day by day; and these are intended as earnest and foretastes of those "pleasures, which are at his right hand for evermore." In short, sin alone can hurt us, and Jesus alone can do good to sinners. May God help us to believe; and to wait, in patient hope, for the blessed season, when, being made more than conquerors by his grace, we shall "sit down with the Saviour upon his throne, even as he hath overcome, and hath sat down with the Father upon his throne."

THE FIRST BOOK

CHRONICLES.

It is generally agreed, that the books of the Chronicles were compiled by Ezra, after the Babylonian captivity; and that they consist of extracts from the public records of the Jews, and the writings of preceding prophets. Some passages appear to have been in sermo in the very words of the original record, which was written before the captivity; and a few names seem to have been added to the genealogies, after the death of Ezra. (1 Chr. 3:19—24.) The original name is (רַבְרִי הַיָּמִים) The words of the days, which signifies Journals, or Annals; and it is not improperly rendered Chronicles, or Records of the times. Anciently, the whole formed 1 but one book in the Hebrew Bible; but the Septuagint divide it into two, and call them The Books of things which have been left out; yet this is less proper than the original name; for there are many repetitions of facts before recorded, as well as further historical information. These repetitions, however, must not be deemed superfluous; for most of them in some degree, and some of them exceedingly, elucidate the preceding history: and the few, that seem not wanted in this respect, are suited to connect the whole into one narration, without referring to other books; which would be peculiarly useful, when copies of the whole Scriptures were both scarce and expensive.—In the genealogies there are several literal or verbal variations, from those found in other parts of Scripture: but it is evident, that many persons had more than one name, and were called by one or the other indiscriminately; and the spelling and pronunciation, in most languages, change considerably in a course of years. Some variations in the numerals have already been noted; and we are sometimes constrained to allow, that, probably, a trivial error of the transcriber has taken place; but there is no variation, which in the least interferes with our faith or practice, or weakens the external or internal evidence of the divine inspiration of the Scripture in general, or of these books in particular.—It was evidently a principal design of the sacred writer, in these records, to bring into one view, and comprise in a narrow compass, whatever immediately related to the nation of Israel, to each of the twelve tribes, and to the family of David, with reference to the settlement in the land after the captivity; and to ascertain the descent of the promised Messiah: and in both these respects, the genealogies would be very useful. Until Christ came, all the genealogies of that nation were preserved correct and authentic: but since that period, the Jews have none which can be depended on. The types were then fulfilled in the great Antitype; the kingdom and priesthood were permanently united in his person; and the nation soon forfeited their peculiar temporal advantages, by rejecting their King: and as their genealogies were no further useful, they were left to be involved in oblivion or uncertainty.—Many things might be very plain and useful to the ancient Jews, which appear obscure and uninteresting to us. Should it be allowed, that a small part of the Scripture was profitable to the church in some ages and places, but not at all in others, it would be no impeachment of the divine wisdom and goodness: and if we cannot understand or get any benefit from certain portions; it is more reasonable to blame our own dullness, than, so much as in thought, to censure them as useless.—The first book commences with genealogies from Adam, till long after the captivity; many of which are collected from other parts of Scripture. The advancement of David to the throne upon Saul's death, is next related: and a much fuller account is given of his internal government of the kingdom; especially in the regulation concerning the priests and Levites, in the service of the sanctuary; the preparation that he made for the building of the temple; and the exhortations to Solomon his successor, and to the elders of Israel with which he closed his days, than in the preceding histories. And the sacred writer seems to have dwelt on these subjects the more fully, in order to stir up a holy emulation in his contemporaries, in restoring the worship at the temple to its ancient order and purity. So that in this book, "the man after God's own heart" shines much brighter, than in the second book of Samuel, and the beginning of the first of Kings.—The genealogies, given by St. Matthew and St. Luke, may be supposed to refer in many respects to those in this book. And when it is said that Zachariah was "of the course of Abia," the reference is still more indisputable. (24:10. Luke 1:5.)—The prophecies contained in it coincide indeed with those in the second of Samuel and in the Psalms; and therefore cannot be adduced as full proofs of its divine inspiration: but the sentiments which pervade it are perfectly scriptural; and we are sure it formed a part of the Jewish Scriptures, when our Saviour and his apostles appealed to them, as "The oracles of God."

name of the one was Peleg; because in his days the earth was divided: and his brother's name was Joktan.

20 And Joktan begat Almodad, and Sheleph, and Hazermaveth, and Jerah, 21 Hadoram also, and Uzal, and Diklah,

22 And ¹Ebal, and Abimael, and Sheba,

23 And ²Ophir, and ³Havilah, and Jobab. All these were the sons of Joktan.

24 ¹Shem, Arphaxad, ²Shelah,

25 ³Eber, ⁴Peleg, ⁵Reu,

26 ⁷Serug, ⁸Nahor, ⁹Terah,

27 ¹⁰Abram; the same is Abraham.

28 The sons of Abraham; ¹Isaac, and ²Ishmael.

29 ³These are their generations. ⁴The first-born of Ishmael, ⁵Nebaioth; then ⁶Kedar, and Adbeel, and Mibsam,

30 Mishma, and ⁷Dumah, Massa, ⁸Hadad, and Tema,

31 Jetur, Naphish, and Kedemah. These are the sons of Ishmael.

^{B.C.} 1553. 32 ¹Now ²the sons of Keturah, Abraham's concubine: she bare Zimran, and Jokshan, and Medan, and ³Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah. And the sons of Jokshan; ⁴Sheba, and ⁵Dedan.

33 And the sons of Midian; ¹Ephah, and Ephraim, and Henoah, and Abida, and Eldaah. All these are the sons of Keturah.

34 And ¹Abraham begat Isaac. ²The sons of Isaac: Esau, and ³Israel.

35 ¹The ²sons of Esau; Eliphaz, Reuel, and Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah.

36 The sons of Eliphaz; ¹Teman, and Omar, ²Zephi, and Gatan, Kenaz, and Timna, and Amalek.

37 The sons of Reuel; Lahath, Zerah, Shammah, and Mizzah.

38 And ¹the sons of Seir; Lotan, and Shobal, and Zibeon, and Anah, and Dishon, and ²Ezar, and Dishan.

39 And the sons of Lotan; ¹Hori, and ²Homam; and ³Timna was Lotan's sister.

40 The sons of Shobal; ¹Alian, and Manahath, and Ebal, Shephi, and Unam. And the sons of Zibeon; ¹Aiah, and Anah.

41 The sons of Anah; ¹Dishon. And the sons of Dishon; ²Amram, and ³Eshban, and Ithran, and Cheran.

42 The sons of Ezer; Bilhan, and ²Zavan, and Jakan. The sons of Dishan; ¹Uz, and Aran.

43 ¹Now these are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom, before any king reigned over the children of Israel; Bela the son of Beor: and the name of his city was Dinhabah.

44 And when Bela was dead, Jobab the son of Zerah of Bozrah reigned in his stead.

45 And when Jobab was dead, Husham of the land of the Temanites reigned in his stead.

46 And when Husham was dead, Hadad the son of Bedad, which smote Midian in the field of Moab, reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was Avith.

47 And when Hadad was dead, Samlah of Masrekah reigned in his stead.

48 And when Samlah was dead, ¹Shaul of Rehoboth by the river reigned in his stead.

49 And when Shaul was dead, Baal-hanan the son of Achbor reigned in his stead.

50 And when Baal-hanan was dead, Hadad reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was ¹Pai; and his wife's name was Mehetabel the daughter of Matred, the daughter of Mezahab.

51 ¹Hadad died also. And the dukes of Edom were; duke Timnah, duke ²Aliah, duke Jetheth, 52 Duke Aholibamah, duke Elah, duke Pinon,

53 Duke Kenaz, duke Teman, duke Mibzar,

54 Duke Magdiel, duke Iram. ⁵These are the dukes of Edom.

CHAPTER II.

The sons of Israel, 1, 2: of Judah, 3-12: of Jesse, 13-17: of Caleb, the son of Hezron, 18-20: of Hezron, by the daughter of Machir, 21-24: and of Jeremiah, Hezron's son, 25-33. The posterity of Shimeon, by his daughter, 34-41. Another branch of Caleb's posterity, 42-43. The sons of Caleb, the son of Hur, 50-54. The families of the Kenites, 55.

¹THESE are the sons of ²Israel; ³Reuben, ⁴Simeon, Levi, and Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun, might be intended to intimate that we are all of one blood and nature, though of different families.

V. 24-27. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 11:10-32. 17:5, 6.) ¹Shem... was the most eminent of Noah's sons, whom he solemnly blessed; the Messiah being to spring from him. (Gen. 9:26.) For from Adam the promise of the Messiah was translated to Seth; and from Seth to Shem; from Shem to Eber; from whom the Hebrew nation, some think, derived their name; and had this precious promise committed to their trust, above all other nations in the world. *Bp. V. 38-42. Notes, Gen. 36:20, 24.

V. 43-54. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 36:31-43.) When he sacred historian had given the genealogy of Abraham, ne father of the faithful; he briefly mentions Abraham's descendants by Ishmael, by Keturah, and by Esau, with some coincident matters: but he speedily leaves these subjects, to confine himself to the chosen people of God, and the line of the Saviour; in comparison with whom, the nations most renowned for arts or arms seem entirely disregarded.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As we are descended from that "one man, by whom sin and death entered into the world;" so we all resemble and imitate him: and this should remind us how sinful and frail we are; and excite us to repent, to value the Saviour, to despair of happiness in this miserable world, to seek those things which are above, and habitually to prepare to meet death, who is, to all unbelievers, "the king of terrors." For, as an invincible conqueror, he has already transmitted the bodies of innumerable millions to the grave, and their souls to the tribunal of God and to the eternal world; and is even now ready to deal with us in like manner. (Note, Rom. 5: 20, 21.) But while we are spared, we should regard every human being as a brother, a fellow-sinner, and a fellow-sufferer, without respect to climate, complexion, party, character, or even personal injuries: and, with expanded benevolence and compassion we should aim to alleviate misery, to increase comfort, to promote peace, and to be instrumental to the salvation of men, by our example, prayers, and the improvement of our several talents.—Short is our passage through time into eternity:—we are no sooner born, than we begin to die; and all earthly distinctions will speedily be reduced to a level, as the rough weed, the green blade, and the gaudy flower fall before the indiscriminating scythe! May we then be distinguished as the Lord's people, who are his portion, and whom he delights to honour and bless.—The inconceivable multitudes of the human race, which have peopled or shall people the earth through successive generations, will ere long assemble before the judgment-seat of Christ, and be divided as easily, and as certainly, "as the shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats:" then the wicked "shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." May we then so "look for these things, as to give diligence that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless!"

17 And Abigail bare ¹Amasa: and the father of Amasa was ²Jether the Ishmaelite.

b.c.] 18 ¹And ²Caleb the son of Hezron begat 1470 ³children of Azubah his wife, and of Jerioth: her sons are these; Jeshur, and Shobab, and Ardon.

19 And when Azubah was dead, Caleb took unto him ⁴Ephrath, which bare him Hur.

20 And Hur begat Uri, and Uri begat ⁵Bezaleel.

21 ¹And afterwards Hezron went in to the daughter of ²Machir the father of Gilead, whom he married when he was threescore years old; and she bare him Segub.

22 And Segub begat ³Jair, who had three and twenty cities in the land of Gilead.

23 And he took ⁴Geshur, and Aram, with the towns of Jair, from them, with Kenath and the towns thereof, even threescore cities. All these belonged to the sons of Machir the father of Gilead.

24 And after that Hezron was dead in ¹Caleb-ephraiah, then Abiah, Hezron's wife bare him ²Ashur the father of ³Tekoa.

25 ¹And the sons of ²Jerahmeel, the first-born of Hezron, were Ram, the first-born, and Bunah, and Oren, and Ozem, and Abihah.

26 Jerahmeel had also another wife, whose name was Atarah; she was the mother of Onam.

27 And the sons of ³Ram, the first-born of Jerahmeel, were Maaz, and Jamin, and Eker.

28 And the sons of ⁴Onam were Shammai, and Jada. And the sons of Shammai; Nadab, and Abishur.

29 And the name of the wife of Abishur was Abihail; and she bare him Ahban, and Molad.

30 And the sons of ⁵Nadab; Seled, and Appaim: but Seled died without children.

31 And the sons of Appaim; Ishi. And the sons of Ishi; Sheshan. And ⁶the children of Sheshan; Ahlai.

32 And the sons of Jada, the brother of Shammai; Jethur, and Jonathan: and Jethur died without children.

33 And the sons of Jonathan; Peleth, and Zaza. These were the sons of Jerahmeel.

34 ¹Now Sheshan had no sons, but daughters: and Sheshan had a servant, an Egyptian, whose name was Jarha.

35 And ²Sheshan gave his daughter to Jarha his servant to wife; and she bare him Attai.

36 And Attai begat Nathan, and Nathan begat ³Zabad,

37 And Zabad begat Ephlal, and Ephlal begat Obed,

38 And Obed begat Jehu, and Jehu begat Azariah,

39 And Azariah begat Helez, and Helez begat Eleasah,

40 And Eleasah begat Sisamai, and Sisamai begat Shallum, 41 And Shallum begat Jekamiah, and Jekamiah begat Elishamah.

42 ¹Now the sons of ²Caleb the brother of Jerahmeel, were Mesha ³this first-born, which was the father of ⁴Ziph; and the sons of Mesha; ⁵the father of Hebron.

mote and eminent descendants of Zerah; or whether different persons, bearing nearly the same names, are there intended.

V. 7. (Notes, Josh. 7:1, 10-24.) Achan, who sinned in the accursed thing, is here called Achar, or the troubler; with reference to Joshua's words to him. (Note, Josh. 7:25, 26.) Carmi is said in Joshua to be the son of Zaddi, who is here called Ziuri. (6.)—The genealogies of Judah are very copious; because David, the progenitor of the Messiah, was of that tribe; and the whole nation of the Jews, to this day, is composed of such as either descended from Judah, or incorporated with those who did. (Note, 2 Kings 16:6.)

V. 8. "Sons" here signifies descendants. These might be numerous, though but one son is mentioned.

V. 9-12. Hezron, the son of Pharez. (5) (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ruth 4:17-22.)

sequent genealogies; as the reader will readily perceive by consulting the marginal references. (Notes, 42-53.)

V. 22. Jair was descended by his father from Jutan, and properly belonged to that tribe; but Hezron, his grandfather, married a wife of the tribe of Manasseh; and Jair, as descended from her, united himself to that tribe, and at length inherited among them. (Note, Num. 32:41.)

V. 23. Jair seems to have taken Geshur, Aram, and some other places, from those who before possessed them. (Num. 32:39-42, Deut. 3:14, Josh. 13:24-32.)

V. 24. Ashur was the posthumous son of Hezron, by Abiah, whom he married in his old age. (1) But he became a man of consequence; and his descendants principally peopled, or ruled over, Tekoa.

V. 25-33. Nothing further is recorded of the persons mentioned in these verses. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 34-41. It does not appear that Sheshan had more than one daughter, whom he gave in marriage to his servant, an Egyptian; who, it is probable, was a proselyte to the true religion, and had been faithful to him. But, as a numerous progeny might spring from this one daughter, the plural number is used, as it was before observed to be in the case of sons. (Note, 8.)

V. 42-49. This Caleb, being the brother of Jerahmeel, was the same person of whom we read before. His children by Azubah and by Ephraim, had been enumerated: (Note, 18-20.) so that "Mesha, his first-born," seems to have been born to him by another wife, whom he married before either Azubah or Ephraim.—The Jews, when they returned from the captivity, were principally of the tribe of Judah; and as these genealogies might be exceedingly useful to them, 46 And Ephah, Caleb's concubine, bare Haran, and Moza, and Gazez: and Haran begat Gazez.

47 And the sons of Jhdai; Regem, and Jotham, and Geshan, and Pelet, and Ephah, and Shaaph.

48 Maachah, Caleb's concubine, bare Sheber, and Tirhanah.

49 She bare also Shaaph the father of Madmannah, Sheva the father of Machbenah, and the father of Gibeaz: and the daughter of Caleb was Achsah.

50 ¶ These were the sons of Caleb the son of Hur, the first-born of Ephratah; Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim, 51 Salma the father of Beth-lehem, Hareph the father of Beth-gader.

52 And Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim had sons; Hareph, and half of the Manahethites.

No doubt they were extracted from ancient public records of allowed authenticity. (Marg. Ref.)

The cities, of which these persons are said to have been fathers, were all situated in Judah; and this confirms the preceding interpretation. (Note, 21.)

Achsah. (49) "Caleb the son of Jephunneh" had a daughter called Achsah, who was married to Othniel, at the time when Joshua completed the division of the land. (Notes, Josh. 15: 16-19.) But Caleb the son of Hebron lived some ages before (Note, 18-20.) and his daughter Achsah was a different person.

V. 50. Caleb, here spoken of, was the grandson of him before mentioned, and brother to Uri, the father of Bezaleel; the same as erected the tabernacle. (9, 18, 19, 42.)

V. 52, 53. The inhabitants of these cities consisted in general of Shobal's descendants; or they were the principal persons among them. This seems to be equivalent to the phrase, "the father of Ziph, of Beth-lehem, &c." (42, 43.)

V. 54. The word rendered "the house of Joab," seems to be a proper name, Beth-job; for a place, not a family, is evidently meant;—Beth-job; so these words, we translate "the house of Joab," should be rendered; for he is not speaking of Joab's family, but of Caleb's. Bp. Patrick.

V. 55. The Kenites, &c.] (Notes, Judg. 1:16. 4:11. Jer. 35:1-7, 18, 19.) It seems that some of the Kenites, the posterity of Hobab, incorporated with Judah, and became expert in writing, and eminent in their knowledge of the law of God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

No length of time will expunge the guilt or infamy of those who do evil in the sight of the Lord, are troublemakers of his people, and die in their sins. But, as the Saviour was pleased to assume human nature, by descent through so many a heinous transgressor, and thus to be "made in the likeness of sinful flesh," as well as a sacrifice for sin, all manner of wickedness shall be purged away from those who believe in his name.—Frequently the last become first, and the first last; and atrocious sinners have in every age been transformed into the most eminent believers.—Difficulties, blemishes, and disgraces in the beginnings of life, or on the entrance of any undertaking; and remarkable blots in the origin of families; have often proved as foils to the lustre, success, or eminence, with which they were afterwards favoured. In the same wise, righteous, and merciful sovereignty, the Lord advances or depresses the branches of families; prospers or renders unsuccessful our temporal pursuits;

The sons of David, 1-9. His line to Zedekiah, 10-16. The sons and successors of Jeconiah, 17-24.

NOW these were the sons of David, which were born unto him in Hebron; the first-born Amnon, of Ahinoam the Jezreelitess; the second, Daniel of Abigail the Carmelitess:

2 The third, Absalom the son of Maachah the daughter of Talmai king of Geshur: the fourth, Adonijah the son of Haggith:

3 The fifth, Shephatiah of Abital: the sixth, Ithream by Eglah his wife.

4 These six were born unto him in Hebron; and there he reigned seven years and six months: and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years.

5 And these were born unto him in Jerusalem; Shimea, and Shobab, and Nathan, and Solomon, four, of Bathshua the daughter of Ammiel:

6 Ithra also, and Elishama, and Eliphelet, 7 And Nogah, and Nepheg, and Japhia, 8 And Elishama, and Eliada, and Eliphelet, nine.

9 These were all the sons of David, besides the sons of the concubines, and Tamar their sister.

10 ¶ And Solomon's son was Rehoboam, Abia his son, Asa his son, Jehoshaphat his son, 11 Joram his son, Ahaziah his son, Joash his son,

12 Amaziah his son, Azariah his son, Jotham his son, replenishes or diminishes our households, and renders them a comfort or a trial to us. Submission to his will is our duty and wisdom; but it is the privilege of the true believer alone to maintain this happy frame of mind. In Christ, however, there is neither bond nor free, neither male nor female, neither Jew nor Gentile: all who come to him are equally welcome to his salvation; all are equally privileged, in proportion to their faith, love, and devotedness to him: and it is a peculiar favour for poor strangers to be made "scribes well instructed in the kingdom of God," and to be fitted also for usefulness to others. In short, the whole, that is truly valuable, consists in the favour, peace, and image of God; and a life spent to his glory, and in promoting the welfare of our fellow-creatures.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-9. (Notes, 2 Sam. 3:1-5. 5:13-16.) David's other sons by Bathshua, or Bath-sheba, are mentioned before Solomon, though younger than he; because the genealogy is resumed from him. Probably David called one of them Nathan, out of respect to the prophet of that name, whom he loved the better for his faithful reproof. Mary the mother of Jesus was descended from Nathan, not from Solomon. (Notes, Luke 3:23-38.) The two sons, which are here mentioned, more than in Samuel, probably died young; as there are two called Elishama, and two Eliphelet. (Marg. Ref.)—It seems that David had children by his concubines, whose names are no where recorded.

V. 10-15. (Marg. Ref.) Johanan seems to have died young. Shallum is also called Jehoahaz. He was older than Zedekiah, though mentioned after him. (Note, 2 Kings 23: 29, 30, v. 30.)

V. 16. As the sons of Jeconiah are enumerated in the next verses, and as Zedekiah, a son of Jeconiah, is not elsewhere mentioned, it is thought by learned men, that "his son" here means his successor.

V. 17, 18. Many commentators take it for granted, that Salathiel, or Shealtiel, actually descended from Nathan, and was only the adopted son of Jeconiah; that Solomon's line was extinct; and that Joseph, the husband of Mary, sprang from Nathan, as well as she. They ground this sentiment on these reasons: Jeremiah is supposed to have pronounced Jeconiah childless; but perhaps a satisfactory solution of that difficulty may be adduced. (Note, Jer. 22:28-30.) Again, it is argued, that St. Luke mentions Zorobabel, the son of Salathiel, in the genealogy of Mary. But to this it may be answered, that it is scarcely the shadow of an argument to say, because a father and son are of the same names in one genealogy, as they are in another, therefore they were the same persons, when no other part of the genealogy supports, or can possibly accord with, the conclusion. Salathiel, the father of Zorobabel, mentioned by St. Luke, was "the son of Rhesa, the son of Joanna, the son of Judah;" this Salathiel was "the son of Assir, the son of Jeconiah."¹ Rhesa (Luke 3:27.) "... is not found among the eight children, that are here reckoned up." Bp. Patrick. Matthew says, Jeconiah begat Salathiel; and it will be harsh to interpret this of mere adoption, or of less than being his progenitor; and here are several other sons, or descendants, of Jeconiah mentioned, who cannot all have been adopted. Upon the whole it scarcely admits of a doubt, that the line from Solomon to Joseph was uninterrupted; and that the two families met in Jesus, the real son of Mary, and the supposed and legal son of Joseph. (Notes, Matt. 1:2-17. Luke 3:23-38.)

V. 19-24. Perhaps Pedaiah was Salathiel's son, Jeconiah's grandson, and Zerubbabel's father: but, being of small note, his name is omitted in the other genealogies, which is a common case. Nothing is known except the names of the persons afterwards mentioned; but several of them must have lived a long time after the captivity, perhaps later than the days of Ezra. St. Matthew evidently deduces the line of Joseph from a different branch of the same stock: that is, from another branch of Zerubbabel's descendants. (Matt. 1:13-16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In the large families of wise, eminent, and pious men, many persons prove too insignificant to attract our notice, and others so vicious as to excite our grief and indignation. They therefore, who have no children, may hence learn submission to the will of God: for if, by that appointment, they are destitute of some comforts, they are also exempted from a variety of anxieties and trials. And those, to whom God has given children, may learn to bring up their offspring for him to the best of their power, recommending them to his care and blessing: nor should they indulge the hope of much comfort from them, any more than seek great things for them, in this vain and vexatious world. Yet, upon the whole, the attentive and accurate observer will perceive that the posterity of the righteous enjoy advantages, sometimes for many generations, in consequence of the piety of their progenitors: so that this is the best way of laying up an inheritance for our beloved offspring.—Nothing more distinguishes the real believer from the slave of sin, than the manner in which each of them behaves towards a faithful reprover: the former, upon reflection, will love and revere him as his best friend; the latter will habitually hate him as his enemy. (5. 2 Sam. 12: 1-7, 13. 1 Kings 21:20. 22:8. Ps. 141:5.) But all our gratitude to the instruments of our mercies should be ultimately directed to the glory of God: and all the prosperity of ourselves and our families will eventually terminate in misery, unless it

V. 2-4. The Zorathites were the inhabitants of Zorah, but they in general descended from Shobal, or were subject to him. "The father of Etam," seems to imply, that the persons spoken of were the sons of one, who was lord of Etam, and progenitor of its principal inhabitants.—Hur appears to have been the grandfather of Salma, who before was called the father of Beth-lehem. (Note. 2:52, 53.)

V. 5-8. Marg. Ref.

V. 9, 10. Nothing is recorded concerning the parentage or family of this remarkable person: but, as he was eminent for valour, success, wisdom, or piety, it is probable, that the Jews did not want information concerning him. It must be supposed, that he lived soon after Israel took possession of Canaan; and when they were greatly straitened by the remains of the ancient inhabitants. His mother, having suffered much in her pregnancy or travail, called him "Jabez," or, Sorrowful; (marg.) but her sorrow was emphatically turned into joy, if she lived to see how eminent and excellent a man he proved. His achievements are not recorded; but his prayers are, for our instruction and imitation. He was a genuine son of Jacob, who wrestled, and so prevailed with God, refusing to depart without a blessing, and on that account was surnamed Israel. (Notes, Gen. 32:24-30.) From a full heart, Jabez earnestly entreated the God of Israel to "bless him indeed;" and neither to send him away without a blessing, nor merely to bless him, like Esau, with temporal blessings. (Note, Gen. 27:38.) He seems to have been constrained to fight against the Canaanites: but he conducted the war with faith and prayer; and he entreated the Lord to be with him, and both to enlarge his coast, and to preserve him from disastrous events, which might occasion grief unto him.—Believers, under the Old Testament, saw, in the land of Canaan, a type of heaven; in their wars was represented the conflict of God's people with their enemies: and every clause of his prayer may be applied to, and doubtless was intended for, more noble and spiritual requests, and thus he became honourable, as well as prosperous, in Israel.—The Jews think that Jabez was an eminent doctor of the law, and that "the scribes which dwelt at Jabez" were his disciples. (2:55.)—This instructive example, in the midst of genealogies, to us so abstruse, seems like the fragrant rose, surrounded by thorns, or as refreshing streams in the desert: and it appears a recompense intended for the careful student of God's word, who diligently and reverently examines the whole, comparing one part with another, without disregarding or undervaluing any.

She bare. (17) That is, Bithiah the daughter of Pharaoh bare to Mered: (18) for these appear to have been Ezra's grandsons. Many think that Pharaoh was the name of an Israelite; yet it is not impossible that Mered might marry a daughter of an Egyptian king, by some of his concubines.—Father of, &c.] Notes, 2:21, 42-49, v. 49.

V. 20. Shimon is supposed to have been another son of Mered, by Hodiah, or Jehudijah. (18, 19.) As the name signifies a Jewess, (18, marg.) it rather favours the opinion, that Bithiah was not a Jewess, but an Egyptian.

V. 21. The sacred historian had mentioned the descendants of Judah by Zerah: (2:6-8) and having more copiously given the genealogies of Judah's posterity by Pharez, he here mentions briefly a few of the line of Shelah, the son of Judah, by the Canaanitish woman whom he married; and who was his eldest surviving son. (Notes, Gen. 38:4, 5, 11-16, 24. Neh. 11:4-6.)

V. 22, 23. Perhaps these families, in the time of David, or Solomon, when Moab was subjected, had dominion there; but in process of time they were so reduced, as to subsist by the meanest employments. Their honour and dignity "were ancient things;" for at the time when this was written, they were brought very low.—Some think that they remained near Babylon, after the return of Judah from the captivity, "among plants and hedges," for the sake of doing the work of the Persian kings.—(10) It was common in those ages, and still is in many places, for particular trades and professions to be continued in families, through successive generations.

V. 24. The families of Simeon are mentioned next to those of Judah, because their inharitances adjoined to each other. (Marg. Ref. Note, Josh. 19:1-9.)

V. 30, 31. Ziklag was at first given to Simeon: (Josh. 19:5.) but the Philistines took it, and gave it to David; so that from this time it belonged to Judah. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Sam. 27:5, 6.)

V. 34-38. These were eminent men among the Simeonites; and perhaps leaders in that expedition, which is next recorded.

V. 39-43. Part of the Simeonites joined the house of David when the ten tribes revolted: (Note, 2 Chr. 15:9.) and, being greatly increased in the time of Hezekiah, they possessed some of the ancient Canaanites, who still kept possession of a plentiful and peaceful country, fit for the feeding of cattle.—Perhaps this tract belonged to the Simeonites in the division of the land, and at length they got possession of it. Some however think, that a country towards Arabia, without the borders of the promised land, is intended. It seems that the remains of the Amalekites, after the general destruction of them made by Saul and David, had settled near to the Edomites, in mount Seir: but this remnant was extirpated by a small company of Simeonites.—Some think, that the kings of Babylon permitted this part of Simeon to remain unmolested in their possessions, through the captivity, even to the time of Ezra: but perhaps Ezra extracted the words, "unto this day," from the ancient records without altering them.—The habitations. (41) Or the Meunim, or Moabites. (Heb.—Judg. 10:12. 2 Chr. 26:7.)

20 And they were helped against them, and the Hagarites were delivered into their hand, and all that were with them: for they cried to God in the battle, and he was entreated of them; because they put their trust in him.

cially their mothers, suffered for them, before they became capable of reflection; and they should endeavour by every means to requite them, as much as possible, by kindness, and by aiming to be a comfort to them, in their whole conduct. But it is basely ungrateful, (though alas! very common,) willingly to cause them still more exquisite and durable anguish, by ill-behaviour. Those events, which at first occasion most sorrow, often terminate in the greatest comfort: we should not therefore yield to despondency, but "hope to the end," and expect to extract good from every apparent evil.—But it is natural for us to record our sorrows rather than our mercies; though, considering our guilt and sinfulness, we may reasonably wonder that the latter are so many, and the former so few.—"The honour, which cometh from God," is introduced by the gifts of wisdom, faith, and piety; and when these are bestowed, men will at length be honourable, whether they be renowned and prosperous, or not.—We go about our proper work in a right manner, when we use lawful and suitable means for success with all assiduity, and seek a blessing on them by fervent prayer.—A concurrence of all earthly good things cannot "bless us indeed:" the true felicity, which our hearts should eagerly desire, consists in the favour, image, and presence of God; and we should pray for this, as resolved not to depart without it. The pardon of sin, the gift of righteousness, and the first-fruits of the Spirit, form the beginning of this happiness: but the world, Satan, and m-dwelling sin, crowd, and straiten us on every side, and keep us from the possession of our inheritance. We should then beg of "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" to enlarge our coast, that we may attain to greater holiness, liberty, comfort, and usefulness; and acquire a more decisive victory over our enemies. And if his "hand be with us," if his power be exerted in our cause, we shall be protected, upheld, and enabled to withstand, and to gain ground against, the confederated forces of the world, the flesh, and the devil. We may very properly, with resignation, pray to be kept from the evil of suffering, which is grievous to nature; but the evil of sinning most affrights and disquiets the spiritually minded: this extorts their bitterest groans and complaints; against this they most earnestly pray, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." And, being kept from be burden of a guilty conscience, and the anguish of having dishonoured and offended the God of their salvation, they can the better bear up under other trials, as supported by that "peace of God which passeth all understanding." Blessed be the Lord, he is ever ready to grant and to exceed our prayers for promised blessings: and we are our own enemies, if we do not ask and expect great things from him, through the Saviour's name.—In this checkered world indeed, there is nothing durable or substantial: but possessing the hope of unchangeable felicity, we may cheerfully acquiesce in the Lord's allotment of our worldly settlement and occupations. Nor is it desirable to advance our children much above our own rank; for those, who at one time have dominion, may at another become dependent on the worst of men for a penurious maintenance: whereas honest labour, in some regular and useful calling, best preserves that mediocrity which is most comfortable, and most advantageous to our spiritual concerns. Let us then adhere to the kingdom of "the Son of David;" for this "Prince of peace" will supply the temporal wants of his people with every thing truly desirable, and make them happy for ever, while his curse will pursue all his enemies to their utter destruction.

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1, 2. The double portion, which belonged to the first-born, having been forfeited by Reuben, Jacob's eldest son by Leah, was given to Joseph, his eldest son by Rachel, whose descendants had a double portion in Canaan; Jacob having adopted Ephraim and Manasseh, to be, as his own sons, heads of two distinct tribes. (Notes, Gen. 48:5—7. 49:3—12, 22—26.)—Yet, as the chief Ruler, or Prince, even the Messiah, of whom David and his royal race were progenitors and types, was to descend from Judah; the genealogy began with him, and not with either Reuben or Joseph. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3—8. Very brief extracts are made from the registers of Reuben, and of several other tribes: because, it is probable, but few persons of these tribes, returned from the captivity to settle in Canaan: and therefore only a few of these tribes were concerned in the genealogies, compared with the numbers of Judah, Benjamin, and Levi, of whom the Jews after that event principally consisted. It may be supposed, that Ezra's contemporaries would see the reason why the persons selected should be named, and not others; though we can assign none.—This chapter contains all that relates to the two tribes and a half, which settled to the east of Jordan. (Notes, Num. 32: Josh. 22.)

V. 9. The inheritance of Reuben extended to the borders of that desert, which reached even to the Euphrates.

V. 10. Note, 18—22.

V. 11—17. (Marg. Ref.) Part of the genealogies of Gad, whence these extracts were taken, seems to have been made during the time that Jeroboam the second reigned over Israel, and the rest when Jotham reigned in Judah.

V. 18—22. The Hagarites were the descendants of 18 And the sons of Kohath, were ^bAmram, and Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel.

19 The sons of Merari; ^cMahli, and Mushî. And these are the families of the Levites according to their fathers.

20 Of Gershon; ^dLibni his son, Jahath his son, Zimmah his son, 21 ^eJoah his son, Iddo his son, ^fZerah his son, ^gJeaterai his son.

22 The sons of Kohath; ^hAmmînadab his son, Korah his son, Assir his son,

23 Elkanah his son, and Ebiasaph his son, and Assir his son, 24 Tahath his son, ⁱUriel his son, Uzziath his son, and Shaul his son.

25 And the sons of ^jElkanah; Amasai, ^kand Ahimoth.

26 ^lAs for Elkanah; the sons of Elkanah; ^mZophai his son, and ⁿNahath his son, 27 ^oEliab his son, Jeroham his son, ^pElkanah his son.

28 And the sons of Samuel; the first-born ^qVashni, and Abiah.

29 The sons of Merari; ^rMahli, Libni his son, Shimea his son, Uzza his son, 30 Shimea his son, Haggiah his son, Asaiah his son.

31 And these are they ^swhom David set ^tover the service of song in the house of the LORD, ^uafter that the ark had rest.

32 And they ministered before the dwelling-place of the tabernacle of the congregation with singing, ^vuntil Solomon had built the house of the LORD in Jerusalem: ^wand then they ^xwaited on their office according to their order.

33 And these are they that waited with their children. Of the sons of the Kohathites; ^yHeman a singer, the son of ^zJoel, the son of ^{aa}Shemuel, 34 The son of Elkanah, the son of Jeroham, the son of ^{ab}Eliel, the son of ^{ac}Joah, 35 The son of ^{ad}Zuph, the son of Elkanah, the son of Mahath, the son of Amasai, 36 The son of Elkanah, the son of ^{ae}Joel, the son of Azariah, the son of Zephaniah, 37 The son of Tahath, the son of Assir, the son of ^{af}Ebiasaph, the son of ^{ag}Korah, 38 The son of ^{ah}Izhar, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi, the son of Israel.

39 And his brother ^{ai}Asaph, who stood on his right hand, even Asaph the son of Berechiah, the son of Shimea, 40 The son of Michael, the son of Baaseiah, the son of Malchiah, 41 The son of ^{aj}Ethni, the son of Zerah, the son of ^{ak}Adaiah, 42 The son of ^{al}Ethan, the son of Zimmah, the son of Shimei.

43 The son of ^{am}Jahath, the son of ^{an}Gershon, the son of Levi.

44 And their brethren the sons of Merari stood on the left hand: ^{ao}Ethan the son of ^{ap}Kishi, the son of Abdi, the son of Malluch,

45 The son of Hashabiah, the son of Amaziah, the son of Hilkiah, 46 The son of Amzi, the son of Beni, the son of Shamer, 47 The son of Mahli, the son of Mushî, the son of ^{aq}Merari, the son of Levi.

48 Their ^{ar}brethren also the Levites were appointed unto all manner of service of the tabernacle of the house of God.

49 ^{as}But ^{at}Aaron and his sons offered ^{au}upon the altar of the burnt-offering, and on ^{av}the altar of incense, and were appointed for all the work of the place most holy, and to ^{aw}make an atonement for Israel, according to that ^{ax}Moses the servant of God had commanded.

50 And these are the sons of Aaron; ^{ay}Elcazar his son, ^{az}Phinchas his son, Abishua his son,

51 Bukki his son, Uzzi his son, Zerahiah his son,

52 Meraioth his son, Amariah his son, Ahitup his son, 53 ^{ba}Zadok his son, Ahimaaz his son.

54 ^{bb}Now ^{bc}these are their dwelling-places throughout their ^{bd}castles in their coasts, of the sons of Aaron, ^{be}of the families of the Kohathites: for theirs was the lot.

55 And they gave them ^{bf}Hebron in the land of Judah, and the suburbs thereof round about it.

56 But the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, they gave to Caleb the son of Jephunneh.

57 And to the sons of Aaron they gave the cities of Judah, namely, Hebron, the city of refuge, and ^{bg}Libnah with her suburbs, and ^{bh}Jattir, and Eshtemoa, with their suburbs, 60 And out of the tribe of Benjamin; ¹Geba with her suburbs, and ^aAlemeth with her suburbs, and ^aAnathoth with her suburbs. All their cities throughout their families were thirteen cities.

61 And ^aunto the sons of Kohath, which were ¹pleft of the family of that tribe, were cities given out of the half tribe, namely, out of the half tribe of Manasseh, by lot, ten cities.

62 And to the sons of ^aGershom throughout their families were given out of the tribe of Issachar, and out of the tribe of Asher, and out of the tribe of Naphtali, and out of the tribe of Manasseh in Bashan, thirteen cities.

63 Unto the sons of ^aMerari were given by lot, throughout their families, out of the tribe of Reuben, and out of the tribe of Gad, and out of the tribe of Zebulun, twelve cities.

64 And ^athe children of Israel gave to the Levites these cities ^awith their suburbs.

65 And they gave by lot out of the tribe of the children of Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, and out of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, ^athese cities, which are called by their names.

66 And ^athe residue of the families of the sons of Kohath had cities of their coasts out of the tribe of Ephraim.

67 And they gave unto them, of the cities of refuge, ^aShechem in mount Ephraim with her suburbs; they gave also ^aGezer with her suburbs,

68 And ^aJokineam with her suburbs, and ^bBethhoron with her suburbs,

69 And ^aAjalon with her suburbs, and ^aGathrimmon with her suburbs:

70 And out of the half tribe of Manasseh; ^aAner with her suburbs, and ^aBileam with her suburbs, for the family of the remnant of the sons of Kohath.

71 Unto the sons of Gershom were given out of the family of the half tribe of Manasseh, ^aGolan in Bashan with her suburbs, and ^aAshtaroth with her suburbs:

72 And out of the tribe of Issachar, ^aKedesh with her suburbs, ^aDaberath with her suburbs,

73 And Ramoth with her suburbs, and Anem with her suburbs:

74 And out of the tribe of Asher; ^aMashal with her suburbs, and Abdon with her suburbs,

75 And ^aHukok with her suburbs, and Rehob with her suburbs:

76 And out of the tribe of Naphtali; ^aKedesh in Galilee with her suburbs, and ^aHammon with her suburbs, and Kirjathaim with her suburbs.

77 Unto the rest of the children of Merari were given out of the tribe of Zebulun, ^aRimmon with her suburbs, Tabor with her suburbs:

78 And on the other side Jordan by Jericho, on the east side of Jordan, were given them out of the tribe of Reuben, ^aBezer in the wilderness with her suburbs, and ^aJahzah with her suburbs,

79 Kedemoth also with her suburbs, and Mo-phaaath with her suburbs:

80 And out of the tribe of Gad; ^aRamoth in Gilead with her suburbs, and ^aMahanaim with her suburbs, 81 And ^aHeshbon with her suburbs, and ^aJazer with her suburbs.

CHAPTER VII.

The sons of Issachar, 1-5; of Benjamin, 6-12; of Naphtali, 13, and of Manasseh, 14-19. The sons of Ephraim, of whom some were slain by the men of Gath, 20-22. His sons by Beriah, 23-21. Their habitations, 28, 29. The sons of Asher, 30-40.

NOW ^athe sons of Issachar were Tola, and ^aPaah, Jashub, and Shiunron, four. [B. C. 1700.]

2 And the sons of Tola; Uzzi, and Rephaiah, and Jeriel, and Jalmal, and Jibsam, and Shemuel, heads of their father's house, to wit, of Tola: they were valiant men of might in their generations; ^awhose number was in the days of David two and twenty thousand and six hundred.

3 And the sons of Uzzi; Izrahiah: and the sons of Izrahiah; Michael, and Obadiah, and Joel, Ishiah, five; all of them chief men.

4 And ^awith them, by their generations, after the house of their fathers, were bands of soldiers for war, six and thirty thousand men: for they had many wives and sons.

5 And their brethren among all the families of Issachar were valiant men of might, reckoned in all, by their genealogies, fourscore and seven thousand.

among whom he dispersed the Levites, who were peculiarly devoted to this service." Bp. Patrick. (Notes, Josh. 20: 21):—Juttah and Gibeon are here omitted. Perhaps they lay in ruins when the book was written: so that only eleven cities from Judah and Benjamin are enumerated; though thirteen were allotted to the priests in the days of Joshua. (Josh. 21: 16, 17, 19.)

V. 67-81. Either some of the cities, or their names, had been changed since the time of Joshua: but, as Mr. Henry observes, Salop and Shrewsbury, Sarum and Salisbury, are as different names for the same places, as any in these catalogues; yet those, who live in their vicinity, are not at all confused by them.—Some cities also are here mentioned, as having belonged to Ephraim, which in Joshua are spoken of as cities of Dan: but various changes in such matters would occur in a course of ages.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In the judgment of God, none of the human race are more honourable or valuable, than those who consistently minister in holy things. And though many, who bear this sacred character, render themselves insignificant by their indolence, contemptible by their covetousness, or odious by their profligacy, or bring the divine vengeance upon themselves by offering "strange fire before the Lord;" (Note, Lev. 10:1, 2.) yet, instead of that order being despised on these accounts, those who are singularly humble, diligent, disinterested, zealous, and valiant for the truth, ought to be treated with the greater respect; and of this, God himself has condescended to set the example in his holy word.—None of the Lord's people, and especially of his ministers, should be unemployed: they who, through want of ability or change of circumstances, are precluded from one method of glorifying God, should set themselves to devise another. And if they deem nothing, which may conduce to the advancement of true religion, too laborious, mean, disgusting, or discouraging: if they be disposed to be "instant in season, and out of season;" to instruct, or encourage, one, ten, or ten thousand, in public, or in private, in a cottage, an hospital, a prison, or a palace; in safe and easy, or in difficult and perilous circumstances; if they consider nothing too little to be attended to, and nothing too arduous to be attempted; and if they do all in sincerity, humility, and simplicity of spirit, they cannot long be unoccupied or useless. But, nothing can be a more pleasant and honourable work, than to excite or assist the devotions of the pious, and to lead them to abound in thanksgivings and praises to the Lord.—If a rich inheritance, or the important station of a magistrate or civil governor, could with propriety be quitted for such a service, the enlightened understanding must perceive it to be an honourable and advantageous exchange; for this is the delightful employment of those above, who are arrived at their eternal rest.—They, who have shown themselves peculiarly disinterested in the cause of God and his people, should be peculiarly considered by their brethren, and their families respected for their sakes. But, though Christians and ministers may be very useful to the church, while "they wait in their offices," none but our great High-Priest can make atonement for sin, none can be accepted, save through his atonement and mediation.—While ministers are bound to wait on their ministering, according to the work of their place; the people are equally bound, in their several stations, to strengthen their hands, and to contribute without grudging to their comfortable maintenance: and in every good work, equality and unanimity will render the burden light, and conduce to the comfort of all concerned, as also to render their endeavours more generally useful.

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1-5. (Marg. Ref.) When

7 And the sons of Bela; Ezbon, and Uzzi, and Uzziel, and Jerimoth, and Iri, five; heads of the house of their fathers, mighty men of valour; ^{a. c. 7} and ^{1917.} were reckoned by their genealogies twenty and two thousand and thirty and four.

8 And the sons of Becher; Zemira, and Josh, and Eliezer, and Elioenai, and Omri, and Jerimoth, and Abiah, and Anathoth, and Alameth. All these are the sons of Becher.

9 And the number of them, after their genealogy by their generations, heads of the house of their fathers, mighty men of valour, was twenty thousand and two hundred.

10 The sons also of Jediel; Bilhan: and the sons of Bilhan; Jesh, and Benjamin, and Ehud, and Chenaanah, and Zethan, and Tharshish, and Ahishahar.

11 All these the sons of Jediel, by the heads of their fathers, mighty men of valour, were seventeen thousand and two hundred soldiers, fit to go out for war and battle.

12 ^bShuppim also, and Huppim, the children of Ir, and Hushim, the sons of ^aAher.

13 ^cThe sons of Naphtali; Jahziel, and Guni, and Jezer, and ^dShallum, the sons of Bilhan.

31 And the sons of Beriah; Heber, and Malchiel, who is the father of Birzavith.

32 And Heber begat Japhlet, and ^{af}Shomer, and Hotham, and Shua their sister.

33 And the sons of Japhlet; Pasach, and Bimhal, and Ashvath. These are the children of Japhlet.

34 And the sons of ^{ag}Shamer; Abi, and Rohgah, Jehubbah, and Aram.

35 And the sons of his brother Helem; Zophah, and Imna, and Shelesh, and Amal.

36 The sons of Zophah; Suah, and Harnephar, and Shual, and Beri, and Imrah, 37 Bezer, and Hod, and Shamma, and Shilshah, and ^{ah}Ithran, and Beera.

38 And the sons of Jether; Jephunneh, and Pispah, and Ara.

39 And the sons of Ulla; Arah, and Haniel, and Rezia.

David numbered the people, (Notes, 2 Sam. 24:1—9.) the effective men of Issachar amounted to 87,000; 22,600 of whom descended from Tola his eldest son; but whether the 36,000 (4) were descendants of Tola by Uzzi; and the 22,600, his descendants by Tola's other sons; or whether another of Issachar's sons is intended, does not clearly appear: for Uzzi was the son of Tola and grandson of Issachar. Izrahiah and his five sons are spoken of as five sons of Uzzi. (3.) If the former be meant, which seems the more obvious meaning, by far the greatest part of the tribe of Issachar descended from Tola.

V. 6—11. The persons mentioned seem not, strictly speaking, to have been the sons of Bela and Becher; but renowned persons among their descendants, or such as were progenitors of those who returned from Babylon. (Notes, 8:1—5. Gen. 46:21.)

V. 12. Aher. Aher signifies another, and it has been conjectured that these were Danites, 'the sons of another tribe'; especially as Hushim is named as the only son of Dan. (Gen. 46:23.) And they suppose, that the name of Dan was not mentioned, because his descendants first established idolatry. But Zebulun, as well as Dan, is here omitted; perhaps, because none of either of these tribes returned at first from Babylon.—Though the Benjamites had been almost destroyed, in the first days of the judges, they soon became numerous and powerful. (Notes, Judg. 20: 21:)

V. 13. Marg. Ref.

V. 14, 15. Ashriel was Manasseh's eldest son by his wife, who is not named: but a Syrian concubine was the mother of Machir, from whom the whole of that numerous tribe seems to have descended: for Ashriel as the son of Manasseh is not mentioned elsewhere; and Zelophehad "the second" was a descendant of Machir, two generations having intervened between them: for he was the son of Hephher, the son of Gilead, the son of Machir. (Num. 26:29—33. Notes, Num. 27:1—11. 36:1—12. Josh. 17:1—6.)—"Of Asriel the family of the Asrielites." (Num. 26:31.) This Asriel was a descendant of Machir by Gilead. Machir married a descendant of Benjamin.

V. 18. Hammoleketh seems to have been the sister of Gilead: though some think she was the sister of Bedan. (17)

V. 21, 22. Ezer and Elead seem to have been the sons, or grandsons, of Ephraim, and not his more remote descendants; for it is evident that he was living when they were slain. Some think, that they supposed the time was arrived for the nation to inherit Canaan: and so made an unsuccessful invasion of it. But, it is more likely, that some inhabitants of Gath, who had been natives of Egypt, made an incursion into Goshen, to commit depredations on the cattle of Israel, and slew those who defended them. Thus Ephraim, that was intended to be a very numerous and prosperous tribe, was at first diminished.

V. 24. Some female descendant of Ephraim had affluence, influence, and liberality, to rebuild three cities for her brethren. (Marg. Ref.) and contrary to probabilities; the dispensations of Providence seem to run counter to the promises, in order that their performance may be the more observed and admired; and often a good cause is unsuccessful, while the wicked triumph in the success of their villany: but the day of judgment will clear up, and rectify, all such apparent obliquities in the divine administration.—Those who live long often become like the decaying tree, which stands till all its branches are withered, or broken off one after another. But, though the premature death of our children must necessarily be afflictive, and it behooves us all mutually to comfort each other; yet, we should not mourn as men without hope; for the Lord is able to make up all our losses. Considering our state on earth, we may properly call all our children Beriah; (marg.) for “man is born to trouble, as the sparks fly upwards.” But the supports, consolations, and prospects, which the gospel brings to believers, are sufficient to counterbalance every evil, and to render both life and death tolerable, if not joyful.—As men readily venture their lives to preserve their cattle or property; surely we should be willing to renounce, venture, and suffer any thing, for the sake of Jesus Christ and his precious salvation.

V. 25—29. (Marg. Ref.) "Rephah was his son," (25) 'that is, the son of Beriah.' "... 'Jehoshua,' (27) 'for whose sake his pedigree seems to be thus largely deduced. Bp. Patrick.

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1-5. (Note, 7:7-11.) The tribe of Benjamin adhered to Judah, in the division of the kingdom, and returned with the Jews from Babylon: and, as the history is about to open with the translation of the kingdom from Saul of that tribe, to David of Judah; we have here a more copious account given of it than of several other tribes. But either some of the sons of Benjamin had several names, or those called his sons were his more remote descendants. Gera, called his son in Genesis, is here mentioned as his grandson by Bela; (Note, Gen. 46:21.) but the whole subsequent genealogy is obscure. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6-10. Ehud, the son of Gera, (5) was the judge of Israel, who slew Eglon king of Moab; (Notes, Judg. 3:15-30.) perhaps, in consequence, he acquired dominion over the Moabites, and some of his descendants lived among them. These having many children, removed several of them, and settled them in different places during their own lives.

V. 29-40. There are no genealogies remaining of any of the kings of Israel, after the division of the kingdom. But, we have here not only a genealogy of Saul, but also an account of his descendants by Jonathan, and Meribbaal, or Mephibosheth, and his son Micah, for several generations. (Notes, 1 Sam. 9:1, 2. 14:47-52.) Perhaps David took care to record what passed in his days, and his descendants recorded what came after, in honour of Jonathan, David's covenanted generous friend. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 9:35-44. 2 Sam. 9:16:—4. 19:24-30.) “Conradus Pellicanus makes this reflection:—‘That hence we may learn, it is an unnecessary labour scrupulously to inquire after these things, from which we can reap no fruit, and of which we may be ignorant without danger. Especially in the matter of these genealogies, the reason of which is long since expired, together with the tribes to which they belong. As for the certainty of our belief, which depends upon the authority of the holy Scriptures, that stands firm and constant, though some things, by the length of time, be so obscure, that they are not now exactly understood; especially in the difference we find in the proper names of persons and places, which without prejudice to the faith may be neglected.’” Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord desires to exalt those who have been abased, and to honour those who adhere to him, and to the King whom he has placed upon his holy hill of Zion, to his chosen people, and to his instituted worship. Numbers of renowned names are now buried in oblivion; but as God honours some of those, who have been faithful and useful in their generation, by recording their names in the sacred Scriptures; so he writes the names of all his people in the book of life. May this be our privilege, however unnoticed in the partial histories of mankind!—Alas! what will it avail those, who perish in an unequal contest with the Almighty, to be admired as men of valour and activity by their fellow-creatures! Let us seek to make our peace with God; and for his sake, and after his example, to forgive our enemies, and to be a deceit

CHAPTER IX.

The original of the genealogies of Israel and Judah, 1. The first settlers in the land after the captivity, 2. The first who dwelt at Jerusalem, of the other tribes, 3-9; and of the priests and Levites, with their charge and service, 10-34. A repeated account of Saul's family, 35-44.

SO all Israel were reckoned by genealogies; and behold, they were written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah, who were carried away to Babylon for their transgression.

¶ Now the first inhabitants that dwelt in their possessions in their cities were the Israelites, the priests, Levites, and the Nethinims.

And in Jerusalem dwelt of the children of Judah, and of the children of Benjamin, and of the children of Ephraim, and Manasseh:

Uthai the son of Ammihud, the son of Omri, the son of Imri, the son of Bani, of the children of Pharez the son of Judah.

And of the Shilonites; Asaiah the first-born, and his sons.

And of the sons of Zerah; Jeuel, and their brethren, six hundred and ninety.

And of the sons of Benjamin; Sallu the son of Meshullam, the son of Hodaviah, the son of Hasenuah.

And Ibneiah the son of Jeroham, and Elah the son of Uzzi, the son of Michri, and Meshullam the son of Shephatiah, the son of Reuel, the son of Ibnijah;

And their brethren, according to their generations, nine hundred and fifty and six. All these men were chief of the fathers in the house of their fathers.

¶ And of the priests; Jedaiah, and Jehoiarib, and Jachin,

And Azariah the son of Hilkiah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Zadok, the son of Meraioth, the son of Ahitub, the ruler of the house of God;

And Adaiah the son of Jeroham the son of Pashur, the son of Malchiah, and Maasai the son of Adiel, the son of Jahzerah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Meshillemith, the son of Immer; respect to their memories: and still more to express affection and gratitude to those who have been kind and useful to us, not neglecting the credit and interests of their posterity.

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1. This verse seems to be the sacred writer's account of the book, or books, from which he had transcribed the preceding genealogies. Both Israel and Judah had been thus reckoned or registered; and he had made extracts from the books of the two kingdoms, which had been written before the captivity. (Note, Neh. 7:5, 6.) The ten tribes had been carried into regions at a considerable distance from Babylon: but they were, at the time to which this refers, in general, subject to the kings of Babylon. (2 Kings 17:6. 18:11. 19:12, 13. Am. 5:25-27.)

V. 2. The persons who first, after the captivity, regained possession of their cities and lands, contained among them, not only Jews properly so called, but many Israelites from the other tribes; and also a number of priests, Levites, and Nethinim. (Notes, Neh. 11:1-3.)—The Nethinim were the remainder of the Gibeonites, with others perhaps joined with them, who were given as servants to the priests and Levites. The word signifies given, or dedicated persons. (Notes, Josh. 9:27. 1 Kings 9:20-22. Ezra 2:55-58. 8:20.)

V. 3-9. From the subsequent names of the priests and Levites, it is probable, that the sacred writer is speaking of the transactions recorded by Nehemiah; (Note, Neh. 11: 4-6.) yet the names here mentioned so differ from those in the parallel passage, that it can hardly be supposed the same persons are always meant.—But, in these matters there are difficulties, which are perhaps incapable of a satisfactory solution at this distance of time, though the whole might be plain to those, for whose use it was principally intended.

Uthai, Sc. d. 'Now he sets down their names; and first those of the tribe of Judah.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 11. "The ruler of the house of God" does not signify the high-priest, but "the second priest," who officiated for him when incapacitated; or one of the chief priests, who superintended the affairs of the temple in all ordinary cases. (Marg. Ref. Note, Neh. 11:10-15.)

V. 12-18. Several names seem to be omitted, in the 13 And their brethren, heads of the house of their fathers, a thousand and seven hundred and threescore; very able men for the work of the service of the house of God.

14 And of the Levites; Shemaiah the son of Hashub, the son of Azrikam, the son of Hashabiah, of the sons of Merari;

15 And Bakbakkar, Heresh, and Galal, and Mattaniah the son of Micah, the son of Zichri, the son of Asaph;

16 And Obadiah the son of Shemaiah, the son of Galal, the son of Jeduthun, and Berechiah the son of Asa, the son of Elkanah, that dwelt in the villages of the Netophathites.

17 And the porters were, Shallum, and Akkub, and Talmon, and Ahimian, and their brethren: Shallum was the chief;

18 Who hitherto waited in the king's gate eastward: they were porters in the companies of the children of Levi.

19 And Shallum the son of Kore, the son of Ebiasaph, the son of Korah, and his brethren, of the house of his father, the Korahites, were over the work of the service, keepers of the gates of the tabernacle: and their fathers, being over the host of the Lord, were keepers of the entry.

20 And Phinehas the son of Eleazar was the ruler over them in time past, and the Lord was with him.

21 And Zechariah the son of Meshelemiah was porter of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

22 All these, which were chosen to be porters in the gates, were two hundred and twelve. These were reckoned by their genealogy in their villages, whom David and Samuel the seer did ordain in their set office.

23 So they and their children had the oversight of the gates of the house of the Lord, namely, the house of the tabernacle, by wards.

24 In four quarters were the porters, toward the east, west, north, and south.

genealogies of these persons, and others introduced, which are elsewhere omitted: but the names are so far the same, as to show that the transactions recorded by Nehemiah are intended. (Notes, Neh. 11:10-19. 12:1-11.)

V. 19-21. It has been conjectured that the Jews, upon their return from Babylon, prepared a tabernacle for the worship of the Lord, before they had courage or ability to rebuild the temple. But the inspired historian evidently spoke of the times of Nehemiah; and the temple had been finished many years before.—The word tabernacle may, therefore, refer to the sanctuary erected by Moses, which the temple, built after the captivity, more resembled, than it did Solomon's magnificent edifice. Indeed, the sanctuary at first was only a tent, or tabernacle, when Phinehas superintended it, in time past; yet, "the Lord was with him." (Notes, Num. 3:32. 4:27, 28. 31:4-6.)—This seems to have been mentioned, as an instruction and encouragement to the priests and Levites, in the times of Ezra and Nehemiah: for there can be no reasonable doubt that Phinehas the grandson of Aaron was intended.—Among numerous instances in which the Word of the Lord is used, by the Jewish paraphrasts, personally for JEHOVAH, the following may be added: 'In the Targum, The Word of the Lord was his Helper,—From whence Beckius frames this argument,—that if he who was with Phinehas was JEHOVAH the true God, and this Word was with Phinehas; then the Word, in the opinion of this paraphrast, was JEHOVAH the true God.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 22. Samuel seems to have made some regulations respecting the attendance of the Levites, before those which David afterwards established: indeed, some think, that David received those instructions from Samuel, according to which he regulated the courses of the priests and Levites. (Marg. Ref.)—When the Jews returned from Babylon, they ordered these matters with respect to those appointments.

V. 23. (Marg. Ref.) The expression here used, "the house of the tabernacle," is considered by many as confirming the opinion before mentioned, that a tabernacle was erected, after the captivity, till the temple was finished. (Note, 19-21.) No doubt can, I suppose, be made as to the fact: but,

25 And their brethren, which were in their villages, were to come after seven days from time to time with them.

26 For these Levites, the four chief porters, were in their set office, and were over the chambers and treasuries of the house of God.

27 ¶ And they lodged round about the house of God, because the charge was upon them, and the opening thereof every morning pertained to them.

28 And certain of them had the charge of the ministering vessels, that they should bring them in and out by tale.

29 Some of them also were appointed to oversee the vessels, and all the instruments of the sanctuary, and the fine flour, and the wine, and the oil, and the frankincense, and the spices.

30 And some of the sons of the priests made the ointment of the spices.

31 And Matthithiah, one of the Levites, who was the first-born of Shallum the Korahite, had the set office over the things that were made in the pans.

32 And other of their brethren, of the sons of the Kohathites, were over the show-bread, to prepare it every sabbath.

if the sacred historian wrote of Nehemiah's time, whatever allusion he might make to that fact; it is certain that the temple had been completed many years before.—When David made those regulations concerning the courses and services of the Levites, there was no temple; but the ministrations were performed at the tabernacle; and perhaps on that account, “the house of the tabernacle” is mentioned.

V. 24-25. Marg. Ref. Notes, 26; V. 27-29. The gold and silver vessels, and other treasures appropriated to the service of God, were deposited in the treasuries of the sanctuary; and the Levites lodged around it, as the appointed guard of them, as well as to be ready for their work. (26:20-28. Note, Ezra 8:24-27.)

V. 30. The Levites kept guard over the deposit of spices and frankincense, as well as over the other treasures; but the priests compounded the holy oil and incense. (Notes, Ezr. 30:22-38.) It seems, however, that Bezaleel of Judah, made them in the time of Moses. (Ezr. 37:1,29.)

V. 31-33. Marg. Ref.—Singers. (33.) A number of the Levites were employed, by rotation, in singing praises to the LORD; and they seem to have continued the service, night and day; and consequently were exempted from other employments, and also from paying tribute. (Marg. Ref.—g. Note, Ezra 7:24-26. Ps. 134:—) Moses commanded nothing concerning singers or musicians; and he forbade any to add to his words; but this could only mean uninspired persons; for no doubt God, by his prophets, might add, diminish, or alter, as he saw good.

V. 35-44. (Note, 8:29-40.) This repetition seems to have been intended merely as an introduction to the ensuing history.

Ner, &c. (39) (1 Sam. 14:50,51.) Perhaps Abiel, the father of Kish, was also called Ner.—Ner, the father of Abner or Abiner, (my father Ner), was Saul's uncle, not his grandfather.

NOW the Philistines fought against Israel; and the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and fell down slain in mount Gilboa.

2 And the Philistines followed hard after Saul, and after his sons; and the Philistines slew Jonathan, and Abinadab, and Malchishua, the sons of Saul.

3 And the battle went sore against Saul, and the archers hit him, and he was wounded on the archers.

4 Then said Saul to his armour-bearer, Draw thy sword, and thrust me through therewith; lest these uncircumcised come and abuse me. But his armour-bearer would not; for he was sore afraid. So Saul took a sword and fell upon it.

5 And when his armour-bearer saw that Saul was dead, he fell likewise on the sword, and died.

6 So Saul died, and his three sons, and all his house died together.

7 And when all the men of Israel that were in the valley saw that they fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, then they forsook their not to lose sight of his transgressions, that the justice of God in them may be acknowledged and adored.—When sinners repent and forsake their sins, they are in the way of being extricated from trouble; and the affairs of church and state are likely to be well ordered, when men of all ranks and orders in the community concur in endeavours for that purpose.—Whatever politicians may suppose, no description of men are more essential to the real welfare of the state, than conscientious ministers of religion; and that service requires very able men, of clear heads and steadfast minds. God will raise up such persons, in those nations which he peculiarly favours; and qualify some for rulers in his church, and others for subordinate services: and it is well, when every one knows, and diligently attends to, his proper work, without envying or contemning any of his brethren. To be “a doorkeeper in the house of the LORD” is an honourable employment; and if he be with us, it will both be comfortable to us, and profitable to others; but without this, our services will be formal, and our souls miserable.—If employed in the service of the sanctuary, we have a charge to keep, as well as a work to do; and those, who “watch for men's souls, as they that must give account,” are intrusted with that which is unspeakably more valuable, than the richest treasures of silver and gold. They should therefore reside upon the spot, as much as possible; in order to be near and ready for their work, at every hour as occasion may require. To prepare bread for the sanctuary in their stated public preaching, may perhaps be only expected from them every sabbath; but some parts of their work must be useful every day; and they should generally be exempted from other cares and employments, that they may give themselves wholly to the word of God and prayer. (P. O. Acts 6:1-7.) Blessed be his name! if indeed we be now true believers, we shall for ever, (not in rotation, but altogether,) without interruption or cessation, praise him night and day, in his temple above.

cities, and fled: and the Philistines came and dwelt in them.

8 And it came to pass on the morrow, when the Philistines came to strip the slain, that they found Saul and his sons fallen in mount Gilboa.

9 And when they had stripped him, they took his head, and his armour, and sent into the land of the Philistines round about, to carry tidings unto their idols, and to the people.

10 And they put his armour in the house of their gods, and fastened his head in the temple of Dagon.

11 And when all Jabesh-gilead heard all that the Philistines had done to Saul, 12 They arose, all the valiant men, and took away the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, and brought them to Jabesh, and buried their bones under the oak in Jabesh, and fasted seven days.

13 So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it;

14 And inquired not of the Lord: therefore he slew him, and turned the kingdom unto David the son of Jesse.

CHAPTER XI.

David, by general consent, is made king over all Israel, at Hebron, 1-3. He takes Zion from the Jebusites; dwells there, and prospers, 4-9. The names and achievements of his principal warriors, 10-47.

THEN all Israel gathered themselves to David unto Hebron, saying, Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh.

2 And moreover in time past, even when Saul was king, thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest in Israel: and the Lord thy God said unto thee, Thou shalt feed my people Israel, and thou shalt be ruler over my people Israel.

3 Therefore came all the elders of Israel to the king to Hebron; and David made a covenant with them in Hebron before the Lord; and they anointed David king over Israel, according to the word of the Lord by Samuel.

4 And David and all Israel went to Jerusalem, which is Jebus; where the Jebusites were the inhabitants of the land.

5 And the inhabitants of Jebus said to David Thou shalt not come hither. Nevertheless David took the castle of Zion, which is the city of David.

6 And David said, Whosoever smiteth the Jebusites first shall be chief and captain. So Joab the son of Zeruiah went first up, and was chief.

7 And David dwelt in the castle; therefore they called it, The city of David.

8 And he built the city round about, even from Millo round about: and Joab repaired the rest of the city.

9 So David waxed greater and greater: for the Lord of hosts was with him.

10 These also are the chief of the mighty men whom David had; Jashobeam the Hachmonite, the chief of the captains: he lifted up his spear against three hundred slain by him at one time.

11 And this is the number of the mighty men whom David had; Jashobeam the Hachmonite, the chief of the captains: he lifted up his spear against three hundred slain by him at one time.

12 And after him was Elcazar the son of Dodo the Ahohite, who was one of the three mightiest.

13 He was with David at Pas-dammim, and there the Philistines were gathered together to battle, where was a parcel of ground full of barley; and the people fled from before the Philistines.

14 And they set themselves in the midst of that parcel, and delivered it, and slew the Philistines: and the Lord saved them by a great deliverance.

15 Now three of the thirty captains went down to the rock to David, into the cave of Adullam; and the host of the Philistines encamped in the valley of Rephaim.

16 And David was then in the hold, and the Philistines' garrison was then at Beth-lehem.

in Samuel. All that were present with him in the battle; and his family had received such a blow, that it never recovered itself again. For though Ish-bosheth reigned over a part of the country, yet it was not in any splendour. Bp. Patrick.

V. 13, 14. This history is repeated as an introduction to that of the kingdom of David. The Lord is said to have slain Saul, because he sentenced him to death, and gave Satan leave to tempt him to be his own executioner.—Is it possible, more strongly to mark the excessive criminality of consulting witches, conjurers, fortunetellers, or sorcerers of any kind, real or pretended, than by representing Saul's conduct in this respect, as one principal reason of his rejection and awful end? (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Sam. 28:3-10.)

He inquired not, &c. (14) That is, he did not persevere in inquiring of the Lord; but gave it up as hopeless, and had recourse to the consulting of a witch. He was remiss and negligent, saying, If God will not hear me, I will go and consult a familiar spirit. Laniado, a Jew, in Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord punishes none except sinners; and no sinners can escape, who do not humbly cast themselves upon his mercy: but when transgressors inquire of God, and earnestly seek deliverance in his appointed way, they will certainly prevail; and if they be involved in domestic or national calamities in this world, they will be saved from the wrath to come.

Alas! many "reject his counsel, and will none of his proof," till he leaves them to "eat of the fruit of their own ways, and to be filled with their own devices;" and numbers, who profess to seek the Lord, are so superficial in doing it, so soon weary of it, and so ready to listen to Satan's temptations, that God accounts it no inquiry at all. May we "seek the Lord, whilst he may be found," and till we have obtained pardon, peace, and sanctifying grace; and are enabled to renounce all fellowship with the works and prince of darkness. And may the good Lord deliver us from unbelief, impatience, and despair, and teach us to trust in him, to obey and submit to his will: and to render due honour and kindness to all, whatever their behaviour to us may have been! Thus waiting on him, we shall obtain a kingdom that cannot be moved, being beyond the reach of the incessant changes and revolutions of sublunary things.

NOTES.—CHAP. XI. V. 1-3. In this recapitulation of the transactions, with which David's reign over all Israel was introduced, no mention is made of Ish-bosheth, or Abner, or of the seven first years after Saul's death: (Notes, 2 Sam. 1:4-4) but the narrative begins with his being submitted to, as God's appointed king, and as such anointed at Hebron, by the concurrence of the whole nation. (Notes, 2 Sam. 5:1-3.) It is here added, "according to the word of the Lord by Samuel." (Notes, 1 Sam. 13:13-15. 16:6-13.)

V. 4-8. Notes, 2 Sam. 5:6-9.—Joab, &c. (6) It is evident that Joab was, before this, high in authority under David; but he was, as a reward of his courage and conduct on this occasion, established commander-in-chief over the whole army.

V. 9. (2 Sam. 5:10.) David's increasing greatness, with the cause of it, is here emphatically stated.

V. 10-14. Note, 2 Sam. 23:8-12.—Who strengthened, &c. (10) "Those valiant men . . . that assisted him" (David) "in his advancement, and helped to establish him in his authority. They were such, in all likelihood, as had accompanied him, during his persecution by Saul, when they gave David many proofs of their valour and affection as they also did afterward." Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15-19. Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Sam. 13:15-11.

17 And David ^{longed}, and said, Oh that one would give me drink ^{of} the water of the well of Beth-lehem, that is at the gate!

18 And the three ^{brake} through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: but David would not drink of it, but ^{poured} it out to the Lord,

19 And said, ^{My God forbid} it me, that I should do this thing: ^{shall} I drink the blood of these men ^{that have put their lives} in jeopardy? for with the jeopardy of their lives they brought it. Therefore he would not drink it. ^{These things} did these three mightyest.

22 ^{Benaiah} the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man of ^{Kabzeel}, who had done many acts; he slew two ^{lion-like} men of Moab: also he went down and ^{slew} a lion in a pit in a snowy day.

23 And he slew an Egyptian, ^{a man of great} stature, ^{five cubits} high; and in the Egyptian's hand was ^{a spear} like a weaver's beam; and he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and ^{slew} him with his own spear.

24 These things did Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and had the name among the three mightyest.

25 Behold, he was honourable among the thirty, ^{but attained not to the first three}: and David set him over his guard.

Several names are added to the catalogue of worthies. It is probable, the persons intended were something less famous than those mentioned also in the second book of Samuel.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When the time arrives for the performance of God's word, those persons who before were the most adverse to the things predicted, will concur in accomplishing them.—Kings should remember, and have need to be reminded, that they are not advanced for their own aggrandizement or self-indulgence; but that they should, with activity and vigour, provide for the defence and welfare of the nations over which they reign.—The desire of applause and pre-eminence seems to be the highest motive, of which carnal men are capable: but those, who are born from above, are actuated by purer and nobler principles. Yet, in seeking the glory of God and the good of man, by endeavouring to advance the kingdom of Jesus the Lord's anointed; they most effectually secure their own honour and exaltation.—The kingdom and glory of Christ will surely wax greater and greater, (the Lord of hosts being with him,) till all his enemies are put under his feet, and all his friends placed with him upon his throne.—The way to be truly great is to be really useful; and to give the use and glory of all our talents and services to the Lord: and if we be, at length, preserved from the destruction of the wicked, we shall perceive that the Lord has saved us with a great deliverance. May he teach us to repress all our earthly desires, to govern our appetites, to acknowledge candidly our mistakes, and NOTES.—CHAP. XII. V. 1, 2. The sacred writer here goes back in the history to the times which preceded the death of Saul, and records some particulars not mentioned in the books of Samuel, respecting David's advancement to the throne.—Several considerable persons resorted to him at Ziklag; (Marg. Ref. a, b,) and either joined his small troop, or assured him of assistance when it became necessary.—Some of these were Benjamites, and related to Saul, who were either induced through a firm belief of the word of God by Samuel respecting him; or by indignation at the base treatment which David met with from Saul, to the disgrace of their family and tribe; or because they perceived, that the Lord was departed from Saul, and was with David of a truth. The hand of God was, however, very conspicuous, in raising him up friends from this tribe, whence he might have expected the most determined opposition.—Use both, &c. (2) Notes, Judg. 3:15-18. 20:16.

V. 4. Perhaps Saul had conferred some honourable distinction on thirty of his most valiant captains; as David afterwards did on the same number of his: and Ismaiah was placed over this illustrious company. For Abiezer (3) seems to have been the chief of those who came to David at that time.—I suppose, there were thirty Benjamites came over to David at one time, and this was their leader. Ep. Patrick

7 And Joelah, and Zebadiah, the sons of Jeroham of Gedor.

8 And of the Gadites there separated themselves unto David into the hold to the wilderness men of might, and men of war fit for the battle, that could handle shield and buckler, whose faces were like the faces of lions, and were as swift as the roes upon the mountains;

9 Ezer the first, Obadiah the second, Eliab the third,

10 Mishmannah the fourth, Jeremiah the fifth,

11 Attai the sixth, Eliel the seventh,

12 Johanan the eighth, Elzabab the ninth,

13 Jeremiah the tenth, Machbanai the eleventh.

14 These were of the sons of Gad, captains of the host: one of the least was over a hundred, and the greatest over a thousand.

15 These are they that went over Jordan in the first month, when it had overflowed all his banks; and they put to flight all them of the valleys, both toward the east, and toward the west.

16 And there came of the children of Benjamin and Judah to the hold unto David.

17 And David went out to meet them, and answered and said unto them, If ye be come peaceably unto me to help me, my heart shall be knit unto you: but if ye be come to betray me to mine enemies, seeing there is no wrong in my hands, the God of our fathers look thereon, and rebuke it.

18 Then the Spirit came upon Amasai, who was chief of the captains, and he said, O Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse: peace, peace be unto thee, and peace be to thy helpers: for thy God helpeth thee. Then David received them, and made them captains of the band.

[Practical Observations.]

19 And there fell some of Manasseh to David, when he came with the Philistines against Saul to battle: but they helped them not: for the lords of the Philistines upon advisement, sent him away, saying, He will fall to his master Saul to the jeopardy of our heads.

20 As he went to Ziklag, there fell to him of Manasseh, Adnah, and Jozabad, and Jedaiel, and Michael, and Jozabad, and Elihu, and Zithai, captains of the thousands that were of Manasseh.

21 And they helped David against the band of the rovers: for they were all mighty men of valour, and were captains in the host.

22 For at that time day by day there came to David to help him, until it was a great host, like the host of God.

23 And these are the numbers of the bands that were ready armed to the war, and came to David to Hebron, to turn the kingdom of Saul to him, according to the word of the Lord.

24 The children of Judah that bare shield and spear were six thousand and eight hundred, ready armed to the war.

25 Of the children of Simeon, mighty men of valour for the war, seven thousand and one hundred.

26 Of the children of Levi four thousand and six hundred.

27 And Jehoiada was the leader of the Aaronites, and with him were three thousand and seven hundred.

28 And Zadok, a young man mighty of valour, and of his father's house twenty and two captains.

29 And of the children of Benjamin, the kindred of Saul, three thousand: for hitherto the greatest part of them had kept the ward of the house of Saul.

30 And of the children of Ephraim twenty thousand and eight hundred, mighty men of valour, famous throughout the house of their fathers.

31 And of the half tribe of Manasseh eighteen thousand, which were expressed by name, to come and make David king.

32 And of the children of Issachar, which were men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do; the heads of them were two hundred, and all their brethren were at their commandment.

V. 14. Either these persons had the command, some over a hundred men, and others over a thousand, before they came to David; or he preferred them afterwards, in consideration of their services; or the passage may be understood according to the marginal reading.

V. 15. The lot of Gad was to the east of Jordan: and it is probable, that these men crossed the river towards the west, or into the land of Canaan properly so called. (Notes, Num. 32.) It seems also, that some great emergency required their immediate interposition; but it is not stated what enemies they opposed.—Perhaps, during some part of Saul's reign, the Philistines and other tribes, made incursions into the land of Israel; and these resolute Gadites hastened to assist their brethren. Or perhaps they were coming to join David, in his extreme danger; and, being opposed by Saul's adherents, they put them to flight, and pursued them in every direction. (Note, 8.)

V. 16—18. David had experienced much treachery even from those of his own tribe, and was therefore put on his guard; but he very frankly avowed his suspicions, and appealed to the consciences of those concerned. If they came peaceably to assist him, he would cordially unite with them; and the time would come, when he should be able to recompense them: but as he was conscious he had not injured either Saul or his country; he reminded them, that if they came to betray him, the God of their fathers would surely avenge his cause upon them. Then Amasai, their leader, animated by a special impulse of the Spirit of God, answered him in the name of all the rest. He declared that they were entirely attached to his person and interest; and cordially desired the prosperity of him, and of all who helped him; not only as his cause was just, but as they were persuaded that it was the cause of God, and would prevail: and they desired to share the conflicts and the successes of David and his friends. Accordingly David received and preferred them.—It is not certain, whether Amasai was, or was not, the same as Amasa, elsewhere mentioned. (Marg. Ref. b.)

V. 19. Notes, 1 Sam. 29:2-6.

V. 20, 21. These captains of Manasseh seem to have met David, as he was returning from the army of the Philistines to Ziklag. It is probable, that they did not bring their companies with them; yet they both assured him of future assistance, and very seasonably helped him against the Amalekites who had spoiled Ziklag. (Notes, 1 Sam. 30.)

V. 22. Such numbers resorted to David, after Saul's defeat and death, and they were so loyally attached to David, so united with each other, and so powerfully illustrious and valiant, that they resembled "the host of God;" that is, his legions of angels. Some consider it merely as a Hebrewism for a very great army.

33 Of Zebulun, such as went forth to battle, expert in war, with all instruments of war, fifty thousand, which could keep rank: they were not of double heart.

34 And of Naphtali a thousand captains, and with them with shield and spear thirty and seven thousand.

35 And of the Danites expert in war twenty and eight thousand and six hundred.

36 And of Asher, such as went forth to battle, expert in war, forty thousand.

37 And on the other side of Jordan, of the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and of the half tribe of Manasseh, with all manner of instruments of war for the battle, a hundred and twenty thousand.

38 All these men of war, that could keep rank, came with a perfect heart to Hebron, to make David king over all Israel: and all the rest also of Israel were of one heart to make David king.

39 And there they were with David three days, eating and drinking: for their brethren had prepared for them.

V. 23-40. Some learned men understand this passage, or at least a part of it, as relating to the time when David was made king over Judah, on his first coming to Hebron: but it seems entirely to refer to his being made king over all Israel, after the death of Ish-bosheth; for there was no such union of the several tribes, on the former occasion, as is here described. (Notes, 2 Sam. 2:1-4. 5:1-3.)—At that time great numbers came to David from each of the tribes of Israel: but in different proportions, according to the degree of the cordiality and zeal of each tribe. It is probable, that so small a number of Judah was present, in order that David's own tribe, over which he had now reigned seven years, might not appear to impose a king on their brethren. There was a considerable number of Levites assembled; but not at all in proportion to the multitude of the priests, the descendants of Aaron, who appeared on this occasion under a leader named Jehoiada, probably appointed by Abiathar the high-priest: while Zadok, who was afterwards high-priest, being now a young man, headed a company of chief men, perhaps of the line of Eleazar. So greatly had that family increased, notwithstanding the slaughter which Saul had not long before made of them, (Notes, 1 Sam. 20:6-19.) that almost four thousand attended on this occasion!—The Benjamites in general had favoured the house of Saul; and numbers of them still waited for an opportunity of reviving the claim of that family, in some of its branches; for so the latter part of the twenty-ninth verse may be interpreted.—The leaders of Issachar were intelligent men, who understood the signs of the times; and perceived that it was both the duty and political interest of Israel, to advance David to the throne: and, having great authority in their tribe, they induced them to a unanimous concurrence in this measure; though they do not seem to have brought them to Hebron. Besides the numbers, who doubtless on various accounts were kept away, though cordially attached to David, there were three hundred and fifty thousand armed men, all heartily devoted to his service; who placed him upon the throne of Israel, with every expression of joy and affection.

Not of double heart. (33) 'All sincerely affected to David; though there were so many of them.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, Jam. 1:5-8.)—On asses, &c. (40) No mention is made of horses, as employed on this occasion.—There was joy in Israel.] Their hearts were enlarged with joy, to see an end of their division, by their union under such a king, as they might reasonably hope would procure great happiness to them.' Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-18. Earthly princes in general honour with marked distinction such persons, as have faithfully adhered to them in seasons of difficulty and danger: and, in like manner, Jesus Christ will confer peculiar honour upon those, who embrace and adhere to his gospel, in times of persecution and distress; who deny themselves, renounce their worldly interests, break through difficulties, and bear the cross, for his sake and after his example.—Courage, strength, agility, ingenuity, or superior mental endowments, are valuable to the possessors and to the community, only when, being considered as talents committed to them by the great Lord of all, they are conscientiously improved in promoting the glory of God, and the welfare of mankind; for, when misused or neglected, they prove occasions of increasing condemnation. Long experience of the deceitfulness of mankind will teach caution to every reflecting person; but we should be afraid of growing unreasonably suspicious: and if we have a clear 40 Moreover, they that were nigh them, even unto Issachar, and Zebulun, and Naphtali, brought bread on asses, and on camels, and on mules, and on oxen, and meat, meal, cakes of figs, and bunches of raisins, and wine, and oil, and oxen, and sheep abundantly: for there was joy in Israel.

conscience, and use moderate precautions, we may trust in God to defend us from the effects of secret treachery, as well as of open violence; while we should readily forgive former injuries, and unite with those, who profess a disposition to be at peace with us, and to help us. But, when we cannot but suspect men's intentions in courting our friendship, it is best, in some cases, frankly to remonstrate with them as in the sight of God. This may sometimes intimidate the insincere, and give the upright an opportunity of clearing up their characters; while suspicions, harboured in secret, or only whispered among friends, are often injurious to the suspected person, and always troublesome to ourselves. Integrity and affection will frequently, when the case requires it, dictate such frank, unreserved, and energetic language, as to afford full satisfaction: and then, cordial union, in promoting one common cause, succeeds jealousies, distance, and the debility of distrust.—Peace or victory, prosperity and felicity, are ensured to those whom God helps, and to all who concur with them. If under the influence of his Spirit, we, on that account, desire to have our lot among them, and declare on their side; and if we uprightly embrace the cause of Christ; his heart will be kind unto us, and he will receive and advance us in due season.

V. 19-40. The cause of our King appears to a carnal eye weak and obscure, and his subjects have been hitherto comparatively few: but his kingdom and glory will, ere long, rapidly advance; and his host become, like "the host of God," innumerable and invincible.—The advancement of wise and good men to authority, is justly considered as a cause of great and general joy; and joy naturally enlarges the heart in cheerful liberality. Thus the Saviour's exaltation to the throne of glory filled the hearts of his people with gladness: nay, the sinner's willing submission to him, ushers in a day of joy and gladness, in which his brethren share, and to which they contribute. But, what a joyful time will that be, "when all kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him!" Every individual, in the innumerable throng, will participate and add to the joy of all the rest: and nothing short of the perfect purity and harmony of heaven, can give us a higher idea of true happiness. Meanwhile, happy are they, who have understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do: who wisely perceive it to be their duty and interest, to submit to and trust in Jesus Christ the Son of David: who renounce all inconsistent connexions, pursuits, and employments for his sake; and unreservedly employ all their influence and ability to promote his cause from love to him and to their brethren: whose love also abounds in knowledge and in all judgment, so that their beneficent endeavours are directed by heavenly wisdom, through an acquaintance with the word of God, and a maturity of experience and observation: and who consequently know how to attempt every thing in that manner, and at those seasons, which are suited to give it the greatest effect. This is to unite "the wisdom of the serpent with the harmlessness of the dove;" and "if any man lack this wisdom, let him ask it of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."

NOTES.—CHAP. XIII. V. 1-4. It is probable, that David consulted with his principal friends and officers, about bringing back the ark, immediately after he had got possession of mount Zion, and had fixed his residence there: yet it appears, from comparing the different parts of the narrative, that he did not accomplish the design till some time after being retarded by the incursions of the Philistines, and by

4 And also the congregation said that they would do so: for ^{the} thing was right in the eyes of all the people.

5 So David gathered all Israel together, from Shihor of Egypt even unto the entering of Hemath, to bring the ark of God from Kirjath-jearim.

6 And David went up, and all Israel, to Baalah, that is, to Kirjath-jearim, which belonged to Judah, to bring up thence the ark of God the Lord, that dwelleth between the cherubims, whose name is called on it.

7 And they carried the ark of God in a new cart out of the house of Abinadab: and Uzza and Ahio drove the cart. [Practical Observations.]

8 And David and all Israel played before God with all their might, and with singing, and with harps, and with psalteries, and with timbrels, and with cymbals, and with trumpets.

9 And when they came unto the thrashing-floor of Chidon, Uzza put forth his hand to hold the ark; for the oxen stumbled.

10 And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Uzza, and he smote him, because he put his hand to the ark: and there he died before God.

11 And David was displeased because the Lord had made a breach upon Uzza: wherefore that place is called Perez-uzza to this day.

12 And David was afraid of God that day, saying, How shall I bring the ark of God home to me?

13 So David brought not the ark home to himself to the city of David, but carried it aside into the house of Obed-edom the Gittite.

14 And the ark of God remained with the family of Obed-edom in his house three months. And the Lord blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that he had.

CHAPTER XIV.

Hiram sends timber and builders to build David a house, 1. He prospers in his kingdom, takes more wives, and has several children, 2, 3. The names of his sons, 4-7. He gains two signal victories over the Philistines, 8-17.

Now Hiram king of Tyre sent messengers to David, and timber of cedars, with masons and carpenters, to build him a house.

2 And David perceived that the Lord had confirmed him king over Israel, for his kingdom was lifted up on high, because of his people Israel.

3 And David took more wives at Jerusalem: and David begat more sons and daughters.

4 Now these are the names of his children which he had in Jerusalem: Shammua, and Shobab, Nathan, and Solomon,

5 And Ithar, and Elishua, and Elpalet,

6 And Nogah, and Nepheg, and Japhia,

7 And Elishama, and Beeliada, and Eliphaz.

8 And when the Philistines heard that David was anointed king over all Israel, all the Philistines went up to seek David. And David heard of it, and went out against them.

9 And the Philistines came and spread themselves in the valley of Rephaim.

10 And David inquired of God, saying, Shall I go up against the Philistines? and wilt thou deliver them into my hand? And the Lord said unto him, Go up; for I will deliver them into thy hand.

11 So they came up to Baal-perazim; and David smote them there. Then David said, God hath broken in upon mine enemies by my hand like the breaking forth of waters: therefore they called the name of that place Baal-perazim.

12 And when they had left their gods there, David gave a commandment, and they were burned with fire.

13 And the Philistines yet again spread themselves abroad in the valley.

14 Therefore David inquired again of God: and God said unto him, Go not up after them; turn away from them, and come upon them against the mulberry-trees.

15 And it shall be, when thou shalt hear a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry-trees, that then thou shalt go out to battle: for God is gone forth before thee, to smite the host of the Philistines.

16 David therefore did as God commanded him: and they smote the host of the Philistines from Gibeon even to Gazer.

other hinderances. (Notes, 2 Sam. 5:6, 12.) He did not judge it expedient, to act merely by authority in so important a concern: but, by consulting his friends, he ensured their ready concurrence, and that of their several connexions, and also of the priests and Levites. During Saul's reign, or the latter part of it at least, the ark had been neglected, and even David had inquired of God by the high priest at a distance from it; (Notes, 1 Sam. 23:1-6, 9-13. 30:7-10. 2 Sam. 2:1-3.) while Saul concerned himself very little in any way about religion. Thus the regular way of inquiring the will of God, by the high priest, with the breastplate of judgment, before the ark in the sanctuary, had been long neglected.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. When we set out in life, or obtain any temporal advancement, we should first inquire, how we may honour God and do good, and enjoy the divine blessing, in our several situations, and in the use of our possessions. Princes especially ought to adopt the most useful measures which they can devise to promote true religion by their example and authority, that they may have the Lord high unto them in all they undertake. This can only be done by consulting with others, and engaging them to concur in measures of acknowledged utility, and evidently consistent with the word of God; and by reminding, encouraging, and charging the ministers of religion, to attend to their impo tant duties in their several situations, that good examples and good instructions may abound throughout the land. When such things, being mildly proposed, seem good to the leading men, we may hope that they are from the Lord, and expect that many other persons, being called upon, will voluntarily assist; and that thus the gospel will excite general attention, without any of the anti-christian weapons of compulsion.—In rectifying abuses, it is generally best to shun personal reflections and severe accusations: they appear malevolent, and excite opposition. Suffice it to show, that things needful have been neglected, and that it is proper for us to attend to them: and, in public transgressions, humility will teach a man to consider himself as in some measure guilty, and more readily to condemn himself than others.—Even good men, in doing their duty, are liable to mistakes, and to act in an improper spirit: and rebukes, though merited and needed, often excite murmurs, discouragements, and hard thoughts of God. May we then, with redoubled diligence, seek to become acquainted with the whole word of God, and to make it “the lantern of our path” may we walk humbly and circumspectly, avoid rashness and presumption, rejoice in our priviledges with trembling, be patient under divine rebukes, persevere in well doing without discouragement, and seek the forgiveness and acceptance in every service, from the mercy of God in Christ Jesus! Thus will the gospel, which is to many “the savour of death, become to us “the savour of life,” and the source of all blessings in time and to eternity.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIV. V. 1-16. (Notes, 3:1-9. 2 Sam. 5:11-25.) The events, recorded in this chapter, are supposed to have taken place in the order assigned to them for 'song': he instructed about the song, because he was skilful.

23 And Berechiah and Elkanah were 'door-keepers for the ark.

24 And Shebaniah, and Jehoshaphat, and Nethaneel, and Amasai, and Zechariah, and Benaiah, and Eliezer, the priests, did blow with the trumpets before the ark of God: and 'Obed-edom and Jehiah were doorkeepers for the ark.

25 ¶ So 'David and the elders of Israel, and the 'captains over thousands, went to bring up the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of the house of 'Obed-edom 'with joy.

26 And it came to pass, when 'God helped the Levites that bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, that 'they offered 'seven bullocks and seven rams.

27 And David was clothed with 'a robe of fine linen, and all the Levites that bare the ark, and the singers, and 'Chenaniah the master of the 'song with the singers: David also had upon him an ephod of linen.

28 Thus all Israel 'brought up the ark of the covenant of the Lord 'with shouting, and with sound of the cornet, and with trumpets, and with cymbals, making a noise with psalteries and harps.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, as the 'ark of the covenant of the Lord came to the city of David, that Michal the daughter of Saul looking out at a window, saw king David 'dancing and playing and 'she despised him in her heart.

CHAPTER XVI.

The ark being placed in its tent, David offers sacrifices, and liberally feeds the people, 1-3. He appoints singers and musicians to praise the Lord, 4-6. The psalm of thanksgiving then used, 7-36. The priests, singers, and porters appointed to minister continually before the ark, 37-42. David dismisses the people, 43.

SO 'they brought the ark of God, and set it 'in the midst of the tent that David pitched for it: and 'they offered burnt-sacrifices and peace-offerings before God.

2 And when David had made an end of offering 'the burnt-offerings, and the peace-offerings, 'he blessed the people in the name of the Lord.

3 And he dealt to every one of Israel, both man and woman, 'to every one a loaf of bread, and good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine.

4 ¶ And 'he appointed certain of the Levites to 'minister before the ark of the Lord, and to record, and to thank and praise 'the Lord God of Israel:

5 'Asaph the chief, and next to him Zechariah Jeiel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Mattathiah, and Eliab, and Benaiah, and Obed-edom: and Jeiel with 'psalteries and with harps; but Asaph made a sound with cymbals;

6 Benaiah also and Jahaziel the priests 'with trumpets continually before the ark of the covenant of God.

7 ¶ Then 'on that day David delivered first which either signify treble and bass, or some particular tunes, or the construction of the instruments to which the compositions were adapted. (Notes, Ps. 6: title. 46: title.)

V. 22. Chenaniah seems to have been the precentor, and the principal instructor of all the company in singing: though Heman, Asaph, and Ethan had the chief authority over the singers and musicians of the families of the Levites. (Marg. Ref. v. 17.)

V. 23, 24. Perhaps Berechiah and Elkanah were stationed on mount Zion, to open the doors of the tent, when the ark approached to it; and when the singers called on them for admission. (Note, Ps. 24:7-10.) And Obed-edom and Jehiah were afterwards appointed stately to guard the door of the tent, that none might enter, but according to the law.—The blowing of the trumpets was exclusively the office of the priests. (Marg. Ref. t. Note, Num. 10:2-10.)

V. 26. The Levites offered these sacrifices on their own account, besides those which David offered. (Note, 2 Sam. 6:12, 13.) Thus they acknowledged the unmerited goodness of God, in enabling them with safety to perform the service allotted them; probably being conscious, that Uzzah had been smitten, as much through their fault as for his own.—Some think that they rested seven days, and offered a bullock and a ram each time. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 27, 28. Note, 2 Sam. 6:14, 15. V. 29. (Notes, 2 Sam. 6:120-23.) 'She was a proud woman, and 'tis likely had no great sense of religion, which in the reign of Saul . . . was much neglected.' Bi. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The most zealous and useful reformers have, in all ages, been left to make mistakes, which inferior persons could easily discern; and especially, before their judgments were matured by experience and observation. Satan avails himself of these errors to prejudice the minds of men against their whole character and work: and the artifice readily succeeds with those, who are in quest of some specious pretence, for despising and opposing the humbling truths and the holy service of God. But, we should hence infer, that nothing perfect can be expected from mere men; and we should neither be offended at the miscarriages blended with laudable and useful endeavours; nor yet vindicate or adopt every sentiment and practice, which have been sanctioned by respectable and eminent men: but, we should compare all, as well as we can, with the word of God; and by that criterion distinguish between the precious and the vile. Wise and good men, however, will profit by rebukes; having discovered, they will honestly confess their mistakes, and acknowledge that they 'did not seek the Lord after the due order;' and, upon recollection, they will both justify him in his sharpest corrections, and proceed with their work with greater circumspection. It indeed, seems one of the greatest attainments of human nature, to search out, confess, rectify, and profit by, our own mistakes and miscarriages.—The Lord's choice of us, in every sense in which that expression is used or understood, implies our being chosen to services, as well as privileges; and plain and serious admonitions, from those who lead the way by a good example, and whose rank and character give weight a d authority to their words, will often excite the remiss to diligence, and the ignorant and heedless to learn and attend to their duty.—But alas! pre-eminence is generally privileged with supineness and indulgence: and too often, examples of avarice, pride, and licentiousness, become infamously conspicuous, through the rank of those who set them; diffusing their baleful influence, like a destructive pestilence, among the subordinate members of the community. We have all, however, our proper place, work, and talent; every servant should know well his own business, and punctually execute it; and this cannot be done without attention to the Scriptures, and preparation of heart by the sanctification of the Spirit, vouchsafed in answer to our prayers.—Every thing we engage in, must be undertaken in dependence on the mercy and grace of God through the atoning sacrifice of the Redeemer: and, as "it is of the LORD's mercy, that we are not consumed," so, if we go successfully and comfortably through any service, we must remember that God has helped us, and give him the glory; for without him we can do nothing. When God accepts our persons and our works, makes our hearts joyful in himself, and renders our services beneficial to his church; we may indeed expect, but need not regard, the scoffs and reproaches of unbelievers: and we must learn to bear them with patience, and to persevere in our compassionate prayers for those, who are true enemies to their own souls by opposing the cause of God, which we are honoured to promote.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVI. V. 1-3. Notes, 2 Sam. 6: 17-19.

V. 4-6. These Levites were appointed "to record," or to put the people in remembrance of the wonderful works of God for Israel, as well as to thank him and praise his name. (Note, Is. 62:6, 7.) Doubtless, David acted as a prophet in regulating this part of divine worship; and his example will not justify uninspired men, in introducing human inventions into the worship of God, and imposing them by their own authority; for when Hezekiah made similar arrangements, he only enforced what David had appointed. (2 Chr. 29:26-28.) Yet it is evident that the other kings of Judah, and Nehemiah after the captivity, in many things commanded and directed the Levites and priests, and even the high-priest, in respect of their ministrations; and that when they exercised this authority in religious concerns, according to the word of God, they were approved and commended for so doing. As this is no where enjoined on rulers in the law of Moses; it seems by no means exclusively to belong to that dispensation, but to be the proper improvement of the talents intrusted to them; while an unscriptural exercise of this authority constituted an abuse and perversion of their talents. (Neh. 2: Kings 16:10-16. 2 Chr. 15:12-19. 29:12, 15, 21-24. 30:2, 31:2-4, 20, 21. 44:20-28. 35:1-9. Neh. 13:7-13, 28-31.

Ex. 45:18—25.)—The use of instrumental music in the worship of God was evidently prior to the ceremonial law; and therefore could form no part of it, or be abrogated with it; and though it is not required in the New Testament; yet it seems no way inconsistent with it, provided it be suited to the solemnity and seriousness of our religious rejoicing, and so regulated as really to assist the exercise of devout affections. The sad abuse of making, what is called secured music, a matter of mere carnal diversion, with some other subordinate evils of the same kind, form the strongest arguments against it. (Note, Ex. 15:1.)—The trumpets alone were appointed in the law, and had a typical meaning. (Note, Num. 10:2—10. P. O. 1—10.)

V. 7. The psalm, which was sung on this solemn occasion, is composed of extracts from several psalms. (Marg. Ref.) To the twenty-second verse inclusive is nearly the same as the former part of the cv. Psalm: from the twenty-third verse to the thirty-third, it accords to the xcvi. Psalm; and the conclusion, to that of the cvi. Psalm. Probably David had these by him, with many others, for his own private use; and he composed from them a song of praise and thanksgiving, to record the mercies of the Lord, suited to the solemnity. But afterwards he gave the other psalms also, one after another, into the hands of the chief singers, for the benefit of the people who attended the worship performed before the ark.

To thank the Lord. 'To give him thanks (as Conradus Pellicanus well glosses) for all his benefits, he had bestowed on his people Israel, and which he intended to bestow on all the people of this world by his Son Christ. Bp. Patrick.

V. 8, 9. In these verses the inspired and enraptured Psalmist excited the people, and taught them to animate each other, in blessing the God of Israel for all his mercies, and in celebrating his glorious perfections, which are worthy to be known, admired, and extolled; and which render him the meet object of the universal and entire love, worship, confidence, and obedience of all rational creatures. He also exhorted them to meditate, and converse frequently, on the wonderful works of JEHOVAH, and to proclaim them before others; to call on him in all their wants and dangers; and by every means to adore and praise him. (Notes, Ps. 96:1—4. 105:1, 2. Is. 12:4—6.)

V. 10. To "glory in God," is to value our relation to him, as our honour and privilege, far above all other distinctions; to make that alone the ground of our confidence and exultation; to account ourselves in this more happy, more honoured, and more favoured, than any other people. To "glory in his holy name," is to rejoice and exult in his immutable wisdom, justice, truth, and love. (Notes, Is. 45:23—25. Jer. 9:23, 24. 1 Cor. 1:26—31. Phil. 3:1—7. v. 3.) And even they, who are only beginning to seek the Lord, may rejoice that he is upon a mercy-seat, ready to receive their submissions, to hear their prayers, to forgive their sins, to supply their wants, and to save their souls. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11. "Seeking the LORD" implies an earnest and diligent endeavour to obtain the knowledge and favour of God, according to the revelation made of him in his word; the renewal of the soul to holiness by his grace, the safety to be enjoyed under his omnipotent protection, and the comfort and support of his Spirit under all trials and temptations, till his strength has perfected the work of his mercy in the full salvation of both body and soul; when present glimpses of his glory, and experience of his love, shall be perfected, by beholding the full display of that glory, and enjoying the full effects of that love, in heaven for ever. (Notes, Ps. 142:3. 27:8, 9. Is. 55:6, 7. Matt. 6:33, 34. 7:7—11.)—The gracious aid and pro-word which he commanded to 'a thousand generations;

16 Even of the covenant 'which he made with Abraham, and of his oath unto Isaac;

17 And hath confirmed the same to Jacob, 'for a law, and to Israel for 'an everlasting covenant;

tion of JEHOVAH were ensured to Israel, when they sought him as dwelling between the cherubim above the ark: therefore the ark itself is called "his strength" and this implies, that we must "seek the Lord," through Christ, and according to the gospel. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12, 13. "The judgments of his mouth," may either mean, the righteous laws and statutes given to Israel, or the just vengeance which God denounced and executed on his enemies, in Egypt, in the wilderness, and in Canaan. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Deut. 7:6—8. Is. 41:8, 9.)

V. 14. Israel, as the peculiar people of JEHOVAH, were bound to worship and obey him; and ought to glory and rejoice in him. Indeed, his word and his works, both of mercy and vengeance, which had become known and renowned among the nations far and wide, suggested powerful motives both of warning and encouragement, to his professed servants. He also governs the whole earth in justice and in judgment: and is continually executing, in his providence, deserved punishment upon offending nations and individuals. His judgments were made known in all the earth, in a most striking manner, when Christianity was established in the world, while the nation of the Jews, and the idolatrous Gentiles, who opposed the cause of Christ, were exposed to the most terrible and durable calamities.

V. 15—19. (Note, Ps. 105:8—15. v. 8.) The covenant of JEHOVAH with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, engaged to their posterity the inheritance of Canaan. This was absolute, as a law which required prompt obedience. Their descendants must inherit the land; but, which of their generations, or for how long a time that should be, depended on other circumstances, which were declared and stipulated by the Sinai-covenant. (Notes, Gen. 17:1—12. 26:2—5. 28:13—15. Ex. 19:5. 24:6—8. Jer. 31:31—34. Gal. 3:15—18. Heb. 6:16—20. 8:7—13.)—"What he had first promised to Abraham, and confirmed to Isaac, by a solemn oath, he established to Jacob by an inviolable law, to endure for ever. Bp. Patrick. A thousand generations is a large definite number taken for an indefinite one; (Deut. 7:9.) and this language was suited to lead the thoughts of pious Israelites to the eternal inheritance typified by Canaan. The oath, by which the Lord condescended to ratify this engagement, showed the immutability of his counsel, and represented the covenant of grace, as irreversibly confirmed with every true believer.—David called upon the people to remember this covenant; that, considering from how small beginnings through how many and formidable difficulties, and after how many delays, the engagement of the Lord had been fulfilled; they might be animated to praise him, encouraged to trust him, and induced to cleave to and obey him.

V. 20—22. (Notes, Gen. 20:1—7. 26:11.) The Patriarchs were the Lord's anointed, as they were believers, prophets, and types and ancestors of Christ; in respect of the Lord's choice of them, his grace bestowed on them, and their spiritual consecration to his service; though they were not externally anointed with oil, that we read of. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 John 2:20—29.)

V. 23, 24. Having taken a suitable passage from one psalm, to stir up the congregation to celebrate the praises of God, for his special mercies to Israel; David introduces another psalm, and adds a solemn call to all the inhabitants of the earth to join in his praises, as the only living and true God, the Creator and Judge of the world, and the God of salvation; and from day to day to make known his glory and salvation still more widely. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 96:1—4.) "Let not only the Israelites praise him, but all the people of the earth acknowledge their great Creator; proclaim his promised salvation by Christ without intermission.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 25, 26. The power and majesty, the authority and eternity, the omniscience, omnipresence, and unchangeableness of God, are his greatness : as his justice, wisdom, truth, goodness, and mercy, form his holiness. In both respects he is altogether glorious, and infinitely exceeds the most exalted praises, and even the comprehension, of the noblest of all created intelligences. Thus he is the sole object of fear, and reverential worship, and adoring love ; while all others, to whom divine worship ever was rendered, are either senseless stocks, fallen angels, or mere creatures, who cannot help their worshippers, or punish their despisers. (Notes, Ps. 96:5, Jer. 10:6-8, 11-15, Rev. 15:1-4.)

V. 27. (Ps. 96:6.) Wherever the Lord displays his presence by his works, he shows the glory and honour of his perfections : but, in heaven, where his presence is manifested, in a manner to us inconceivable and ineffable, his glory and honour beam forth upon the blessed inhabitants, so as to transform them fully into his holy image of light, purity, and felicity, and to be reflected back in their rapturous unceasing worship and service of him. This is, in a feeble way, imitated and emulated, "in his place," his sanctuary, his church on earth. There his power and beauty are in a measure displayed ; and the true believer, beholding in Christ Jesus the glory of the Lord, "is changed into the same image, from glory to glory, by the Spirit of the Lord ;" and thus is both made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light, and enjoys the earnest of it. (Notes, Ps. 27:4-6, 50:1, 2, 63:1-4, 2 Cor. 3:17, 18.)

V. 28, 29. This is an exhortation to all who then heard, and all who now hear or read it, to "ascribe to JEHOVAH the tribute of praise and adoration, which he demands as his due ; to allow that all glory belongs to him, and that all power resides in him, or is derived from him ; and to render to him that gratitude, love, and service, which is due to him from all, as their Creator and hourly Benefactor. (Notes, Ps. 29:1, 2, 96:7-9.) This cannot be withheld without the basest ingratitude.—"All the kindreds of the earth" form but one family, and ought to unite in the service of their common Father. But all had sinned and fallen under condemnation ; yet, through the Redeemer, who was promised from the beginning, all were invited to approach the Lord with their worship and oblations at his sanctuary. This may be called, "the beauty of holiness," from the especial presence of the Lord, dwelling above the ark between the cherubim, upon the mercy-seat, as Israel's God ; as typifying the human nature of Jesus Christ ; and representing the believer's heart, now become "an habitation of God through the Spirit." When, however, we approach the Father, upon a mercy-seat, through the sacrifice and mediation of the Son, and under the influences of the Holy Spirit ; then, and then only, do we, in the full meaning of the words, "worship the LORD in the beauty of holiness."

V. 30. Let all men fear the power, justice, and majesty of God : let them fear his wrath, and flee for refuge to his mercy ; let them reverence his authority and excellency, and learn to worship and obey him. (Notes, Gen. 22:1, 12, 1 Kings 8:41-43.) If this were done, it would render the moral state of the world as stable and immovable, and keep every thing in as great order and regularity, as his creating and upholding word has established the natural state of it : and to this the gospel is suited to bring all who embrace it. (Note, Ps. 75:2, 3, 96:10.)

V. 31, 32. Wise, righteous, and good kings, and equitable laws, impartially administered, make prosperous nations ; and all good subjects must rejoice in a government of this description ; but traitors and criminals tremble on that very account.

33 Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the LORD, because he cometh to judge the earth.

34 O give thanks unto the LORD ; for he is good ; for his mercy endureth for ever.

35 And say ye, Save us, O God of our salvation, and gather us together, and deliver us from the heathen, that we may give thanks to thy holy name, and glory in thy praise.

36 Blessed be the LORD God of Israel for ever and ever. And all the people said, Amen, and praised the LORD.

The Lord, who reigns over all, is perfect in his character, his law, and his administration : this alone would be cause of universal joy, if all men were loyal and obedient ; but it speaks terror to the sinner's conscience. Yet, as the Lord reigneth in Jesus Christ upon a throne of grace ; even sinners, yea, the chief of sinners, may rejoice, when, desirous of forgiveness and reconciliation, they are made humbly willing to become his subjects : so that men, of all nations on earth, are called on to join the gladness of the blessed inhabitants of heaven ; and in exulting joy to proclaim, "that the LORD God omnipotent reigneth." (Notes, Ps. 97:1, 2, 99:1-3.)

V. 32, 33. All the parts of nature are here poetically addressed, by the royal prophet, to join the universal song of joy and praise ; in their several ways, to welcome JEHOVAH as the Sovereign of the universe ; and to wait the great decisive day, when he will come, as the Saviour of his people, to judge the world in righteousness. (Notes, Ps. 96:11-13, 98:7-9, 148: Is. 55:12, 13.) Perhaps all the different ranks and descriptions of the human species, who have feared the Lord, and hoped in his mercy, and who will then unanimously rejoice in the consummation of their felicity, are here intended under figurative expressions. The first coming of Christ likewise, with the calling of the Gentiles, and the surprising and most happy change effected by the gospel, in the moral and religious state of the world, as preparatory to his second coming, seems also to have been predicted. Indeed, nothing but the plenteous goodness of God, the perpetuity and eternity of his mercy in Christ Jesus, can encourage a sinner to desire his appearing as a Judge ; all therefore except true believers must tremble at the thoughts of that solemn season, in proportion as they understand the nature of that judgment, and attentively meditate upon it : and they will be driven to desperation when it shall arrive.

V. 34-36. (Notes, Ps. 136:1-3, Jer. 33:10, 11.) Many Israelites, even when David came to the throne, might be dispersed in other nations, by the frequent wars waged with their neighbours. And he prayed that they might be gathered from their dispersions, to join in this joyful worship. (Notes, Ps. 147: 106:47, 48.) Perhaps the Spirit of God, who spake by the Psalmist, intended the gathering of Israel from future and greater dispersions ; and it may well be accommodated to the present state of that nation, and our hope of their future calling into the church ; as well as to the collecting together of believers from all the nations of the earth, to bless and adore the God of Israel, in and through the Lord Jesus Christ. We can scarcely enlarge our thoughts to conceive the effect, which these high praises of God, sung by so vast a multitude, with harmonious elevation of heart and voice, upon this joyful occasion, must have produced. It naturally leads our thoughts to the songs of the redeemed of the Lord in glory ; and perhaps we are not, in this world, capable of more just and spiritual ideas of them, than are suggested by this subject, though we may be sure that they are unspeakably more sublime and refined. (Notes, Ps. 41:11-13, v 13, 89:52.)

V. 37-43. Abiathar was high-priest at this time ; and it is probable he resided at Jerusalem. Abiathar the high-priest attended upon David, that if he had any occasion to consult the divine majesty, he might be ready to do it for him. Bp. Patrick.—The stated worship before the ark consisted principally of psalmody and music, over which Asaph presided. But Zadok, of Eleazar's line, as next in authority under the high-priest, resided at Gibeon, where the tabernacle and the brazen altar still remained : (Note, 2 Sam. 6:17.) and there, with the other priests, he took care that all the sacrifices prescribed by the law should be regularly offered.—Psalmody was constantly performed here also, under the direction of Heman and Jeduthun : and they had with them the sacred trumpets, which seem to have been kept by them, though used by none but the priests.—When David brought the ark from obscurity, he was directed to convey it to Jerusalem, because it was to be stationed there. As he intended immediately to build a temple for its reception, he did not remove the tabernacle of Moses thither; but prepared a temporary tent, perhaps formed in the same manner: and when he was not allowed to build the temple, he made no alteration, but attended to both separately all his days. It seems that these regulations were made and declared, before the people separated, and were continued from that very day. (Notes, 2 Sam. 6:20. 1 Kings 3:4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. The public revival of religion, and the pure worship of God, being countenanced and protected by the powers that be, are joyful events to believers: and when their hearts are enlarged with gratitude to God, they will also be expanded in liberality towards men, and disposed to pray for them, and to do good to them for his sake.—It is a good and pleasant thing to be thankful, and we should carefully record and frequently review the Lord's mercies, to us and to his church, that we may be excited to abound in joyful praises: and ministers are especially appointed, by the Son of David our King, to animate and assist the people thus to glorify and rejoice in God, by preaching to them the gospel of salvation, and by every other means in their power.—The streams of mercy, of which we partake, should be traced back to that Fountain of love whence they are derived; and, in thanking the Lord for his benefits to us, we should celebrate the glorious excellences of his nature. This will also encourage our own faith and hope, and excite the attention of others to observe and admire his marvellous works: therefore we should be unreserved and open, in singing and speaking forth the praises of our God.—Riches, pre-eminence, wisdom, and strength, are precarious blessings, in which we must not glory and rejoice: but "let him that glorieth, glory" in his relation to "the Lord" our Salvation. To know, love, and belong to him constitutes the chief honour and happiness of man; and forms "that good part which shall never be taken from us." While the assured believer boldly glories in the righteousness, mercy, truth, and power of his reconciled God, let the trembling sinner rejoice also; for he casts out none that come, and saves all who trust in him. But, let us all learn to seek him diligently; and continually: not only that we may rejoice in his favour; but that we may be strengthened by him, to perform every service, and to triumph over all our inward and outward enemies. Indeed, we could no longer distrust either his mercy, or his power, if we duly remembered his works of old; especially the marvellous work of redemption, through Jesus Christ, which has eclipsed all former displays of his wisdom, truth, and love. Nor are "the judgments of his mouth" less worthy of our attention, than "the operations of his hands": by them we are instructed and directed; and even the denunciations of his wrath, and the execution of his righteous vengeance on sinners, "warn us to flee from the wrath to come," and to "give diligence to make our calling and election sure:" whilst his mercies are recorded, to enliven our gratitude and encourage our hope; as the happy and chosen servants of God, who are "followers of them, who through faith and patience inherit the promises." (Notes, and P. O. Heb. 6:13-20.)

V. 14-29. The all-sufficient God is the Portion and the everlasting recompense of his true people; while his worship and service form the solace of their souls in this evil world. "He is ever mindful of his covenant," and he makes it a law to himself, an invariable rule of his conduct towards them: and if we were duly mindful of it, we should derive great encouragement from his promises, and from that oath which he has interposed for the "strong consolation of all those, who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before them:" while love and gratitude would, as an inward law in our minds, command and constrain our most devoted obedience.—Those who are interested in his promise of eternal life, by faith in Jesus Christ, will be carried through all difficulties, and rendered superior in all conflicts, though in themselves they are few and poor. Here, they wander as strangers and pilgrims; but, compared with them, the most potent monarchs are accounted mean and vile, in the judgment of God. They have received the unction of his Holy Spirit; his seal is affixed to them, and no man can injure them with impunity: nay, nothing can possibly harm them, but all things shall eventually work together for their good. (Notes, and P. O. Rom. 8:28-39.) Let us, however, be careful of prematurely concluding, that we are numbered with them; and seriously appeal to our consciences and experience, whether "the Lord of the whole earth be" that Lord whom we desire to obey: and whether salvation by Jesus Christ from deserved wrath, from Satan, sin, and this present evil world, be our daily prayer, hope, and rejoicing. Do we perceive and adore the glory of the divine perfections, and rejoice in celebrating his praise? And do we yield ourselves to his service; depending on his mercy and grace, and lamenting that we love him no more and serve him no better? All this, and immensely more, is due to him; for he is infinitely great, holy, and good; all our praises are beneath his excellency; and nothing can be compared with his uncreated majesty. Let us then devote all we have and are to him, and aim to worship him "in the beauty of holiness."

V. 30-43. The LORD our God is greatly to be feared. All the earth shall stand in awe of him: for his wrath against the workers of iniquity is intolerable and eternal; but "in his favour there is life, in his presence there is fulness of joy, and at his right hand there are pleasures for evermore." He is glorious as our Creator and Judge, but more glorious as a Saviour: in that character sinners may approach and worship him, with acceptance and comfort; and men on earth, as well as the holy inhabitants of heaven, may rejoice in his universal and everlasting kingdom; because in Christ Jesus, "he is good, and his mercy endureth for ever." Oh, that there were such a heart in us and in all men, thus to fear him and to hope in his mercy; that we might look forward with comfort and exultation to our meeting him upon his awful judgment seat! He is continually collecting, before his throne, that chosen remnant, which the Saviour has redeemed unto God with his blood, from all the nations of the earth; and there, being freed from sin, admitted to the beatific vision, and filled with love, and gratitude, and joy, they sing eternal praises to his name. As we successively depart this life, may our souls be gathered unto them; and may that time speedily arrive, when the scattered Jews shall at length be gathered into the church, and the fulness of the Gentiles brought in, to "give thanks to his holy name, and to glory in his praise!" Amen, and Amen.—In this life believers enjoy, from time to time, earnestness and foretastes of heavenly bliss; but, when they cannot reach such fervent affections and exalted strains, they must steadily persevere in using the means of grace, as sinners "beholding the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world:" and the continual attendance of his appointed ministers, in his courts, is not only right in itself, but an encouragement to the faith and hope of his people, and a help to their praises and thanksgivings. Finally, it is well, when one duty prepares the soul for another; when public worship renders us more constant and spiritual in family worship and secret devotion; and when the effects of the whole appear in our conduct in relative life and in society.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVII. V. 1-6. This chapter almost entirely answers to the seventh of the second of Samuel; many minute variations indeed are found; but those only which are more material need here be noticed. (Notes, 2 Sam. 7:1-7.) Tent to tent, &c. (5) In the wilderness, the ark was taken out of the tent, when the camp of Israel marched; and was returned into it, when they rested.—It was afterwards taken from the tabernacle at Shiloh, and then stationed at Kirjath-jearim, doubtless in a tent prepared for it; thence David removed it to another tent on mount the LORD, 'Thou shalt not build me a house to dwell in:

5 For I have not dwelt in a house since the day that I brought up Israel unto this day: but have gone from tent to tent, and from one tabernacle to another.

6 Whosoever I have walked with all Israel, spake I a word to any of the judges of Israel, whom I commanded to feed my people, saying, Why have ye not built me a house of cedars?

7 Now therefore thus shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, I took thee from the sheepcote, even from following the sheep, that thou shouldst be ruler over my people Israel:

8 And I have been with thee whithersoever thou hast walked, and have cut off all thine enemies from before thee, and have made thee a name like the name of the great men that are in the earth.

9 Also I will ordain a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, and they shall dwell in their place, and shall be moved no more; neither shall the children of wickedness waste them any more, as at the beginning,

10 And since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel. Moreover, I will subdue all thine enemies. Furthermore, I tell thee, that the LORD will build thee a house.

11 And it shall come to pass, when thy days be expired that thou must go to be with thy fathers, that I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons; and I will establish his kingdom.

12 He shall build me a house, and I will establish his throne for ever.

13 I will be his Father, and he shall be my son: and I will not take my mercy away from him, as I took it from him that was before thee:

14 But I will settle him in my house, and in my kingdom for ever: and his throne shall be established for evermore.

15 According to all these words, and according to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David.

16 And David the king came and sat before the LORD, and said, Who am I, O LORD God, and what is my house, that thou hast brought me hitherto?

17 And yet this was a small thing in thine eyes, O God: for thou hast also spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come, and hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree, O LORD God.

18 What can David speak more to thee for the honour of thy servant? for thou knowest thy servant.

19 O LORD, for thy servant's sake, and according to thine own heart, hast thou done all this greatness, in making known all these great things.

20 O LORD, there is none like thee, neither is there any God besides thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.

21 And what one nation in the earth is like thy people Israel, whom God went to redeem, to be his own people, to make thee a name of greatness and terribleness, by driving out nations from before thy people, whom thou hast redeemed out of Egypt?

22 For thy people Israel didst thou make thine own people for ever; and thou, LORD, becamest their God.

23 Therefore now, LORD, let the thing that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant, and concerning his house, be established for ever, and do as thou hast said.

24 Let it even be established, that thy name may be magnified for ever, saying, The LORD of hosts is the God of Israel, even a God to Israel: and let the house of David thy servant be established before thee.

25 For thou, O my God, hast told thy servant that thou wilt build him a house: therefore thy servant hath found in his heart to pray before thee.

26 And now, LORD, thou art God, and hast promised this goodness unto thy servant:

27 Now therefore let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may be before thee for ever: for thou blestest, O LORD, and it shall be blessed for ever.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The repetitions in the word of God may be considered as tacit reproofs of our negligence, forgetfulness, and unteachableness. Indeed, we are very backward to get familiarly acquainted with every part of the sacred volume, and very prone to forget what we have read; so that we need to be taught again what we seem to have already learned: and for all these reasons it is very useful to have the same important truths, precepts, and examples enforced on us, in different parts of the Scriptures. If, in reading any chapter, or hearing any sermon, we learn nothing new; yet are reminded of those things of which we had lost sight, and stirred up to the exercise of faith and holy affections, and to the more diligent, fervent, and delightful practice of our several duties—very important purposes are answered. (Note, 2 Pet. 1:12—15. P. O. 12—18. Note, 3:1-4.) It may however, suffice

CHAPTER XVIII.

David subdued the Philistines, and makes the Moabites tributary, 1, 2. He smites Hadarezer and the Syrians, 3-8. Tou, king of Hamath, sends his son to David with presents, which he dedicates with the spoil, unto God, 9-11. He puts garrisons into Edom, 12, 13. He reigns in equity, 14. His principal officers, 15-17.

NOW ¹after this it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them, and took Gath and her towns out of the hand of the Philistines.

² And he smote Moab; and the Moabites became David's servants, and ³brought gifts.

⁴ And David smote ⁵Hadarezer king of Zobah unto Hamath, as he went to establish his dominion ⁶by the river Euphrates.

⁷ And David took from him a thousand chariots, and ⁸seven thousand horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen: David also ⁹houghed all the chariot-horses, but reserved of them ¹⁰a hundred chariots.

¹¹ And when ¹²the Syrians of ¹³Damascus came ¹⁴to help Hadarezer king of ¹⁵Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

²¹ Likewise from ²²Tibath, and from Chun, cities of Hadarezer, brought David very much brass, ²³wherewith Solomon made the brazen sea, and the pillars, and the vessels of brass.

²⁴ Now when ²⁵Tou king of Hamath heard how David had smitten all the host of Hadarezer king of Zobah;

³³ ¶ Then also David ³⁴dedicated unto the Lord, to observe in this place, that persons of eminent piety will still be devising and attempting one service after another for the honour of God, and to promote the best interests of mankind; accounting themselves to have done nothing, while so much remains to be done: that Christ alone begins and finishes his work, and perpetually unites in his own person all those offices which are requisite for the welfare of his church; but that mere men have, for a short space, certain portions of service allotted them, which they cannot exceed: that God accepts and rewards those good desires, which he is pleased for wise reasons to frustrate: that his favour and his image ennoble the meanest of his people, above "the estate of men of high degree;" that we cannot possibly desire more for ourselves, or for the church, than he has promised: that true grace desires all this, and wants no more; and true faith, in vigorous exercise, seeks, asks, expects, and waits for it all, in the way which God has prescribed: and that, if we serve the Lord, as a God over us in dependence on his mercy through Jesus Christ, he will be a God to us; and those whom he blesses, will be blessed for evermore. For this blessedness may we look, with patient submission and joyful expectation, amidst the trials of life, and in the hour of death; and may the same be continued to our children and posterity after us, through successive generations!

NOTES.—CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. In the parallel passage, Gath is called Metheg-ammah, or the bridle of Ammah, as built on a natural strong-hold, called Ammah, and intended to bridle, or keep in subjection, the adjacent country. (Note, 2 Sam. 8:1.)—The rest of this chapter, which is for substance the same as the eighth chapter of the second of Samuel, has already been commented on. (Marg. Ref.)

13 And he put garrisons in Edom; and all the Edomites became David's servants. Thus the Lord preserved David whithersoever he went.

14 So David reigned over all Israel, and executed judgment and justice among all his people.

15 And Joab the son of Zeruiah was over the host; and Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud, recorder;

16 And Zadok the son of Ahitub, and Abimelech the son of Abiathar, were the priests; and Shavsha was scribe;

17 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the Cherethites and the Pelethites; and the sons of David were chief about the king.

CHAPTER XIX.

David sends ambassadors to comfort the king of Ammon, who abuses and insults them, 1-5. The Ammonites and Syrians are vanquished by Joab, and Abishai, 6-15. The king of Syria sends another army, which David conquers, slaying its commanders, 16-18. The Syrians submit to David, 19.

NOW it came to pass after this, that ¹Nahash the king of the children of Ammon died, and his son reigned in his stead.

² And David said, ³I will show kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, because his father showed kindness to me. And David sent messengers to comfort him concerning his father. So the servants of David came into the land of the children of Ammon to Hanun, to comfort him.

⁴ But the princes of the children of Ammon said to Hanun, ⁵Thinkest thou that David doth honour thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? are not his servants come unto thee for to search, and to overthrow, and to spy out the land?

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Those who "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," shall, in due time and manner, have all other things added unto them. Communion with God, and his consolations, are intended to animate us to diligence in our proper work, and vigour in our spiritual warfare.—Earthly possessions are often lost by attempting to establish them: and sinners ruin themselves by encouraging and assisting one another, in rebellion against God, and opposition to his cause. Our good fight of faith, under the Captain of our salvation, will assuredly terminate in everlasting triumph and peace. But the happiness of Israel, through David's victories and equitable administration, very faintly shadowed forth the felicity of the redeemed in the realms above, when the last enemy shall be destroyed, and Jesus shall reign in the midst of them for ever and ever, and they shall behold, and share, the joy and glory of his kingdom. (Heb. 12:2. Notes, Matt. 25:19-23. Rev. 3:20-22.) Let us then, without delay, join ourselves to him, trusting and serving him constantly and faithfully, that at length we may be for ever with him.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIX. V. 1-5. Notes, 2 Sam. 10:1-5. V. 6. Syria-machah. ¶ Or, Aram-machah. Machach (or Machathi) lay to the east of Jordan, and had been allotted to Manasseh: but it is probable, that the Syrians the midst hard by their buttocks, and ¹sent them away.

5 Then there went certain, and told David how the men were served. And he sent to meet them: for the men were greatly ashamed. And the king said, Tarry ^{at} Jericho until ^{your} beards be grown, and ^{then} return.

6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon saw that they ^{had} made themselves ^{odious} to David, Hanun and the children of Ammon sent ^a thousand talents of silver, to hire them chariots and horsemen out of Mesopotamia, and out of Syria-maachah, and out of Zobal.

7 So they ^{hired} thirty and two thousand chariots, and ^{the} king of Maachah and his people, who came and pitched before ^{Medeba}. And the children of Ammon gathered themselves together from their cities, and came to battle.

8 And when David heard of it, he sent ^{Joab}, and all the host of the mighty men.

9 And the children of Ammon came out, and ^{put} the battle in array before the gate of the city: and ^{the} kings that were come ^{were} by themselves in the field.

10 Now ^{when} Joab saw that the ^{battle} was ^{set} against him before and behind, he chose out of all ^{the} choice of Israel, and put ^{them} in array against the Syrians.

11 And the rest of the people he delivered unto the hand of Abishai his brother, and they set ^{themselves} in array against the children of Ammon.

12 And he said, ¶ If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will help thee.

13 Be ^{of} good courage, and let us behave ourselves valiantly for our people, and for the cities of our God: and ^{let} the Lord do ^{that which} is good in his sight.

14 So Joab and the people that were with him drew nigh before the Syrians unto the battle; and ^{they} fled before him.

15 And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, ^{they} likewise fled before Abishai his brother, and entered into the city. Then Joab came to Jerusalem.

16 ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were put to the worse before Israel, they sent messengers, and drew forth the Syrians that were beyond the river: and ^{Shophach} the captain of the host of Hadarezer went before them.

17 And it was told David: and he gathered all

Israel, and passed over Jordan, and came upon them, and set ^{the battle} in array against them. So when David had put the battle in array against the Syrians, they fought with him.

18 But the Syrians ^{fled} before Israel: and David slew of the Syrians seven thousand ^{men which fought} in chariots, and forty thousand ^{footmen}, and killed Shophach the captain of the host.

19 And when ^{the} servants of Hadarezer saw that they were put to the worse before Israel, they made peace with David, and became his servants: neither ^{would} the Syrians help the children of Ammon any more.

CHAPTER XX.

Rabbah is taken, and a colled, and the inhabitants are treated with great severity. 1-3 Three giants are slain by David's servants, in three battles against the Philistines, 4-6.

AND ^{it} came to pass, that ^{after} the year ^[B. C. 1035.] was expired, at the time that kings go out to battle, Joab led forth the power of the army, and ^{wasted} the country of the children of Ammon, and came and besieged ^{Rabbah}. But David tarried at Jerusalem. And ^{Joab} smote Rabbah, and destroyed it.

2 And David took the crown of their king from off his head, and found ^{it} to weigh a talent of gold, and ^{there were} precious stones in it; and it was set upon David's head: and he brought also exceeding much spoil out of the city.

3 And ^{he} brought out the people that were in it, and cut ^{them} with saws, and with harrows of iron, and with axes. Even so dealt David with all the cities of the children of Ammon. And David and all the people returned to Jerusalem.

4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that ^[B. C. 1018.] there ^{arose} a war ^{at} Gezer with the Philistines: ^{at} which time ^{Sibbechai} the Hushathite slew ^{Sippai}, ^{that was} of the children of ^{the} giant: and they were subdued.

5 And there was war again with the Philistines; and Elhanan the son of Jair slew Lahmi, the brother of ^{Goliath} the Gittite, whose spear's staff was like a weaver's beam.

6 And yet again there was war at Gath, where was a man ^{of} great stature, whose fingers and toes were four and twenty, six on each hand, and six on each foot: and he also was ^{the} son of the giant.

7 But when ^{he} ^{defied} Israel, Jonathan the son of ^{Shimea}, David's brother, slew him.

8 These were born unto the giant in Gath; and ^{they} fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his servants.

CHAPTER XXI.

David, tempted by Satan, requires Joab to number the people, 1-4. The number is returned to the king, 5, 6. God is displeased, and David owns his fault, 7, 8. The Lord, by Gad the prophet, proposes three judgments to David, who chooses three days' pestilence, 9-13. Seventy thousand are cut off; and David, seeing the destroying angel, intercedes for the people, 14-17. Directed by God, he buys Ornan's threshing-floor; and sacrifices: fire consumes the oblation, and the plague is stayed, 18-21. He again sacrifices there, leaving to go unto Gibeon, 22-30.

AND ¹Satan stood up against Israel, and ²provoked David to number Israel.

² And David said to ³Joab and to the rulers of the people, Go, number Israel from ⁴Beer-sheba even to Dan; and ⁵bring the number of them to me, ⁶that I may know it.

³ And Joab answered, ⁷"The Lord make his people a hundred times so many more as they be; but, my lord the king, ⁸are they not all my lord's servants? why then doth my lord require this thing? ⁹why will he be a cause of trespass to Israel?"

⁴ Nevertheless ¹⁰the king's word prevailed against Joab. ¹¹Wherefore Joab departed, ¹²and went throughout all Israel, and came to Jerusalem.

⁶ But ¹⁶Levi and Benjamin counted he not among them: for the king's word was abominable to ¹⁷Joab.

⁷ And ¹⁸God was displeased with this thing, therefore ¹⁹he smote Israel.

⁸ And David said unto God, ²⁰I have sinned greatly, because I have done this thing: but now, I beseech thee, ²¹do away the iniquity of thy servant: for I have done very foolishly.

⁹ ¶ And the Lord spake unto ²²Gad, David's seer, saying,

¹⁰ Go and tell David, saying, Thus saith the Lord, I offer thee three ²³things; ²⁴"choose the one of them, ²⁵that I may do it unto thee.

¹¹ So Gad came to David, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, ²⁶"Choose thee

²⁷either ²⁸three years' famine; or three months ²⁹to be destroyed before thy foes, while that the sword of thine enemies overtaketh ³⁰thee; or else three days ³¹the sword of the Lord; ³²even the pestilence, in the land, and ³³the angel of the Lord

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

A pious and benevolent mind cannot possibly delight in mentioning the transgressions of useful and eminent men. So that if truth and candour will permit, and if no good purpose can be answered by speaking, persons of this character will choose to be silent; though they will by no means deny, excuse, or extenuate the sins of any man, when they cannot honestly conceal them. It however proves a malignant or an unfeeling mind, to be always searching into the miscarriages of others, especially those of superior reputation, in the world, or in the church.—The conflicts of believers, like those of David, will be successive, as long as they live here; and sometimes the sharpest are reserved till the last: and their victories will be gradual, as their enemies will still be renewing their assaults, and recovering their strength.—Though the Lord severely correct the sins of his own believing people, he will not leave them in the hands of their enemies; his assistance far more than counterbalances all the advantages, in number and strength, of those that defy his Israel; and all that trust in him shall be made more than conquerors, through him that loveth them.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXI. V. 1. (2 Sam. 24:1, 2.) It is said in 2 Sam. 24:1. that God, being angry with Israel, moved David, that is, suffered Satan to move him. This is sufficiently explained there. Only here the phrase stood up is to be observed; which was the posture of those who destroying throughout all the coasts of Israel. ¹Now therefore advise thyself what word I shall bring again to him that sent me.

¹⁴ ¶ So the Lord sent pestilence upon Israel: and there fell of Israel ¹⁶seventy thousand men.

¹⁵ And God sent an angel ¹⁷unto Jerusalem to destroy it: and as he was destroying, the Lord beheld, and he repented him of the evil, and said to the angel that destroyed, ¹⁸"It is enough, stay now thy hand. And the angel of the Lord stood by the threshing-floor of ¹⁹Ornan the Jebusite."

¹⁷ And David said unto God, ²³"Is it not I that commanded the people to be numbered? even I it is that have sinned and done evil indeed; but ²⁴as for these sheep, what have they done?" Let thy hand, I pray thee, O Lord my God, be on me, and ²⁵on my father's house; but not on thy people, ²⁶that they should be plagued.

¹⁹ And David ²⁹went up at the saying of Gad, which he spake in the name of the Lord.

²⁰ And Ornan turned back, and saw the angel; and his four sons with him hid themselves. ³⁰Now Ornan was thrashing wheat.

²¹ And as David came to Ornan, Ornan looked, and saw David, and went out of the threshing-floor, and ³¹bowed himself to David with his face to the ground.

²² Then David said to Ornan, ³²"Grant me the place of ³³this threshing-floor, that I may build an altar therein unto the Lord: thou shalt grant it me for the full price: ³⁴that the plague may be stayed from the people."

²³ And Ornan said unto David, ³⁵"Take it to charged or accused any person of a crime, in a court of justice. See 1 Kings 22:21. Thus Satan is represented as "the accuser of the brethren," in the book of the Revelation; and here to lay some sin to the charge of the Israelites, which he represented to God as a reason to punish them. For it is the way of the holy Scripture, thus to bring down these things, and accommodate them to the lowest capacities. Bp. Patrick. (Notes, Job 1:9-12. Zech. 3:1-4. Rev. 12:1-2.)

V. 2-6. Notes, 2 Sam. 24:3-9.—Why will he be a cause of trespass to Israel? (3) This part of Joab's expostulation with David is not found in Samuel; and it shows, that Joab, amidst all his crimes, had considerable knowledge in religion, and much sagacity in discerning the motives, and presaging the consequences, of other men's conduct. (Marg. Ref. h.)—The king's word was abominable to Joab. (6) *He did all this against his will; and at last the work was so odious unto him, that he was quite tired with it; and therefore broke off, before he took the numbers of these two tribes! Bp. Patrick.

V. 7, 8. Notes, 2 Sam. 11:27. 12:13. 24:10.—He smote Israel. (7) *He resolved to punish them; because it was for their sins, that God permitted David to indulge himself in this vanity. Bp. Patrick.

V. 9-17. Notes, 2 Sam. 24:11-17.

V. 18-25. Notes, 2 Sam. 24:18-25.—Saw, &c. (20) The destroying angel was rendered visible, not only to David and thee, and let my lord the king do that which is good in his eyes: lo, I give thee the oxen also for burnt-offerings, and the thrashing instruments for wood, and the wheat for the meat-offering; I give it all.

24 And king David said to Ornan, 'Nay; I will verily buy it for the full price: for I will not take that which is thine for the LORD, nor offer burnt-offerings without cost.

25 So ¹David gave to Ornan for the place six hundred shekels of gold by weight.

26 And David ²built there an altar unto the LORD, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and called upon the LORD; and he answered him from heaven ³by fire upon the altar of burnt-offering.

27 And ⁴the LORD commanded the angel; and he put up his sword again into the sheath thereof.

28 ¶ At that time when David saw that the LORD had answered him in the thrashing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite, then he sacrificed there.

29 For ⁵the tabernacle of the LORD, which Moses made in the wilderness, and the altar of the burnt-offering, were at that season in the high place at Gibeon.

30 But David could not go before it to inquire of God: for ⁶he was afraid because of the sword of the angel of the LORD.

CHAPTER XXII.

David makes large preparations for the temple, 1-8. He instructs Solomon and charges him to build it, 8-16. He commands the elders of Israel to assist him, 17-19.

THEN David said, 'This is the house of the LORD God, and this is the altar of the burnt-offering for Israel.

2 And David commanded to gather together the strangers that were in the land of Israel; and he set ¹masons to hew wrought stones to build the house of God.

3 And David ²prepared iron in abundance for the nails for the doors of the gates, and for the joinings; and brass in abundance ³without weight;

4 Also ⁴cedar-trees in abundance: for the Zidonians, and they of Tyre brought much cedar-wood to David.

5 And David said, ⁵Solomon my son is young and tender, and the house that is to be build for the LORD must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory throughout all countries: I will therefore now make preparation for it. So ⁶David prepared abundantly before his death.

6 ¶ Then he called for Solomon his son, and charged him to build a house for the LORD God of Israel.

7 And David said to Solomon, My son, as for me, ⁷it was in my mind to build a house ⁸unto the name of the LORD my God:

the elders of Israel, but to Ornan, (or Araunah,) and his sons also. Indeed, it is probable, that this awful vision of the angel, with a "drawn sword in his hand, stretched out over Jerusalem," continued apparent to all the inhabitants, till David had offered the appointed sacrifices. The variations in the narrative are noted in the exposition of the parallel passage in Samuel.

V. 26. The fire from heaven was an emblem of divine vindictive justice against sinners: but, this fire consuming the sacrifices, and sparing the offenders, who thus pleaded guilty and sought mercy, was the highest token of the Lord's acceptance of the sacrifice, and a type of our salvation by the propitiary sufferings of Christ for us. (Notes, Gen. 4:3-5. Lev. 9:24. 1 Kings 18:38, 39. 2 Chr. 7:1-3.)

V. 28-30. David had in general been used to sacrifice at Gibeon: (Notes, 16:37-43. 1 Kings 3:4.) but on this emergency he was afraid to leave Jerusalem, lest the angel should smite the inhabitants: and having been accepted at the thrashing-floor of Ornan, he continued afterwards to offer sacrifices there. (Note, 22:1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

So long as we abide on earth Satan has access to us, through the remains of sin in our hearts, and especially of pride: and the Lord has wise and righteous reasons for permitting the influence, under certain restrictions, to tempt his servants. As far as he obtains this permission, he is unwearied in his malicious efforts to deceive, to defile, or to distress us: and he can vary his devices in many plausible ways: but, he does us more harm as a seducer than as an accuser, as a subtle serpent than as a roaring lion. We are therefore called upon to be sober and vigilant, and to pray always that we "enter not into temptation;" and, as men advance in rank and reputation, authority, or usefulness, they have need to redouble the guard, and to be more watchful and instant in prayer than ever; for the enemy levels his assaults especially against those who are eminent in character, or fill up public stations, in the church or in the community; because their falls involve numbers either in sin or suffering.—It is a mercy to be speedily made sensible of our guilt, when we have been left to transgress: but no confession or humiliation can secure us from present sufferings, when we have committed such crimes as appear abominable even to ungodly men, and bring an open scandal upon our profession.—By thus yielding to temptation we bring ourselves into dreadful straits, from which we can by no means extricate ourselves: yet, even in this case, there is encouragement for us to leave our cause in the hand of the Lord, that he may do with us as he pleases; "for very great are his mercies."—Of all the painful consequences of transgression, none in this world can be more distressing to an ingenuous mind, than to see those whom we most love, and desire the most to do good to, suffering heavily through our sins. But even under the anguish of this trial, we must not allow ourselves to murmur, or to despond.—The Lord has righteous reasons for his dispensations, though mysterious to us: and therefore they, who are reciprocally suffering through each other's sins, should unite together in humiliation before him, and in fervently deprecating the effects of his indignation from each other. This forms the proper employment of every individual, in times of general calamity: and when public honour has thus been rendered to the righteous Author of national sufferings, his merciful interposition may be expected. He knows how to educe good from evil, and to overrule our sufferings, nay, even our sins, for the good of our souls, and the promotion of true religion.—The fear of impending vengeance, from the wrath of an offended God, is naturally calculated to drive men from him. But in subservience to the gospel, and through the influence of the Spirit of God, it concurs in showing sinners the preciousness of Christ; disposing them to forsake all for him, and afterwards enlarging the mind in grateful obedience to him, who has saved them from so great a destruction. Those who shelter their souls, as it were, under the atonement of his sacrifice, who "suffered once for sins, the just for the unjust," will be safe from danger, even in the hour of death, and in the day of judgment, and none are losers, by being willing to part with all for the sake of Christ, or to dedicate all to his service.—When the urgency of our affairs constrains us to act contrary to our previous methods and rules, or to our inclination, we shall frequently learn afterwards, that, by so doing, we were preparing the way for some important benefit from the Lord to us or to others: and in the observance of his directions, we may confidently expect acceptance and returning comfort.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXII. V. 1. The Lord, having pointed out the place, where he would have sacrifice offered for averting the pestilence, and having "answered by fire from heaven;" David was assured, probably by immediate inspiration, that it was his will, the temple should be built by Solomon on this very spot. It had immediately before been in the possession of a Jebusite, which was an intimation of mercy intended for the Gentiles through Jesus Christ. (21:18.)—It does not appear, whether David removed the ark thither with its tent, or whether it remained in its former place.—Henceforth this became the spot, which God "chose to place his name there," and where sacrifices were regularly offered, as, long as that dispensation lasted. (Notes, Deut. 12:5-7. 2 Chr. 3:1, 2. Ps. 78:67-69. John 4:19-24.)

V. 2-5. David though denied the honour of building the temple, yet out of love to so good a work, employed himself in making every kind of preparation for it. (Notes, 18:9-17. v. 11. 28:11-18. 29:1-9.)—The strangers, here mentioned, seem to have been the remnant of the old inhabitants, who, having submitted to David, had their lives spared, and had been reduced to bondage. (Note, 1 Kings 9:20-22.)—David procured much cedar-wood for the temple; but Solomon had occasion for a great deal more. (Marg. Ref.)—According to the nature of that introductory dispensation, and for an emblem of the spiritual glory of Christ and his church, Solomon's temple was built with great magnificence: that, being renowned through all countries, strangers might be induced to visit it, and thus become acquainted with JEHOVAH, and his true worship. Solomon also would need every encouragement and assistance for so

8 But the word of the LORD came to me, saying, 'Thou hast shed blood abundantly, and hast made great wars: 'Thou shalt not build a house unto my name, because thou hast shed much blood upon the earth in my sight.

9 Behold, a son shall be born to thee, who shall be a man of rest; and 'I will give him rest from all his enemies round about: for his name shall be 'Solomon, and 'I will give peace and quietness unto Israel in his days.

10 'He shall build a house for my name; and 'he shall be my son, and 'I will be his father; and 'I will establish the throne of his kingdom over Israel for ever.

[Practical Observations.]

11 Now, my son, 'the LORD be with thee; and prosper thou, and build the house of the LORD thy God, as he hath said of thee.

12 Only 'the LORD give thee wisdom and understanding, and give thee charge concerning Israel, 'that thou mayest keep the law of the LORD thy God.

13 Then 'shalt thou prosper, if thou take heed 'to fulfil the statutes and judgments, which the LORD charged Moses with concerning Israel: 'be strong, and of good courage; dread not, nor be dismayed.

great a work, as succeeding to the throne of Israel when young, and being called to perform so arduous and important a service; that he might not be retarded from entering on it in an early period of his reign. (Note, 1 Kings 3:5-14.)

V. 6-10. (Notes, Num. 27:18,19. 2 Tim. 4:1-8.) David was a type of Christ in his conflicts, victories, and the destruction of his obstinate enemies: but Solomon represented the Saviour triumphant, glorified, and giving peace and felicity to his willing subjects. In this latter character "the Prince of peace" erects his spiritual temple; and as he is accorded to the nature of the Christian dispensation, and to the character of Jesus, both of which were represented in this transaction, that the temple should be built by a peaceable prince, than by a successful warrior. Yet, David in his wars did the work and sought the honour of God, and was eminently serviceable to his people; and he was desirous also of building the temple. (Notes, 2 Sam. 7:1-5,12-16. 12:24,25. 1 Kings 8:17-21. Zech. 6:12,13.)

Hast shed blood. (8) 'Though David's wars were warranted, and succeeded by God in an extraordinary manner; yet it did not suit so well with the divine Majesty to have a house built him by one who had shed so much blood, as by one that reigned in peace and quietness: so that he might be an emblem of the King of peace, the Lord of the church, who was prefigured in all such great transactions.' Bp. Patrick.

For ever. (10) 'This can belong to none in the proper and full sense of the word, but Christ alone. For Solomon reigned but forty years, and after that his kingdom was torn in pieces. Therefore to Christ the author to the Hebrews applies them, Heb. 1:5. Bp. Patrick.

V. 11, 12. David had given Solomon exhortations and instructions; but the powerful influence of divine grace alone could form him to that wisdom, piety, and zeal, which such a work required. This he earnestly prayed for in Solomon's behalf, and taught him to pray for and confidently to expect: for the language may be understood as an assurance that it would be so; as well as a prayer that it might be so. The connexion also of the several particulars is well worthy of notice. The Lord must give the wisdom and understanding, in order that he might keep the charge and the law: for this would be the genuine and sure effect, and thus prosperity would be the result. (Notes, 13. 1 Kings 3:5-14. Ps. 72:4.)

V. 13. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 28:7,8. Josh. 1:7,8.) Conscientious obedience to the commands of God, on scriptural principles, both secures final success, and inspires present courage and confidence.

V. 14. The gold and silver here mentioned, if computed by the ordinary weight of the talent, would amount to eight or nine hundred millions sterling; and this enormous quantity would have more than sufficed to erect an edifice, as large as the temple itself apart from its courts, of solid gold and silver. Compared therefore with the size of the temple, and with the gains of Solomon, when the precious metals became common at Jerusalem; (1 Kings 9:14,28.) it is generally concluded, either that some mistake has taken place in the numeral letters, or that a talent of inferior weight and value is meant.—David had collected this treasure for the temple in his trouble, 14 Now behold, in my 'trouble I have prepared for the house of the LORD 'a hundred thousand talents of gold, and a thousand thousand talents of silver; and of brass and iron 'without weight; for it is in abundance: timber also and stone have I prepared; and thou mayest add thereto.

15 Moreover, 'there are workmen with thee in abundance, 'hewers and workers of stone and timber, and 'all manner of cunning men for every manner of work.

16 Of 'the gold, the silver, and the brass, and the iron, 'there is no number. 'Arise, therefore, and be doing, 'and the LORD be with thee.

17 'David also commanded 'all the princes of Israel to help Solomon his son, saying,

18 'Is 'not the LORD your God with you? 'and hath he not given you rest on every side? 'for he hath given the inhabitants of the land into mine hand; and the land is subdued 'before the LORD, and before his people.

19 Now 'set your heart and your soul to seek the LORD your God; 'arise therefore, and build ye the sanctuary of the LORD God, 'to bring the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and the holy vessels of God, into the house that is to be built 'to the name of the LORD.

or in his poverty. He had set out in life very poor; he had passed through a constant succession of trials and troubles, not only before he came to the kingdom, but during his whole reign; and all his prosperity was the result of the Lord's singular kindness, in making him a gainer by all the attempts of his numerous enemies.—He seems also to speak of his preparation as a small matter, whether compared with the greatness of the Lord to whom it was dedicated, or with his own obligations to him. Practical Observations.

V. 1-10. When the grace of God possesses the heart, a man's falls and mistakes will eventually be overruled to form him to such a humble and watchful frame of mind, as will exceedingly increase the simplicity, purity, and activity of his zeal in the service of God.—The most eminent servants of the Lord are apt sometimes to abate their diligence; and alarming providences often concur with the warnings and rebukes of the Scripture, to stir them up to greater earnestness; especially when they are reminded of the approach of death, and perceive that much remains to be done, and that probably they have only a short time in which to do it.—When the Lord refuses to employ us in those kinds and in that measure of service to his church, which we desired and hoped to perform; we must not on that account yield to indolence or discouragement. But we should be doing what we can, in a subordinate sphere, and upon a smaller scale; and rejoice in affording any little assistance to those who are honoured with more extensive usefulness. The "spirit that is in us," indeed, powerfully "lusteth to envy;" but we must seek unto him, who "giveth more grace," that this evil may be mortified and subdued.—We are not likely on earth to witness those glorious times which are foretold in the Scriptures, when Satan shall no more deceive the nations, and "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea;" yet, it is possible that we may be, as it were, collecting materials for that work. Whatever is done towards rendering the word of God more generally known, understood, and attended to, in the world, is like bringing a stone, perhaps an ingot of gold, towards erecting the edifice. Whatever tends to bring the rising generations, in succession, acquainted with the gospel of Jesus Christ, in its purity and energy, is, as it were, enlisting soldiers for that decisive conflict, in which the armies of Christ shall obtain most glorious victories. These considerations should encourage us, when we are grieved that we see no more fruits of all our labours. Much good may appear after our death, which was hidden from us, "lest we should be exalted above measure." "Let us not then be weary of well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."—Above all, they who are aged, and expect shortly to be removed to a better world, should diligently instruct, encourage, charge, and caution those, who are young and inexperienced, and who are likely to succeed them in their work. The service is arduous

CHAPTER XXIII.

David makes Solomon king, 1. The Levites are numbered, and classed for different services, 2-6. The sons of Gershon, 7-11. Of Kohath, 12-20. Of Merari, 21-23. The several officers of the Levites, 24-32.

4 Of which, ^{twenty} and four thousand were to set forward the work of the house of the Lord; and six thousand were officers and judges.

5 Moreover, four thousand were porters; and four thousand praised the Lord with the instru-and important, being intimately connected with the honour of God, and the salvation of souls; and "who is sufficient for these things?" Indeed, all our sufficiency must be of God. He allots various services to his people; and that which qualifies for one kind of usefulness, may unfit for another; we should then all acquiesce in his will; and fill up our proper place for the common benefit, as the members do in the human body. (Note, Rom. 12:5-8.) But peace is in its own nature preferable to the most successful wars; and the shedding of human blood, though sometimes necessary, should always be done with great reluctance, and thought of with horror: for even when the Lord commanded it, he was pleased to speak of it, as "shed in his sight," and as what he had no pleasure in beholding. We should therefore be far more ambitious of the honour of giving rest and quietness to those around us, than of the conqueror's applause. "Blessed are the peace-makers; for they shall be called the children of God." (Notes, Matt. 5:9. Jam. 3:17, 18.)—Among other unspeakable advantages of public peace, this is peculiarly important, that it affords the fairest opportunities of executing useful designs to promote true religion: and then we should be active and earnest to seize the favourable opportunity, by forming or assisting every design of general utility. (Note, Acts 9:31.) But especially peace among Christians is conducive to this most desirable end; which is grievously counteracted by the animosities, divisions, and vehement controversies, which, alas! prevail and are multiplied. Did all real believers "endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," and to strive together for "the faith of the gospel," such effects would follow, as seem at present to exceed our largest expectations or conceptions. (Note, and P. O. Eph. 4:1-6.) The work is, however, in the hands of "the Prince of peace;" may he compose all our differences, and build the spiritual temple so magnificent and glorious, that the fame of it may be spread into all countries, till all the nations of the earth become his willing subjects, and live in love and peace with each other!

V. 11-19. Even the young, the weak, and inexperienced, when called forth to service by the Lord, may expect that he will be with them; and that he will give them upright, zealous minds, with true wisdom and understanding, and then cause them to prosper in their work.—No abilities or diligence can render us durably and extensively useful to others, if we do not take heed to our own conduct, that it be regulated according to the word of God. While we trust in his grace and mercy, and obey his commandments, we need fear no difficulties or opposition; the things which seem to be against us will "work together for our good;" we should then be "strong in the Lord," and of good courage, and not dread or be dismayed at the prospect of any temptations, troubles, or persecutions, which may meet us in the way of our duty.—In such an age and nation as this, we of course enter in many respects into the labours of others: but to all the preparation hitherto made in any place, we shall find it requisite to add far more; for much, very much remains to be done to render us "a peculiar people, zealous of good works." (Note, Tit. 2:14.) All our advantages, and all the promises of the gospel, are intended to encourage our activity, and not to excuse our sloth. And, whether we seek our own salvation, or that of other men, we must "arise, and be doing."—The whole weight of public services should not be laid upon those who sustain public characters. Others are commanded to assist them in proportion to their talents and abilities: and they are exhorted to set their hearts and souls thus to seek and serve the Lord, that the good works, which have been devised, may be completed without needless delay. Thus nobles, senators, magistrates, and indeed every subject in his place, should concur with the king, in every scriptural measure for stopping the progress of immorality and profaneness, and for promoting the fear of God, and a regard to his truths, ordinances, and commandments: first they should lead the way by a good example; then they should proceed to employ their authority and influence, to give effect to such endeavours: and finally, they should seek the blessing of God upon them by fervent prayers. Thus likewise, the leading persons in congregations should second to the uttermost the labours of the minister for the good of souls: their unanimity, forbearance, and cordiality, their pious examples, family religion, and earnest prayers, should never be wanting, that they may add weight to his exhortations, strengthen his hands, encourage him in his arduous work, and bring a blessing upon it. Yet, alas! how contrary is the conduct of too many, who would be thought friends to the gospel! In the church, in their families, and in their worldly concerns, they act as if they meant to counteract the labours of ministers; to weaken their influence, to discourage their hearts, to prejudice men's minds against the blessed truths which they preach, and to embolden all around them to disregard their warnings and exhortations!—But surely, if "the Lord indeed be with us," and has given us rest from our enemies; we shall set our hearts and souls to seek him, and by every means in our power, to glorify his name, and promote the peace and prosperity of his church.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIII. V. 1. David named Solomon his successor.—If this transaction preceded his last sickness, and Adonijah's usurpation, that usurpation was thus rendered more inexcusable: for it is evident that David acted as a prophet, as well as with the full concurrence of his people. (Notes, 29:21-25. 1 Kings 1:5, 6. 2:15-18.)

V. 2-6. The ark being now stationed at Jerusalem, the place of the temple appointed, and great preparations made for the building of it; (16:1. 22:1-4, 14.) David proceeded to reduce the whole service of the priests and Levites to method, which seems before to have been conducted with less regularity. The Israelites had been greatly increased; and we may suppose that, towards the close of David's reign, the occasional sacrifices were far more numerous than they had been. The priests and Levites also were greatly multiplied; and it was of importance to make every thing ready for conducting the service, with proportionable splendour and solemnity, as soon as the temple was finished. David therefore began his arrangements with numbering the Levites, from thirty years of age, as in the time of Moses: but it does not appear, that such as were above fifty years old were omitted. (Notes, 24-28. Num. 4:3. 8:24-26.) The priests, who were very numerous, were not included in the sum total here mentioned; so that this tribe had increased in greater proportion than the others.—Twenty-four thousand Levites were employed to "set forward the work of the house of the Lord;" (4) that is, to assist the priests in every thing pertaining to the sacrifices, and in removing from the temple and its courts whatever might be polluting and offensive; that the whole service might be performed with expedition and exactness, and every thing preserved entirely clean and beautiful. (28) It is also probable, that, while the temple was building, they were employed in superintending the workmen. They served in rotation by courses; and it may be concluded, that every week a thousand came in, and a thousand went out. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Kings 11:5-9.) Doubtless it was also intended, that they should be instructors of the people, in their several districts, when not employed at the sanctuary. (Notes, Num. 35:2-8. 2 Chr. 30:21, 22.) Six thousand were employed as magistrates, in the different parts of the country, and perhaps they likewise acted in rotation. (4) Four thousand kept the doors of the sanctuary, that no unclean or improper person might enter the courts; that no disturbance might be made, to interrupt the sacred services; that none but priests might go into the temple; and that no one might rob the treasures there deposited: and four thousand were appointed as singers and musicians, to keep up that part of divine worship continually. (Marg. Ref.)—These also were divided into twenty-four courses, and changed weekly. (9:25.)

22 And Eleazar died, and had no sons, but daughters: and their brethren the sons of Kish took them.

23 The sons of Mushi; Mahli, and Eder, and Jeremoth, three.

24 ¶ These were the sons of Levi after the house of their fathers; even the chief of their fathers, as they were counted by number of names by their polls, that did the work for the service of the house of the Lord, from the age of twenty years and upward.

25 For David said, The Lord God of Israel hath given rest unto his people, that they may dwell in Jerusalem for ever;

26 And also unto the Levites: they shall no more carry the tabernacle, nor any vessels of it for the service thereof.

27 ¶ For by the last words of David, the Levites were numbered from twenty years old and above:

28 Because their office was to wait on the sons of Aaron for the service of the house of the Lord, in the courts, and in the chambers, and in the purifying of all holy things, and the work of the service of the house of God;

29 Both for the show-bread, and for the fine flour for meat-offering, and for the unleavened cakes, and for that which is baked in the pan, and for that which is fried, and for all manner of measure and size;

30 And to stand every morning to thank and praise the Lord, and likewise at even;

31 And to offer all burnt-sacrifices unto the Lord in the sabbaths, in the new-moons, and on the set feasts, by number, according to the order commanded unto them, continually before the Lord:

32 And that they should keep the charge of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the holy place, and the charge of the sons of Aaron their brethren, in the service of the house of the Lord.

account reasonably think of intruding into that sacred office. (Note, 6:48.)

V. 24—28. (Note, 2—6.) The work of the Levites was by no means so laborious at this time, as when the tabernacle was carried by them, along with Israel, in their journeys; and perhaps numbers of the young Levites, being out of employ, contracted bad habits or set bad examples: therefore David, as a prophet, ordered this change. Twenty-five years of age had been the earliest term of their entering upon their probationary services, but now they were to be employed from twenty years old: and, as a matter of importance, David confirmed it with his last words. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)

V. 29. Marg. Ref. Notes, 9:31—33. Ex. 25:23—30. Lev. 2:4—8. 24:5—8.—All manner, &c.] Those Levites, who acted as magistrates, (4) had the inspection of weights and measures of every kind, that no fraud might in this way be committed. Honesty is nearly connected with piety; and therefore the Levites, being sufficiently numerous, were employed to superintend the former as well as the latter. (Notes, Deut. 25:13—16. Prov. 11:1. 16:11. 20:10, 23. Am. 8:4—10. Mic. 6:10—15.) They probably kept standard-weights and measures at the temple, by which all those allowed in traffic, were tried and approved: and from this “the shekel of the sanctuary,” took that name. (Note, Ez. 45:10—12.)

V. 30—32. The Levites assisted the priests, in offering the sacrifices; though some parts of their service were performed by the priests alone. (Notes, Lev. 1:5—9. Num. 8:19—26. 18:2—6.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If we be prepared for death, having accomplished our measure of services, and seeing others raised up to succeed us in the church or the community, according to our several situations, we surely may be “full of days,” whatever our term of life may be: and satisfied with living in this world of sin and sorrow, of vanity and temptation, we may rejoice to leave all below, and even to be absent from our bodies, that we may go to heaven and be present with the Lord. (Notes and P. O. 2 Cor. 5:1—8.)—We should be thankful, in declining years, to be eclipsed by men of real integrity, piety, and useful endowments, who are coming forward upon the stage of action: yet, we should still endeavour to do all we can to promote the common cause of religion; and sometimes the sagacity and experience of old age, when incapable of much bodily exertion, may suggest and effect more real good, than the vigour and activity of youth.—The increase of ministers is of great importance, provided they be men of God, zealous for his glory, and earnestly seeking the salvation of souls. In this case they will desire employment, and in one way or other will be usefully active.—But it is expedient that every one should know his proper place, to help forward the work of the house of the Lord; to promote equity and justice; to instruct the people in the truths and precepts of God's word, to take care that his ordinances be duly administered; and to excite and assist the people in his sacred worship.—Every method should be used to prevent the irregularity, indolence, and worldly lusts, of this order men, whose example, influence, and conversation are more useful, or more pernicious, than those of any other; and who are commonly either better or worse employed, than the other orders in society.—Though it is generally inexpedient, that the more arduous part of the sacred ministry should be performed by very young men; yet those who are intended for this service, ought by no means to waste their youth in inactivity or dissipation; but to employ their time in preparatory and initiatory studies and exercises.—A constant succession of religious duties, stated or occasional, public or private, must engage the true minister's attention, day by day continually: and if a man cannot take pleasure in such employments, he must soon be weary o the work, as a drudgery, and will either neglect it, or attend upon it unwillingly, for the sake of his wages. (P. O. Acts 6:1—7. Notes, 1 Tim. 4:12—16.) A new heart, a spiritual mind, which delights greatly in God's commandments, is the first and most essential qualification for the ministry; as indeed it forms the great distinction between the true Christian, and all other men in the world. To the spiritual man every successive service will yield renewed satisfaction; and he will be unwearied, and always abounding and delighting in the work of the Lord; being never so happy, as when employed for such a good Master, in so pleasant a service. With him the work itself, and the success of his labours, are the principal objects: the emolument or maintenance, (though he has a right to it, and perhaps cannot live without it,) is a very subordinate consideration: nor will he much regard whether he be called to take the lead, or whether he keep the charge of others who are placed over him, provided they do not mind his hands or impede his usefulness. (Notes, 1 Tim. 3:1—7. 1 Pet. 5:1—4.) These are indeed “men of God.” may he supply his church with numbers of them; in the place of those hirelings, who have in all ages swarmed in the professing church, to the scandal of religion and the ruin of their own souls! Such ministers as have been described, will be accepted and useful in the most obscure situations; and will subserve the interests

CHAPTER XXIV.

The priests are divided by lot into twenty-four courses, 1-19. The rest of the Kohathites, and the Merarites, are divided in like manner, 20-31.

NOW these are the divisions of the sons of Aaron. ^bThe sons of Aaron; Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.

2 But ^cNadab and Abihu ^ddied before their father, and had no children: therefore ^eEleazar and Ithamar executed the priest's office.

3 And David distributed them, both ^fZadok of the sons of Eleazar, and ^gAhimelech of the sons of Ithamar, according to their offices in their service.

4 And there were more ^hchief men found of the sons of Eleazar than of the sons of Ithamar; and thus were they divided. Among the sons of Eleazar there were sixteen chief men of the house of their fathers, and eight among the sons of Ithamar ⁱaccording to the house of their fathers.

5 Thus were they divided by lot, one sort with another; for ^jthe governors of the sanctuary, and governors of the house of God, were of the sons of Eleazar, and of the sons of Ithamar.

6 And Shemaiah the son of Nathaneel ^kthe scribe, one of the Levites, wrote them before the king, and the princes, and Zadok the priest, and Ahimelech the son of Abiathar, and before the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites: one principal household being taken for Eleazar and one taken for Ithamar.

7 Now the first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, the second to Jedaiah,

8 The third to Harim, the fourth to Seorim, 9 The fifth to Malchijah, the sixth to Mijamin,

10 The seventh to Hakkoz, the eighth to Abijah,

11 The ninth to Jeshuah, the tenth to Shecaniah,

12 The eleventh to Eliashib, the twelfth to Jakim,

13 The thirteenth to Huppah, the fourteenth to Jeshebeah,

14 The fifteenth to Bilgah, the sixteenth to Immer,

15 The seventeenth to Hezir, the eighteenth to Apshe,

16 The nineteenth to Pethahiah, the twentieth to Jehezkeel,

17 The one and twentieth to Jachin, the two and twentieth to Gamul, 18 The three and twentieth to Delaiah, the four and twentieth to Maaziah.

19 These were the orderings of them in their service to come into the house of the Lord, according to their manner, under Aaron their father, as the Lord God of Israel had commanded him.

20 ¶ And the rest of the sons of Levi were these: Of the sons of Amram; Shubael: of the sons of Shubael; Jehdeiah.

21 Concerning Rehahiah: of the sons of Rehahiah, the first was Isshiah.

22 Of the Izharites; Shelomoth: of the sons of Shelomoth; Jahath.

23 And the sons of Hebron; Jeriah the first Amariah the second, Jahaziel the third, Jekameam the fourth.

24 Of the sons of Uzziel; Michah: of the sons of Michah; Shamir.

25 The brother of Michah was Isshiah: of the sons of Isshiah; Zechariah.

26 The sons of Merari were Mahli, and Mushi: the sons of Jaaziah; Beno.

27 ¶ The sons of Merari for Jaaziah; Beno, and Shoham, and Zaccur, and Ibrî.

28 Of Mahli came Eleazar, who had no sons.

29 Concerning Kish: the son of Kish was Jerahmeel.

30 The sons also of Mushi; Mahli, and Eder and Jerimoth. These were the sons of the Levites after the house of their fathers.

31 These likewise cast lots over against their brethren the sons of Aaron in the presence of David the king, and Zadok, and Ahimelech, and the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites, even the principal fathers over against their younger brethren.

of morality most effectually, as well as promote the spiritual worship of God through Jesus Christ. And should they leave their families in poverty and obscurity, after their decease: this circumstance will be a testimony before the world of their disinterestedness; and the Lord will surely provide for their wants, as far as is truly good for them. He advances, and he abases, as his infinite wisdom sees good, whatever may be our cares or desires. May we then seek and serve him uprightly, and leave all the rest to his disposal, by faith in his word and resignation to his righteous will!

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIV. V. 1-4. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Lev. 10:1-5. Num. 18:7.) It may be supposed, that the house of Ithamar, in consequence of the sentence denounced against it in the days of Eli, had decreased in numbers and eminence, because Zadok was constituted high priest: (Notes, 1 Sam. 2:30-36. 3:11-14. 1 Kings 2:26, 27, 35.) so that there were twice as many flourishing families and principal persons in the line of Eleazar, as in that of Ithamar. 'To avoid all confusion, now that they were much increased, David distributed the priests as he had done the Levites, into several courses; which, no doubt, was by a divine direction, as well as the other. . . . He appointed . . . sixteen courses of the sons of Eleazar, under as many heads of their families; and half as many of the posterity of Ithamar.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 5. Governors, &c.] Or, principal ministers in holy things, and rulers in behalf of God, or superior magistrates. (Marg. Ref. m.)

V. 6. The regulation of these courses of the priests was made by casting lots, before the king and all the chief persons in the land, in a most solemn manner; and a record was made of the transaction, to prevent any future contest. First, one household was taken of Eleazar's race, and then one of Ithamar's till sixteen had been completed; after which the remaining eight of Eleazar's sons, were arranged according to the order in which their lots came forth.

were descended from him; (1 Mac. 2:1-4.) and Josephus thought himself noble, because he sprang from the first of these twenty-four courses.

V. 10. Abijah.] The courses of the priests, established by David, were continued, with some alterations, till the days of Christ: these records must therefore have been very useful to the Jews, after their return from the Babylonish captivity. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ezra 2:36-39. Luke 1:5-7.)

V. 19. Under Aaron their father.] All the priests were considered as Aaron's successors, and as filling up his place, in whose person the whole priesthood was originally vested, and from whom it was derived to his posterity.—These arrangements having been made by David, acting under the direction, and according to the commandment given by Moses concerning the priesthood; the courses of the priests attended, each during one week at a time, for the ordinary services; though at the great festivals, and on other public occasions, numbers of the rest would be present and assist.

V. 20-30. (Marg. Ref.) These persons seem to have been the heads of those twenty-four thousand Levites, who in twenty-four courses waited on the priests in their ministrations. (23:4.)

V. 31. The principal, &c.] The whole company being ranged, according to their families, into the proper number or divisions, the order of their courses was assigned them by lot, without respect to rank or seniority.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord will certainly perform all his promises and threatenings; and if they do not take effect suddenly, and with observation, they will do it gradually and silently.—Sin ruins men's characters, comforts, and families; and will destroy the immortal souls of all those, who do not obtain salvation by faith in Jesus Christ.—In all cases we ought to act with exact impartiality, as far as we are able; and when human prudence fails of discerning a reason of preference, where it must be given; it is right, in one way or other, to refer the determination to the Lord.—Much wisdom and

4 Moreover the sons of 'Obed-edom were, Shemaiah the first-born, Jehozabad the second, Joah the third, and Sacar the fourth, and Nathaneel the fifth,

5 Ammiel the sixth, Issachar the seventh, Peulthai the eighth: for 'God blessed 'him.

6 Also unto Shemaiah his son were sons born, that ruled throughout the house of their father: for they were 'mighty men of valour.

7 The sons of Shemaiah; Othni, and Rephael, and Obed, Elzabad, whose brethren were strong men, Elihu and Semachiah.

8 All these of the sons of Obed-edom: they and their sons and their brethren, able men for strength for the service, were threescore and two of Obed-edom.

9 And 'Meshelemiah had sons and brethren, strong men, eighteen.

10 Also 'Hosah, of the children of Merari, had sons; Sinri the chief, (for though he was not the first-born, yet 'his father made him the chief;)

11 Hilkiah the second, Tebaliah the third, Zechariah the fourth: all the sons and brethren of Hosah were thirteen.

12 Among these were the divisions of the porters, even among the chief men, having 'wards one against another, to minister in the house of the Lord.

13 ¶ And they cast lots, 'as well the small as the great, according to the house of their fathers, for every gate.

14 And the lot eastward fell to 'Meshelemiah. Then for 'Zechariah his son, a wise counsellor, they cast lots; and his lot came out northward.

15 To Obed-edom southward; and to his sons, the house of 'Asuppim.

portion as they are properly disposed: yet we should apply our minds to instruction, that we may become "workmen that need not be ashamed," as capable of performing our several duties with propriety and readiness.—Human prudence must regulate certain circumstances relative to religious worship; and every society, larger or smaller, should order such matters for themselves, to the best of their judgment: but unless the Spirit of God put life and fervour into our devotions, they will, however appointed, be a lifeless, worthless form.—We should all be ready to give or to receive instructions, without self-preference, or accounting ourselves degraded; for in God's sight the teachable scholar is nearly as honourable as the able instructor.—It is pleasant to receive all our temporal and domestic comforts, as given unto us of God, and then to devote them all to his service: and it is a singular mercy to have a large family, all employed and accepted by him. But whether our children and connexions be few or many, may we and they be all his, and meet in his temple above to sing his praises for ever! Whatever Providence may allot us here, may this be the lot and portion of our inheritance hereafter!

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVI. V. 1. Marg. Ref. Note, 23:2—6, v. 5.—Asaph.] Not Asaph the chief musician, who was of the family of Gershon; (6:39—43.) but another Asaph, of the sons of Korah, called also Abiasaph. (6:37, 9:19.)

V. 4, 5. (Marg.) The numerous and prosperous family of Obed-edom was the effect of the divine blessing, by which 'his reverential regard to the ark was recompensed. (Notes, 2 Sam. 6:10—13.)

V. 6—12. Marg. Ref.—Mighty men, &c. (6) The porters, and treasurers of the temple, had occasion for strength and valour, both to oppose such as improperly attempted to enter the courts or sanctuary, or to raise any disturbance there; and also to guard the sacred treasures of money, vessels, flour, frankincense, wine, and oil, there deposited: and of which some of them were appointed to keep an account. (20. Notes, 9:27—30.)—Josephus speaks of the gates of the temple being so massy, as to require twenty persons to open or shut them: this too would find employment for the strength of the porters. The temple indeed was not yet built; but David had received from the Lord a pattern of what it was to be, and he arranged every thing with reference to 't. (Notes, 28:11—18.)—It is supposed, that the families of the Levites succeeded to the lot of their fathers, whether as singers, porters, or whatever was the service assigned 16 To Shuppim and 'Hosah the lot came forth westward, with the gate Shallecheth, by the 'causeway of the going up, 'ward against ward.

17 'Eastward were six Levites, northward four a day, southward four a day, and towards Asuppim two and two.

18 At Parbar westward, four at the causeway, and two at Parbar.

19 These are the divisions of the porters among the sons of 'Kore, and among the sons of Merari.

20 ¶ And of the Levites, Abihah was over the 'treasures of the house of God, and over the treasures of the 'dedicated things.

21 As concerning the sons of 'Laadan; the sons of the Gershonite Laadan, chief fathers, even of Laadan the Gershonite, were 'Jehieli.

22 The sons of Jehieli; Zetham, and Joel his brother, which were 'over the treasures of the house of the Lord.

26 Which Shelomith and his brethren were 'over all the treasures of the dedicated things, which David the king, and the chief fathers, the captains over thousands and hundreds, and the captains of the hosts, had dedicated.

27 Out of the 'spoils won in battles did they dedicate, 'to maintain the house of the Lord.

28 And all that 'Samuel the seer, and Saul the son of Kish; and 'Abner the son of Ner, and 'Joah the son of Zeruiah, had dedicated; and whosoever had dedicated any thing, it was under the hand of Shelomith and of his brethren.

them; and this from one generation to another, without passing from one company to another. 'They were distributed into courses, as the priests and Levites were; and these were principal commanders over them: being the more illustrious of their brethren, and therefore particularly named.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 13. The porters seem to have been divided into courses, by a different method than the other Levites. The several families or divisions of them cast lots, at which gates they should keep ward; and then the individuals of those divisions attended in rotation; but whether the order, in which they thus followed each other, was determined by lot, or by agreement, it does not appear.

V. 14. A wise counsellor.] It seems that Zechariah, being renowned for his wisdom, was preferred to be the king's counsellor. The office of porter in the temple was a place of great trust, and therefore honourable.

V. 15. 'Asuppim' signifying gatherings: it is supposed that the house of Asuppim was a building erected to contain the money that was collected, for the use of the sanctuary, with the vessels employed in the sacred services.

V. 16—23. Marg. Ref.—Ward against ward. (16) Marg. Ref. Their stations were opposite to each other; as the north to the south, &c.—Eastward were six, &c. (17, 18.)

'Among the porters there were four and twenty, according to the rest of the courses; six on the east side, four on the north, four on the south; at Asuppim, two and two, (four in all,) four on the west, and two at Parbar.' Kimchi in Bp. Patrick.

V. 24—27. 'These are the only persons among the descendants of Moses, who are mentioned as appointed to any office of honour and distinction. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 18:11, 22:6—14.)

V. 28. Samuel, &c.] It had been customary from the time of Abraham, (Notes, Gen. 14:18—10, 28:20—22,) and probably from the beginning of the world, for persons to dedicate a portion of their gains to the service of God, as an acknowledgment that all came from him: but it is uncertain whether Samuel, or the other persons here mentioned, had an expectation of a temple being built, for which they desired to make preparation.

V. 29. (Marg. Ref. Note, 23:2—6.)—The outward business &c.] These Levites seem not to have performed any service within the precincts of the sanctuary: and their employment on that account may be called "the outward business." In general, it may be supposed, that, as well as the other were for the outward business over Israel, for officers and judges.

30 And of the Hebronites, Hashabiah and his brethren, men of valour, a thousand and seven hundred, were officers among them of Israel on this side Jordan westward, in all the business of the Lord, and in the service of the king.

31 Among the Hebronites was Jerijah the chief, even among the Hebronites, according to the generations of his fathers. In the fortieth year of the reign of David they were sought for, and there were found among them mighty men of valour at Jazer of Gilead.

32 And his brethren, men of valour, were two thousand and seven hundred chief fathers, whom king David made rulers over the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, for every matter pertaining to God, and affairs of the king.

NOW the children of Israel after their number, to wit, the chief fathers, and captains of thousands and hundreds, and their officers that served the king in any matter of the courses, which came in and went out month by month throughout all the months of the year, of every course, were twenty and four thousand.

2 Over the first course for the first month, was Jashobeam the son of Zabdiel: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

3 Of the children of Perez, was the chief of all the captains of the host for the first month.

4 And over the course of the second month was Dodai an Ahohite, and of his course was Mikloth also the ruler: in his course likewise were twenty and four thousand.

Levites, they were expected to be instructors of the people in the law of God: and in particular they were made magistrates of different orders, to administer justice to the people. As the Levites were more numerous than could be employed in the sanctuary; and as they ought to be, and had opportunities of being, better acquainted with the law than the other Israelites; they were appointed to this service, along with the elders of every tribe. (Note, 2 Chr. 19:5-11.) From these, the scribes, lawyers, or doctors of the law, mentioned in the New Testament, seem to have arisen. As the office of the magistracy reaches only to the regulation of the outward conduct; whilst the ministry of the word forms the means of regulating the mind or judgment, with the conscience and affections of the heart; the former may in this sense also be called the outward business. The lawyers above mentioned made the whole of religion a mere outward business; and they have always had abundance of disciples in this respect. (Notes, Matt. 23:25-28. Luke 11:37-41.)

V. 30-32. Hebron was first assigned to the priests; (Note, Josh. 21:11, 12.) but it was afterwards occupied by Levites, perhaps as tenants whilst the priests were but few. The Levites here mentioned, it seems, lived there, till they had acquired the name of Hebronites, and then removed over Jordan into the land Gilead. But being sought out, they were appointed judges, and officers, for various purposes, civil and ecclesiastical, superior and inferior, on each side Jordan, in two divisions: though the larger proportion was assigned to those who lived east of that river; perhaps because, being more remote from the sanctuary and the seat of government, they needed more attention to keep them to their duty, both to God, and to the king. (Marg. Ref.)

Fortieth year. (31) It is generally thought that most or all of these regulations were made in the last year of David's life: but, though this be uncertain, they were certainly arranged towards the close of his reign.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The blessing of God renders individuals happy, and families flourishing: and those, who have been faithful in a little, will be made rulers over many things.—Wisdom, courage, strength of faith, holy affections, and constancy of mind in our duty, are requisite for every station. But those, who minister in the house of the Lord, and are required, without respect of persons, to prevent the profanation of holy things, have peculiar need of these qualifications. They are the porters of the spiritual house, and the “stewards of the mysteries of God;” a charge is committed to their trust, infinitely more valuable than all the treasures of the temple; and they need to be watchful and faithful. (Notes, Matt. 24:45-51. Mark 13:33-37. Luke 11:35-46. 1 Cor. 4:1-5.) Their office requires them “rightly to divide the word of truth,” and to administer divine ordinances according to it; that the hungry souls may be fed and feasted from the provisions of the Lord's house; and that he may be glorified by their spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to him through Jesus Christ. Great integrity, firmness, and discretion, are necessary to do this according to the mind of the great Master of the family, and to prevent abuses, and prostitution of sacred ordinances to secular purposes, by ungodly men. From these sacred treasures, “the unsearchable riches of Christ,” all our wants are supplied: but receiving from his fulness, and being victorious over our enemies by his grace, we must give him the glory, and endeavour to dispose of the whole of our abilities and substance according to his will; allotting a proportion to maintain the expense of his worship, as well as to provide for the poor. Many unbelievers, however, join in these external services, and we must not in any degree rest our hopes of salvation on them.—The work of the minister requires the whole man: internal renovation is immediately its object; and the outward business of external order in society properly belongs to the magistrate. These services are therefore best preserved distinct; yet particular circumstances may warrant exceptions. However, both magistrates and ministers should concur in leading people, by different means, to fear God, and honour the king, and to do justice, and show kindness to their brethren.—It is very wrong for able men to get out of the way, when their help is wanted: but they should be sought out, and set to work: and as our end approaches, we should be more earnest to render our last services to mankind.

5 The third captain of the host for the third month was Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, a chief priest: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

6 This is that Benaiah, who was mighty among the thirty, and above the thirty: and in his course was Ammizabad his son.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVII. V. 1-15. When David was not actually engaged in war, twenty-four thousand men seem to have been continually kept under military discipline. These were exchanged every month for others; so that two hundred and eighty-eight thousand men were, every year, exercised as a regular militia; but they were not kept from their other engagements, more than a month at one time. These were mustered from all the tribes of Israel, under commanders, called “captains of the companies, that ministered to the king by course.” (28:1.) All the twelve captains are named among David's mighty men. (Marg. Ref. 11:10-47. 2 Sam. 23:8-39.) The word translated priest, and applied to Benaiah, evidently means, and should be rendered, Ruler, or officer. (Marg.) Asahel, whom Abner slew, is numbered among these captains, and upon his death, his son

16 ¶ Furthermore over the tribe of Israel: the ruler of the Reubenites was Eliezer the son of Zichri: of the Simeonites, Shephatiah the son of Maachah:

17 Of the Levites, Hashabiah the son of Kemuel: of the Aaronites, Zadok:

18 Of Judah, Elihu, one of the brethren of David: of Issachar, Omri the son of Michael:

19 Of Zebulun, Ishmaiah the son of Obadiah: of Naphtali, Jerimoth the son of Azriel:

20 Of the children of Ephraim, Hoshea the son of Azaziah: of the half-tribe of Manasseh, Joel the son of Pedaiah:

21 Of the half-tribe of Manasseh in Gilead, Iddo the son of Zechariah: of Benjamin, Jaasiel the son of Abner:

22 Of Dan, Azareel the son of Jeroham. These were the princes of the tribes of Israel.

23 ¶ But David took not the number of them (from twenty years old and under: because the LORD had said He would increase Israel like to the stars of the heavens.

24 Joab the son of Zeruiah began to number, but he finished not, because there fell wrath for it against Israel: neither was the number put in the account of the chronicles of king David.

25 And over the king's treasures was Azmaveth the son of Adiel: and over the storehouses in the fields, in the cities, and in the villages, and in the castles, was Jehonathan the son of Uziah:

26 And over them that did the work of the field for tillage of the ground was Ezri the son of Chelub:

27 And over the vineyards was Shimei the Ramathite: over the increase of the vineyards for the wine-cellars was Zabdi the Shiphmite:

28 And over the olive-trees and the sycamore-trees that were in the low plains was Baal-hanan the Gederite: and over the cellars of oil was Joash:

29 And over the herds that fed in Sharon was Shitrai the Sharonite: and over the herds that were in the valleys was Shaphat the son of Adlai:

30 Over the camels also was Obil the Ishmaelite: and over the asses was Jehdeiah the Meronothite:

31 And over the flocks was Jaziz the Hagarite. All these were the rulers of the substance which was king David's.

32 Also Jonathan David's uncle was a counsellor, a wise man, and a scribe: and Jehiel the son of Hachmoni was with the king's sons:

33 And Ahitophel was the king's counsellor: and Hushai the Archite was the king's companion:

34 And after Ahitophel was Jehoiada the son of Benaiah, and Abiathar: and the general of the king's army was Joab.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

David assembles the chiefs of Israel; shows them how his purpose of building a temple had been disclosed, and relates the LORD'S special favour to him; and his promises to Solomon, 1-5. He charges Solomon to know and serve God, and to build the temple, 9, 10. He gives a pattern for the form of the several parts, (as God had showed it to him,) and gold and silver for the materials, 11-19. He encourages Solomon with the assurance of help, both from God, and from his people, 20, 21.

AND David assembled all the princes of Israel, the princes of the tribes, and the captains of the companies that ministered to the king by course, and the captains over the thousands, and captains over the hundreds, and the stewards over all the substance and possession of the king, and of his sons, with the officers, and with the mighty men, and with all the valiant men unto Jerusalem.

2 Then David the king stood up upon his feet, succeeded him: hence we learn, that this order was at least begun to be established before David ruled over the whole land. (Note, 2 Sam. 2:18-23.)—Joab was the commander in chief. (34)

V. 16-22. These persons, called "the princes of the tribes," (28:1.) seem to have been civil rulers over their several tribes, not entirely unlike the lord-lieutenants of counties in England.—Gad and Asher are not mentioned, probably because they were joined to the neighbouring tribes, Elihu, or Elijah, was David's elder brother. The Levites had a prince, or rulers, as the other tribes had; and the family of Aaron, as distinguished from the rest, had Zadok, for their ruler, or prince. The son of Abner was, probably, advanced upon his father's death, as an expression of David's neglected concern for that event. (Notes, 2 Sam. 3:26-29.)

V. 23, 24. It seems probable, from this passage, that Joab began, by David's order, to number the children, as well as the grown men, but was prevented from finishing the account. (Notes, 2 Sam. 24:1-9.) The numbering of the effective men might have been deemed politically expedient: but ostentation alone could dictate the numbering of minors and infants; especially as God had pronounced the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, innumerable. (Marg. Ref.)

An account of the number, as far as he went, was given by Joab to the king; but the king, being sensible of his error, would not have it recorded in the public registers of the kingdom, as other things of daily occurrence were. Bp. Patrick.

V. 25-31. (Marg. Ref.) This account mentions only such persons, as filled up useful or useful stations; not any superfluous officers, retained merely to make a show of magnificence. Luxury, ambition, and venality have multiplied these attendants on courts; and selfish opposers will so impede the most unexceptionable measures of government, in limited monarchies, that without a number of retainers whose interest it is to support the crown, the public business must move heavily, if it could at all proceed. Yet ancient simplicity was preferable to modern refinement; and the useful productions of the earth, to all the devices of luxury and indulgence. (Notes, 1 Kings 4:2-19. 2 Chr. 26:10.)—These officers are called "the stewards over all the substance and possessions of the king." (28:1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The prudent management of secular affairs is conducive to the interests of godliness; provided it be kept in its proper place, and the favour and glory of God have a decided preference. In the kingdoms of this world, habitual readiness for war forms a better security of peace, than any treaties or alliances: in like manner, nothing so much encourages Satan's assaults, as our unwatchfulness; and while we stand armed with "the whole armour of God," in the exercise of faith and preparation of heart for the conflict, we shall certainly be safe, and probably enjoy inward peace.—When we have exposed ourselves to wrath and chastening for our sins, we ought humbly to confess them and to desist from them: this will not make atonement for our crimes; but it is a preparation of heart from the Lord, for receiving the atonement made by the Saviour, and making suitable returns for it.—Usefulness is the proper standard of valueableness; and he who estimates by this rule, will give the word of God, the salvation of Christ, and true religion, a decided preference to all other things, because infinitely more useful.—Well-chosen counsellors prove the wisdom of princes: yet, some will be found wise men and scribes, and eminent for worldly policy and plausibility, who are in fact very wicked characters. But the faithful, the upright, and godly, should be our friends and chosen companions; and no king will be well advised in all things, or in those of the greatest importance, who does not make the testimonies of God "his delight and his counsellors;" however he may be surrounded by powerful family connexions, faithful friends, and able politicians.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVIII. V. 1. This transaction seems to have occurred in the time of David's last sickness; which, notwithstanding remissions, he was aware would terminate in death. He therefore summoned the several descriptions of men, which were mentioned in the preceding chapter, and which formed a convention of the states, or representatives of the people; that he might declare to them the will of God as revealed to him, and engage them to a hearty concurrence in those public measures, which, in obedience to that will, he had resolved on.—Princes. [Note, 27:16-22.—Captains, &c.] 'That is, those great commanders of 24,000 apiece, mentioned in the beginning of the foregoing chapter. . . The commanders of every one of those thousands, with the centurions, who commanded the several companies, consisting of a hundred.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, 27:1-15.)—Stewards, &c.] Note, 27:25-31.—Many of the chief priests and Levites generally resided with David at Jerusalem; but it is not expressly said, that they were present on this occasion.

V. 2. David, finding himself able, and being animated by the solemn occasion, stood up on his feet, to express his earnestness in this address, and his affection and respect for the people; and especially as intending to honour the Lord, by whose authority and commission he spake. Moses and Joshua had, just before their death, assembled the people for similar purposes. (Deut. 31:28-30. Notes, Deut. 32:45-52. Josh. 23: 24:)—David used the most endearing language and said, Hear me, my brethren, and my people: As for me, I had in my heart to build a house for rest for the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and for the footstool of our God, and had made ready for the building:

3 But God said unto me, "Thou shalt not build a house for my name, because thou hast been a man of war, and hast shed blood."

4 Howbeit the Lord God of Israel chose me before all the house of my father to be king over Israel for ever: for he hath chosen Judah to be the ruler; and of the house of Judah the house of my father; and among the sons of my father he liked me to make me king over all Israel:

5 And of all my sons, (for the Lord hath given me many sons,) he hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the Lord over Israel.

6 And he said unto me, Solomon thy son, he shall build my house and my courts: for I have chosen him to be my son, and I will be his father.

in this parting interview, begging their attention, as his "brethren and his people."—The ark is here called "the footstool of our God." Heaven, where the Lord unveils his glories, is his throne; the earth is his footstool; and the place of the ark was, as it were, the centre of that footstool, where the gracious presence of God on earth was chiefly displayed, and before and toward which all his people worshipped. (4) That is, permanently in his posterity, and to the end of the world, yea, to eternity, in Christ, of whom David and Solomon were remarkable types.—It was not known till David's time, from which family in Judah the Messiah would descend. (Notes, Gen. 49:8-10.)

V. 7, 8. David had committed several great transgressions, and he every where speaks the language of conscious sinfulness. Yet the people had been preserved from idolatry, and retained in the worship and service of God, during his whole reign; and at this time they, as well as Solomon, appeared well disposed to true religion. If therefore they continued constant, "as at that day," to keep the Lord's commandments and judgments; their national covenant remaining unviolated, would secure their possession of Canaan and other important advantages. Yet they were exhorted not only to "keep," but "to seek for, all the commandments of the Lord;" that they might know them more exactly, and perform them more entirely. David therefore exhorted the princes to engage themselves to this, as "in the sight of all Israel, even the congregation of the Lord, and in the audience of their God," who was especially present in that solemn assembly; that they might be the more impressed, and that their example might have a salutary effect on others also.—"It is not enough to know the will of God, if we do not keep it; that is, observe his commands, and live in the practice of our duty. But that we may know it, it is necessary to seek it; that is, to inquire after it and to study the laws of God: for no man, as Grotius here observes, shall be excused by a supine ignorance." Bp. Patrick. It is as necessary to pray humbly and continually for divine teaching, in "seeking the commandments of God," as to study the laws of God, and search the Scriptures: for proud, and learned, and self-wise error, will no more excuse a man, than a supine ignorance. (Notes, Prov. 2:1-9.)

V. 9. The being and perfections of God are made known by his works, and by his word: and we ought diligently to seek the knowledge of him from both these sources. That discovery of some of the divine perfections, which may be made by studying the works of creation and providence, may be naturally delightful to man; because it gratifies his love of knowledge, and excites his surprise, without affronting his pride, alarming his conscience, or offending his prejudices. But revelation gives us the whole character of God, as connected with his natural perfections, and mysterious subsistence: and this not only in plain declarations, but in an historical and prophetic view of his providential government of the universe; in his holy law "the ministration of condemnation and death;" and in his blessed gospel, "the mi-

7 Moreover I will establish his kingdom for ever, if he be constant to do my commandments and my judgments, as at this day.

8 Now therefore in the sight of all Israel, the congregation of the Lord, and in the audience of our God, keep and seek for all the commandments of the Lord your God: for that ye may possess this good land, and leave it for an inheritance for your children after you for ever.

9 And thou, Solomon my son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart, and with a willing mind: for the Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts: if thou seek him, he will be found of thee; but if thou forsake him, he will cast thee off for ever.

10 Take heed now; for the Lord hath chosen thee to build a house for the sanctuary: be strong, and do it.

nistration of righteousness and of the Spirit." (Note, 2 Cor. 3:7-11.) This knowledge of God the natural man cannot receive. (Note, 1 Cor. 2:14-16.) It implies the infinite justice and holiness of God, and the entire apostasy, rebellion, pollution, and misery of man; and shows every person on earth to be a criminal condemned to everlasting punishment, from which he cannot be delivered, except by the unmerited mercy of the Father, through the atonement of the Son, and by the sanctification of the Holy Spirit. All men therefore oppose, neglect, or pervert this knowledge of God, except as they are taught by him. Some notions of these things may be attained by an unhumiliated sinner; but he does not see them as they really are, according to their nature and value; and his ideas no more agree with the true meaning even of his own words, than the words of a man born blind do with his ideas, when he speaks about light and colours. This knowledge therefore will have no effect, unless a bad one, on the state of his heart, and the conduct of his life. But where God is truly known, he is also feared, believed, trusted, loved, worshipped, and obeyed, in proportion to that knowledge. Self-abasement, hatred of sin, indifference about worldly objects, and general benevolence from the purest principles, will uniformly attend and grow with it; and all true religion may be resolved into it. (Notes, Ps. 9:7-12, v. 10. 9:1. 14-16. Jer. 24:7. 31:33, 34. Matt. 11:27. John 17:1-3. 2 Cor. 4:3-6.)—This knowledge of God is, under the inward teaching and illuminating influence of the Spirit of truth, received by faith simply crediting "the testimony of God," and diligently appropriating the information which he communicates in Scripture. As far as required, it regulates the understanding, judgment, conscience, will, affections, and all the powers and operations of the soul; and consequently, all the intentions, dispositions, words, and actions. It brings a man acquainted with God in Christ, as a Father and Friend, in a way of experience and communion. It discovers what we may expect from him, and what he must approve or abhor in us; and consequently what is requisite to his saving sinners in a way that is honourable to his own great name, and to our being capable of happiness in his favour and service. Thus we learn the inestimable value of the Saviour's atonement, and of the sanctification of the Holy Ghost, and are influenced to walk conscientiously in all his ordinances and commandments. "It brings a sinner to his proper place, at the foot of the cross, and prostrate before the mercy-seat of a forgiving God; as a poor, helpless, lost sinner, an ignorant child, a humble suppliant, a condemned criminal, deserving nothing but wrath, yet expecting every thing needful or desirable, from the infinitely free mercy and grace of God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ. Having been forgiven much, and receiving much, the pardoned sinner learns to love much; and experiencing the blessed effects of this knowledge of God on his own soul, he declares its excellency to others, that they too may seek and find so inestimable a treasure.—Thus David had known the Lord; and having for many years feared, trusted, loved, and worshipped him, he was about to remove to that better world, where knowledge, holiness, love, and felicity are perfected: but before he departed, he desired to give it, as his dying counsel to his beloved Solomon, to cultivate the acquaintance of so kind, merciful, faithful and powerful a Friend; (Note, Job 22:21-30.) and to "serve him with a perfect heart and a willing mind," or inward delight. But he also reminded him at the same time of the Lord's heart-searching knowledge, and of his justice and holiness, as well as of his mercy. (Marg. Ref. 1.) A formal service therefore would not profit ; if he sought God in a proper manner, he would be found of him ; but if he finally renounced his service, he would " cast him off for ever," notwithstanding all his former kindness to him.

V. 10. Solomon was thus exhorted to be very circumspect, and attentive to the directions and commandments of God, in that important service to which he was called ; yet not to be discouraged respecting it. " Being a young man, he might be discouraged from undertaking so great a work : but he bids him go about it strenuously, because God had chosen him to do it." Bp. Patrick.

V. 11-13. David was divinely instructed, probably by immediate revelation, or else by some prophet, (perhaps Nathan,) in what form the temple was to be built, and how to regulate every thing respecting it, and its chambers, and courts, and treasures. (Notes, 9:22, 15:16, 16:1-3, 23:-26.) "The LORD made him understand it in writing by his hand upon him." (19) And in what way soever this writing was made and sent to him, he gave it to Solomon just before his death : so that nothing was left even to " the wisdom of Solomon," but all was done by rule, even to the quantity of metal used in each vessel. (Notes, 14-18.) Moses had been instructed in the same manner in erecting the tabernacle. For both the tabernacle and temple were typical of Christ, and heavenly things. (Notes, Ex. 25:9,40, 31:6.)—In vain do men of opposite sentiments contend for such uniformity in the circumstances of our worship, under the New Testament ; seeing it is manifest, that exact, precise, and express rules are no where to be found, in respect of every particular.—It is, however, most evident, that to model divine ordinances according to man's imagination, would have been the height of presumption even in Solomon himself.

V. 14-16. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Kings, 7:48-51.) The candlesticks of silver, and tables of silver, are not elsewhere mentioned, and it is not known to what use they were put. The former . . . (the candlesticks of silver) " were lesser, to be carried in their hands from place to place, as there was occasion." Bp. Patrick. It seems there were in the temple several tables of gold for the show-bread, and the vessels belonging to that part of the stated service. (Note, 2 Chr. 4:19.)

V. 17. The word, rendered basins, seems to be derived from the atonement made by the blood of the sacrifices, which was received into them till it was sprinkled. (Note, Num. 7:13,14.)

V. 18. Above the ark, between the cherubim, the glory of the Lord appeared, as a mighty warrior riding in his chariot of war, to the assistance of Israel his people. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ex. 25:10-21.) As the cherubim of gold made by Moses were joined to the mercy-seat, which covered the ark ; it has been thought, that Solomon was directed to make two additional cherubim, after the same pattern. These must, however, be distinguished from those made of olives covered with gold. (Note, 1 Kings 6:23-28.) And it is not absolutely certain, that amidst the many removals of the ark which had taken place, the cherubim had not been separated from it ; and whether Solomon did any thing more than make two others in the stead of them.

V. 19. (Note, 11-13.) This comprises all the particu-

17 Also pure gold for the fleshhooks and the bowls, and the cups : and for the golden basins, he gave gold by weight for every basin ; and likewise silver by weight for every basin of silver :

18 And for the altar of incense refined gold by weight ; and gold for the pattern of the chariot of the cherubims, that spread out their wings, and covered the ark of the covenant of the LORD.

19 All this, said David, the LORD made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern.

20 ¶ And David said to Solomon his son, Be strong, and of good courage, and do it : Fear not, nor be dismayed, for the LORD God, even my God, will be with thee ; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the house of the LORD.

21 And behold, the courses of the priests and the Levites, even they shall be with thee for all the service of the house of God : and there shall be with thee, for all manner of workmanship, every willing skilful man, for any manner of service : also the princes and all the people will be wholly at thy commandment.

lars mentioned in the preceding verses.—"God made him to understand all this so plainly and distinctly, as if it had been written on his mind, as the ten commandments were upon the tables of stone in the mount." Bp. Patrick.

V. 20, 21. (Marg. Ref. Note, 10.) There appeared, in all the several orders of men, a very promising disposition to harmony among themselves, and loyalty to their prince ; and David foresaw that God would dispose them to cordial obedience to Solomon, though a younger brother, and in his youth.—"This was one reason, no doubt, of calling this assembly together, that they might be engaged to be aiding to Solomon, in promoting so pious a work." Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. While life continues, it is desirable to spend it in promoting the peace, prosperity, and spiritual good, of those who may remain behind. (Notes, Ec. 9:10, 2 Pet. 1:12-15.)—To treat inferiors with condescending respect and affection, is the way to gain love, without losing any due honour : and to address subjects as rational creatures, showing them the propriety and advantage of proposed measures, and persuading them to a willing concurrence, is far preferable to the exercise of despotic authority. Indeed kings and their meanest subjects are all brethren in fallen Adam : and believers, on a throne or in a cottage, are all brethren in Jesus Christ, and should mutually seek each other's welfare.—In that monarchy, which God established in Israel and sanctioned by his approbation, we see no traces of the unalterable right of primogeniture, or of ruling with absolute authority. Rather we perceive a resemblance of that limited, moderate, and equitable authority, which a kind Providence has established over these kingdoms ; for which we can never be sufficiently thankful, and for the continuance of which to our latest posterity, we should most fervently pray. The wickedness of man indeed, and the experience of ages, have taught the friends of liberty to secure that blessing by many regulations, which were not thought of, nor needful, in the happy days of " the man after God's own heart ;" and prudence dictates the general expediency of hereditary succession. Yet surely the conduct of David at the beginning, in the middle, and at the close of his reign, greatly resembled that of a British monarch meeting his Parliament, and doing all things by their concurrence and assistance.—It may be comfortable to us in a dying hour, to recollect the plans which we had framed to promote true religion, though we have been unable to accomplish them : from hence we may infer, that we are the chosen and called of God ; as such designs prove, that he has given us a heart to account his service a delightful privilege, and to long and love to be employed in it. But, in the nature and measure of our services, we must learn acquiescence in his will, whose choice of us is the source of all our grace, comfort, or usefulness : he was pleased to make us Christians, or ministers, and to employ us in various ways ; but he does not generally acquaint us with the reason of it. Happy are they, whom he has " chosen in Christ . . . unto the adoption of children unto himself, according to the good pleasure of his will." (Note, Eph. 1:3-8.) from their almighty Father they will " receive a kingdom that cannot be moved," and he will establish it to them for ever. And it will be manifest, that this is their felicity, by their constancy in keeping his commandments, and doing their proper work in his church, after the example and by the grace of the Saviour. Let us then " give diligence to make our calling

CHAPTER XXIX.

David shows the princes and people what treasures he had prepared for the building and service of the temple, 1-5. After his example, and at his exhortation, they offer liberally, 6-9. He adores and blesses God, and prays for the people and for Solomon, 10-19. The people worship, sacrifice, and feast with joy; and then make Solomon king the second time, 20-22. He reigns in majesty and prosperity, 23-25. David's long and prosperous reign, and happy death, 26-30.

FURTHERMORE David the king said unto all the congregation, Solomon my son, whom alone God hath chosen, is yet young and tender, and the work is great; for the palace is not for man, but for the LORD God.

2 Now I have prepared with all my might for the house of my God the gold for things to be made of gold, and the silver for things of silver, and the brass for things of brass, the iron for things of iron, and wood for things of wood; onyx-stones, and stones to be set, glistening stones, and of divers colours, and all manner of precious stones, and marble-stones in abundance.

3 Moreover, because I have set my affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house,

4 Even three thousand talents of gold, of the gold of Ophir, and seven thousand talents of refined silver, to overlay the walls of the houses withal :

5 The gold for things of gold, and the silver for things of silver, and for all manner of work to be made by the hands of artificers. And who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the LORD?

6 ¶ Then the chief of the fathers and princes of the tribes of Israel, and the captains of thousands and of hundreds, with the rulers over the king's work, offered willingly,

7 And gave for the service of the house of God of gold five thousand talents and ten thousand drams, and of silver ten thousand talents, and of brass eighteen thousand talents, and one hundred thousand talents of iron.

8 And they with whom precious stones were found gave them to the treasure of the house of the LORD, by the hand of Jehiel the Gershonite.

9 Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly, because with perfect heart they offered willingly to the LORD: and David the king also rejoiced with great joy.

[Practical Observations.]

10 ¶ Wherefore David blessed the LORD before all the congregation: and David said, "Blessed be thou, LORD God of Israel our Father, for ever and ever.

11 Thine, O LORD, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine; thine is the kingdom, O LORD, and thou art exalted as head above all.

12 Both riches and honour come of thee, and thou reignest over all; and in thy hand is power and might; and in thy hand it is to make great, and to give strength unto all.

13 Now therefore, our God, ^awe thank thee, and praise thy glorious name.

14 But ^awho am I, and what is my people, that we should ^bbe able to offer so ^cwillingly after this sort? for all things come of thee, and ^dof thine own have we given thee.

15 For ^awe are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none ^babiding.

16 O LORD our God, ^aall this store that we have prepared to build thee a house for thy holy name cometh of thy hand, and is all thine own.

17 I know also, my God, that thou ^atriest the heart, and ^bhast pleasure in uprightness. As for me, ^cin the uprightness of my heart I have willingly offered all these things: and now have I seen with ^djoy thy people, which are ^epresent here, to offer willingly unto thee.

18 O LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, our fathers, ^akeep this for ever ^bin the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and ^cprepare their heart unto thee.

19 And ^agive unto Solomon my son a perfect heart, to keep thy commandments, thy testimonies, and thy statutes, and to do all these things, and to build the palace, for ^bthe which I have made provision. [Practical Observations.]

Bp. Patrick.

V. 10-19. Instead of boasting of these extraordinary oblations; (Note, Num. 23:4-6.) David gave solemn thanks to the Lord, with much enlargement of heart and copiousness of expression.—'LORD, God of Israel, our Father,' may mean, either the 'God of our father Israel, or Jacob,' (18) or 'JEHOVAH our Father, the God of Israel.' In this last view, the words may be considered as the first instance in Scripture, of God being addressed in prayer, as 'Our Father.' (Note, Matt. 6:9.) This is properly the language of the Spirit of adoption. (Note, Rom. 8:14-17.) As king of Israel David was become great, powerful, and honourable; he had obtained victories, taken immense spoils, and been crowned with royal majesty; but what was all this, before him who 'inhabitieth eternity,' and filleth immensity, and is undervied and independent of all; who possesses immutably every glorious and adorable perfection, and exercises almighty power and absolute universal authority; and who, victorious over all his enemies, reigns in majesty which exceeds all description or imagination! for his 'is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory for ever, Amen.' (Note, Matt. 6:13.) From this God alone, David had received his wealth, his honour, and power; this he acknowledged with grateful praise; but, contemplating the infinite glories of his great Benefactor, and then turning his thoughts to himself and his people, the comparison affected him with a deep conviction of their meanness, weakness, and unworthiness; and he could not but wonder, that the glorious God would condescend to notice such indigent and sinful creatures. 'LORD,' says he, 'what are we, that we should offer so willingly after this sort?' Their existence was derived from God: he had graciously given them these treasures, and had disposed their hearts willingly to make this use of them; so that in every way the whole praise belonged to him. 'In the Targum it is thus paraphrased, Who has given us such plenty, that we are able to offer these gifts. He should have added, and also given us a heart to part with them for thy service.

The highest satisfaction was, that God had bestowed upon him a heart, to do what he had done, willingly, with a sincere respect to the service of God, and not out of vain glory.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, Ps. 110:3.) As for David and his people, they were strangers and sojourners; dying, because sinful creatures. Though settled and prospered very greatly in Canaan, they still were strangers before God, and sojourners,

'Now bless the LORD your God. And all the congregation blessed the LORD God of their fathers, and bowed down their heads, and worshipped the LORD, and the king.'

21 And they ^asacrificed sacrifices unto the LORD, and offered burnt-offerings unto the LORD, on the morrow after that day, even a thousand bullocks, a thousand rams, and a thousand lambs, with their drink-offerings, and sacrifices in abundance for all Israel:

22 And did ^aeat and drink before the LORD on that day with great gladness. And they made Solomon the son of David king ^athe second time, ^band anointed him unto the LORD to be the chief governor, and Zadok to be priest.

23 Then Solomon ^asat on the throne of the LORD as king instead of David his father, and ^bprospered; and ^call Israel obeyed him.

24 And ^aall the princes, and the mighty men, and ^ball the sons likewise of king David, ^csubmitted themselves unto Solomon the king.

25 And the LORD ^amagnified Solomon exceedingly in the sight of all Israel, and ^bbestowed upon him such royal majesty as had not been on any king before him in Israel.

26 ¶ Thus David the son of Jesse reigned ^aover all Israel.

27 And the time that he reigned over Israel was ^aforty years; seven years reigned he in as really, (though in rather a different sense,) as their fathers were, when they dwelt in the promised land in tents, or wandered in the desert. (Notes, Ps. 39:12. Heb. 4:3-11. 11:13-16. 1 Pet. 2:11.) Indeed all that treasure, which they gave to the Lord to build his temple, was his own before; if they had attempted to keep it, death would soon have removed them: so that the only use which they could make of it, to their own real advantage, was thus to consecrate it to the service of him who gave it, and whose gracious acceptance of their oblation would add still more to their obligations. At the same time David was conscious of his own uprightness and willingness in this oblation, as in the presence of that heart-searching God who 'hath pleasure in uprightness,' and with great joy he beheld his people showing every token of the same disposition. He well knew, that this, as far as genuine, was the effect of a sacred influence from God upon the heart, 'preventing them, that they might have a good will': and he most fervently prayed, that it might be evermore kept there, by the same grace working in them when they had that good will; and that the Lord would prepare the hearts of them all, but especially the heart of Solomon, for himself; and that he might accomplish the arduous important service before him.—Such is this address of David to the LORD God of Israel; and nothing on this side heaven can be conceived more humble, pure, evangelical, spiritual, devout, or exalted, than the praise, adoration, gratitude, confidence, love, zeal, and philanthropy, which it breathes throughout.—None abiding. (15) No expectation. (Marg. Notes, Ps. 39:7, 8. 62:1, 2, 5-7.)

V. 20. David, having concluded his act of worship, called upon the people to bless the LORD with him: and when they had rendered their adoring praises and thanksgivings unto God, they performed obedience to their aged and pious king. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21-25. Besides the burnt-offerings, which were entirely consumed on the altar, numerous the peace-offerings were sacrificed, on the flesh of which the assembled multitudes joyfully feasted. (Notes, Dent. 12:5-7. 1 Kings 8:63-65. Neh. 8:10-12.)—Solomon had been hastily, and by a few persons, anointed king, during Adonijah's usurpation; (Notes, 1 Kings 1:38, 39.) but he was at this time anointed in a more solemn and public manner. As Abiathar was removed from the high priesthood, and Zadok substituted in his place, after David's death; it has been thought, that the second anointing of Solomon was also subsequent to that event. (Note, 1 Kings 2:26, 27.) He was anointed unto 'the LORD to be the chief governor,' and 'he sat on the throne of the LORD.' For the LORD was in an especial manner the king of Israel; the princes received their authority from him by peculiar designation; and they were expressly required to support his worship and law. They also were all types of Christ, who 'sat down with his Father on his throne.'—We may suppose that every kind of personal accomplishment united with justice, wisdom, and prosperity, in that royal majesty which the Lord bestowed upon Solomon, and by which he magnified him in the sight of all Israel. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 26—28. (Marg. Ref.) When we read the eleventh chapter of the second book of Samuel, and the sequel of that melancholy narration, we could scarcely expect to behold David appear so illustrious in his closing scene, in which every thing heavenly and excellent is combined; and the people seem to have considered him with a veneration and affection, which language fails to express. But his repentance had been as remarkable as his sins; and his conduct, during his afflictions, and towards the end of his life, seems to have had more effect on his subjects, than all that they had before witnessed.—It is indeed hard to say, which shines the brightest in this chapter, the rising, or the setting sun: but it is better to rise behind clouds, and to be much obscured in the course of our lives, and to set, like David, with splendour; than with Solomon to rise very bright, and shine very splendidly, and then to set behind an almost impenetrable cloud. (Note, 1 Kings 11:42, 43.)

V. 29, 30. It is plain from these verses, that the contemporary prophets were the historians, or annalists, of God's people; and that they left far more copious records of public transactions, both in respect of Israel and the adjacent countries, than have come down to us. (Note, 2 Sam. 23:1.)—Learned men may indeed regret the loss of these histories; but God knows better than we, what was most fit to be preserved for the use and benefit of his church. Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. The due support and scriptural promotion of religion, is always more important, and in many cases more arduous, than the administration of civil government: because the honour of God, and the most essential interests of immortal souls, are concerned in it; compared with which all other interests are trivial. They alone, whom the Lord hath chosen for such a work, will prosper in it; and it is the duty of all to assist by every proper means in their power.—Strong affection to God, and to all that relates to him for his sake, will constrain men to the most disinterested, self-denying, and liberal services; and they will never think that they have done, or can do, enough to promote his glory; but, with all their might, will abound in every good work, and make more and more preparation for the carrying on of the same great and holy design. (Note, 2 Cor. 5:13—15.)—Those who would excite others to consecrate their service to the Lord, either in feeding his poor children, or in spreading his truth and supporting his worship, must set the example: and then a hint from them will go further, than a laboured and eloquent oration from a man, who persuades others to those things, which he himself evidently does not practise.—Our holy joy in God will commonly bear proportion to the willingness, uprightness, and liberality, with which we devote our all to him: and that rejoicing is peculiarly pure and heavenly, which springs from beholding those whom we greatly love, giving evidence of their real devotedness to God, and their delight in his ways. (Notes, Phil. 4:14—20. 1 Thes. 3:6—10. 2 John 4. 3 John 1—4.) The bodily pain and infirmities of age, and the chilling hand of death, while they dispose us for all other enjoyments, or separate us from them, cannot preclude or extinguish this, which emulates that of angels, who "rejoice over one sinner that repenteth."

V. 10—19. Those, who are most "zealous of good works," will never boast of them, or trust in them. Sensible of their indigence as creatures, and conscious of their guilt and defilement as sinners, they will allow that "it is of the Lord's mercies they are not consumed." To them it appears an unspeakable favour, that a holy God will accept any worship or service from such polluted creatures; they know that all their ability of every kind is from him; and they account it their chief pleasure, honour, and privilege to be employed by him, who needs not and cannot be profited by their services. They are conscious that their best needs forgiveness, falls infinitely beneath his glorious majesty, and is utterly unworthy of his acceptance, "whose is the kingdom, and who is exalted as Head above all." "In like manner, we ought to acknowledge God in all spiritual things: referring every good thought, good purpose, good work, to his divine grace, from whom we receive it; beseeching him, as David doth, ... to preserve it in us." Bp. Patrick. Thus our best and most useful works will terminate in admiration of his inconceivable majesty, goodness, power, and holiness; in unfeigned praises and thanksgivings; and in the deepest self-abasement before him. This is genuine grace: but when we are proud of our services, (which we are very prone to be,) what is it, but sacrilegiously to rob God of what belongs to him alone, and sacrifice it to the most hateful of our own lusts? We may indeed "rejoice in the testimony of our consciences," when we have acted with "simplicity and godly sincerity," in the presence of that God who trieth the heart, and hath pleasure in uprightness; (Note, 2 Cor. 1:12—14.) and should joyfully observe the indications of the same disposition in others: but we must remember, that this also is the gift of God, and that we can no more offer the sacrifice of a broken heart, or a thankful heart, than we can present ten thousands of bulls and goats, except as we give unto him his own, which he has previously conferred upon us. All comes from him, and to him belongs "the kingdom, and the power, and the glory for ever."—While we bless the Lord for putting good desires into our hearts, or the hearts of others, we should never forget to pray to him to preserve and fix them there, and to bring them to good effect.—When we feel that there is no abiding for us on earth, but that we are departing as a shadow, and following our fathers, who have been strangers and sojourners before us; we should be peculiarly fervent in our prayers that those who are to succeed us, or whom we consider as having profited by our instructions, may have their "hearts prepared unto the Lord," and disposed for the work to which they are called. Parents and ministers also, when they perceive any of their children or people under serious impressions, should "travail in birth for them till Christ be formed in them," by earnest constant prayer, that "the Lord would keep for ever in the imaginations of the thoughts of their hearts," those good desires which he has excited, "and prepare their hearts unto himself." (Notes, Gal. 4:17—20. Col. 2:1—4.) We should also call upon them to pray and to bless the Lord for themselves; and when our examples prove that we are deeply in earnest in these great concerns, we may hope that our exhortations will have a permanent and most beneficial effect.

V. 20—30. They, who render God the honour due unto his name, will seldom fail duly to respect those, who have been the instruments of his kindness to them, or to honour those whom God has placed in authority over them.—All our obedience and communion with God must have a believing reference to that one great sacrifice, which infinitely more honours his law and justice, than all the oblations which shadowed it forth to ancient believers; thus, peace with him, peace of conscience, and gladness of heart will make sacred ordinances pleasant to us; and even render our ordinary meals subservient to our spiritual improvement and the honour of God; while they are attended with gratitude, temperance, liberality, and a heavenly mind. These are the pleasures and employments which add dignity to prosperity, rank, and eminence for wisdom; which adorn every personal accomplishment, and increase the enjoyment of sprightly youth and vigorous health. These are essential to that royal majesty, which God bestows on those whom he loves: and without these there can be no durable prosperity, honour, comfort, or usefulness. Unless we have some acquaintance with these pious exercises, riches, honour, and prosperity only render "the king of terrors" more tremendous; but these are sufficient to deprive death of his sting: and when we read or hear of one, who has been taken away from the midst of such employments, we readily conceive of his soul, as escaped out of prison, mounting up to heaven, and joining immediately with ineffable delight in the worship of angels. May we "die the death of the righteous, and may our latter end be like his!" Blessed be God, the chief of sinners may hope for such a glorious exit, when brought to repent, and to flee for refuge to the Saviour's atoning blood. Nay, even those who have grievously sinned, after a long profession of godliness, to the triumphing of the wicked, and so as to bring on themselves the most severe and complicated chastisements, may possibly retrieve all; may have their broken bones made to rejoice; may recover "the joy of God's salvation;" may "have their lips opened to show forth his praises, that sinners may be converted unto him;" and may regain the entire confidence of those, who had been the most stumbled by their fall. (Notes, Ps. 51: title. 11—13.) But this cannot be done without deep humiliation before God and man, resigned patience under correction, and redoubled watchfulness and diligence in the Lord's ways. Let us then mark the difference between the spirit and character of the man after God's own heart, living and dying; and those of such worthless professors, as resemble him in nothing but his sin, and who apologize for their crimes by his example. Let us also compare him with those presumptuous cavillers, who profanely carp at the blemishes in illustrious scriptural characters; but never raise their minds to an idea of such exalted excellency, piety, and philanthropy, as David showed. We cannot too closely imitate the general example of this most eminent saint; but let us watch and pray, lest we be overcome by temptation and overtaken with sin, to the dishonour of God, and the wounding of our own consciences: and if we have offended, let us copy his example of repentance and patience, still hoping to close our days like him, and having "served our own generation by the will of God," to fall asleep, with the sure and certain hope of a glorious resurrection, through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ Amen.

CHRONICLES.

THIS book is a continuation of the history begun in the former book. It in some respects coincides with the books of Kings. But here, the histories of Judah and Israel are carried on together; as those of England and Scotland are by some of our historians: here, the affairs of Judah are more fully and distinctly recorded, while those of Israel are only mentioned occasionally, when required by the main subject; as an English historian would sometimes digress concerning the affairs of France or Germany, in elucidating his narrative. 'There are several things contained in this book, of which no mention is made there,' (in Kings,) 'particularly in the history of Jehoshaphat and Hezekiah: and many other things there mentioned, are here more fully and clearly explained, as will be observed in the acts of Abijah, Asa, Joash, and other kings of Judah.' Bp. Patrick.—The history opens with the accession of Solomon, and contains a narrative of the several kings of his race, who reigned in succession, till the Babylonish captivity; and it concludes with an intimation of Cyrus's decree for the restoration of the Jews and the rebuilding of the temple, about four hundred and eighty years after.—Besides the additional practical instruction here afforded, especially in respect of the different effects of piety, or profaneness, in the affairs of nations favoured with revelation; this history throws great light on the prophetic writings, which can by no means be well understood without constantly adverting to it. The prophecies contained in it either were fulfilled soon after they were spoken, or coincide with those before considered: and it is not always easy to determine concerning subsequent scriptural references, whether they relate to this book or to the books of Kings.

CHAPTER I.

Solomon established as king, calls on his nobles and people, to join in sacrificing at Gibeon, 1—6. The Lord appears to him there by night, and allows him to choose what blessing to ask: he asks wisdom, and is promised also riches and honour, 7—12. Solomon's forces, riches, and commerce, 13—17.

⁹ Now, O Lord God, ^q'let thy promise unto David my father be established: for thou hast made me king over a people ^r'like the dust of the earth in multitude.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
The presence and blessing of God gives strength, honour, happiness, and stability; and to whom he has given much, from them he requires the more.—It would be a comely sight to the spiritually minded, to behold kings with their nobles, and the chief estates of their dominions, assembling together for the purposes of religious worship, stirring up each other by the fervency of their devotions, and giving evident demonstrations how generally and deeply their hearts were engaged in the sacred services. Alas! even in Christian countries such scenes are seldom, if ever, exhibited! But the example, the influence, and the exhortations of princes, who greatly fear and love the Lord, and who are eminent for piety and wisdom, may effect very great things; especially when one succeeds to another, walking before God, in the steps of his predecessor; and those, who love the truths and service of God, should unite in praying, not formally, but ferently, for aid in authority; that, being enriched with grace and wisdom, they may become instruments of extensive good to their dominions.—To us the desires of men's hearts can only be known by their habitual conduct; but in themselves they as certainly distinguish characters, as actions do; and if the Lord see that it is in our heart to desire wisdom and grace, more than riches, honour, or pleasure, he will delight to fulfil all our mind. His promises should form the rule and measure of our prayers; and when they respect any important end, they may be pleaded as engaging him to grant all things requisite in order to it.—To know and to do our duty in the station of life assigned us, to the glory of God and the benefit of our connexions in society, requires much wisdom, and is one principal exercise and evidence of it; and if we humbly feel our need of this wisdom, and faithfully ask it of God, he will give it liberally, and not upbraid our former folly. (Note, Jam. 1:5-8.)—Those secular employments, which are commenced by the worship and service of God, are likely to be well managed and to be prosperous; and as he "gives grace and glory; so he will withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly."—But alas! prosperity is always dangerous, because our hearts are extremely deceitful; and it is with great propriety, that we pray, 'in all time of our wealth, . . . Good Lord deliver us,' from pride, ostentation, indolence, self-indulgence, and a worldly mind. Let us then improve our present talent, seek heavenly blessings, and be contented without those great things, which men generally covet, but which commonly prove fatal snares to their souls.

15 Now therefore the wheat, and the barley, the oil, and the wine, ⁱ'which my lord hath spoken of, let him send unto his servants:

16 And ^j'we will cut wood out of Lebanon ^k'as much as thou shalt need; and we will bring it to thee in floats by sea to ^l'Joppa, and thou shalt carry it up to Jerusalem.

Solomon's message to Hiram, (or Hiram,) king of Tyre, than was before given; (Notes, 1 Kings 5:1-11.) and it appears, that he thought it no impropriety to speak freely and particularly on religious subjects, in treating with a heathen prince about secular business. On the contrary, he laboured to give him very high and honourable thoughts of Israel's God, as great above all gods; and as one whom "the heaven of heavens could not contain;" he particularly explained to him his intentions in building a temple to the name of the Lord; viz. that it was to be the stated place of those instituted ordinances, which were required by the law of God, given to Israel; that he might not misapprehend him, as if he supposed that JEHOVAH could be circumscribed in a temple, like the idols of the heathen: and he represented to him his own inability and unworthiness for such a service, except as mercifully assisted and accepted in it, by that gracious God, who had chosen him for the work. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11, 12. The just sentiments contained in these verses, with the pious and benevolent spirit which they breathe, leave no doubt, that Hiram was himself a spiritual worshipper of the true God. (Note, 1 Kings 10:6-9.) 'He . . . owns the God of Israel to be JEHOVAH, the Maker of heaven and earth. . . The Israelites, . . . when they would distinguish him from idols and creatures, . . . confess him to be the Creator of the world. . . V. 14-16. Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Kings 7:14.—My lord David. (14.) An honourable title given by Hiram to David, expressive of his veneration and affection for him: for, probably, he had derived his knowledge of the true God, and them to be bearers of burdens, and fourscore thousand to be hewers in the mountain, and three thousand and six hundred overseers to set the people a-work.

CHAPTER III.

The place of the temple, and the time when the building of it was begun, 1, 2. The dimensions and ornaments, 3-7. Those of the most holy place, 8-10. The cherubim placed in it, 11-13. The veil, 14. The two pillars, 15-17.

THEN ¹Solomon began to build the house of the LORD at Jerusalem in mount Moriah, where the LORD appeared unto David his father, in the place that David had prepared in the thrashing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite.

2 And he began to build in the second day of the second month, in the fourth year of his reign.

3 ¶ Now these are the things wherein Solomon was instructed for the building of the house of God. The length by cubits after the first measure was threescore cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits.

4 And the porch that was in the front of the house, the length of it was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the height was a hundred and twenty: and he overlaid it within with pure gold.

5 And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold, and set thereon palm-trees and chains.

6 And he garnished the house with precious stones for beauty; and the gold was gold of Parvaim.

7 He overlaid also the house, the beams, the posts, and the walls thereof, and the doors thereof, with gold; and he graved cherubims on the walls.

8 ¶ And he made the most holy house, the length whereof was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits: and he overlaid it with fine gold amounting to six hundred talents.

9 And the weight of the nails was fifty shekels of gold. And he overlaid the upper chambers with gold.

10 And in the most holy house he made two cherubims of image-work, and overlaid them with gold.

11 And the wings of the cherubims were twenty cubits long: one wing of the one cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house; and the other wing was likewise five cubits, reaching to the wing of the other cherub.

12 And one wing of the other cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house; and the other wing was five cubits also, joining to the wing of the other cherub.

13 The wings of these cherubims spread themselves forth twenty cubits: and they stood on their feet, and their faces were inward.

14 ¶ And he made the veil of blue, and purple, and crimson, and fine linen, and wrought cherubims thereon.

15 ¶ Also he made before the house two pillars of thirty and five cubits high, and the chapter that was on the top of each of them was five cubits.

16 And he made chains, as in the oracle, and put them on the heads of the pillars; and made a hundred pomegranates, and put them on the chains.

17 And he reared up the pillars before the temple, one on the right hand, and the other on the left; and called the name of that on the right hand Jachin, and the name of that on the left Boaz.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We ought always to attend to the work of God, in decided preference to our own indulgence or accommodation: and our hearts should be resolved for every service, that we may endure hardship, struggle with difficulties, and not yield to weariness or discouragement.—The greatest monarchs on earth are as nothing, in comparison with the God of heaven; and they should deem it their highest honour to be his servants, and to speak of his glorious majesty.—The genuine love of God, abounding in the heart, infuses the savour of piety into the ordinary concerns and converse of life. Indeed, we should be neither afraid nor ashamed, to embrace every opportunity of speaking honourably of him, and of impressing the minds of men with a deep sense of his majesty and excellency, and of the importance of his favour, worship, and service. (Note, Ps. 119:46.)—It is a great part of our wisdom towards them that are without, so to explain our meaning in every doctrine and ordinance, and so to guard our discourses about them, as may best prevent misapprehension or prejudice: and the neglect of this rule is not boldness or faithfulness, as some well-meaning zealots suppose, but indiscretion and folly.—In pleading the cause of God and religion, we should always speak humbly of ourselves; but, unless we be humbled, our temper and conduct will betray the hypocrisy of our self-abasing language. May the Lord himself therefore “clothe us with humility!”—Possessions, endowments, or royal authority, are given men for the sake of others; and a wise and pious king is an evidence of the Lord’s special love to the people. Who then can express the greatness of his love to his people, in giving them his only begotten Son, to be their Prince and Saviour! It is also a great mercy to have children endued with wisdom and understanding; and we should all desire to be blessings to those among whom we live, that they may bless God for us. We ought also to praise him for those blessings which are exclusively bestowed on others: and it is pleasant to observe how the friendship of pious men becomes the means of bringing those who were far off, to know, love, and worship our God and Saviour. Let us then be unwearied in spreading the knowledge of his name and truth; and let us devote our several talents to his service; endeavour to be helpful to one another in this good work; and be thankful that poor heathens, and even the meanest slaves, may be usefully and acceptably employed by our great and gracious Lord!

V. 3, 4. “The first measure” seems to mean the original plan. “He projected the sanctuary, and the oracle, both together; and in their first description they were to be in length sixty cubits: that is, forty for the sanctuary, and twenty for the most holy place.” Bp. Patrick. The height of the porch is not mentioned in Kings; but the description given of the temple, in the exposition, takes in this account. (Notes, 1 Kings 6:2, 3. 1 Chr. 28:11-13, 19.)

V. 6-8. (Marg. Ref.) It is not known on what account the gold here mentioned, is called gold of Parvaim; that word not elsewhere occurring in Scripture: probably it was brought from a place so called.

V. 9. Some by the word rendered “the upper chambers,” suppose the ceiling of the most holy place to be meant; but perhaps some of the upper chambers, on the outside of the temple, were thus decorated; the lower being used for more common purposes. (Notes, 1 Kings 5:5-10.)

V. 10-13. The meaning of the word rendered “image-work,” (10) is not well known; but it implies something highly ornamented.

V. 14-17. Notes, 1 Kings 6:23-28. 7:15-22.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Proper instructions, well understood, enable us to go about our work, without hesitation or uncertainty, and to proceed in it with confidence and comfort. Blessed be God, the sacred Scriptures are sufficient to render “the man of God thoroughly furnished for every good work;” and all our mistakes and embarrassments, in matters of importance, arise from not knowing the Scriptures, or not attending to this our heavenly rule. Let us then search them daily; and beseech the Lord to enable us to understand, believe, remember, and obey his whole word; that our way may be made plain before us. Let us endeavour, that all our works may be begun, continued, and ended in him; let us seek his grace to adorn our souls with the beauties of holiness, and his strength to establish us in faith and steady obedience, and to prosper our labours for his glory. Beholding God in Christ, his true Temple, infinitely more glorious than that of Solomon, may we too become “a spiritual house,” “a habitation of God though the Spirit,” and “a holy priesthood,” that here on earth we may begin to join the worship of cherubim and seraphim before the throne; and at length in his courts above, sing “praises to him, who sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever.”

CHAPTER IV.

The altar of brass, 1. The molten sea supported by twelve oxen, 2-6. The lacera, candlesticks, and tables, 6-8. The two courts of the temple, 9, 10. The vessels, furniture, and instruments of brass, 11-18. Those of gold, 19-22.

MOREOVER, he made an altar of brass, twenty cubits the length thereof, and twenty cubits the breadth thereof; and ten cubits the height thereof.

2 Also he made a molten sea of ten cubits from brim to brim, round in compass, and five cubits the height thereof; and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

3 And under it was the similitude of oxen, which did compass it round about; ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about. Two rows of oxen were cast, when it was cast.

4 It stood upon twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

5 And the thickness of it was an handbreadth, and the brim of it like the work of the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies; and it received and held three thousand baths.

6 He made also ten lavers, and put five on the right hand, and five on the left, to wash in them: such things as they offered for the burnt-offering, they washed in them; but the sea was for the priests to wash in.

7 And he made ten candlesticks of gold according to their form, and set them in the temple, five on the right hand, and five on the left.

8 He made also ten tables, and placed them in the temple, five on the right side, and five on the left; and he made a hundred basins of gold.

9 Furthermore, he made the court of the priests, and the great court, and doors for the court, and overlaid the doors with brass.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1. This altar is not mentioned in the book of Kings. It was four times as long and four times as broad, and above three times as high, as that made by Moses; (Notes, Ex. 27:1-8. Exra 3:2,3. Ex. 43:13-17.) and it formed a scaffold, above eleven yards square, and five yards high.—It might be supposed that the Israelites, now that they were settled, multiplied, and enriched in Canaan, would bring far more numerous sacrifices, than they could have done in the wilderness; and the altar was formed accordingly, to be capable of containing many more. As it was so high, all the worshippers in the most distant parts of the courts of the temple, might behold, and be affected with, this representation of the Lord's wrath against sinners, and his way of showing mercy through the sufferings of the promised Saviour. This was continually shadowed forth, by the innocent animals consumed by the fire which came down from heaven, while the guilty offerers were spared. (Notes, Gen. 4:3-5. Lev. 1:4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The furniture of the temple, compared with that of the tabernacle, plainly instructed God's ancient people, that his church would be gradually enlarged, and his worshippers immensely multiplied: and, blessed be God, in the person, sacrifice, and offices of Christ, there is an abundant sufficiency for any multitudes, however large, who can ever come to the Father through him.—May the preaching of the gospel hold him forth, as crucified for sinners, to all the nations of the earth; and may his Spirit prepare the hearts of all the inhabitants, to welcome his salvation, for all things else are now ready. Whilst we thus pray for others, may we be found humble penitents, by faith beholding Jesus as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world;" may we daily wash our souls, and our services, in that "fountain which he hath opened for sin and for uncleanness;" may we find continual access to the Father, through our heavenly Advocate, and receive continual supplies of his Spirit: may we walk in the light of his word, steadfast upon the provisions of his house, and be "constrained by his love, to live no longer to ourselves, but unto him who died for us and rose again."—Nothing can be too precious to be consecrated to his service; but he will not reject the meanest abilities, the feeblest endeavours, or the most trivial oblations, which are offered in faith and love: yet he requires the very best of our affections and of all we have; and he will much more readily bear with external meanness in our services, than with an insincere heart, however covered with specious and pompous professions and performances. The nearer we approach him in privilege and external worship, the more holy we should be; (Note, Lev. 10:3.) and the nearer we really approach to him in knowledge and communion, the more holy we shall become: till at length faith shall be changed for vision, and we shall be made perfectly and eternally like him, and fitted for the full

CHAPTER V.

The temple is finished, and the dedicated treasures deposited in it, 1. The ark is brought into the most holy place, 2-10. While the Levites sing praises to God, a cloud fills the temple, 11-14.

THUS all the work that Solomon made for the house of the LORD was finished: and Solomon brought in all the things that David his father had dedicated; and the silver, and the gold, and all the instruments, put he among the treasures of the house of God.

2 ¶ Then Solomon assembled the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, the chief of the fathers of the children of Israel, unto Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of the city of David, which is Zion.

3 Wherefore all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto the king in the feast which was in the seventh month.

4 And all the elders of Israel came; and the Levites took up the ark.

5 And they brought up the ark, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle; these did the priests and the Levites bring up.

6 Also king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel that were assembled unto him before the ark, sacrificed sheep and oxen, which could not be told nor numbered for multitude.

7 And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the LORD unto his place, to the oracle of the house, into the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims:

8 For the cherubims spread forth their wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark and the staves thereof above.

9 And they drew out the staves of the ark, that the ends of the staves were seen from the ark before the oracle; but they were not seen without. And there it is unto this day.

10 There was nothing in the ark save the two tables which Moses put therein at Horeb, when the LORD made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of Egypt.

V. 6. (Note, 1 Kings 8:5.) The observation of Victorinus Strigelius upon this history is very pious: That nothing is more lovely in human things than such concord, as here appeared among all orders of men; both of teachers and learners, magistrates, soldiers, and people, who were all combined to promote the honour and service of God. Such unity ought to be studied by Christian people, that we may be all one, as our Saviour prayed. Bp. Patrick.

V. 7-10. Note, 1 Kings 8:7-9.—Unto this day. (9) That is, The day when these events were recorded; not the day when these extracts were made, after the captivity.

V. 11. So great a multitude of sacrifices were to be offered on this occasion, that the whole body of the priests, who were capable of service, were employed at once; and not only those who attended in their courses.

V. 12, 13. (Marg. Ref.) These particulars are not mentioned in Kings. (Notes, Lev. 23:24-25. Num. 10:2-10. Josh. 6:3-16. 1 Chr. 15:17-24. 16:4-6. 25:1-6.)—It is remarkable, that the Lord took possession of his temple by the cloud, at the moment when, with one consent, the Levites were singing the praises of his everlasting goodness and mercy. (Notes, 7:1-3. 20:21-25. Ezra 3:8-11. Ps. 136: 1-3. Jer. 33:10, 11.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The gracious presence of God renders his ordinances far more glorious, and is more essential to their efficacy, than any conceivable external order or magnificence: and he is as really present with two or three humble worshippers in a 11 ¶ And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place; (for all the priests that were present were sanctified, and did not then wait by course:

12 Also the Levites which were the singers, all of them of Asaph, of Heman, of Jeduthun, with their sons and their brethren, being arrayed in white linen, having cymbals, and psalteries, and harps, stood at the east end of the altar, and with them a hundred and twenty priests sounding with trumpets;)

13 It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the LORD, and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets, and cymbals, and instruments of music, and praised the LORD, saying, For he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: that when the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the LORD;

14 So that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud: for the glory of the LORD had filled the house of God.

CHAPTER VI.

Solomon blesses the people, and praises God, 1-11. His prayer at the dedication of the temple, 12-39. He concludes by earnestly entreating the Lord's special presence and blessing, 40-42.

THEN said Solomon, The LORD hath said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.

2 But I have built a house of habitation for thee, and a place for thy dwelling for ever.

3 And the king turned his face and blessed the whole congregation of Israel: and all the congregation of Israel stood.

4 And he said, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, who hath with his hands fulfilled that which he spake with his mouth to my father David, saying,

5 Since the day that I brought forth my people out of the land of Egypt, I chose no city among all the tribes of Israel to build a house in, that my name might be there; neither chose I any man to be a ruler over my people Israel:

mean and obscure corner, as with tens of thousands assembled with every possible accommodation, or every kind of solemn grandeur and magnificence. (Notes, Matt. 18:19, 20. John 4:21-24.) Yet, on some occasions, the concurrence of vast multitudes, under the direction of pious princes, has been made extensively useful to mankind, and greatly honourable to God and honoured by him.—The eye of our faith must, in every service, be primarily directed to the atoning sacrifice of Christ: but in subordination to it, our sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving are peculiarly well pleasing unto God; if the harmony of our voices, or musical instruments, is really accompanied with the sweet melody of a humble and grateful heart.—All the divine perfections are glorious in themselves: but the Lord's goodness and ever enduring mercy are peculiarly endearing to the broken-hearted, humble penitent; and he especially delights in the exercise and in the glory of his mercy, in harmony with his wisdom, truth, and justice, through the merits of the Saviour. This should encourage all who feel their need of abounding mercy; being conscious that their sins have greatly abounded.—The ministers of God should always be ready, both in body and soul, for every service, ordinary or extraordinary: and it has a very unfavourable appearance, even in the eyes of men in general, when they manifest an unwillingness, or even backwardness, to exceed that measure, which entitles them to their emoluments. (Note, Mal. 1:9-11.)—When the worshippers of God are of one mind, as well as in one place, they may expect his more immediate presence and blessing: if he take possession of our hearts to sanctify them, he will exclude whatever interferes with his design of filling them with his glory; and though darkness now rests upon our views of heavenly things, yet, in the temple above, the Lord himself will be our everlasting Light—and we shall know even as we are known. (Notes, Rev. 21:22-27. 22:2-5.) May he prepare us for that land of perfect knowledge, purity, and felicity!

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1-3. Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Kings 8:10-14.

6 But I have ¹chosen Jerusalem, that my name might be there; and have ²chosen David to be over my people Israel.

7 Now ³it was in the heart of David my father to build a house for the name of the LORD God of Israel:

8 But the LORD said to David my father, Forasmuch as it was in thy heart to build a house for my name, ⁴thou didst well in that it was in thy heart.

9 Notwithstanding, thou shalt not build the house; but ⁵thy son, which shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house for my name.

10 The LORD therefore hath ⁶performed his word that he hath spoken; for ⁷I am risen up in the room of David my father, and am set on the throne of Israel, ⁸as the LORD promised, and have built the house for the name of the LORD God of Israel:

11 And in it have ⁹I put the ark, wherein is the covenant of the LORD, that he made with the children of Israel.

12 ¹⁰And ¹¹the stood before the altar of the LORD, in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and ¹²spread forth his hands,

13 (For Solomon had made a brazen ¹³scaffold, of five cubits long, and five cubits broad, and three cubits high, and had set it in the midst of ¹⁴the court; and upon it he stood, and ¹⁵kneeled down upon his knees before all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven.)

14 And said, ¹⁶O LORD God of Israel, there is no god like thee in the heaven, nor in the earth; which ¹⁷keepest covenant, and ¹⁸showest ¹⁹mercy unto thy servants that ²⁰walk before thee with all their hearts:

15 Thou which hast kept with thy servant David my father that which thou hast promised him; and ²¹spakest with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thy hand, as ²²it is this day.

16 Now therefore, O LORD God of Israel, ²³keep with thy servant David my father, that which thou hast promised him, ²⁴saying, ²⁵There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit upon the throne of Israel; yet so that thy children take heed to their way ²⁶to walk in my law, as thou hast walked before me.

17 Now then, ²⁷O LORD God of Israel, ²⁸let thy word be verified, which thou hast spoken unto thy servant David.

18 But ²⁹will God in very deed dwell with men on the earth? Behold, ³⁰heaven, and the heaven of heavens, cannot contain thee: ³¹how much less this house which I have built!

19 ³²Have respect therefore to the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, ³³O LORD my God, ³⁴to hearken unto the cry and the prayer which thy servant prayeth before thee:

mighty hand, and thy stretched-out arm; if they come and pray in this house;

33 Then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling-place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for; that all people of the earth may know thy name, and fear thee, as doth thy people Israel, and may know that this house which I have built is called by thy name.

34 ¶ If thy people go out to war against their enemies by the way that thou shalt send them, and they pray unto thee toward this city which thou hast chosen, and the house which I have built for thy name;

35 Then hear thou from the heavens their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their cause.

36 ¶ If they sin against thee, (for there is no man which sinneth not,) and thou be angry with them, and deliver them over before their enemies, and they carry them away captives unto a land far off or near;

37 Yet if they bethink themselves in the land whither they are carried captive, and turn and pray unto thee in the land of their captivity,

V. 41, 42. These concluding words are not in the book of Kings; but are taken, with some variation, from the hundred and thirty-second Psalm, which probably was composed with reference to the removal of the ark at this time. (Notes, Ps. 132:1, 7-9.)—The temple was called the resting place of the ark, because it there had a permanent settlement. The temple likewise typified the human nature of Christ, "in whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily;" the ark typified his meritorious obedience and sufferings, by which the holy law was magnified, and through which believing sinners approach, and hold communion with a reconciled God. The ark, the sacramental pledge of JEHOVAH's strength engaged for Israel's help, would not avail without his actual presence. This might be expected, and indeed would be visible in its effects, if "his priests were clothed with salvation," or righteousness. If they were partakers of salvation in their souls, and brought forth the fruits of it in their holy lives and conversation; then, their example, instructions, and ministrations, would be greatly blessed, and made very successful. Those who, as penitent believers, have obtained mercy, and are separated from the love and spirit of the world, by the influences of the sanctifying Spirit of God, are saints. Their edification, comfort, and joy, in subserviency to the glory of God, and in connexion with the conversion of sinners, form the great object of religious ordinances; and the faith and piety of ministers, the purity and solemnity of their services, and the flourishing of true religion, cause them "to rejoice in goodness," even the goodness of the Lord; by enlarging and gratifying all their holy, pious, and benevolent affections.—These seem, therefore, the blessings peculiarly intended; though the outward protection and prosperity, of both priests and people, were also implied.—Solomon further prayed, that God would not reject his prayer, which he made for a blessing on that work to which he had called him, and for which he had caused him to be "anointed;" for that would be "to turn away his face," and to send him away ashamed and discouraged. But in this, he was a type of, and probably had reference to, the promised Messiah. He also entreated the Lord, to remember the mercies which he had promised to David, and through him to his people and posterity; and to continue and perfect them. This also may be applied to the mercies of our Lord Jesus Christ and of God the Father through him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-17. It is a great mercy to be enabled to go through important services to the church, in simple obedience, and in dependence on the Lord; and to witness the accomplishment of them, with humble gratitude to the Giver of both the will, the ability, and the success; adoring his power, faithfulness, and goodness in every part of it, without expressing self-importance or self-complacency. For pride and ostentation, if allowed to intrude, rob God of his glory, and mar the acceptance, or the comfort, of the most useful and excellent undertakings. Here then the main guard should be placed, by those who are employed as instruments for the good of others:

saying, 'We have sinned, we have done amiss and have dealt wickedly:'

38 If they return to thee with all their heart and with all their soul, in the land of their captivity, whither they have carried them captives, and pray toward their land which thou gavest unto their fathers, and toward the city which thou hast chosen, and toward the house which I have built for thy name;

39 Then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling-place, their prayer and their supplications, and maintain their cause, and forgive thy people which have sinned against thee.

40 Now, my God, let, I beseech thee, thine eyes be open, and let thine ears be attent unto the prayer that is made in this place.

41 Now therefore arise, O Lord God, into thy resting place, thou, and the ark of thy strength: let thy priests, O Lord God, be clothed with salvation, and let thy saints rejoice in goodness.

42 O Lord God, turn not away the face of thine anointed: remember the mercies of David thy servant.

this, this above all the rest, should dictate their constant prayers; and all, who wish success to their attempts, should join in prayer for them, that they may be kept humble, and rendered more and more humble, in proportion as they are honoured by God for usefulness.—When a good work is well finished, it is not done with: when the sermon is preached, the letter written, or the book sent to the press, or even well received by the public, its real utility depends on the Lord's subsequent effectual blessing. It ought therefore to be dedicated to him, committed to his hands, and his blessing sought upon it; and in this case we may confidently expect, that the fruit, which by his grace we have produced, will remain for the durable good of many, when we are gone to our home, "the rest reserved for the people of God." (Note, Ec. 12:2-7.)

V. 18-42. The more we know of God and religion, spiritually and experimentally, the more humbly we shall think of ourselves and of all our performances; the more reverentially we shall adore the infinitely glorious God, and the more entirely we shall trust to his covenant of mercy and grace, made with believing sinners in Jesus Christ.—We may and ought, unworthy as we are, to expect large answers to all our prayers, which we present for ourselves and others, through the Saviour's intercession. They are greatly favoured who have pious friends to pray for them; and it is an inestimable mercy for us all, that "we have an Advocate with the Father Jesus Christ the righteous," who is "the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only; but for the sins of the whole world." (Note, 1 John 2:1, 2.) Yet this will not prevent the destruction of any who never pray for themselves; not that the Saviour pleads in vain, but that the event shows he does not intercede for them. (Notes, John 10-10, 21.)—In times of prosperity, personal or public, we should expect adversity, and pray with reference to it; and in seasons of deep distress and temptation, we ought still to hope and pray for deliverance and comfort.—Blessed be God, sinners of every description, when they bethink themselves, and humbly pour out their prayers, in dependence on the Saviour's merits, may be assured of forgiveness, acceptance, and all the blessings of salvation.—JEHOVAH has made our nature his resting place for ever, in the person of Emmanuel; and through him he dwells and delights in his church of redeemed sinners. May all his ministers, of every name, be clothed with righteousness and salvation; may all his saints be made joyful in his goodness; may the numbers of both be continually increasing, till the boundaries of his church extend as wide as those of the human species! May the hearts of the writer and of every reader become his resting place; may Christ dwell in us by faith, casting out every idol, cleansing us from all filthiness, consecrating us as his temples, and shedding abroad his love in us: may the Father look upon us, in and through his Anointed, whose face he never turns away, and whose petitions meet with no repulse; and may he remember and bless us in all things, according to his mercies to sinners through him. Amen.

B. C.] AND it came to pass ^{at the end of 992.} twenty years, wherein Solomon had built the house of the LORD, and his own house,

2 That the cities which Hiram had restored to Solomon, Solomon built them, and caused the children of Israel to dwell there.

3 And Solomon went to Hamath-zobah, and prevailed against it.

4 And he built Tadmor in the wilderness, and all the store-cities, which he built in Hamath.

5 Also he built Beth-horon the upper, and Beth-horon the nether, fenced cities, with walls, gates, and bars;

6 And Baalath, and all the store-cities that Solomon had, and all the chariot-cities, and the cities of the horsemen, and all that Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, and in Lebanon, and throughout all the land of his dominion.

7 As for all the people that were left of the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which were not of Israel,

8 But of their children who were left after them in the land, whom the children of Israel consumed not, them did Solomon make to pay tribute until this day.

9 But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no servants for his work; but they were men of war, and chief of his captains, and captains of his chariots, and horsemen.

10 And these were the chief of king Solomon's officers, even two hundred and fifty, that bare rule over the people.

faith, the divine Saviour agonizing and dying for man's sin, will, by that view, find his godly sorrow enlarged, his hatred of sin increased, his soul made more watchful, and his life more holy; and they are speculating hypocrites, who profess to expect salvation by the cross of Christ, while the world has their hearts, and sin is allowed in their habitual conduct.

—The Lord's ready answers to our prayers should animate us to repeat, with deeper reverence and more lively gratitude, our praises of his mercy.—The most endearing displays of the love of God, rightly understood, speak terror to hypocrites and presumptuous offenders; but the most tremendous discoveries of his righteous vengeance need not discourage the upright, humble believer.—Every token of his favour should enlarge our hearts in his service: and those who are inspired with zeal for his glory, and who taste the joy of his salvation, will never think too much time or expense can be bestowed in communion with him and his saints, provided other duties be not neglected.—In the best state of nations favoured with revelation, there has hitherto been a succession of prosperity, ingratitude, corrections, repentance, forgiveness, renewed mercies and prosperity, and renewed ingratitude and forgetfulness of God. Yet the Lord delights in those places, where his ordinances are maintained and attended on, in some measure of purity and consistency. But in cases of apostasy, or general profaneness, or hypocrisy, he will glorify his justice by tremendous judgments upon those who have thus abused his mercies, and forfeited their privileges, making them a warning to others, if not an infamy among the heathen. Let us then stand in awe of him; watch against all sin; and copy the examples of the most approved of his saints, in the brightest parts of their characters.

11 ¶ And Solomon brought up the daughter of Pharaoh out of the city of David, unto the house that he had built for her: for he said, My wife shall not dwell in the house of David king of Israel, because the places are holy, whereunto the ark of the LORD hath come.

12 ¶ Then Solomon offered burnt-offerings unto the LORD on the altar of the LORD, which he had built before the porch, 13 Even after a certain rate every day, offering according to the commandment of Moses, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the solemn feasts, three times in the year, even in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles.

14 ¶ And he appointed, according to the order of David his father, the courses of the priests to their service, and the Levites to their charges, to praise and minister before the priests, as the duty of every day required: the porters also by their courses at every gate; for so had David the man of God commanded.

15 And they departed not from the commandment of the king unto the priests and Levites concerning any matter, or concerning the treasures.

16 Now all the work of Solomon was prepared unto the day of the foundation of the house of the LORD, and until it was finished. So the house of the LORD was perfected.

17 ¶ Then went Solomon to Ezion-geber, and to Elath, at the seaside, in the land of Edom.

18 And Hiram sent him, by the hands of his servants, ships, and servants that had knowledge of the sea; and they went with the servants of Solomon to Ophir, and took thence four hundred and fifty talents of gold, and brought them to king Solomon.

profaneness in her court, there might be many things inconsistent with spiritual religion; and Solomon did not think it right, that she should reside where the ark had been situated, and so near to the continual temple-worship. Perhaps he wanted resolution wholly to suppress all that he did not entirely approve.

V. 12-15. Solomon exactly adhered, both to the law of Moses, and also to all David's regulations: not only because he was his father, but because he was "a man of God," and acted by his authority in forming them. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Chr. 23:26.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Some difficulty or conflict must be expected in every state on earth; but those whom the Lord loveth, will prevail; and in heaven their peace will be perfect and eternal.—We shall never be satisfied with our possessions, enjoyments, or achievements, unless we limit our desires by the precept and the providence of God: yet he indulges his people in things indifferent, as far as this is consistent with their real good.—His 'service is perfect freedom;' all else is bondage; but if we, poor condemned criminals and strangers, are brought nigh, pardoned, and employed by our merciful Lord, we shall surely render him our tribute of praise and grateful obedience, though the lowest and most laborious service in his house be allotted to us.—It is hard to keep up a proper distinction between things sacred and common, in the palaces of the great, or in the courts of kings; and it sometimes requires more wisdom and resolution to govern a large family in the fear of God, without conniving at evident evil, than it does to govern a large kingdom with reputation, and in prosperity; (Note, 1 Tim. 3:4, 5.) and the difficulty is increased, when by any means a man has got a hindrance, instead of a helper, in the wife of his bosom. But the truths, worship, and honour of God, should be nearer our hearts than any relative comforts: and we ought to offend or grieve any one, rather than

The extent and wealth of his dominions, 26-28. He dies, and is succeeded by Rehoboam, 29-31.

AND when the queen of ^bSheba heard of ^athe fame of Solomon, she came to prove Solomon ^dwith hard questions at Jerusalem, with a very great company, and ^ecamels that bare spices, and gold in abundance, and precious stones: and when she was come to Solomon, ^eshe communed with him of all that was in her heart.

2 And Solomon ^btold her all her questions: and ^cthere was nothing hid from Solomon which he told her not.

3 And when the queen of Sheba had ^bseen the wisdom of Solomon, and ^cthe house that he had built,

4 And ^athe meat of his table, and ^athe sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel; and his ^acup-bearers also, and their apparel; and ^athis ascent by which he went up into the house of the LORD; ^athere was no more spirit in her.

5 And she said to the king, It was a true report which I heard in mine own land of thine acts, and of thy wisdom:

6 Howbeit ^aI believed not their words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen ^ait: and behold, ^athe one half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me: for thou exceedest the fame that I heard.

7 Happy are thy men, and happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and hear thy wisdom.

8 Blessed be the LORD thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on his throne, to be king for the LORD thy God: because thy God loved Israel, to establish them for ever, therefore made he thee king over them, to do judgment and justice.

9 And ^ashe gave the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold, and ^bof spices great abundance, and precious stones: hebra was there any such spice, as the queen of Sheba gave king Solomon.

10 And the servants also of Huram, and the servants of Solomon, which brought gold from Ophir, brought ^aalgum-trees and precious stones.

11 And the king made ^aof the algum-trees

^aterraces to the house of the LORD, and to the king's palace, and ^alamps, and psalteries for singers: and there were none such seen before in the land of Judah.

12 And king Solomon gave to the queen of Sheba, ^aall her desire, whatsoever she asked, besides ^athat which she had brought unto the king. So she turned, and went away to her own land, she and her servants.

13 ^aNow ^athe weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred and three score and six talents of gold:

14 Besides ^athat which chapmen and merchants brought. And all the kings of Arabia, and ^agovernors of the country brought gold and silver to Solomon.

15 ^aAnd king Solomon made ^atwo hundred targets of beaten gold: six hundred shekels of beaten gold went to one target.

16 And three hundred shields ^amade he of beaten gold: three hundred shekels of gold went to one shield. And the king put them ^ain the house of the forest of Lebanon.

17 ^aMoreover, the king made ^aa great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with pure gold.

18 And ^athere were six steps to the throne, with a footstool of gold, ^awhich were fastened to the throne, and ^astays on each side of the sitting place, and ^atwo lions standing by the stays:

19 And ^atwelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps. There was not the like made in any kingdom.

20 ^aAnd all ^athe drinking vessels of king Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of ^apure gold: ^anone were of silver; ^ait was not any thing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

21 For the king's ships went to ^aTarshish with the servants of Huram: every three years once came the ships of Tarshish bringing gold, and silver, ^aivory, and apes, and ^apeacocks.

22 And king Solomon ^apassed all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom.

23 ^aAnd all the kings of the earth ^asought the presence of Solomon, to hear his wisdom, that ^aGod had put in his heart.

24 And they brought ^aevery man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and raiment, harness, and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year.

disobey God and grieve his people, by allowing his ordinances to be profaned.—In all things, which are expressly directed in Scripture, our religious diligence should be exactly regulated by it: every part of the Lord's service should be attended to, in due succession, order, and proportion; and then we should not find any vacant time lie heavy upon our hands.—In beginning and conducting every undertaking, we should keep the end in view: and from our entrance upon life we should look forward, and be preparing for the close of it; that then we may have peace, and a happy entrance into a better state. Nor ought we to allow ourselves in any pursuit or indulgence, which interferes with that grand object. Thus, "known unto the Lord are all his works from before the foundation of the world;" every thing respecting his spiritual temple was planned and determined, before he began to work; and "his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure."—As men risk much, and undergo great hardship, in obtaining an earthly treasure; may we remember "how much better wisdom is than gold;" and, leaving the children of this world to contend for its toys; may we, as the children of God, "lay up our treasure in heaven, that where our treasure is, there our hearts may be also."

service of God. For our Saviour saith, she came to hear "the wisdom of Solomon," and should therefore rise up in judgment against that generation, which would not learn of him. And in 1 Kings 10:1, it is said, the fame that she heard of Solomon was "concerning the name of the Lord," which moved her to this journey.' *Bp. V. 13-21. Notes, 1 Kings 10:14-22.—Apes, &c. (21) The imports here mentioned indicate, that prosperity had enervated the minds of Solomon and his subjects, and led them to love things curious and uncommon, though useless in themselves: and indeed the East Indian trade has helped to render every nation luxurious and self-indulgent, which has prospered in it, from the beginning to this day.

28 And they brought unto Solomon horses out of Egypt, and out of all lands.

Rehoboam, rejecting the advice of his father's counsellors, and consulting with the young men, answer a very ruinous, 6-15. The ten tribes revolt, kill Hadadram, and drive away Rehoboam, 16-19.

AND Rehoboam went to Shechem: for to Shechem were all Israel come to make him king.

2 And it came to pass, when Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was in Egypt, whither he had fled from the presence of Solomon the king, heard it, that Jeroboam returned out of Egypt.

3 And they sent and called him. So Jeroboam and all Israel came, and spake to Rehoboam, saying,

4 Thy father made our yoke grievous: now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude of thy father, and his heavy yoke that he put upon us, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, Come again unto me after three days. And the people departed.

6 ¶ And king Rehoboam took counsel with the old men that had stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, saying, What counsel give ye me to return answer to this people?

7 And they spake unto him, saying, If thou be kind to this people, and please them, and speak good words to them, they will be thy servants for ever.

8 But he forsook the counsel which the old men gave him, and took counsel with the young men that were brought up with him, that stood before him.

9 And he said unto them, What advice give ye that we may return answer to this people, which have spoken to me, saying, Ease somewhat the yoke that thy father did put upon us?

10 And the young men that were brought up with him, spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou answer the people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it somewhat lighter for us; thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

11 For whereas my father put a heavy yoke upon you, I will put more to your yoke: my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

12 So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam on the third day, as the king bade, saying, Come again to me on the third day.

13 And the king answered them roughly; and king Rehoboam forsook the counsel of the old men, 14 And answered them after the advice of the young men, saying, My father made your yoke heavy, but I will add thereto: my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 So the king hearkened not unto the people: for the cause was of God, that the Lord might perform his word, which he spake by the hand of Ahijah the Shilonite to Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16 ¶ And when all Israel saw that the king would not hearken unto them, the people answered the king, saying, What portion have we in David? and we have none inheritance in the son of Jesse: every man to your tents, O Israel: and now, David, see to thine own house. So all Israel went to their tents.

17 But as for the children of Israel that dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then king Rehoboam sent Hadoram, that was over the tribute; and the children of Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. But king Rehoboam made speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.

In the book, &c. (29.) It appears by this, that the prophets ... were also historians, who gave an account of what passed in their times: out of whose work this short history was extracted. . . These three did not join to make one book, but severally and distinctly gave an account of such things as occurred to their knowledge; out of which, it is probable, Ezra took many things which he hath supplied in this book. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In proportion as we possess true wisdom, we shall perceive its excellency, and labour to obtain an increase of it: and in the same proportion we shall become more indifferent about worldly wealth, and more liberal in our use of it to good purposes, if God has bestowed it upon us. For true wisdom and happiness are inseparably combined: but no such alliance is formed between riches and the enjoy even of this present life. (Note, Luke 12:15-21.) It is therefore far more desirable to be connected with those who can teach us wisdom, than with those who can give us wealth: let us then acquaint ourselves with the divine Saviour, that, becoming his disciples and servants, we may "find rest for our souls;"

and we shall in that case see more glory, experience more pleasure, and appropriate more riches, than our hearts can previously conceive. He will and can "do for us exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think;" and the meanness of his servants will be great above all the ungodly princes of the earth: nor can they be separated from him though, while present with the body they are absent from the Lord, as to the full and immediate enjoyment of his presence and communion with him. Next to this, let us value the acquaintance of those who love and serve him, that we may hear the wisdom that "God hath put into their hearts;" and let us follow them as far as they follow Christ, but no further, whatever may be their reputation in the church.—Seeing God buries in the depth of the sea the sins of his believing servants, we should be tender of their reputations, as well as careful to avoid their mistakes and faults.—As to worldly grandeur, what is it, that we should covet it? Neither authority, wealth, magnificence, nor reputation for wisdom, can ward off the stroke of death, or prepare us for it, or reconcile us to it. But "thanks be to God, who giveth victory" to the true believer, even over this dreadful enemy, through Jesus Christ our Lord!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The wisest of mere men in some things act imprudently, especially when, by sin, they provoke God to leave them to themselves: nay, the most equitable princes may be betrayed into partial, oppressive, or unwarrantable measures; and this is the general consequence of being drawn, by their favourites, or their passions, into lavish expenses. Thus, some cause of complaint must exist in every kingdom, of which turbulent and ambitious men will avail themselves. (Note, 2 Sam. 15: 1-6. P. O. 1-12.) For, while we all need so many allowances for ourselves, we are naturally indisposed to make allowances for others. Indeed, very many would be dissatisfied, even if God were to place over them perfectly wise and righteous governors: for do they not murmur against his own most righteous dispensations? Do they not regard his holy law as a heavy yoke, a grievous servitude? and are not they ungrateful for his manifold goodness? Nay, the very kingdom of the Prince of peace, though his throne is established in mercy, does not give satisfaction. Numbers "I will not have him to reign over them;" numbers of his professed subjects neglect his service because they think him an austere Lord; numbers renounce their professed subjection to him, and prefer the yoke of sin and Satan; and alas! the impatience, the negligence, the reluctance to his service, which most if not all Christians at some times discover, evince that they want somewhat to be eased even of his yoke. Yet, his wisdom, righteousness, truth, goodness, and mercy are infinite; "his yoke is easy and his burden light;" and the whole blame of our uneasiness rests upon ourselves alone. This reflection should teach us to "abhor ourselves," and to pray continually, "Turn thou me, and so shall I be turned." And, being so culpable ourselves, we should learn to bear with the perverseness of others, and to prefer lenient to violent measures; and experienced to inexperienced counsellors. But nothing manifests greater folly than affronting, menacing language, when united with indecision and weakness in perilous circumstances.—No man can bequeath his prosperity, any more than his wisdom, to his heirs: though our children will generally be affected by our conduct. Let us then seek those good things which will be our own for ever; and implore the blessing of God upon our posterity, in preference to wealth or worldly exaltation: let us lay our account with vicissitudes and vexations on earth, and with fickleness and ingratitude from man: and let us learn to depend on the power, faithfulness, and love of that God, who, in correcting his children, or punishing his enemies, will never fail of performing his largest promises to those who trust in him.

NOTES.—CHAP. XI. V. 1-4. Note, 1 Kings 12:21-24.

V. 5-12. (Marg. Ref.) The Lord did not permit Rehoboam to wage war against the newly erected kingdom of Israel; yet it was allowable and prudent for him to take all proper measures, for the defence of his remaining dominions: this he did by repairing and fortifying several cities, to obstruct the entrance, or retard the progress, of Jeroboam and his troops, in case he should attempt an invasion.—Perhaps he was become weary of his young counsellors, and 11 And he fortified the strong-holds, and put captains in them, and store of victual, and of oil and wine.

12 And in every several city he put shields and spears, and made them exceeding strong, having Judah and Benjamin on his side.

13 ¶ And the priests and the Levites that were in all Israel resorted to him out of all their coasts.

14 (For the Levites left their suburbs and their possession, and came to Judah and Jerusalem: for Jeroboam and his sons had cast them off from executing the priest's office unto the LORD.)

15 And he ordained him priests for the high places, and for the devils, and for the calves which he had made.)

16 And after them, out of all the tribes of Israel, such as set their hearts to seek the LORD God of Israel came to Jerusalem, to sacrifice unto the LORD God of their fathers.

17 So they strengthened the kingdom of Judah, and made Rehoboam the son of Solomon strong, disposed to hearken to more safe advisers: and his remaining subjects were very hearty and united in his interests.—Etam (6) belonged to Simeon, (1 Chr. 4:32.) and Zorah and Aijalon (10) to Dan. (Josh. 19:40-42.) So that some cities of the other tribes, beside Judah and Benjamin, remained under the government of Rehoboam.

V. 13-17. When Jeroboam had established the worship of the golden calves, in order to prevent his subjects from going to Jerusalem; (Notes, 1 Kings 12:25-33.) it is probable, that all the priests and Levites unanimously protested against his idolatry; and were therefore laid aside, to make way for a more compliant priesthood. As Jeroboam established no other idolatry than that of the calves; the language here employed teaches us, that the worship paid to them was actually rendered to devils; though he professed, and probably intended, by them to worship the God of Israel. For it was in a way which he had expressly prohibited, and which was infinitely dishonourable to him; and therefore it was acceptable to Satan alone, and his detestable associates in rebellion. (Note, Lev. 17:3-7, v. 7.)—The word rendered devils, in the texts of the New Testament referred to, is δαίμων demon; (Marg. Ref. e.) which often in heathen writers, has a good sense; that is, it is used for the objects of their worship: but these were evil spirits; and the word has always a bad meaning in Scripture, and denotes abominable idols, and evil spirits as worshipped under their names. Holy angels are never called demons.—It is not certain whether Jeroboam had deprived the priests and Levites of their dues, to maintain his new priesthood: but it seems, that for the present, they might have retained their cities, suburbs, and possessions, if they would have remained inactive; yet, their situation would have been extremely ensnaring and perilous, and it afforded them little or no prospect of usefulness. In the days of David and Solomon, they had become generally attached to the worship of God at the sanctuary, as well as to the royal family of Judah: and, as a body, they seem to have been more pious and zealous, than at any other period: they therefore magnanimously determined, with one consent, to desert their cities and possessions, and entirely to leave the apostate Israelites, thus "shaking off the very dust of their feet for a testimony against them."—Jeroboam probably was glad to be rid of them: but they were cordially welcomed by the king and people of Judah; and doubtless were provided for among their brethren, whose emoluments must thus have been greatly reduced. It is probable, that scarcely any either of the priests or Levites remained behind on this occasion, for we read nothing of them in the subsequent history of Israel. This must be allowed to have been as noble a testimony for the cause of God, against apostates and idolaters, as any history has recorded of a whole body of professed ministers.—Along with them numbers of the pious Israelites left their estates, and came to unite with the tribes of Judah and Benjamin. They might bring away with them many of their effects: and, as the land afforded room enough for them, their numbers and treasures greatly strengthened the kingdom of Judah, and rendered it almost equal in force to that of Israel. But the chief advantage was, that nearly all the true religion of the nation was concentrated in that divi-

16 ¶ And Rehoboam took him Mahalath the daughter of Jerimoth the son of David to wife, and Abihai the daughter of Eliab the son of Jesse:

20 And after her he took Maachah the daughter of Absalom: which bare him Abijah, and Attai, and Ziza, and Shelomith.

21 And Rehoboam loved Maachah the daughter of Absalom above all his wives and his concubines: (for he took eighteen wives, and three-score concubines; and begat twenty and eight sons, and three-score daughters.)

22 And Rehoboam made Abijah the son of Maachah the chief, to be ruler among his brethren: for he thought to make him king.

sion of it. Accordingly, for three years the kingdom of Judah was greatly strengthened; while the king and the people in general adhered to the worship of God, as in the days of David, and in the best times of Solomon; but afterwards matters took another turn.—It is not probable, that Solomon would have been thus joined with David, as the good pattern which Rehoboam and his subjects followed, if he had persevered and perished in his apostasy.

Jeroboam and his sons. (14) 'His sons were his principal counsellors, and assistants in the change he made in religion.'

Bp. Patrick.

V. 18-21. Rehoboam imitated his father in multiplying wives, but not to the same enormous excess: and he does not appear to have married any heathen women.

Daughter of Eliab. (18) Eliab was David's eldest brother; yet more than eighty years had elapsed, since David, at the age of thirty, began to reign. Abihai must, therefore, have been granddaughter, or great granddaughter to Eliab, and this shows the latitude in which the words son and daughter are used in Scripture, for a descendant, even after several intervening generations. (Note, Ruth 4:18-22.)

The daughter of Absalom. (20) It is said of Abijah, that 'his mother's name was Michaiah the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah.' (13:2.) Gibeah belonged to Benjamin, and probably Absalom, here mentioned, was a Benjamite. (Note, 1 Kings 15:1-3.)

V. 22, 23. Rehoboam acted from partial affection, and by his own authority, in advancing Abijah above his elder brethren; whereas, God himself chose Solomon to be king in preference to David's other sons. (Note, 1 Chr. 29:1.) It is probable, that Rehoboam's conduct gave umbrage to his other sons; and that he dispersed them, in the fenced cities, in honourable and affluent situations, to prevent their uniting against Abijah: but perhaps he also confided in them to retain these cities in their duty, and to defend them against the common enemy. Whatever were his motive, it was deemed good policy by his contemporaries.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is commonly more prudent to manage moderate possessions well, than to risk losing them by grasping at greater advantages: and when an egregious error has exposed us to some heavy loss, it is generally wisest to sit down by it, lest we be betrayed into still more fatal mistakes.—It is in vain to contend with the purpose of God, when he makes it known unto us; and, as his word declares that none shall enjoy durable peace in the practice of wickedness, it is madness to expect it; yet, by this rule of judgment, what a world of madness and folly do we live in!—Even those who are destitute of true faith and grace, frequently pay some regard to the word of God, and, for a time, are restrained by it from actions, to which they are inclined, and do many things which are disagreeable to them: and even this temporary faith, and external obedience, are often recompensed with temporary and external advantages.—In seasons of prevailing ungodliness and public disturbances, the ministers of religion will be exposed to peculiar trials; as they must either act contrary to their consciences or expose themselves to great loss and peril. This is the time, when God puts the sincerity of their faith and love to the proof: on these great occasions, he peculiarly calls upon them to bear testimony to his truth, and to protest at all events, against enormous evils, by whom whomsoever patronised. As connivance and silence in such a case are very criminal: so it is peculiarly honourable to God, and convincing to the consciences of men, when they readily renounce their secular interests, and stand up boldly for the cause of God, without regarding consequences: nor will such behaviour ever lose its reward.—It may be their duty to retire from such places as will not receive their testimony, where they can do no good, where their temptations are great, and where they

23 And he dealt wisely, and dispersed of all his children throughout all the countries of Judah and Benjamin, unto every fenced city: and he gave them victual in abundance. And he desired many wives.

2 And it came to pass, that in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, because they had transgressed against the Lord, may be exposed to still fiercer persecutions: and in that case no possessions or connexions ought to be regarded.—When the ministers and ordinances of God are driven from any place, it is time for them, "who set their hearts to seek the Lord," to come out and be separate, that they may not be seduced to have fellowship with the worshippers and servants of Satan. Trials of this kind, serve to separate the chaff from the wheat; and indeed untried faith is not much to be depended on: but when we have been proved, and it appears, that we are willing to renounce our worldly interests, as far as called to it, for the sake of Christ and the gospel, we have got one good evidence that we are truly his disciples.—Those ministers should be welcomed and encouraged, who evidently prefer their work, with a good conscience, to their possessions; and if things were as they should be, their more affluent brethren would readily share their emoluments with them, if they saw them destitute.—It is genuine policy for any kingdom to entertain such as are willing to leave their estates and native country, purely for conscience's sake; for they will prove the strength and bulwark of the state, which gives them a comfortable asylum. But "I-chabod, the glory is departed," may be written on that kingdom which drives them away, by superstitious or idolatrous impositions, and by persecutions.—Nothing can injure us, while we keep close to the worship and service of God: but without true faith and grace, all apparent zeal and external profession will at length wither. Yet many deem themselves good and righteous, because they are not so faulty, in the best part of their character, as some eminently godly persons were in the greatest blemishes of their lives!—It is indeed well, when those, who begin foolishly, grow wiser by experience: but alas! that wisdom is of little value, which is engrossed by the care of secular interests, to the neglect of the immortal soul, through the indulgence of worldly lusts, and departing from the living God.

NOTES.—CHAP. XII. V. 1. Rehoboam's religion seems to have proceeded wholly from his fears of being given up into the hands of Jeroboam: when therefore he was become so strong, that, as he supposed, he had nothing to apprehend from that quarter, he became openly rebellious and idolatrous. (Note, 1 Kings 14:22-24.) The leading men also and the bulk of the nation, so generally and openly renounced the worship of God at the temple, that it was adjudged a national apostasy.—The ten tribes had before apostatized with Jeroboam; and when Rehoboam, with Judah and Benjamin, followed their example, "all Israel," as a nation, "had forsaken the law of the Lord;" and the pious remnant formed only a few exceptions to the general rule.

V. 2. (Note, 1 Kings 14:25-28.) It is probable, that Shishak was of another family than Pharaoh, whose daughter Solomon had married; and was excited to this invasion by the reports of the immense treasures, which that prince had collected at Jerusalem, with the division in his dominions, and the weakness of Rehoboam's administration. But the Lord gave him power to execute his rapacious purposes: which he would not have done, if the people had not transgressed against him.

In the fifth year.—[Their apostasy was in the fourth year; ... therefore God speedily corrected them, that he might reduce them to his service, before they were settled in their impiety.] Bp. Patrick.

V. 3, 4. (Marg. Ref.) The Lubims were the inhabitants of Lybia, adjoining to Egypt on the west: the Sukkims are supposed to have been the people called Troglodytes, because they dwelt in caves, (τρογλαις): and the Ethiopians, probably, were the inhabitants of Ethiopia to the south of Egypt.—It is likely that several of Rehoboam's sons were slain, or taken captive, by Shishak, when he took the cities in which they governed. (Note, 11:22, 23.)

V. 5, 6. While the king and his nobles were consulting without number that came with him out of Egypt; the Lubims, the Sukkims, and the Ethiopians.

4 And he took the fenced cities which pertained to Judah, and came to Jerusalem.

5 ¶ Then came Shemaiah the prophet to Rehoboam, and to the princes of Judah, that were gathered together to Jerusalem because of Shishak, and said unto them, Thus saith the Lord, Ye have forsaken me, and therefore have I also left you in the hand of Shishak.

6 Whereupon the princes of Israel, and the king humbled themselves; and they said, The Lord is righteous.

7 And when the Lord saw that they humbled themselves, the word of the Lord came to Shemaiah, saying, They have humbled themselves; therefore I will not destroy them, but I will grant them some deliverance; and my wrath shall not be poured out upon Jerusalem by the hand of Shishak.

8 Nevertheless, they shall be his servants; that they may know my service, and the service of the kingdoms of the countries.

9 So Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, and took away the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house; he took all; he carried away also the shields of gold which Solomon had made.

what measures to adopt, in this dangerous extremity, and perhaps were about to surrender to the conqueror; the prophet, in a few words, reminded them, that Shishak's power over them was the effect of the Lord's righteous indignation, who was contending with them for their apostasy. The time and circumstances indeed of their affliction evidently proclaimed this truth, yet they had not before attended to it: but this message had an immediate effect upon them; for they humbled themselves, and acknowledged the justice of God in their punishment. (Marg. Ref. p.) An external reformation, and a regard to the worship at the temple, during the remainder of Rehoboam's reign, followed this humiliation; but it went no further, at least with him.

V. 7-11. (Notes, Judg. 3:1, 2. 1 Kings 21:27-29. Ps. 76:10.) It is probable, that Shishak had intended to give up the city to be plundered by his army; but God suddenly disposed him to greater moderation and clemency than could possibly have been expected from such a man in his circumstances. So that he contented himself with emptying the treasures of the temple and of the king, and carrying away the golden shields which Solomon had made for magnificence rather than for use. (Notes, 1 Kings 10:16, 17. 14:25-28.) and he did not proceed to rob the temple of its sacred vessels. Neither did he deprive the inhabitants of their private property; but perhaps he exacted a sum of money, in token of their becoming his servants. He was, however, permitted thus far to prevail, that Rehoboam and his subjects might experience the different effects of keeping close to the worship of God, as in the prosperous days of David and Solomon; and of renouncing his service, and in consequence being reduced under the power of the conqueror, and preserved from entire ruin, merely by his unexpected clemency on their unreserved submission. 'He resolved to let them feel the difference between him, and all other lords and masters: and how much more happy they were while they continued to worship and serve him, than when they fell under a foreign yoke.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 12. Things went well. Or, "yet in Judah there were good things" (marg.) that is, there were a number of true believers, spiritual worshippers, and servants of God, especially such as came out of Israel; for whose sake Rehoboam and the kingdom were spared: so that we read no more of Shishak, who, by one means or other, was kept from coming to extort any further tribute or services from them. (Notes, Gen. 32:6-28. 33:4.)

V. 13. The city, &c. It was a peculiar honour conferred on Rehoboam for his father's sake, and his greatest advantage, that he reigned in that city which the Lord had chosen as the place of his temple, and instituted worship; (Marg. Ref. d, e.) but it seems to be here mentioned as an aggravation of the guilt of his ungodliness.

V. 14. Rehoboam's religion was a reluctant, formal service; his heart was not engaged; he never called upon "all that was within him to praise the Lord," and he did not desire 10 Instead of which, king Rehoboam made shields of brass, and committed them to the hands of the chief of the guard, that kept the entrance of the king's house.

11 And when the king entered into the house of the Lord, the guard came and fetched them, and brought them again into the guard-chamber.

12 And when he humbled himself, the wrath of the Lord turned from him, that he would not destroy him altogether: and also in Judah things went well.

13 ¶ So king Rehoboam strengthened himself in Jerusalem, and reigned: for Rehoboam was one and forty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city which the Lord had chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah, an Ammonitess.

14 And he did evil, because he prepared not his heart to seek the Lord.

15 Now the acts of Rehoboam, first and last, are they not written in the book of Shemaiah the prophet, and of Iddo the seer concerning genealogies? And there were wars between Rehoboam and Jeroboam continually.

16 And Rehoboam slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David: and Abijah his son reigned in his stead.

that preparation of an humble, believing, and pious disposition of heart, which is requisite in order to worship God spiritually and with delight. This was the source of his instability; and thus he was easily drawn into open ungodliness and wickedness. (*Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 11: 13-17, v. 16. 30:16-20, v. 19. 1 Chr. 29:10-19, v. 18. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is a very common, but most lamentable case, that men, who in distress or danger, or apparently near death, seem very much engaged in seeking God, often throw aside their religion when they have received a merciful deliverance. But the warning, "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee," deserves the most serious consideration of all who are tempted to such base ingratitude. (Note, John 5: 10-14, v. 14.) The Lord can soon arrest them by renewed afflictions; reduce them to still greater extremities; and bring trouble upon them from those quarters whence it was least expected.—Ungodly prosperity serves only to increase vain confidence, and to invite rapacity, without affording any real security; and all methods of defence prove ineffectual, when an angry God "arises to that judgment, which he hath commanded."—Every affliction has a voice, and delivers a message from the Lord; but sinners do not regard or understand: it is therefore, a singular mercy when he sends them "an interpreter," to explain the voice of his rod by that of his word. (Note, Job. 33:19-26.)—Humiliation before God for sin, with unreserved acknowledgments that he is just in all that he inflicts or threatens, is essential to true repentance: but this may be counterfeited both by word and deed. Yet, when there are merely external appearances of contrition, our merciful God will often grant respite, in order to encourage true penitents, by showing his readiness to forgive. This is especially the case in his dealings with sinful nations; for a general external humiliation before God, under national judgments, is a good evidence that their iniquities are not yet full; and when there is a number of true believers among them, who are protected from oppression and persecution; the Lord will grant some deliverance, and his "wrath shall not be poured out upon them" as yet.—Amidst all our abounding iniquity, impiety, and infidelity, these kingdoms seem hitherto to have been spared on these accounts: may he reform, and not destroy us!—When the Lord is pleased to show mercy, he can dispose the hardest hearts to compassion; the most rapacious, to moderation; and the most impious, to fear profaning sacred things: for he rules the impetuous lusts of men as he does the raging ocean, saying, "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." But his wrath may occasion many painful effects, when not poured out unto the uttermost. These are, however, often intended in mercy, and are of salutary tendency: for it is good to be convinced by our sufferings, short of eternal misery, that by forsaking the Lord

CHAPTER XIII.

Abijah reigns; he and Jeroboam, with all preparations, engage in war, 1-3. Abijah shows the justice of his cause, 4-12. Judah, relying on God, gains a signal victory, with immense slaughter of the Israelites, 13-19. Jeroboam dies, 20. Abijah's wives and child-en, 21, 22.

NOW in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam began Abijah to reign over Judah.

2 He reigned three years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Michaiiah the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah. ⁴And there was war between Abijah and Jeroboam.

3 And Abijah set the battle in array with an ^{a.c.} army of valiant men of war, even four hundred thousand chosen men: Jeroboam also set the battle in array against him with eight hundred thousand chosen men, being mighty men of valour.

4 ¶ And Abijah stood up upon mount Zemaraim, which is in mount Ephraim, and said, ^bHear me, thou Jeroboam, and all Israel;

5 ^cOught ye not to know, that the LORD God of Israel gave the kingdom over Israel ^dto David for ever, even to him and to his sons by a covenant of salt?

6 Yet Jeroboam the son of Nebat, the servant of Solomon the son of David, is risen up, and hath rebelled against his lord.

7 And there are gathered unto him vain men, the children of Belial, and have strengthened themselves against Rehoboam the son of Solomon, when Rehoboam was young and tender-hearted, and could not withstand them.

8 And now ye think to withstand the kingdom of the LORD in the hand of the sons of David; and ye be a great multitude, and there are with you golden calves, which Jeroboam made you for gods.

9 Have ye not cast out the priests of the LORD, the sons of Aaron, and the Levites, and have made you priests after the manner of the nations of other lands? so that whosoever cometh to consecrate himself with a young bullock and seven rams, the same may be a priest of them that are no gods.

10 But as for us, the LORD is our God, and we have not forsaken him; and the priests, which minister unto the LORD, are the sons of Aaron, and the Levites wait upon their business:

11 And they burn unto the LORD every morning and every evening burnt-sacrifices, and sweet incense: the show-bread also set they in order upon the pure table; and the candlestick of gold with the lamps thereof, to burn every evening: for we keep the charge of the LORD our God; but ye have forsaken him.

12 And behold, God himself is with us for we are cruel to ourselves; and that his service, which is but another name for liberty, peace, and felicity, cannot be renounced, without our becoming the miserable slaves of the worst of tyrants and oppressors: and whenever the heart is truly humbled, the afflictions will be removed, or alleviated and counterbalanced by divine consolations.—Sin always debases those who commit it, robs them of substantial blessings, and substitutes a mere empty worthless show of good; and whatever else be preserved or obtained, it will ruin the immortal soul, except true repentance intervene. Unless “the heart be prepared to seek the LORD,” we must perish: and if convinced, that we are unable of ourselves to effect this preparation, let us pray fervently, according to the language of Scripture, “Turn thou me, and so shall I be turned.” “Create in me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me.” If we do this in sincerity, using the other means of grace, and watching against sin and temptation; our endeavours will not be in vain. Where these things are wanting, formality and hypocrisy form a man's highest attainments; his chief advantages prove an aggravation of his crimes; and a life of vanity and vexation will be closed by a miserable death. May we then look to our hearts, and keep them with all diligence; for the Lord especially regards them: and may we prepare our hearts unto himself, that we may serve him with perseverance and delight, while we live; possess a strong consolation and joyful hope, when we are called to walk through the valley of the shadow of death; and so have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ! Amen.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIII. V. 1, 2. Marg. Ref. Notes. 1:18-23. 1 Kings 15:1-3.

V. 3. The kingdom of the ten tribes had been given to Jeroboam; but he and his people had, by apostasy and idolatry, merited the severest punishment, which Abijah was employed, or permitted, to execute. Rehoboam had aimed to recover dominion over all Israel; but perhaps Abijah only endeavoured to secure his own kingdom. (Note, Kings 12:21-24.)—The numbers which they brought into the field were immense; but when every man was a soldier, small kingdoms could raise very large armies upon any great emergency. Five hundred thousand had been numbered of Judah in the time of David, and it had received a great increase on the division of the kingdom; yet Israel raised an army twice as large as that of Judah, out of all their tribes. (Notes, 11:13-17. 2 Sam. 24:9. 1 Chr. 21:2-6, v. 5. 27:15.)

V. 4-12. Jeroboam seems to have been the aggressor in the war; yet Abijah had marched into his country; and from thence, whence Jeroboam and many of the Israelites could hear him, he spake to them as one who wished to bring the contest to an amicable conclusion. At least this seems to have been his ostensible design; though his speech was well suited, and probably intended, to encourage his own troops, and to dismay those of Jeroboam. Abijah bears a bad character in kings; (Note, 1 Kings 15:1-4.) yet this in occasion he spoke religiously; and he seems to have had a strong confidence in God, grounded on the maintenance of his ordinances, and the number of pious worshippers in his kingdom. The basis of his address was truth; but there was much false colouring in his manner of stating it, according to the too general custom of eloquent orators. For the covenant respecting the kingdom over Israel, made with David in behalf of his posterity, (except as it related to the Messiah,) was conditional; and neither Solomon, Rehoboam, nor Abijah, had been attentive to the re-stipulations. (Notes, 2 Sam. 7:12-16. 1 Kings 9:4-9. 11:9-13. Ps. 89:19-37. 132:11, 12.)—“A covenant of salt” is one solemnly ratified by a sacrifice and a feast, at both of which salt was used; that is to say, an unchangeable covenant: (Notes, Lev. 2:13. Num. 18:19.) but the Lord evidently did not consider himself irreversibly engaged to continue the kingdom of all Israel to David's posterity.—Jeroboam had indeed acted very wickedly in his manner of seizing and governing the kingdom of Israel: yet it had been granted to him by God himself, and Abijah never mentioned that circumstance. (Notes, 1 Kings 11:29-40.)—The persons who revolted from Rehoboam and made Jeroboam king, had acted with great precipitation and ingratitude; but perhaps it was not candid to call them indiscriminately “vain men, the children of Belial.” Rehoboam had given them no small provocation; he was surely old enough to have behaved more wisely, if he had not been actuated by a proud, domineering disposition; and it was not so much owing either to his lenity, his timidity, or his weakness, that he had not prosecuted his pretensions by war; as to the divine prohibition. (Notes, 1 Kings 12:8-24.)—But Abijah's words were more forcible, when he exposed the apostasy and idolatry of the kingdom of Israel; their impiety and sacrilege in excluding the priests of the LORD from their possessions; and the shameful manner, in which any worthless man was made a priest, who could and would bring the sacrifice appointed by way of consecration; for by these crimes, Jeroboam and his subjects were drawing down the vengeance of heaven upon themselves. (Notes, 11:13-17. 1 Kings 12:26-33. 13:33, 34. 14:5-16.) But what Abijah urged, concerning the state of true religion in Judah, was not strictly just; and, as spoken by him, it savoured of ostentation. Abijah himself was not a godly man; and idolatry was evidently connived at in his days. Yet it was true, that the men of Judah had the priests, ordinances, and worship of God among them; that there were numbers of pious worshippers in the land; that theirs was the more righteous cause; that the LORD was on their side, and their Captain, while the Israelites fought against him; and that the presence of the priests blowing the sacred trumpets, according to the law was a token of his presence with them and favour to them. (Notes, Num. 10:2-10.)—The expression, “after the manner of the nations” (9) shows that the laws of Moses were not made according to the customs of the Gentiles, as many suppose; but entirely distinct from them; and that the similarity which in many instances has been traced, actually our Captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets to cry alarm against you. O children of Israel, fight ye not against the Lord God of your fathers; for ye shall not prosper.

[Practical Observations.]

13 ¶ But Jeroboam caused man ambushment to come about behind them: so they were before Judah, and the ambushment was behind them.

14 And when Judah looked back, behold, the battle was before and behind; and they cried unto the Lord, and the priests sounded with the trumpets.

15 Then the men of Judah gave a shout: and as the men of Judah shouted, it came to pass, that God smote Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah.

16 And the children of Israel fled before Judah: and God delivered them into their hand.

17 And Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter; so there fell down slain of Israel five hundred thousand chosen men.

18 Thus the children of Israel were brought under at that time, and the children of Judah prevailed, because they relied upon the Lord God of their fathers.

19 And Abijah pursued after Jeroboam, and took cities from him, Beth-el with the towns thereof, and Jeshanah with the towns thereof, and Ephraim with the towns thereof.

20 Neither did Jeroboam recover strength again in the days of Abijah: and the Lord struck him, and he died.

21 ¶ But Abijah waxed mighty, and married fourteen wives, and begat twenty and two sons, and sixteen daughters.

22 And the rest of the acts of Abijah, and his ways, and his sayings, are written in the story of the prophet Iddo.

CHAPTER XIV.

Abijah dies, and Asa succeeds him, 1. He abolishes idolatry, 2-5. Enjoying peace, he fortifies his kingdom, and establishes a large army, 6-8. Being attacked by Zerah, with an immense army of Ethiopians, he calls on God, is victorious, and acquires much spoil, 9-15.

SO Abijah slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city of David: and Asa arose from the idolaters, in several particulars, adopting or imitating the usages of Israel.

Zemaraim. (4) Zemaraim was a city allotted to Benjamin: but mount Zemaraim, no doubt adjacent to it, was in mount Ephraim, on the borders of the two tribes. (Josh. 18:22.)

V. 13-22. Jeroboam, like a profane politician, (Note, 1 Kings 12:26-29,) disregarded all Abijah's pleas, and rested his whole dependence on the valour of his troops, and the skillfulness of his arrangements. Whilst Abijah therefore was speaking about peace, he was preparing for action: and to make, as he supposed, sure of the event, to the superiority of his numbers he added an ambushment, that he might surround and destroy the whole army of Judah, probably intending to seize upon that kingdom also. But the people cried unto the Lord in this extremity, as expecting help and deliverance from him alone; whilst the sounding of the sacred trumpets caused numbers to shout with confidence of success: and, according to their hope, it pleased God to smite the Israelites in such a manner, that they were unable to resist or to escape by flight; and thus five hundred thousand were slain in one day, which is the largest slaughter that history records to have been ever made in any one battle. This decisive blow gave Judah so great a superiority, that it can only be ascribed to a divine interposition, that the kingdom of Israel was not entirely subverted. Many cities, however, were subdued, and among the rest Beth-el fell into the hands of the victor; yet we do not read that he removed the golden calf, and probably the city was soon after conceded to Jeroboam. That prince, however, never recovered from this blow, for the Lord soon after smote him, and he died: (Note, Acts 12:20-23.) yet Abijah died nearly two years before him, and did not long enjoy the fruits of his victory, for which he made very ungrateful returns. Though destitute of piety, he seems to have possessed great vigour and capacity. During his short reign he became very powerful; he had a very numerous family; and his ways and sayings were so remarkable as to be particularly recorded by the prophet Iddo. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. e. Notes, 1 Kings 15:1-9.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. The promptness of mankind to war lamentably proclaims the depravity of our nature, and the influence that the great murderer of bodies and souls possesses over the minds of men, even in the determinations of senates and in the cabinets of kings. Nor can vainglorious commanders more delight in seeking renown, power, or revenge, by the destruction of the human species, than many of their inferiors do, inisting under their banners, seconding their aims, and rushing upon danger and death, that they may attempt the slaughter of those who never injured or even saw them. Such stubborn facts stand in the page of every history, a confutation of the absurd encomiums, which self-flattering speculators have passed upon the philanthropy of the human heart, and the sufficiency of human reason, for every purpose of virtue and religion. The annals of mankind form one continued narration of blood shed in the most wanton and unnecessary manner, in pursuit of honour and dominion, or in seeking to wrest the sword of vengeance from the hands of the Supreme Judge. The millions, who have thus perished miserably, "hateful, and hating one another," exceed almost imagination: and to crown the whole, the chief actors in this bloody tragedy have engrossed almost the whole applause of their fellow-mortals; or shared it with the poets, orators, and historians, who have excited them by infamous panegyrics to such destructive pursuits! Compare the whole with the short command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself;" and then bring in an impartial verdict concerning the heart of man, and the state of human nature. (Note, Lev. 19:18.)—Yet all the blood thus shed must be one day accounted for, as murder, on whomsoever that load of guilt may fall. Surely then, war should be always considered as the last resource, a desperate remedy, never to be used when the welfare of the state can possibly be otherwise secured. A righteous cause, a willingness for peace on reasonable terms, and a well-grounded confidence in God, should be considered as the grand requisites, in the management of this direful appeal to the supreme Arbiter of kings and nations.—But, it is easy to speak on these topics, without the fear of God possessing the heart. Many presume upon external privileges, who disregard his precepts; they boast of the form of godliness, without the power of it; they are justly severe upon the crimes of other men, yet they do not amend their own: but palliate the offences of their own party, while they aggravate the misconduct of their adversaries. These are not only the arts of those, who purposely frame manifestos to varnish their ambition with the show of equity; but are often employed by such as really have justice on their side, yet forget that genuine beauty is disgraced and rendered suspected, by being painted. It is obvious, however, that ungodly princes have often prospered, because their enemies have been so ill more abandoned; because they had justice on their side; because many of their subjects were pious; because more external honour was paid to the truth and ordinances of God among their subjects; or because the appeal to him, and professed reliance on him, was more openly made in the decision of the contest.

V. 13-22. The wise politicians of the world generally treat with contempt, all arguments grounded on the state of religion, and the favour of God toward his worshippers: their whole dependence is "on an arm of flesh," and if their confidence be disappointed, they ascribe it to fortune, or to the chance of war. But, the God of battles gives victory to whom he pleases: against him all courage and conduct are vain; and he will appear for those, who rely on and call upon him in the time of distress. He has often brought his people into imminent danger, in order to exercise their faith, and to put vigour into their prayers, which will be sure to terminate in shouts of victory. But, to triumph in those contests, which cause so many thousands and hundreds of thousands of the human species to expire in agony, and their immortal souls to be sent to the tribunal of God and an eternal state, can give little pleasure to a feeling heart; except as his justice, and faithful care of his people are seen and adored in them. And least of all, can success in civil wars, which are commonly conducted with the most unrelenting rancour and most tremendous slaughter, give satisfaction to any benevolent mind. Nor are the victories acquired in those fierce, though unbloody contests, which rend the church of Christ, to the disgrace of the common cause, and the joy of the common enemy, to be more rejoiced in. But to conquer our own passions, to prevail against the tempter and the world, and to overcome evil with good, are victories to be gained by faith, patience, and prayer, in which we may safely and purely rejoice. And when the conquerors and the conquered, in bloody battles, will join in execrating their own and each other's madness; "when the earth shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain;" then shall we receive the unsullied palm, the conqueror's noblest crown. Nay, death and the grave, which so dreadfully triumph over those whom the Lord smites in his anger, and so speedily wrench the prosperous from all their grandeur, will never hurt us; indeed, we shall then gain a complete victory over that last enemy, and mortality shall at length be swallowed up of life.

his son reigned in his stead. In his days the land was quiet ten years.

2 And Asa did that which was good and right in the eyes of the LORD his God :

3 For ^{he} took away the altars of the strange gods, and ^{the} high places, and ^{he} brake down the images, and ^{he} cut down the groves :

4 And ^{he} commanded Judah to seek the LORD God of their fathers, and ^{he} to do the law and the commandment.

6 ¶ And ^{he} built fenced cities in Judah : ^{for} the land had rest, and he had no war in those years ; because ^{the} LORD had given him rest.

7 Therefore ^{he} said unto Judah, Let us build these cities, and make about them walls, and towers, gates, and bars, while the land is yet before us ; because we have sought the LORD our God, we have sought him, and he hath given us rest on every side. So they built, and prospered.

8 And Asa had an army of men that bare targets and spears, out of Judah three hundred thousand ; and out of Benjamin, that bare shields and drew bows, two hundred and fourscore thousand : all these were mighty men of valour.

9 ¶ And there came out against them Zerah

NOTES.—CHAP. XIV. V. 1. The land, &c. Abijah's vigour and success laid the foundation of Asa's peace and prosperity. Jeroboam, and his son Nadab, remained quiet during the short time which they reigned over Israel, after Abijah's victory. Baasha began to reign before the close of Asa's third year ; but though "there was war between him and Asa all their days;" (1 Kings 15:16.) it did not for some time occasion much disturbance to the peace of Judah, through the enfeebled state of Israel.

V. 2—5. Asa not only behaved so well as to approve his conduct to man, but he aimed to act as in the sight of Him, who seeth the secret intentions of the heart ; and accordingly "he had this testimony, that he pleased God." (Notes, 12:14. 1 Kings 15:14, 15.) He began his reign by abolishing those idolatries, which had been connived at in the preceding reigns, especially that of the sun-images; (5. marg.) and by using his authority to retain the people in the worship of God at the temple, and to enforce obedience to his commandments. He afterwards carried his reformation still further; (Notes, 15:1—15.) yet at last, the high places, where JEHOWAH was irregularly worshipped, were not removed, though the idolatrous altars were destroyed. (15:17. 1 Kings 15:14.)

V. 6—8. The union of piety and prudence, in Asa's conduct, is worthy of notice and commendation. We may suppose that his army generally served in divisions by rotation, but could be marshalled all together upon occasion. (Note, 1 Chr. 27:1—15.) The number of his soldiers was great, especially that of Benjamin ; but probably many from the other tribes were numbered among them. (Note, 17:13—19.)—Because the Lord had given him rest. (6) (Job 34:29.) Various concurring events formed the second cause of this rest, both from external wars, and internal disturbances ; but the Lord, the GREAT FIRST CAUSE, directed and overruled all, to effect his own merciful purpose to Asa and Judah. This Asa saw, and piously acknowledged. (7.)

V. 9—15. It is not certain, whether the Ethiopians or Cushites of Africa, or those near Arabia, are here intended, though it is more generally thought that the latter are meant. But they who suppose the former, conjecture that Zerah had subjugated his neighbours, the Egyptians ; had taken possession of the cities and territories bordering on Egypt ; and intended still further to extend his conquests, when he had seized upon the kingdom of Judah.—Asa's army was formidable, though not equal to Zerah's immense preparations. He, however, placed no confidence in it, but relied only on the protection of God. His prayer is the genuine language of faith. He was conscious that his aim had been to glorify the Lord, and promote his worship, in the time of his prosperity ; and this encouraged him to look upon God as his reconciled Friend and Father. Having put himself and his people under his protection, he was persuaded, that none could prevail against them, without seeming at least to prevail against God. If his army had been superior to that of the Ethiopian with a host of a thousand thousand, and three hundred chariots ; and came unto "Mareshah.

10 Then Asa went out against him, and they set the battle in array in the valley of Zephath at Mareshah.

11 And Asa cried unto the LORD his God, and said, LORD, it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power : help us, O LORD our God ; for we rest on thee, and in thy name, we go against this multitude. O LORD, thou art our God ; let not man prevail against thee.

12 So the LORD smote the Ethiopians before Asa, and before Judah ; and the Ethiopians fled.

13 And Asa and the people that were with him pursued them unto Gerar : and the Ethiopians were overthrown, that they could not recover themselves ; for they were destroyed before the LORD and before his host ; and they carried away very much spoil.

14 And they smote all the cities round about Gerar ; for the fear of the LORD came upon them : and they spoiled all the cities ; for there was exceeding much spoil in them.

15 They smote also the tents of cattle, and carried away sheep and camels in abundance, and returned to Jerusalem.

the enemy, it could not have secured the victory ; if it had consisted of a few enfeebled, dispirited troops, the Lord could have helped by them ; for it was "nothing with him to help with many, or with them that had no power." (Notes, 20. 6—12. 32:6—8. v. 8. 1 Sam. 14:6—10.) Either way he desired to confide wholly in the Almighty, and to give him the glory of the victory. The event accorded to his faith ; the Lord fought by Asa's subjects as his host ; (13) the Ethiopians were entirely overthrown, and dispersed ; the spoil, which had been deposited in Gerar of the Philistines, and in other cities in that vicinity, was taken ; and this most formidable invasion exceedingly enriched Judah. (Notes, 16:1—10.)—Asa cried, &c. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The active talents and outward success of ungodly men sometimes make way for the peace and prosperity of those, whose leading aim it is to glorify God and promote true religion ; and thus they, whose hearts are "not prepared to seek the LORD," may be serviceable to others ; but nothing will profit our own souls, except that religion, which induces us to "do that which is good and right in the eyes of the LORD." Indeed, this alone can prepare us for arduous and perilous services ; and influence us to undertake, to pursue without weariness, and by cheerful perseverance to accomplish, designs of usefulness in our various situations ; and when men in authority, or others according to the duties of their several stations, properly attempt reformation, and support the cause of true religion by scriptural means, they often find less difficulty than they expected : for they are approved even by the consciences of those men, whose sins oppose their designs.—In all our prosperity we should notice and acknowledge the hand of God : if he gives rest, none can cause trouble ; and those who uprightly seek him shall find peace and comfort. Yet, while we are in this world, we must prepare for trials and conflicts ; we can never be safe except we be watching and praying ; and though the grace of God will indeed be sufficient for his people, none of them will have any strength to spare. Our utmost watchfulness and diligence will not secure us from tribulation ; but the consciousness of having heartily served the Lord in prosperity, will turn to us for a testimony, that we are indeed his people and he our God ; and this will encourage our confidence in him in the hour of trouble and temptation. When we can clearly see that "God is for us," we shall be enabled to rest in him, and to call upon him with more vigorous faith and enlarged expectation : and then we shall perceive, that our own weak-

The encouraging prophecy of Azariah before Asa, 1-7. Asa puts away idolatry, assembles the people, and enters into covenant with God, 8-15. ness, or the power of our assailants, is no good reason for discouragement. Improbabilities, and even apparent impossibilities, of help and deliverance, cause no difficulty to an almighty arm: and if the glory of God engage him on our side, no created power can prevail against us. Indeed, it is our duty to employ every prudent precaution, to use all proper means, and to exert the whole strength which he has given us: and in this way he commonly helps us, both in our temporal and spiritual concerns; but he can as readily work without us, as by us; and when we go forth in his name, and are disposed to give him the glory, we shall certainly have all desirable success.—Those whom the Lord smites, cannot recover their strength, nor they whom he intimidates, their courage; and all things work together for the good of those whom he favours. However he may deal with us in temporal things, if we are indeed the soldiers of Jesus Christ, we must be enriched by every conflict, and prove gainers by all our losses: and the approaching victory over our last enemy death, will make way for our entrance into "his presence, where is fullness of joy, and pleasures for evermore."

NOTES.—CHAP. XV. V. 1-7. (Note, 8.) The prophet met Asa and his army as they returned from their victory and triumph over the Cushites; and thus addressed them, with words of warning and encouragement.—It is not easy to determine what times or events were intended by the prophet in the following verses. Some think, that he referred to the state of Israel, in the days of the judges, when the people for a long time generally forsook, and almost forgot, the true God; the priests were not public teachers as they ought to have been, and the law was greatly neglected. (Notes, Deut. 33:10. Josh. 24:1, 2. Hos. 4:6. Mal. 2:4-9.) At the same time the people were exposed to the invasions of various enemies, who destroyed each other, yet alternately harassed and oppressed them: because, for their sins, "God did vex them with all adversity;" and consequently there was no peace to those who journeyed, or went out upon business. Now, these times of trouble and vexation seemed to be returning again, (after the prosperity and peace enjoyed under David and Solomon,) in the divisions, apostacies, idolatries, and calamities of the preceding reigns. And the people might be assured, that the Lord would deal with them by the same measure, as he had dealt with their fathers: if they forsook his worship, and ran into idolatry and impiety, they would be left to all their former miseries; but if they returned to God and served him, he would protect and prosper them: (Note, 1 Chr. 28:9.) even as when Israel under the judges, in their trouble, sought the Lord, he was always ready to remove their afflictions. This seems the most satisfactory interpretation. But others suppose, that the prophet referred to the state of the kingdom of Israel: they had rejected the true God, expelled the teaching priesthood, and cast off the law of the Lord, and their subsequent calamities were intended as a warning for Judah, yet, even whenever Israel should reand put away ^athe tabominable idols out of all the land of Judah and Benjamin, and out of ^bthe cities which he had taken from mount Ephraim, and renewed ^cthe altar of the LORD, that was before the porch of the LORD.

9 And he gathered all Judah and Benjamin, and ^dthe strangers with them out of Ephraim and Manasseh, and out of Simeon: for ^ethey fell to him out of Israel in abundance, when ^fthey saw that the LORD his God was with him.

10 So they gathered themselves together [B. C. at Jerusalem in ^gthe third month, in the ^hfifteenth year of the reign of Asa. 940.]

11 And they offered unto the LORD ⁱthe same time, of the spoil which they had brought, ^jseven hundred oxen and seven thousand sheep.

12 And ^kthey entered into a covenant to ^lseek the LORD God of their fathers with all their heart, and with all their soul;

13 That ^mwhosoever would not seek the LORD God of Israel should be put to death, ⁿwhether small or great, whether man or woman.

14 And ^othey sware unto the LORD with a loud voice, and with shouting, and ^pwith trumpets, and with cornets.

15 And all Judah rejoiced at the oath: for they had ^qsworn with all their heart, and ^rsought him with their whole desire; and ^she was found pent, and seek God, he would be found of them.—Others again suppose the passage to be prophetic of the Babylonish captivity, and even of the present dispersion and future conversion of the Jews, to which the words are doubtless applicable. Perhaps the prophet had some reference to God's general method of dealing with Israel in all ages, and then no wonder that his expressions are descriptive of several distinct transactions.—It is plain, however, that warning and encouragement were intended for Asa and his subjects; and the prophet's scope was to excite them properly to improve their present success, by attempting a more effectual reformation, which would assuredly be rewarded with proportionable prosperity.

V. 8. Perhaps the prophet was called Oded, as well as his father, (1) and Azariah by way of distinction: though some think, that Oded confirmed the words of his son by a prophecy to the same effect.—The work of complete reformation appeared to Asa so difficult and perilous, through the inveterate propensity of the people and of the chief persons to idolatry; that he had not courage to attempt it, till thus assured of the divine assistance and acceptance. Accordingly, when he proceeded in his work, many abominable idols were found in every part of the land: which he removed, with those that were in the cities taken from Israel: but, as the golden calf was not removed from Beth-el, it is probable, that city had been previously ceded to the king of Israel, or retaken by him. (Note, 13:13-22.) He likewise "renewed" the altar of God, in the inner court of the temple; which, it seems, had been left to go to decay, in the preceding reigns, and had not been duly repaired in the preceding years of Asa.

V. 9. Simeon, &c. The situation of this tribe, in part of the lot of Judah, (Note, Josh. 19:1-9,) had not prevented them from joining the general revolt. But at this time many of them, with numbers from the other tribes, submitted to Asa, and probably a great part of the tribe of Simeon permanently adhered to Judah.

V. 10, 11. "This seems to have been a voluntary assembly, by common agreement, rather than by the king's commandment or invitation; unless we suppose it to have been at one of the great festivals." Bp. Patrick.

Fifteenth year, &c. (10) It is said "The land was quiet ten years." (1) Hence it is concluded that Zerah's invasion was in the eleventh year of Asa. Yet that the sacrifices from the spoil should not be offered from the spoil taken, till the fifteenth of Asa, can hardly accord to that supposition.

The same time. (11) "In the Hebrew, 'in that day,' which the Targum takes to have been in the feast of weeks, . . . which was kept in the third month, called Sivan." Bp. Patrick.—Some previous appointment, however, evidently produced a much more general concourse on this occasion, than would otherwise have taken place.

V. 12-15. The people voluntarily consented to seek the Lord, each for himself and all in entire union, with all earof them: and the Lord gave them rest round about.

16 ¶ And also concerning Maachah the mother of Asa the king, he removed her from being queen, because she had made an idol in a grove: and Asa cut down her idol, and stamped it, and burnt it at the brook Kidron.

17 But the high places were not taken away out of Israel: nevertheless the heart of Asa was perfect all his days.

18 ¶ And he brought into the house of God the things that his father had dedicated, and that he himself had dedicated, silver, and gold, and vessels.

19 And there was no more war unto the five and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa.

CHAPTER XVI.

nestness: and also without respect of persons, to execute the law of God on idolaters; and on those who disregarded the sabbaths and solemn feasts, or refused their attendance on the public ordinances of religion. (Notes, Lev. 24:10-16. Num. 15:31-36. Deut. 13:1-11.) This covenant they entered into in the most cheerful and open manner; and every one ratified it by a solemn oath, with a loud voice, in the presence of all the people, accompanied by shouting, and the priests sounding with the sacred trumpets, and with cornets: for they were deeply impressed with the kindness which they had experienced, and great numbers were evidently very sincere and earnest in their religion. (Marg. Ref.) They reaped the happy fruit of this reformation, in the great peace which they enjoyed, without disturbance from any of their neighbours. Bp. Patrick. (Note, 1 Kings 16:23.)

V. 16. Note, 1 Kings 15:10-13.
V. 17, 18. Notes, 1 Kings 15:14, 15.—Out of Israel, &c. (17.) Some have thought that this only relates to the cities which had been taken from the kingdom of Israel: but it is probable that some high places at least were still connived at in Judah; perhaps as a human device, to render the people more willing to renounce idolatry. Yet, upon the whole, Asa meant well and did well, and was cordial in his endeavours for reformation.

V. 19. Baasha died in the twenty-sixth year of Asa's reign: and as there were wars between Asa and Baasha, (16:1. 1 Kings 15:16, 17, 32, 33.) it seems impossible to reconcile this verse, and the date of the ensuing chapter, with the other history, except by allowing a trivial error of the transcribers, and reading the twenty-fifth, instead of the thirty-fifth, in this verse, and the twenty-sixth, instead of the thirty-sixth, in the first verse of the following chapter. This is the date which Josephus affixes to these events, and it is very probable in itself. Other ways of solving the difficulty have been proposed, but they appear liable to insuperable objections.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Prosperity and comfort should animate us to more diligent obedience; but we need the ministry of the word to remind us of our duty, when successful, as much at least as when afflicted.—The gracious tenor of the gospel authorizes us to assure sinners of every description, that if they "seek the Lord" in a proper manner, he will be found of them; at the same time all should be warned, that if they forsake the Lord, he will cast them off; and we may know that God is with us for every saving purpose, when we are conscious of trusting in his mercy, attending on his ordinances, and walking in obedience to his commandments. But, cautious fear and cheering hope must unite to render us vigilant, active, and steadfast in the ways of God.—The history of the church in all ages, and the experience of every believer, demonstrate, that vexation and distress are the never-failing consequences of negligence and sin, even to those who are not left to final apostasy; and that humiliation before God, and diligent seeking him, uniformly make way for peace and comfort. Hence the benefit of a teaching ministry, of the holy law, and of the blessed gospel. The Lord grant that all, who are called ministers, may become "apt to teach," mighty in the Scriptures, men of God, acquainted with him, his truth, and his will, and able to declare his whole counsel to the people! May he send forth such labourers into his harvest, and extend the blessing of them to the remotest nations of the earth! And may the Jews, who have been so long without the "true God and eternal life;"

2 Then Asa brought out silver and gold out of the treasures of the house of the Lord and of the king's house, and sent to Benhadad king of Syria, that dwelt at Damascus, saying,

3 There is a league between me and thee, as there was between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent thee silver and gold; go, break thy league with Baasha king of Israel, that he may depart from me.

4 And Benhadad hearkened unto king Asa, and sent the captains of his armies against the cities of Israel; and they smote Eljon, and Dan, and Abel-maim, and all the store cities of Naphtali.

5 And it came to pass, when Baasha heard it that he left off building of Ramah, and his work ceased.

6 Then Asa the king took all Judah; and they carried away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha was building, and he built therewith Geba and Mizpah.

7 ¶ And at that time Hanani the seer came to Asa king of Judah, and said unto him, Because thou hast relied on the king of Syria, and not re-

(Note, 1 John 5:20, 21.) without a teaching priesthood, and without him who is the true and only High-Priest of the church, whom "God hath so long vexed with all adversity," at length in their trouble, seek the Lord, be found of him, and be grafted again into their own olive-tree, from which they were broken off through unbelief!—The assured expectation of assistance, acceptance, and a gracious recompense, inspires the soul with courage and strength for present duty: and we ought to exhort and encourage one another, that we may be "strong in the Lord," and that our hands may not be weak, when we are called to arduous and perilous attempts, for the honour of God, and to promote true religion.—The way to win those, who are of the contrary party, is by showing them evidently that "the Lord our God is with us." In order to this, all abominable things must be put away, and conscientious obedience must unite with cheerful confidence in God.—Whatever the Lord gives should be employed according to his will: especially we should devote our bodies and souls unto him, according to his everlasting covenant; by accepting of his salvation, and yielding ourselves to his service. Our devotedness to God our Saviour should be avowed and professed in the most solemn and public manner. Such obligations indeed bind to no more than was before our duty: but they have a tendency to fortify the heart against temptation, to excite us in a way of remembrance to every service, and to give us a farther opportunity of watching over each other, and exhorting one another to every good work. Unless, indeed, we sincerely mean to seek and serve God with our whole heart, and our whole soul, such transactions are hypocritical. But, if we enter into these engagements with uprightness, really purposing to be helpful to others also, we may joyfully expect that the Lord will give rest to our souls.—Every public transaction should be conducted with cautious regard to peace, and to civil subordination in all things lawful, lest our good should be evil spoken of. We are not indeed called on to inflict death, or any secular punishment, on those who are guilty of impiety, apostasy, or idolatry; yet, they who neglect the great salvation of the gospel, will by no means escape a more dreadful doom.—No relative affections are to be indulged, when they interfere with our evident duty to God. But where the heart is upright, there will be peace and acceptance, though we come short of that perfection which is proposed to us, and to which we should continually be pressing forwards.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVI. V. 1-6. (Notes, 15:19. 1 Kings 16:8-14.)—Baasha seems to have meditated war against Judah from the beginning of his reign: and probably he had made some hostile attempts before; but he was not able to make any formidable attack, till the year preceding his death. At that time he so fortified Ramah, upon the frontiers of the land, that he not only prevented his own subjects from migrating into Judah, but stopped all travellers from passing: and this both hindered the Israelites from going over to the king of Judah, and was likely, it seems, to reduce him and his subjects to distress. In this difficulty, Asa distrusted his own troops, and neglected the proper means of defence; and he likewise gave up his confidence in God, and used very sinful means for deliverance. He tempted a heathen prince, with the consecrated treasures, to break a solemn league, and to turn his arms against his ally: and, by making a league with him to this effect, he became accessory to all the treachery, perjury, injustice, and cruelty of Benhadad. But, though it lied on the Lord thy God, therefore is the host of the king of Syria escaped out of thy hand.

8 Were not the Ethiopians and the Lubims a huge host, with very many chariots, and horsemen? yet, because thou didst rely on the Lord, he delivered them into thy hand.

9 For the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him. Herein thou hast done foolishly: therefore from henceforth thou shalt have wars.

10 Then Asa was wroth with the seer, and put him in a prison-house; for he was in a rage with him because of this thing. And Asa oppressed some of the people the same time.

11 And behold, the acts of Asa, first and last, lo, they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

12 And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great: yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians.

answered a present purpose, it exposed him to severe rebukes, and he never prospered afterwards. (Note, 1 Kings 15:17-22.)

V. 7-10. Asa's misconduct entirely originated from unbelief. Had he relied on the Lord, he would have defended him against the Israelites, and enabled him likewise to prevail against the king of Syria, who was then in league with Baasha; by which he might have enriched his treasures, instead of emptying them to purchase his assistance. This was the more inexcusable in him, seeing he had before experienced the prevalence of faith and prayer, in his victory over the Ethiopians. (Notes, 14:9-15. 2 Sam. 12:8-10.) Indeed, Asa could not be ignorant, that the omnipresent and ever watchful providence of God notices all the wants, dangers, and trials of those, who uprightly trust and serve him; and is ever at hand to give speedy and effectual assistance to them, as the case may require. (Marg. Ref.) In this Asa greatly failed; and the prophet plainly told him, that he had acted foolishly, and therefore should have wars. His subsequent conduct seems to have without parallel in Scripture. No one decidedly pious man, as I recollect, is recorded to have so deeply resented a reproof from a prophet in the name of God, as to have used severity against him for it: yet the expressions concerning Asa's character are so strong, (14:2. 15:17.) that we must consider him as an exception: and a lamentable proof that there is no kind of sin, which a believer is not capable of committing, if left to himself: so that we must not form our judgment of men's characters from any detached actions, but the general tenor of their conduct.—In his rage he committed the prophet to prison, or rather he "put him into the stocks," for that is the meaning of the original word; perhaps excusing himself to others, and to his own conscience, by criminating the prophet as rude, intermeddling, and insolent: and perhaps, when some of the people censured his conduct, he oppressed them also, as determined to crush all opposition by violent means. It is probable, however, that he speedily released the prophet; and as he lived at least fifteen years after this event, (for so long he lived after Baasha's death;) and as we do not find that he oppressed or persecuted any person, except on this occasion; we may conclude that he repented, and adhered to the service of God to the close of his life. But, having openly dishonoured the Lord, the latter part of his reign was obscure, inglorious, and troublesome.—It is not said what wars he was engaged in; but probably they were more perplexing to him, than fatal to his people.

Lubims. (8) 'The people of Libya, or the Africans beyond Egypt.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, 12:34.) This favours the opinion that the Ethiopians, commanded by Zerah, were those of Africa, not the Cushites in Arabia. (Note, 14:9-15.)—He was in a rage with him because of this thing. (10) 'For which he ought to have thanked and rewarded him.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 12. 'Asa had the gout, which increased to such a height that he died of it, as Pelicans thinks; which was a just punishment for putting the prophet's feet in the stocks.' Bp. Patrick.—Under this execrable correction he relapsed into his former sin, of relying on man, and not on the Lord. If he consulted physicians, properly so called, his sin entirely consisted in his reliance on them, instead of seeking a blessing from God on the means which they employed. But, perhaps they were such persons as attempted, by charms, or other superstitious devices, to alleviate his pain: and then the thing itself likewise was exceedingly sinful. As the Lord has been pleased to throw a cloud upon his memory, we will not further attempt to penetrate it; though from the character which he bears in Scripture, it may be inferred, that he did not die without repenting of this sin also.

V. 13, 14. (Marg. Ref.) Some have considered this funeral, as an argument of the improper state of Asa's heart, even at death, supposing that he appointed it for himself, out of vainglory, and in conformity to heathen customs. Indeed, it is said, that he digged sepulchres for himself, (marg.) as Manasseh and others also did: but probably the pomp of his interment, which had nothing idolatrous or unlawful in it, was intended by the people as an expression of respect for his memory; (Marg. Ref.) for, notwithstanding the blemishes recorded in this chapter, he had been an excellent, valuable, and successful prince; and the state of Judah during his reign was most happy, compared with the distractions and miseries of Israel. (Note, 1 Kings 16:23.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS. Those, who on some occasions, "being strong in faith, glorify God," and bring blessings on themselves and others by so doing; at other times show that faith is lamentably out of exercise; (Note, Gen. 12:—5, 11—16.) and whenever men waver, as to confidence in God, they grow negligent and heartless in waiting on him, and serving him, and in using proper means for their own defence or deliverance; and become ready to turn aside into by-paths, and employ sinful expedients. When once any person has set forward in this downhill road, he hurries along from one crime to another, till he falls into greater ungodliness; nor can we tell into what impiety, treachery, or injustice, we may run, if left to ourselves. Well may we then be cautioned, "while we think we stand, to take heed lest we fall;" and well may we pray, "Lord, increase our faith!"—The self-sufficient are impatient of reproof or contradiction; and then the plain language of faithful ministers appears ill nature, ill manners, impertinence, or insolence. In this case, if power unite with haughty resentment, persecution will follow: so that they are not qualified at all times to deliver the messages of God, even to good princes, who are not ready to bear the cross. For, in general, "the flatterer, who spreads a net for a man's feet," and merits execration, may more reasonably expect a reward from men; than he who most affectionately labours for their present and eternal good, but who will, when needful, speak offensive truth, unreservedly, and in plain language. (Notes, Matt. 14:3-11.)—Those, who venture to take the part of such as have thus given umbrage, must expect to share in the resentment which they have excited; for where rage prevails against the fear of God, justice and humanity will scarcely be attended to. If, however, any of the Lord's cause he walked in the first ways of his father David, and sought not unto Baalim;

4 But sought to the LORD God of his father, and walked in his commandments, and not after the doings of Israel.

5 Therefore the LORD established the kingdom in his hand: and all Judah brought to Jehoshaphat presents; and he had riches and honour in abundance.

6 And his heart was lifted up in the ways of the LORD: moreover he took away the high places and groves out of Judah.

[Practical Observations.]

7 ¶ Also in the third year of his reign he sent to his princes, even to Ben-hail, and to Obadiah, and to Zechariah, and to Nathaneel, and to Micaiah, to teach in the cities of Judah.

8 And with them he sent Levites, even Sheb. c. 1. maiah, and Sthaniam, and Zebadiah, and ^{912.} Asahel, and Schemiramoth, and Jehonathan, and Adonijah, and Tobijah, and Tob-adonijah, Levites; and with them Elishama and Jehoram, priests.

9 And they taught in Judah, and had the book of the law of the LORD with them, and went about throughout all the cities of Judah, and taught the people.

10 ¶ And the fear of the LORD fell upon all the kingdoms of the lands that were round about Judah, so that they made no war against Jehoshaphat.

11 Also some of the Philistines brought Jehoshaphat presents, and tribute-silver; and the Arabians brought him flocks, seven thousand and seven hundred rams, and seven thousand and seven hundred he goats.

12 ¶ And Jehoshaphat waxed great exceedingly; and he built in Judah castles, and cities of store.

13 And he had much business in the cities of Judah: and the men of war, mighty men of valour, were in Jerusalem.

14 And these are the numbers of them according to the house of their fathers: Of Judah, the captains of thousands: Adnah the chief, and with him mighty men of valour three hundred thousand.

15 And next to him was Jehohanan the captain, and with him two hundred and fourscore thousand.

16 And next him was Amasiah the son of Zichri, who willingly offered himself unto the LORD; and with him two hundred thousand mighty men of valour.

17 And of Benjamin; Eliada, a mighty man of valour, and with him armed men with bow and shield, two hundred thousand.

obedience: remembering that "his eyes run to and fro, throughout the earth, to show himself strong in behalf of them," who thus trust and serve him; being an ever-present and all-sufficient Helper and Comforter. NOTES.—CHAP. XVII. V. 1, 2. (Marg. Ref. a, b.) It is probable that Asa had been engaged in war with the kingdom of Israel, after the establishment of Omri on the throne, though no events occurred so considerable as to be recorded.—In the cities of Ephraim, &c. (2) Note, 15:8.

V. 3. The first ways, &c.] Jehoshaphat copied the example of David, by proceeding to reform the state of religion immediately on his accession to the throne; and in his zeal for the pure, orderly, and spiritual worship of God: but he carefully avoided those sins, into which David afterwards fell. This is the common explication of the expression.—But as David's piety and zeal never shone brighter than at the close of his life; perhaps the words might as properly be read, "In the first ways, even those of David his father," proposing him as his model, and not the succeeding princes, under whom idolatry had been introduced, tolerated, or but feebly opposed; and not being satisfied even with walking in the steps of his father Asa, but aiming to reduce matters to their ancient purity.—The margin reads it, of his father, and of David; for the latter days of Asa were not so worthy of imitation as his former had been.

V. 4, 5. (Marg. Ref.) 'As he worshipped not the gods of other countries, so he did not join with the Israelites in worshipping God by the calves. . . Riches procure men honour, when they make such a good use of them, as he did.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 6. The heart of Jehoshaphat was lifted up, not in pride, but in courage, zeal, and vigour. By strong faith and ardent love, he was lifted up above fears and discouragements; and readily faced and endured dangers and difficulties in the cause of God. And he did not glory in his riches and honour, but in serving the Lord, and promoting his cause. (Note, 1 Sam. 2:1.)—He took away the high places in Judah; but perhaps he left them in the cities of Ephraim; or he destroyed such as were devoted to idols, but spared those in which God was worshipped. Or, he destroyed them at the beginning of his reign; but his subjects restored some of them afterwards. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 20:31-34. 1 Kings 22:41-45, v. 43.)

V. 7-9. While the priests and Levites neglected their duty, as public teachers, the people remained ignorant of the truth and law of God, and were easily seduced into superstition or idolatry: so that the reformations which took place were rather the result of authority than conviction and distinct knowledge; and thus only external and transient. Asa and his people had done well, in covenanting together to punish those who would not seek the Lord: (Note, 15:12-15.) for this was according to the tenor and intention of that introductory dispensation; under which the capital punishment of apostate Israelites was one divinely appointed method of preserving that people from sinking wholly into idolatry, till the coming of Christ. But Jehoshaphat did better, when he added the public teaching of the people from the law of God: for this not only tended to the same object, but promoted the salvation of souls, and the increase of spiritual worshippers, who would hand down religion to their posterity. The princes were joined in commission with the priests and Levites; both to excite the latter to their duty, and to induce the attention of the people. Probably they acted as magistrates, and were men of known probity, piety, and acquaintance with the law of God; who, when they administered justice, instructed and exhorted the people, and charged them, both as a matter of conscience, and as they regarded the favour of the king, to receive and observe the instructions of the priests and Levites. The persons from among the priests and Levites, who were appointed to be the itinerant instructors, were doubtless selected, because they were known to be eminent for piety and ability. They took the book of the law with them, and read and expounded it wherever they went, grounding all their instructions upon it. It must also be supposed that these teachers were intended to excite and to strengthen the hands of the priests and Levites, who resided in the neighbourhood of the cities to which they went, and who were to be considered as the stated teachers in their several districts. (Note, 15:1-7.) It has before been shown, that the prophets in the kingdom of Israel held stated assemblies for religious worship, on the sabbath-days, and on some of their solemn feasts. (Note, 2 Kings 4:23.) And it is probable, that from this time it became gradually the practice of the priests and Levites in Judah, as far as they paid regard to their duty; but this alas, was but seldom done. Synagogues, as it appears from this history, were not yet regularly formed in Judah; and the book of the law seems to have been very scarce, and but little attended to by the people in general, or made known to them by their regular instructors. (Note, 15:1-7, v. 3.)

V. 10. The army of Jehoshaphat was indeed very formidable, (13-19.) yet it was "the fear of the LORD" that deterred his neighbours from attacking him: they were so dismayed, that they dared not to attempt any thing against one, who was so evidently favoured of God; and it is probable, the surrounding nations had observed, that Judah always prospered, when the worship of God was kept up in the land. (Notes, Ex. 34:24. Lev. 36:34. Deut. 28:3-14.)

V. 11. The Philistines had been subdued by David, and no doubt had paid him tribute; but, after a time, they seem to have again become independent: (Notes, 2 Kings 18:8.) and it is not certain, whether they and the Arabians brought these presents to Jehoshaphat, as submitting to his authority, or only as desiring to conciliate his friendship.

V. 13-19. Jehoshaphat's militia far exceeded the number that of any of his predecessors, (13.) though he did not possess much above a third of the country, over which David and Solomon had reigned. But great numbers had flocked into his kingdom from Israel, his population increased by a peculiar blessing, and no wasting wars had occurred for many years. It is probable that these troops served by rotation; (Notes, 1 Chr. 27:1-15.) and some of them might be employed in the buildings and other business, which he had in the cities of Judah. (Marg. Ref.) One of his chief officers is distinguished for having offered himself willingly to serve God, as well as his country, in that station. (16)

Much business. (13) 'To settle religion, and purge out idolatry, as well as to provide for their safety, by fortifications, and whatsoever was necessary for the public tranquillity.' Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. It is a signal blessing when the Lord raises up pious and able men, in church or state, to succeed one another. For often useful instruments are removed, or laid aside, at the very crisis when their preparations were completed, and their purposes in a fair way of being effected; and others come in their stead, who take a pride and pleasure in rendering their schemes abortive; and thus "one sinner destroyed much good." (Notes, Ec. 2:18-23. John 4:31-38.) It therefore behoves us all to pray for a succession of useful men, who may every one of them endeavour to complete the designs of their predecessors, and make way for the usefulness of their successors; and did all pious persons, with one accord and without intermission, unite in such prayers, in behalf of the community, the church at large, and particular congregations; they would witness blessed effects, and brighter prospects would open before us.—It is happy when prudence, vigour, and piety unite in distinguished characters; when they carefully imitate the best parts of the conduct of eminent believers, and as carefully avoid their mistakes; and when the purest ages of the church are made the models of personal religion and public reformation. Indeed, we should all study to walk in those "first ways" of Christians, when "great grace was upon them all," and not be satisfied with the current standard of modern profession: this would tend to the establishment of our hearts in peace and assurance, and to the prosperity of our endeavours to glorify God and to do good.—When faith is in vigorous exercise, and when zeal, love, and active hope render the ways of God delightful; the soul rises superior to dangers and difficulties, disregards hardships and labours, and can even rejoice in sufferings for the Lord's sake. Then low, earthly affections are subdued; the heart is lifted up above them, and soars heaven-ward, glorying in nothing but the service, truth, and favour of God, and ambitious of no other honour. This exalted piety springs from genuine poverty of spirit; and a deep sense of the condescension of the Infinite God, in employing and accepting us poor, guilty, polluted, worthless creatures, inspires the heart with renewed vigour in his service.

V. 7-19. The public teaching of the word of God forms, in all ages, the grand method of promoting the power of godliness: for by it the understanding is informed, the judgment regulated, the conscience awakened and directed, and the hopes, fears, and affections suitably excited; and, as far as the divine blessing is vouchsafed, religious worship is rendered a voluntary, reasonable, and spiritual service. Kings and princes, therefore, render a most essential service to the cause of God, when they use their influence to excite and countenance those, who "labour in the word and doctrine," and by their example and public declarations make it known, that they most approve of such as diligently attend on the instructions of such teachers. And though no violence must be done to any man's conscience, nor any one constrained to teach in contradiction to his judgment: yet surely they, who are publicly maintained as teachers of the people, may be required either to do their work, or to give place to those who will!—Notwithstanding the prejudices of mankind, and the indiscretions of individuals, an itinerant preacher, if duly qualified and sent forth, is one of the most honourable and useful characters that can be found upon earth: and there needs no other proof that, when this work is done properly and with oxen for him in abundance, and for the people that he had with him, and persuaded him to go up with him to Ramoth-gilead.

3 And Ahab king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat king of Judah, Wilt thou go with me to Ramoth-gilead? And he answered him, I am as thou art, and my people as thy people; and we will be with thee in the war.

4 ¶ And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, Inquire, I pray thee, at the word of the Lord to-day.

5 Therefore the king of Israel gathered together of prophets four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, Go up; for God will deliver it into the king's hand.

6 But Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a perseverance, it forms the grand method of spreading widely, and rendering efficacious, religious knowledge, than the experience of the church in all ages; for great reformation and revivals of religion have generally been thus effected. It is especially sanctioned by the example of Christ and his apostles, and recommended as the divine method of spreading the gospel through the nations of the earth; itinerant preaching having almost always preceded, and made way for, the stated ministry of regular pastors. But it is a work which requires peculiar talents and dispositions, and a peculiar call in Providence; and is not rashly and hastily to be ventured upon by every novice, who has learned to speak about the gospel, and has more zeal, than knowledge, prudence, humility, or experience. An unblemished character, a disinterested spirit, an exemplary deadness to the world, unaffected humility, deep acquaintance with the human heart, and preparation for enduring the cross, not only with boldness, but with meekness, patience, and sweetness of temper, are indispensably necessary in such a service. They who engage in it should go upon broad scriptural grounds, and dwell chiefly upon those grand essentials of religion, in which pious men of different persuasions are agreed; plainly proving every thing from the word of God, running nothing into extremes, and avoiding all disputes, however urged to it, about the shibboleths of a party. In this way itinerant preaching is a blessing which all, who love the souls of men, must wish to be vouchsafed to every part of every nation upon earth. And if those who are in authority, would employ select men of known and approved piety and ability, protected and countenanced by them, to go from city to city, and from village to village, through the kingdom, teaching in every place the plain acknowledged truths and precepts of the Bible, immense good might be done. Those stated teachers, who have been grossly negligent or profligate, must either be disgraced or reformed; others might be stirred up to use greater diligence; and the instructions of stated faithful ministers would receive an additional sanction, which could not fail of producing a happy effect.—Thus it was in the days of Jehoshaphat; and thus it will be, wherever or whenever God shall please to stir up the hearts of kings, princes, and ministers, to teach the people in every part of their territories, according to the word of God. This is also the proper way of promoting public peace and prosperity; and it will prove a better protection of nations, than an increase of powerful armies or navies; yet it may very properly be connected with the ordinary methods of defence.—Persons in authority have "much business" to which they ought to attend; and they should consider that stable peace, and increasing numbers of well maintained and orderly subjects, are more honourable than the most successful wars; and whatever ability any man possesses, he should willingly devote himself to God, and serve him with all that he has.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. Affinity, &c.] Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat married Athaliah the daughter of Ahab. (Notes, 1 Kings 22:2. 2 Kings 8:18, 26.) Perhaps pride and ambition had some influence in forming this fatal union: but probably Jehoshaphat was allured to it, by the hopes of cementing a durable peace between Judah and Israel, whom he wished to consider as brethren. (Note, 2 Kings 8:18.) Ahab perceived Jehoshaphat to be so strong, that he had no hopes of prevailing against him, and therefore he courted his friendship. But this affinity was evil in itself, and peculiarly dangerous to Jehoshaphat: who, though firm and courageous in resisting and overcoming opposition and difficulties, was easily persuaded by fair words into improper compliances. (Notes, 1 Kings 22:4, 7, 29. 2 Kings 3:7.)

V. 2-6. Notes, 1 Kings 22:1.—7. We will be with thee in the war. (3) Thus Jehoshaphat expressly engaged to assist Ahab, before he proposed to inquire of God. (Note, Josh. 9:14, 15.)—Ahab entertained both Jehoshaphat and his attendants, with great splendour. . . . He caressed him to at this feast, and used such arguments, as prevailed with him to prophet of the LORD 'besides, that we might inquire of him?

7 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet one man, by whom we may inquire of the LORD: but I hate him; for he never prophesieth good unto me, but always evil: the same is Micaiah the son of Imia. And Jehoshaphat said, Let not the king say so.

8 And the king of Israel called for one of his officers, and said, Fetch quickly Micaiah the son of Imia.

9 And the king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat king of Judah, sat either of them on his throne, clothed in their robes, and they sat in a void place at the entering in of the gate of Samaria: and all the prophets prophesied before them.

10 And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah had made him horns of iron, and said, Thus saith the LORD, With these thou shalt push Syria until they be consumed.

11 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

12 And the messenger that went to call Micaiah spake to him, saying, Behold, the words of the prophets declare good to the king with one assent; let thy word, therefore, I pray thee, be like one of theirs, and speak thou good.

13 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, even what my God saith, that will I speak.

14 And when he was come to the king, the king said unto him, Micaiah, shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And he said, Go ye up, and prosper, and they shall be delivered into your hand.

15 And the king said to him, How many times shall I adjure thee that thou say nothing but the truth to me in the name of the LORD?

16 Then he said, I did see all Israel scattered upon the mountains, as sheep that have no shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master; let them return therefore every man to his house in peace.

17 And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would not prophesy good unto me, but evil?

18 Again he said, Therefore hear the word of the LORD; I saw the LORD sitting upon his throne, and all the host of heaven standing on his right hand, and on his left.

19 And the LORD said, Who shall entice Ahab king of Israel, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one spake, saying after that manner.

20 Then there came out a spirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will entice him. And the LORD said unto him, Wherewith?

21 And he said, I will go out, and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And the LORD said, Thou shalt entice him, and thou shalt also prevail: go out and do even so.

22 Now therefore, behold, the LORD hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of these thy prophets, and the LORD hath spoken evil against thee.

23 Then Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah came near, and smote Micaiah upon the cheek and said, Which way went the Spirit of the LORD from me to speak unto thee?

24 And Micaiah said, Behold, thou shalt see on that day, when thou shalt go into an inner chamber to hide thyself.

25 Then the king of Israel said, Take ye Micaiah, and carry him back to Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king's son;

26 And say, Thus saith the king, Put this fellow in the prison, and feed him with bread of affliction, and with water of affliction, until I return in peace.

27 And Micaiah said, If thou certainly return in peace, then hath not the LORD spoken by me. And he said, Hearken, all ye people.

28 So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah went up to Ramoth-gilead.

29 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, I will disguise myself, and will go to the battle: but put thou on thy robes. So the king of Israel disguised himself; and they went to the battle.

30 Now the king of Syria had commanded the captains of the chariots that were with him, saying, Fight ye not with small or great, save only with the king of Israel.

31 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, It is the king of Israel. Therefore they compassed about him to fight: but Jehoshaphat cried out, and the LORD helped him; and God moved them to depart from him.

32 For it came to pass, that, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, they turned back again from pursuing him.

33 And a certain man drew a bow at a venture, and smote the king of Israel between the joints of the harness: therefore he said to his chariot-man, Turn thine hand, that thou mayest carry me out of the host; for I am wounded.

34 And the battle increased that day: howbeit the king of Israel stayed himself up in his chariot against the Syrians until the even; and about the time of the sun going down he died.

V. 30-34. Notes, 1 Kings 22:31-35.—God moved, &c. (31) In the extremity of danger, Jehoshaphat made the Lord his Refuge, who remembered his servant, though out of the path of duty; and, in answer to his prayer, inclined his pursuers to depart from him, by a secret but powerful influence on their minds.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Abundant riches and honour do indeed give large opportunities of doing good; but they are attended with such strong temptations, as very few who possess them are enabled to withstand. It is therefore a certain proof, that men are no well acquainted with the artifices of Satan, and the deceitfulness of their own hearts, and that they have much self-confidence, when they covet riches in order to do good; for they are far more likely to get harm by them. Among other evils, they often betray pious persons into improper marriages, for themselves or their children. It appears beneath them to

CHAPTER XIX.

Jehoshaphat, on his return, is reproved by Jehu the prophet, for joining alliance with Ahab; but commended in other respects, 1-3. He visits and reforms his kingdom; and gives a charge to the judges, priests, and Levites in the cities of Judah, and at Jerusalem, 5-11.

join affinity with inferior families; but "any many mighty or noble are called;" and so they are seduced to prefer titles and estates to faith and holiness; and the effects are generally lamentable to themselves, to posterity, and to the cause of godliness.—We should follow peace with all men; but we ought to have no intimacies with the workers of iniquity; for their carresses, flatteries, and feasts, are more dangerous than their most embittered rage; and in fact they are frequently the result of politic enmity, and at best proceed from mercenary self-love. Indeed, the most enormous wickedness is often veiled under a show of piety.—A very great majority of professed ministers, in many ages and places, have been teachers of lies; who, while they acted their parts with the name of God in their mouths, have secretly been prompted by Satan, "deceiving and being deceived." We should therefore be reminded not only to "inquire of the LORD," but careful likewise by whom we inquire of him; and also that we inquire his will, before we commit ourselves, by engagements that may be contrary to it.—They who flatter the humours of the rich and great will in general be most favoured; and those who offend the pride, or disturb the consciences, of such as are strangers to the power of godliness, will be hated, and may lay their account with hard usage: nay, such pious persons as associate with ungodly people, must often witness and seem to approve of, very abominable things. The event, however, will show faithful teachers in their proper light; so that even the wicked will be constrained to allow the propriety of their conduct. In the mean time, let them go on with confidence in God, simply declaring his whole message, and patiently bearing the cross; for "great will be their reward in heaven."—Satan is allowed to deceive those, who reject the testimony of God's prophets.—No policy can avert the stroke of the Lord's vengeance, when the time arrives; nor can his people ever be destitute of a refuge. He both can and will extricate them even from those difficulties and perils, into which they have sinfully brought themselves, when they earnestly and humbly call upon him; and, as he has all hearts in his hand, he can easily rescue them in their most urgent distresses.—"O LORD God of hosts, blessed is the man that putteth his trust in thee."

NOTES.—CHAP. XIX. V. 1. This peaceful return some exceeded Jehoshaphat's expectations, and was contrary to his deserts; and he was thus discriminated from Ahab to whom he had said, "I am as thou art" (18:32). Note, i Kings 22:4. "I suppose, as soon as the battle was over, he immediately went to Jerusalem, to return thanks to God for his wonderful preservation." Bp. Patrick

V. 2. Jehu was the son of Hanani, who was cast into prison by Asa for reproving him; (Note, 16:7—10.) yet he was not afraid of bringing a similar message to Jehoshaphat. That prince's alliance with a notorious idolater was a bad example to his subjects, which exceedingly tended to counteract his endeavours for reformation; and Ahab's expedition was undertaken in defiance of the word of God, and attended with such circumstances, as rendered Jehoshaphat excusable in helping him. For this misconduct "wrath was upon him from before the LORD;" not the wrath of an Enemy or avenging Judge, but that of an offended Father: and the fatal effects of this affinity upon his family and king-

7 Wherefore now, let the fear of the LORD be upon you; take heed and do it: for there is no iniquity with the LORD our God, nor respect of persons, nor taking of gifts.

8 ¶ Moreover in Jerusalem did Jehoshaphat set of the Levites, and of the priests, and of the chief of the fathers of Israel, for the judgment of the LORD, and for controversies, when they returned to Jerusalem.

9 And he charged them, saying, Thus shall ye do in the fear of the LORD, faithfully, and with a perfect heart.

10 And what cause soever shall come to you of your brethren that dwell in their cities, between blood and blood, between law and commandment, statutes and judgments, ye shall even warn them that they trespass not against the LORD, and so wrath come upon you, and upon your brethren: this do, and ye shall not trespass.

11 And behold, Amariah the chief priest is over you in all matters of the LORD; and Zebadiah the son of Ishmael, the ruler of the house of Judah, for all the king's matters; also the Levites shall be officers before you. Deal courageously, and the LORD shall be with the good.

V. 4. Jehoshaphat went no more to Samaria, but abode at Jerusalem, and in Judah, and attended to the affairs of his own kingdom. Being assured that the Lord had graciously accepted of his endeavours for reformation, he made a circuit through his kingdom to perfect that work, and to restore what had been overturned. For it seems, that the people had relapsed into idolatry, regarding his intimacy with Ahab as a kind of dispensation, to such as chose to avail themselves of it.

V. 5—11. In process of time, irregularities and abuses in the magistracy had interrupted the regular administration of justice: but Jehoshaphat carefully reduced this likewise to order; and took care that judges, and courts of justice, should be established in every considerable town, for the benefit of the neighbourhood; but with appeal to the superior courts at Jerusalem. (Notes. Ex. 23:1—3, 6—9. Deut. 16:18, 19. 17:8—13. 1 Chr. 23:2—6. 26:30—32.) In all these courts the priests and Levites were joined with the principal persons of the other tribes: for the law of God was in an especial manner the statute-law of the realm; according to which both ecclesiastical causes, or the "judgment of the LORD," the pleas of the crown, or "the king's matters," and common pleas, or "controversies," were to be determined. This settlement was completed, when the king and his attendants returned to Jerusalem from the circuit of the land; and both in the cities of Judah, and at Jerusalem, the king solemnly exhorted and charged the magistrates to do the duty of their office, in the fear of the Lord; as acting by his authority, in his presence, under his protection, copying his impartial justice and equity, and looking forward to the account which they must shortly render to him. (Marg. Ref. o—t. y.) "It is most agreeable to the Scripture to understand by the things of God, those which were defined by the law of God, and were to be judged of by that law: and by "the king's matters," such as not being defined by the divine law, were left to the judgment of the king; of which kind were all deliberations about what was expedient, or not expedient.... The court had different presidents, according to the nature of the causes. In things pertaining to God, Amariah the high-priest sat as the first judge; in things pertaining to the king, Zebadiah a principal person about the king... was the moderator." Grotius, quoted by Bp. Patrick. "The rest" (of the Levites) who were not judges, were ministers under them, to see their sentence executed.... He bids them not be afraid of any man, for God, who employed them, would stand by them, and defend them, if they were good and upright judges." Bp. Patrick.—Some interpret, blood and blood, of relationship and titles to estates; but it seems rather to mean causes concerning murder, maiming, or accidentally killing any one.—The judges were required to warn the people not to transgress; lest, besides other reasons, their brethren should be involved in the consequences of their crimes.

CHAPTER XX.

Jehoshaphat, alarmed by an invasion of the Moabites, Ammonites, and others, proclaims a fast, 1-4. His prayer, 5-13. Jehaziel, the prophet, assures him of a signal deliverance, 14-17. Jehoshaphat and his people receive the promise with adoring thankfulness, 18, 19. He exhorts them to believe, and appoints singers to praise the Lord, 21, 21. The invaders destroy one another, and the people of Judah gather immense spoils, 22-25. They bless God, at Bethshelah, return in triumph, and enjoy peace, 26-30. Jehoshaphat's good reign and acts, 31-34. He joins with Ahabaziah in sending ships to Tarshish, which are wrecked, according to the prediction of Eliezer, 35-37.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Nothing but perils, wrath, and painful effects, can be expected from intimacies with ungodly men; and that in proportion to the degree of their avowed hatred to the character, worship, and service of God. We ought therefore to shun all needless familiarity with them, and to show them and all the world, our disapprobation of their principles and conduct; whatever may be their rank, abilities, or accomplishments; or however political interests or relative ties may plead for a coalition. We should indeed bear them goodwill, and be ready to relieve their distress, and to help them in their most important interests: but we ought to be cautious of involving ourselves with their secular undertakings, and still more of concurring with them in any of their sinful projects. (Notes, 2 Cor. 6:14-18. Eph. 5:8-14. 2 John 7-11. P. O.)—The unmerited mercies of God are often united with severe rebukes and corrections; and these again are moderated by tokens of his approbation, where our conduct has been good in his sight: for he would not have those discouraged, who "prepare their hearts to seek him," and when there are really good things found in us, he will mercifully forgive the evil which we allow not or repent of, and accept the good, through the Saviour's advocacy. In these things we should be followers of God: we must not "hate our offending brother, nor suze sin upon him; but in any wise rebuke him" (Note, Lev. 19:17.) and we should take more pleasure in commending what is evidently good; and bear much from those in whom "good things are found."—While ministers ought not to fear or respect the persons of men, or be intimidated by the sufferings of others in the same cause, but must deliver their whole message plainly; they should also endeavour to do it with forbearance, tenderness, and candour, which will render reproofs less offensive and more effectual. When these are prudently given and properly taken, they are not only salutary, but confer honour on both parties: (Note, Prov. 25:11, 12.) and when, being united with due commendations, they excite men to renewed vigilance and diligence in their proper work, they become general benefits.—The tendency of human nature to evil renders unremitting vigour necessary in all those, who would suppress abuses and effect reformation: for, on every relaxation, evils will revive and gather strength rapidly, and all will need to be done over again.—The ministry and the magistracy, when restricted to their distinct methods, may concur in promoting godliness, as well as preserving public peace: and all legal decisions should be expedited in a regular and easy method, and with little expense; that the poor may be placed, as nearly as possible, at an equal advantage with the rich, in obtaining their dues.—Magistrates are the viceregents, of the Governor and Judge of the world, and are therefore to be ^hveiled in all things lawful for the Lord's sake. (Notes, Rom. 13:1-7.) But there lies an appeal from their decisions to a superior tribunal; and they should be constantly and solemnly reminded, that they will be exposed to condemnation, if they do not act uprightly in the fear of God, without respect of persons, or taking of gifts. And, besides executing the laws of man impartially, it is their duty also to warn men not to trespass against the Lord, lest wrath come upon them and their brethren. (Note, 17:7-9.) They should therefore ask ^ahelp of the Lord; even out of all ^bthe cities of Judah they came to seek the Lord.

5 ¶ And Jehoshaphat stood in the congregation of Judah and Jerusalem, in the house of the Lord, before the new court,

6 And said, "O LORD God of our fathers, ^cart not thou ^dGod in heaven? and ^erulest not thou over all the kingdoms of the heathen? and ^fin thy hand is there ^gnot power and might, so that ^hnone is able to withstand thee?

7 ⁱArt not thou ^jour God, ^kwho didst ^ldrive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and ^mgavest it to the seed of Abraham ⁿthy friend for ever?

8 And they dwelt therein, and have ^obuilt thee a sanctuary therein for thy name, saying, take heed and deal courageously, not fearing the displeasure of man, but confiding in the protection of God, who is with them in the judgment; that he may indeed be with them for their good. NOTES.—CHAP. XX. V. 1, 2. (Notes, 14:1-15. 31: 20, 21. 32:4-5. 1 Sam. 7:1-7.) "The fear of the Lord had fallen upon the kingdoms round about Judah," and Jehoshaphat had so long enjoyed peace, that he seems to have neglected his military arrangements, and to have relaxed his vigilance. (Notes, 17:10-19.) Perhaps his enemies observed this, and thought to take advantage of it; or they had heard "that wrath was upon him from before the LORD," for uniting with Ahab. This formidable armament consisted of Moabites, Ammonites, and the allies of the Ammonites, (Note, 10:11) and came from "beyond the sea on this side Syria," that is the dead sea, or salt sea, which was considered as one of the western boundaries of Syria; and they were encamped in his dominions at Engedi. (Marg. Ref. e, f.) before he was informed of their approach, or apprised of their intentions. This would prevent his mustering all his forces.

9 "If, ^pwhen evil cometh upon us, ^qas the sword, judgment, or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence, (for ^rthy name ^sis in this house,) and cry unto thee in our affliction, then thou wilt hear and help.

V. 3, 4. Probably, this invasion took place not long after Jehoshaphat's return from Ramoth-gilead; and he was afraid that God was about to chastise his sin by permitting the devastation of his kingdom. To avert this calamity, "he set himself to seek the LORD." It may be supposed, that he made the best military arrangement of which the exigency would admit: but his chief preparation consisted in proclaiming a fast, and gathering his people together to ask help of the Lord.—We have in the preceding books of Scripture, read of private fasting with prayer; of "afflicting the soul" at the day of atonement; of the people's fasting at the instance of Samuel the prophet; and of their fasting by common consent: (Notes, Lev. 16:29-31. Deut. 9:15, 25. Judg. 20:26-28. 1 Sam. 7:5, 6. 2 Sam. 12:16.) but the fast here mentioned was observed at the proclamation of the chief magistrate, who acted by the authority of his station, and not by the Spirit of prophecy: and the event of this measure, both warrants civil governors in times of distress to act in this manner, and encourages them to expect the most important benefits from it. Every one was called on to humble himself before God for his own sins, and the sins of the public, as the aggregate of the whole. Thus they united in expressing their sorrow and self-discrepancy for their sins; and they publicly honoured God as the righteous Author of their calamity, and as their only Hope and Refuge in distress. All other cares being laid aside, they were at leisure to unite in uninterrupted and fervent prayers for help and forgiveness. Doubtless serious impressions would be made on many, who before had been inattentive; the pious affections of others would be revived, and rendered more fixed and lively; and in every way it would tend to the honour of God, and the good of his people.

V. 5. New court. It is not known what is here meant by the new court: but, probably, Jehoshaphat had rebuilt some of the courts, or had added one to them.

V. 6-9. After the example of Solomon, Jehoshaphat himself offered the public prayer for this large congregation, in words which proceeded from the abundance of his heart: a careful examination of the marginal references will be found the best comment on them. (Notes, 1 Kings 8:33-43. 1 Chr. 29:10-19.)—Abraham thy friend. (7) אַבְרָהָם a lover of thee. (Marg. Ref. Notes, John 15:12-16. Jam. 2:22-29.)

V. 10, 11. The mention of mount Seir, the country of Edom, shows what is meant in the first verse by "other beside the Ammonites."—The Moabites, Ammonites, and

10 And now behold, the children of Ammon and Moab, and mount Seir, whom thou wouldest not let Israel invade, when they came out of the land of Egypt, but they turned from them, and destroyed them not;

11 Behold, I say, how they reward us, to come to cast us out of thy possession, which thou hast given us to inherit.

12 O our God, wilt thou not judge them? for we have no might against this great company that cometh against us; neither know we what to do: but our eyes are upon thee.

13 And all Judah stood before the Lord, with their little ones, their wives, and their children.

[Practical Observations.]

14 ¶ Then upon Jahaziel the son of Zechariah, the son of Benaiah, the son of Jeiel, the son of Mattaniah, a Levite of the sons of Asaph, came the Spirit of the Lord in the midst of the congregation;

15 And he said, Harken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat; Thus saith the Lord unto you, Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not yours, but God's.

16 To-morrow go ye down against them: behold, they come up by the cliff of Ziz; and ye shall find them at the end of the brook, before the wilderness of Jeruel.

17 Ye shall not need to fight in this battle: set yourselves, stand ye still, and see the salvation of the Lord with you, O Judah and Jerusalem: fear not, nor be dismayed; to-morrow go out against them: for the Lord will be with you.

18 And Jehoshaphat bowed his head with his face to the ground: and all Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, fell before the Lord, worshipping the Lord.

19 And the Levites of the children of the Kohathites, and of the children of the Korhites stood up to praise the Lord God of Israel with a loud voice on high.

20 ¶ And they rose early in the morning, and went forth into the wilderness of Tekoa: and as they went forth, Jehoshaphat stood and said, Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem; Believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper.

21 And when he had consulted with the people, he appointed singers unto the Lord, and that should praise the beauty of holiness, as they went out before the army, and to say, Praise the Lord; for his mercy endureth for ever.

22 And when they began to sing and to praise, the Lord set ambushments against the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, which were come against Judah; and they were smitten.

23 For the children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the inhabitants of mount Seir, utterly to slay and destroy them: and when they had

Edomites, had been expressly named as nations whom Israel must not invade; and the divine admonition had been exactly attended to. (Deut. 2:4-7, 9, 19. Note, Num. 20:14-21.) Other wars indeed had brought some of them under the dominion of Judah and Israel: but it seems the superiority had been used with gentleness, and no reason had been given for this violent assault; in which, it is probable, the confederates meant to destroy the kingdom of Judah, and the house of David; as well as to expel the people of God, from that land which was "his possession," so that the war was indeed waged against the Lord himself. (Notes, Judg. 11:12-27.)

V. 12. The language of this verse is peculiarly expressive of humble, genuine faith. The appeal, as to the justice of the cause, is simply, yet emphatically, made to God; and the inability of Jehoshaphat, with the force which he had hastily collected, or indeed with any forces apart from the powerful aid of God, to resist so vast an army; the perplexity to which he was reduced; and his only refuge from despair, by firmly relying on the Almighty, and expecting help from him, as pleading his own cause in pleading theirs; are stated in the most natural and affecting manner. (Note, 14:9-15.)

—In this weak and declining condition, wherein the church now is, ... let us say daily with Jehoshaphat, "We know not what to do; but our eyes are unto thee." "Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory." Thou art our King and our Shepherd; we are thy people, and the sheep of thy pasture. Thou only art powerful, we are infirm; but thy power will be perfected in our weakness. "Not unto us, O Lord, but to thy name give the glory; for thy mercy and thy truth's sake." Do not remember our iniquities, but save us for thy mercy's sake; for we are brought very low.—Such addresses to God ... will illustrate this prayer of Jehoshaphat, better than the largest commentaries. Victorinus Strigelius in Bp. Patrick.

(Note, Jon. 4:9-11.)

V. 14-17. The Lord did not speak on this occasion by the high-priest, but by an ordinary Levite descended from Asaph, who, it is probable, was an eminently pious person. Whether he had previously been known as a prophet, or not, all present were satisfied that he spoke by the Spirit of God. He assured them of the Lord's especial interposition: for, as the battle immediately concerned his honour, it would be decided by his power. "The war is not to you, but to God." (Note, 10:11.) Without any fear of the immense multitude of their invaders, they were ordered to march forth the next day, not to fight, but to witness the salvation of the Lord with them, and his answer to their fervent prayers. (Notes, Ez. 14:13, 14. 1 Sam. 17:45-47.)

V. 18, 19. The king and his people, placing the most entire confidence in the divine promise, at once anticipated its fulfilment, and directly joined in an act of solemn adoration, and in songs of gratitude and praise for this yet unaccomplished deliverance.

V. 20, 21. Jehoshaphat seems not greatly to have regarded the arrangement of his army; for he so firmly believed the words of the prophet, that he marched forth as to a triumph, and not to a battle. Accordingly he exhorted his troops to a firm faith in God, and an entire reliance on his power, faithfulness, and covenanted mercy to his people; and a confident expectation, that all his words spoken to them by his prophets should be accomplished: for thus, and thus only, could they be established and prosper. (Is. 7:9.) Having consulted with the chief persons of the people that were with him, he also appointed singers to go before the army, "that should praise the beauty of holiness;" that is, according to some expositors, exactly as they used to do at his beautiful sanctuary. But perhaps the expression rather means, that they should celebrate the glorious excellences of God, which render him "the Perfection of beauty," and the meet object of the most absolute love, confidence, and delight of all his rational creatures; especially, as "his mercy which endureth for ever," is displayed in perfect harmony with his more awful attributes. (Notes, 5:12, 13. 7:1-3. 1 Chr. 16:28, 29. Ps. 50:1, 2. 90:13-17. 136:1-3.)

V. 22-25. Some commentators, both ancient and modern, think that angels were employed on this occasion, who came on the invaders by surprise, as from an ambushment, and slew some of them: and that the survivors supposed themselves assaulted by their confederates; and so retaliated, till they fell into utter confusion, and entirely destroyed one another.—But perhaps the Lord only left the several nations to a natural distrust and jealousy of each other: and thus some of them formed ambushments against the rest, which terminated in their mutual destruction. Or perhaps the ambushments placed against the Jews, fell by mistake on their own allies. This, however, fulfilled the purpose of God, as effectually as if he had placed the ambushments, or they had acted in obedience to his commandment. The slaughter was universal, and the spoil immense: so that this invasion served exceedingly to enrich Jehoshaphat and his kingdom. (Notes, 32:27-29. Rom. 8:35-39.)

V. 26-28. "Berachah" signifies Blessing. Having previously sought deliverance, by fasting and prayer, and received the assurance of it with grateful joy, Jehoshaphat and his army returned immediate and most fervent thanks and praise to the Lord, who had in so wonderful a manner performed his promise. They did not return every man to his own home; ... but first went back to Jerusalem to bless ma to an end of the inhabitants of Seir, every one helped to destroy another.

24 And when Judah came toward the watch-tower in the wilderness, they looked unto the multitude, and, behold, they were dead bodies fallen to the earth, and none escaped.

25 And when Jehoshaphat and his people came to take away the spoil of them, they found among them in abundance both riches with the dead bodies, and precious jewels, which they stripped off for themselves, more than they could carry away: and they were three days in gathering of the spoil, it was so much.

26 ¶ And on the fourth day they assembled themselves in the valley of Berachah; for there they blessed the LORD: therefore the name of the same place was called, The valley of Berachah, unto this day.

27 Then they returned every man of Judah and Jerusalem, and Jehoshaphat in the fore-front of them, to go again to Jerusalem with joy; for the LORD had made them to rejoice over their enemies.

28 And they came to Jerusalem with psalteries and harps and trumpets unto the house of the LORD.

29 And the fear of God was on all the kingdoms of those countries, when they had heard that the LORD fought against the enemies of Israel.

32 And he walked in the way of Asa his father, and departed not from it, doing that which was right in the sight of the LORD.

33 Howbeit, the high places were not taken away: for as yet the people had not prepared their hearts unto the God of their fathers.

34 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of Jehu the son of Hanani, who is mentioned in the book of the kings of Israel.

35 ¶ And after this did Jehoshaphat king of Judah join himself with Ahaziah king of Israel, who did very wickedly:

36 And he joined himself with him to make ships to go to Tarshish: and they made the ships in Ezion-gaber.

37 Then Eliezer the son of Dodavah of Mare-shah, prophesied against Jehoshaphat, saying, "Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, the LORD hath broken thy works. And the ships were broken, that they were not able to go to Tarshish."

him! (the Lord) 'again for hearing their prayers, and making good his promises.' Bp. Patrick. The whole forms a most remarkable and instructive history; and no undertaking, recorded in Scripture, was entered on, conducted, and concluded, in a more unexceptionable manner.

V. 29, 30. When the surrounding nations perceived how wonderfully the Lord had destroyed this powerful armament, they dared not to attack Jehoshaphat any more; and thus God gave him rest round about, which continued during the remainder of his reign. (Note, 17:10)

V. 31-34. (Notes, 17:3. 2 Sam. 22:21-28. 1 Kings 22:41-46.) The minds of the people were not suitably prepared for the regular and cordial worship of God at Jerusalem: so that Jehoshaphat either did not dare to attempt, or was not able to effect, an entire and abiding suppression of all those high places, where God was irregularly worshipped. (Marg. Ref. u, x. Notes, 17:6. 19:2-4.)

V. 35-37. Jehoshaphat's affinity with Ahab's family drew him in to join in this traffic with wicked Ahaziah, for which he was rebuked and chastened; and afterwards he refused to join with him. Ahaziah died within less than two years after Ahab, and Jehoshaphat survived him for a considerable period. (Notes, 1 Kings 22:48, 49. 2 Kings 1:1-17. 6:16, 17.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. Uninterrupted peace must not be expected in this world, even when we are most devotedly serving God. The enemies of true religion are the more exasperated by our zeal to promote it; our own miscarriages require rebukes; trials are needful to repress pride; and difficulties form the proper exercise and discovery of our faith, love, patience, and hope in God. This his honour, the edification of others, the good of our own souls, and our situation in the midst of ungodly men, all require that "in the world we should have tribulation."—In calamities or dangers, public or personal, our first business should be to seek help from the Lord. When two or three agree in doing this, that concurrence adds energy to their supplications: how much more then, when multitudes with one accord pour out their fervent supplications for the same common blessing! Hence the advantage of days appointed for national fasting and prayer. Such seasons remind the remnant of believers to unite in the same requests, as with one heart and one voice; and even the cries of unconverted men for outward mercies form an honourable acknowledgment of God, and of man's entire dependence on him; and frequently receive a gracious answer. It is therefore commendable in Christian princes to call their people to these solemn services; and it is indeed a most important part of their duty and true wisdom; but it can scarcely be supposed that the mere appointment is sufficient; unless their own example proves that they are in earnest in the sacred service, let who will be formal. It is also the duty of every individual, according to his station in the community, to concur in such pious measures, and to stir up himself and those around him, to engage cordially in them, that good impressions may be made, fixed, or revived in the minds of men in every place.—What then shall we think of those, who call themselves Christians and patriots; yet not only neglect, but ridicule or revile, this scriptural method of seeking help in danger, from our almighty Friend, after an example so honoured by God himself? or of those, who give occasion to such reproach and contempt, by their absurd and manifest hypocrisy in these observances?—The fear of wrath, when united with a hope of mercy, excites sinners to seek the Lord in good earnest; and is often useful to quicken the believer, when his love has subsided, and he is grown slothful in the concerns of his soul. We must, therefore, first approach the holy majesty of our God, with humiliation for our sin, justifying him in all we suffer or fear, and confiding only in his mercy for acceptance, and in his power for protection. And in all ages of the church, fasting has been deemed an expedient attendant upon such exercises, on particular occasions, personal and public; being expressive of a mind abstracted from earthly things; conscious of having forfeited every enjoyment by sin; and attentive only to obtain the great objects which the soul is then pursuing.—All believers are sons of Abraham and "friends of God;" with such persons the everlasting covenant is established, and to them every promise belongs. (Notes, Gen. 12:1-3. John 15:12-16. Rom. 5:1, 2.) Even in those distresses, which are intended for the correction of their sins, when they cry unto the Lord, he will hear and help them. Their enemies are his enemies; and when they are rewarded with evil for good, he will appear for them and plead their cause. When they are the most indisposed to avenge themselves, and least able to ward off injuries, their dependence on God will become more unreserved, and their prayers more fervent; and he will no more forsake those, who "know not what to do," but look up to him alone for help; than a fond mother will desert her helpless infant, that clings to her bosom, and knows and seeks no other refuge. Indeed, this is the very frame of mind to which he designs to form his people.—The covenant is made with believers "for the good of their children after them;" and they should bring them, and the rest of their families, as soon as possible to the ordinances of God, that they may be trained up in his house, and become truly a part of his family.

V. 14-37. The Lord will surely speak peace to those, who seek him in a due manner; and when his word banishes our fears and calms our spirits, our prayers are answered in good measure, even previously to those providential deliverances, of which we have received a blessed pledge.—If our sins be pardoned, "God is for us;" and "if he be for us, who can be against us?" We need not be dismayed at the number and power of our enemies, or on account of our own weakness: "the battle is the LORD's," and the victory is sure. We have only to observe his word of command, whether he call us to labour, to wrestle, and strive; or whether it become our part to "stand still, and to see the salvation of the LORD." When victorious faith receives the promises, their accomplishment is anticipated with humble gratitude. The Christian soldier may sing his songs of triumph, when marching to

CHAPTER XXI.

Jehoshaphat dies; Jehoram succeeds, slays his brethren, and reigns wickedly.

4 Now when Jehoram was risen up to the kingdom of his father, he strengthened himself, and ^eslew all his brethren with the sword, and ^fdivers also of the princes of Israel.

5 Jehoram was thirty and two years old when he began to reign, and ^ghe reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

6 And he walked ^hin the way of the kings of Israel, like as did the house of Ahab; for ⁱhe had the daughter of Ahab to wife: and he wrought that which was evil in the eyes of the LORD.

7 Howbeit the LORD would not destroy the house of David, ^kbecause of the covenant that he had made with David, and ^las he promised to give a light to him and to his sons for ever.

8 ^mIn his days ⁿthe Edomites revolted from under the dominion of Judah, ^oand made themselves a king.

9 Then Jehoram went forth with his princes, and all his chariots with him: and he rose up by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him in, and the captains of the chariots.

10 So the Edomites revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. The same time also did ^pLibnah revolt from under his hand; ^qbecause he had forsaken the LORD God of his fathers.

11 Moreover ^rhe made high places in the mountains of Judah, and ^scaused the inhabitants of Jerusalem to commit ^tfornication, and ^ucompelled Judah thereto.

12 ^vAnd there came ^wa writing to him from ^xElijah the prophet, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of David thy father, Because thou hast not walked ^yin the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father, nor ^zin the ways of Asa king of Judah, the field, or conflicting in his spiritual battles, being assured that he shall be ¹made more than conqueror, through the Saviour who hath loved him: ²and thus the joy and praise of the church militant may emulate and anticipate that of the church triumphant.—But alas! our faith is apt to waver, and then our joys decline: believers need frequent exhortations to persevering faith and hope in God; and it becomes the strong in this manner to animate the weak.—As we cannot know the truth and promises of God, except by his prophets and apostles; how can we believe in him, unless we firmly credit their infallible testimony, as recorded in the sacred Scriptures? In proportion as we expect protection in this way from God, by obedient faith, we “shall be established,” and prosper; and shall adore the beauty of the divine holiness, and the everlasting mercy of God in Christ Jesus, with thankful hearts: and the more generally and publicly this is done in any country, the greater stability and success will attend the affairs of the nation. When we thus arrange and conduct our affairs, our enemies will fall before us; our trials will prove our gain; and our very sorrows will enrich our souls with more abundant rejoicing. The advantage will be all our own; but the whole glory will be ascribed to the Lord.—We should always render our tribute of praise and gratitude for mercies received, when our hearts are impressed with a lively sense of the loving-kindness of God: as thanksgivings, for public or private benefits, grow languid by delay. But alas! we find very few who are so prompt to return thanks for favours vouchsafed, as they were to cry for relief in the hour of distress. (Note, and P. O. Luke 17:11—19.) Blessed be God, there are some honourable exceptions, whose example proves very useful.—Mercy thus sought and improved will be durable; and if God give us rest, none will dare to molest us.—But the best of men seldom shine so bright in prosperity as in adversity; and even relapses into sin may be noticed in very valuable characters, which the Lord will mark with rebukes and chastenings. Many things must also remain imperfect in the church on earth; for there are many desirable regulations which the greatest reformers have not ventured to attempt, or have not been able to accomplish: and indeed, except men’s hearts are prepared to seek the LORD, magistrates and ministers can do nothing effectual. The zealous, however, will never labour in vain. Much good will be done, though not all which they desire. God will graciously accept their endeavours; and in heaven they will be associated with “the spirits of just men made perfect,” and made like them in holiness and felicity.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXI. V. 2. The second Azariah, in the original, is called Azariah.—King of Israel. Jehoshaphat is called here “the king of Israel,” not “king of Judah,” as the whole nation sprang from Jacob, whom God surnamed Israel; and he reigned over a considerable part of it. (4. 28:19.)

V. 3. Perhaps Jehoram had acted the hypocrite during his father’s lifetime; but, even if he showed his evil disposition, Jehoshaphat, having no command from God, did not think it proper to set him aside; otherwise his brethren were better than he, more wise and more righteous. (Note, 13.) The succession of so wicked a king as Jehoram, to pious Jehoshaphat, was a just judgment on the men of Judah for “not having prepared their hearts unto the God of their fathers,” during the preceding reigns. (Note, 20:31—34, v. 33.)

V. 4. On one pretence or another, Jehoram cruelly slew all his brethren, from a jealous ambition, lest they should supplant him in his authority; which was probably increased by their reputation and favour with the people; and the affluence and authority to which Jehoshaphat had raised them. (Note, Judg. 9:4—6.) He slew some of the princes also, who probably favoured them. Some think these were the magistrates whom Jehoshaphat had appointed. (19:—11.) This he did, lest they should revenge on him the murder of his brethren.

V. 5, 6. Notes, 18:1. 1 Kings 16:30—33. 2 Kings 8:16—18.

V. 7. 2 Kings 8:19. Notes, 2 Sam. 7:12—16. 1 Kings 11:11—13,34—36, v. 36. Is. 9:6,7. Jer. 23:5,6. 33:14—26. Ez. 37:24,25.

V. 8—11. (Note, 2 Kings 8:20—24.) Jehoram obtained some advantages over the Edomites, but could not re-establish his dominion.—Libnah seems to have revolted, because they would not submit to his idolatrous impositions.—The inhabitants of Jerusalem were induced by his persuasions to fall in with his idolatry; but the other parts of Judah were compelled to it by persecution.—All kinds of licentious and unnatural practices, to the extreme disgrace of human nature, were encouraged, and even held sacred, in the worship of these abominable idols, as may undeniably be proved even from pagan authors.

V. 12. If the account of Elijah’s translation be given according to the order of time in which it occurred, it happened before Jehoram reigned alone. (Notes, 2 Kings 2:11—18. 3:11,12.) But the spirit of prophecy might direct Elijah to prepare this writing before his translation, in the foresight of Jehoram’s crimes; it might be left to Elisha, or some other prophet, to transmit it to him; and coming in that extraordinary manner, it would have a peculiarly awful energy. ¹Elijah, foreseeing by the Spirit of prophecy, before he went to heaven, the wickedness of Jehoram, spake these words to one of the prophets, and charged him to put them down in writing, and to send them in a letter to Jehoram, when he grew so impious as is here related; and let him know, that Elijah commanded this writing to be delivered to him: that so Jehoram being affected with it, as if it had been sent from heaven, might be moved to repent of the evil he had done? Bp. Patrick.—Some, however, have not improbably conjectured, that Elisha, and not Elijah, is intended.—The opinion, found in Josephus, and elsewhere, that this letter was sent by Elijah from heaven, only shows, that the papists have not the honour of being the first inventors of such legendary tales. (Acts 19. 35.)

V. 13. Better.] Jehoram’s brethren seem to have been pious persons, and hated for the same cause as Abel was hated by Cain. ¹This seems to signify that they were pious persons, who abhorred idolatry: and therefore his sin was the more heinous, in cutting them off, proceeding from enmity to God, as well as to them? Bp. Patrick. (Notes, Gen. 4. 6—9. 1 John 3:11,12.)

V. 14, 15. Many of the people had concurred in Jehoram’s idolatry; and some of them must have been instruments in his base, unnatural murders. They were therefore joined in his punishment, and he suffered by losing his subjects (Note, 18—20.) ¹All which calamities were the direct

13 But hast waked "in the way of the kings of Israel, and hast made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to go a whoring, like to the whoredoms of the house of Ahab, and also hast slain thy brethren of thy father's house, which were better than thyself:

14 Behold, with a great plague will the Lord smite thy people, and thy children, and thy wives, and all thy goods:

15 And thou shalt have great sickness, by disease of thy bowels, until thy bowels fall out by reason of the sickness day by day.

^{a. c.]} 16 Moreover, the Lord stirred up ^{884.} against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines, and of the Arabians, that were near the Ethiopians:

17 And they came up into Judah, and brake into it, and carried away all the substance that was found in the king's house, and his sons also, and his wives; so that there was never a son left him, save Jehoahaz, the youngest of his sons.

18 And after all this the Lord smote him in his bowels with an incurable disease.

19 And it came to pass, that in process of time, after the end of two years, his bowels fell out by reason of his sickness: so he died of sore diseases. And his people made no burning for him, like the burning of his fathers.

20 Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem eight years, and departed without being desired: howbeit they buried him in the city of David, but not in the sepulchres of the kings.

CHAPTER XXII.

Ahaziah succeeds Jehoram, reigns wickedly, Jos a Jehoram king of Israel, and is slain by Jehu, 1-9. Ahaziah murders the good royal, and usurps the throne, 10. Josiah is preserved by Jehoshaphat's ath, 11, 12.

AND the inhabitants of Jerusalem made Ahaziah his youngest son king in his stead: for the band of men that came with the Arabians to the camp had slain all the eldest. So Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah reigned.

2 Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Athaliah the daughter of Omri.

3 He also walked in the ways of the house of Ahab: for his mother was his counsellor to do wickedly.

4 Wherefore he did evil in the sight of the Lord, like the house of Ahab: for they were his counsellors, after the death of his father, to his destruction.

5 He walked also after their counsel, and went with Jehoram the son of Ahab king of Israel, to war against Hazael king of Syria at Ramoth-gilead: and the Syrians smote Joram.

6 And he returned to be healed in Jezreel, because of the wounds which were given him at Ramah, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria. And Azariah the son of Jehoram king of Judah went down to see Jehoram the son of Ahab at Jezreel, because he was sick.

V. 16, 17. The Philistines invaded him on the west side of his kingdom, as the Arabians did on the east side.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, 17:11.) The spirit of these invaders was especially stirred up against Jehoram, and they do not seem to have done any great mischief to the country, or to Jerusalem. Having taken captive all his sons, except Jehoahaz, or Ahaziah, (names of similar meaning,) they put them to death. (Note, 22:1.)—Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab, was left by the invaders; but she proved a still further curse to the family of Jehoram. It is probable that she concealed herself and her youngest son.

V. 18—20. Jehoram lived to witness the fulfilment of the other most afflictive particulars of Elijah's prophecy; and then he was seized with the predicted malady. (12—15. Notes, Deut. 28:61. Acts 12:20—23.) He was a young man, yet he could get no relief from the most painful and loathsome disease imaginable; and "he departed without being desired." No one regretted his death, as none had desired his recovery; but the idolaters, and even his dependents, were glad to be relieved from his tyranny: they therefore burnt no sweet spices in honour of him, and refused to bury him among their former kings. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The effects of sin may be very dreadful and durable, even when it does not prove finally destructive to him who committed it.—No means can ensure divine grace to our children; but intimate connexions with atrocious sinners almost render their ungodliness certain.—We are reminded to bless God for equitable rulers, a mild administration, and a limited and well-arranged constitution of government; and to pray for a continuance of these blessings: for, notwithstanding the most prudent regulations, we may be suddenly and irreparably bereaved of them, unless God mercifully protect us.—Ambition, envy, and jealousy destroy natural affection, and convert men into savage monsters; when they have obtained power, and are afraid of losing it, and when "there is no fear of God before their eyes." In the mystery of Providence, such persons prosper for a time, and murder much wiser and better men than themselves: but the Lord has righteous purposes in permitting these events; part of which may now be discerned, and all the rest will be discovered by the light of the eternal world.—The vilest characters are, in some way, connected in the great chain of causes and effects: and are reserved to be undesignedly instrumental in carrying on the purposes of God, and in fulfilling his promises to his church and servants: or they are spared awhile, for the sake of their relation to those, whom "he delighteth to honour." But his plan will not long require them; their measure of iniquities will speedily be full, and then all their prosperity will end in ruin and despair.—The Lord, by one means or other, awfully reminds offenders of their guilt, and warns them of their danger: and those, who despise these admonitions, will experience the truth of them when it is too late for, if neither judgments nor respites bring men to repentance, destruction cannot be far distant.—The dreadful torments and deaths of some murderers, persecutors, and other haughty criminals, who defy human justice, proclaim, that "verily there is a God, that judgeth the world;" and show what all such enemies of God and man may expect, in the day of wrath and righteous vengeance. None need lament the departure of those who were plagues and tempters while they lived: and it may be right, in some cases, to withhold customary respect from them after their death; that other tyrants and persecutors, when surrounded by sycophants who flatter them in their crimes, may understand how they are despised and abhorred in the general sentiments of mankind. May the Lord enable us so to live, that we may have hope and comfort in the approach and agonies of death, and a joyful entrance into glory; and that our survivors may have to bless God for the benefit which they have received from us, and to regret our removal. Of this we should be ambitious, and such honour in some degree have all the saints of God.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXII. V. 1. The Arabians seem to have taken Jehoram's family captive, in the prospect of obtaining a ransom: but some band of men in their camp slew them; and thus defeated their purpose, but accomplished that of God. (Note, 21:16,17.)

V. 2-4. Forty and two. (2) As Jehoram was under forty years old when he died, it must be granted that this is an error of the transcribers, and that it should be twenty-two, as in Kings, (2 Kings 8:26) and in some ancient versions.—Ahaziah was born when his father was eighteen years of age, yet he had several elder brethren: so that Jehoram must have been married to Athaliah when he was very young; and this circumstance rendered Jehoshaphat's conduct in this alliance still more blameable. (Note, 18:1.)

V. 5. Ahaziah would not imitate his grandfather in that which was good in him; yet he followed his bad example, in joining with Ahab's son, as Jehoshaphat had with Ahab. Bp. Patrick.—This propensity in human nature, not only to copy bad examples, but even to select the bad part of good characters for imitation, is an awful and conclusive proof of deep depravity.

V. 6. (2 Kings 8:28,29.) The name given to the king of Judah in this verse, though in the translation the difference is not great, yet it is greater in the original, and seems to have been a distinct name by which he was known. (אחזיהו, Ahaziah; אַזַּרְיָהוּ, Azariah.)—It signifies the help of the Lord.

V. 7-9. (Notes, 2 Kings 9:21—28. 10:13,14.) The Lord was pleased to commission Jehu, at this crisis, in order that Ahaziah might be involved in the righteous judgment, which was executed upon the house of Ahab.—Ahaziah lay concealed in the kingdom of Samaria, though not in the city

7 And the destruction of Ahaziah was of God, ¹ coming to Joram: for when he was come, ² he went out with Jehoram against Jehu the son of Nimshi, whom ³ the LORD had anointed to cut off the house of Ahab.

8 And it came to pass, that ¹ when Jehu was executing judgment upon the house of Ahab, and found the princes of Judah, and the sons of the brethren of Ahaziah, that ministered to Ahaziah, he slew them.

9 And ¹ he sought Ahaziah; and they caught him, (for he was hid ² in Samaria,) and brought him to Jehu: and when they had slain him, they buried him: ³ "Because, said they, he is ⁴ the son of Jehoshaphat, who sought the LORD with all his heart." So ⁵ the house of Ahaziah had no power to keep still the kingdom.

10 ¹ But when ² Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah saw that her son was dead, she arose, and destroyed all the seed royal of the house of Judah.

11 But ¹ Jehoshabeath the daughter of the king took Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons that were slain, and put him and his nurse in a ² bedchamber. So Jehoshabeath, the daughter of king Jehoram, the wife of ³ Jehoiada the priest, (for she was the sister of Ahaziah,) hid him from Athaliah, so that ⁴ she slew him not.

12 And he was with them ¹ hid in the house of God six years: and ² Athaliah reigned over the land.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Jehoiada takes proper measures, and makes Joash king, 1-11. Athaliah is slain, 12-15. Jehoiada subverts idolatry; restores the worship of God, and places Joash on the throne, to the great joy of the people, 16-21.

AND in the seventh year Jehoiada strengthened himself, and took the captains of hundreds, Azariah the son of Jeroham, and Ishmael the son of Jehohanan, and Azariah the son of Obed, and Maaseiah the son of Adaiaph, and Elishaphat the son of Zichri, into ¹ covenant with him.

2 And they ¹ went about in Judah, and gathered the Levites out of all the cities of Judah, and ² the chief of the fathers of Israel, and they came to Jerusalem.

3 And all the congregation ¹ made a covenant with the king in the house of God. And he said unto them, Behold, the king's son shall reign, ² as the LORD hath said of the sons of David.

4 ¹ This is the thing that ye shall do; ² A third part of you ¹ entering on the sabbath, of the priests and of the Levites, ² shall be ³ porters of the doors;

5 And a third part ¹ shall be at the king's house; and a third part at ² the gate of the foundation: and all the people ³ shall be in the courts of the house of the LORD.

6 But let none come into the house of the LORD save the priests, and ¹ they that minister of the Levites; they shall go in, for they are holy: but all the people shall keep the watch of the LORD.

7 And ¹ the Levites shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand; and ² whosoever else cometh into the house, he shall be put to death: but be ye with the king when he cometh in, and when he goeth out.

8 So ¹ the Levites and all Judah did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest had commanded, and took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that were to go out on the sabbath: for Jehoiada the priest dismissed not ² the courses.

9 Moreover, Jehoiada the priest delivered to the captains of hundreds ¹ spears, and bucklers, and shields, that ² had been king David's, which were in the house of God.

10 And he set all the people, every man having his weapon in his hand, from the right ¹ side of the temple to the left side of the temple, ² along by the altar and the temple, by the king round about.

11 Then ¹ they brought out the king's son, and ² put upon him the crown, and ³ gave him ⁴ the testimony, and made him king. And Jehoiada and his sons ⁵ anointed him, and said, ⁶ God save the king.

12 ¹ Now ² when Athaliah heard the noise of the people running and praising the king, ³ she came to the people into the house of the LORD:

13 And she looked, and behold, ¹ the king stood at his pillar at the entering in, and the princes and the trumpets by the king: and ² all the people of the land rejoiced, and ³ sounded with trumpets; also ⁴ the singers with instruments of music, and such as taught to sing ⁵ praise. Then Athaliah rent her clothes, and said, ⁶ Treason, treason.

14 Then Jehoiada the priest brought out the captains of hundreds that were set over the host, and said unto them, ¹ Have her forth of the ranges: and ² whoso followeth her, let him be slain with the sword. For the priest said, ³ Slay her not in the house of the LORD.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

No tongue can express, no imagination can conceive, the guilt and condemnation of those parents, who counsel their own children to do wickedly, and who thus become their murderers in the most awful sense. Yet, this fatal calamity, to families and to society, is frequently the consequence of contracting marriages with those who are irreligious and wicked. But they, who are not previously disposed to ungodliness and vice, will not hearken to such pernicious counsellors: and neither the persuasion, authority, example, nor favour, even of a parent, is to be regarded, when the will and honour of God are concerned. But when men hate the truth and service of God, they are judicially left to be seduced and deceived, till their impolicy and impiety concur in bringing destruction upon them. None can flee, or hide himself, from that evil which pursueth sinners; or from those instruments, whom God employs to execute judgment upon his enemies: and the external respect paid to them, for the sake of pious ancestors will not prevent the ruin of their own souls, or that of their families.—The most desperate and prosperous workers of iniquity, who are hardened against every natural affection, as well as all remains of the fear of God, can do no more than execute his righteous purposes: but he will not suffer his promises to be broken; and if infants, or pious persons, are permitted to be cut off in such unnatural massacres, he will set all right in the eternal world.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIII. V. 1, 2. (Note, 2 Kings 11:4.) These "chief fathers of Israel" seem to have been the descendants of those priests and Levites from the ten tribes, and pious persons, who left their cities and joined themselves to Judah, in the days of Jeroboam. (Note, 11:13-17.) The word "Israel," however, is sometimes used as a general term for the nation, and so applied to the people of Judah.

V. 3-10. Notes, 2 Kings 11:5-10.—Made a covenant, &c. (3) 16. Notes, 2 Kings 11:17-20.—"The house of the LORD," (6) must mean the inner court: for no Levites, who were not also priests, entered the sanctuary. This shows, that on some occasions, the people were admitted into the inner courts; else the injunction had been needless.

V. 11. Note, 2 Kings 11:12.—Sons.] Probably Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada, who was afterwards stoned by Joash's command, assisted in crowning and anointing him. (Notes, 24:19-26.)

V. 12-21. Notes, 2 Kings 11:13-20.—His pillar at the entering in, &c. (13) The king's pillar was at the entrance of the inner court; but the two pillars, Boaz and Jachin, stood at the porch of the temple. One of these therefore could not 15 So they laid hands on her; and when she was come to the entering of the horse-gate by the king's house, they slew her there.

16 ¶ And Jehoiada made a covenant between him, and between all the people, and between the king, that they should be the Lord's people.

17 Then all the people went to the house of Baal, and brake it down, and brake his altars and his images in pieces, and slew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars.

18 Also Jehoiada appointed the officers of the house of the Lord by the hand of the priests the Levites, whom David had distributed in the house of the Lord, to offer the burnt-offerings of the Lord, as it is written in the law of Moses, with rejoicing and with singing, as it was ordained by David.

19 And he set the porters at the gates of the house of the Lord, that none which was unclean in any thing should enter in.

20 And he took the captains of hundreds, and the nobles, and the governors of the people, and all the people of the land, and brought down the king from the house of the Lord: and they came through the high gate into the king's house, and set the king upon the throne of the kingdom.

21 And all the people of the land rejoiced: and the city was quiet, after that they had slain Athaliah with the sword.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Joash reigns well during Jehoiada's life, and zealously repairs the temple, 1-14. Jehoiada dies, and is honourably buried, 15, 16. Joash, seduced by his princes, turns aside to idolatry; and causes Zechariah, Jehoiada's son, to be stoned, and reproving him by the name of God, 17-21. Zechariah's dying prediction, 22. Joash is plundered by the Syrians, left sick, and then slain by his own servants, 23-26. Amaziah succeeds him, 27.

¶ JOASH was seven years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Zibiah of Beersheba.

2 And Joash did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all the days of Jehoiada the priest.

3 And Jehoiada took for him two wives; and he begat sons and daughters.

4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Joash was minded to repair the house of the Lord.

5 And he gathered together the priests and the Levites, and said to them, Go out unto the cities of Judah, and gather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year, and see that ye hasten the matter. Howbeit the Levites hastened it not.

6 And the king called for Jehoiada the chief, and said unto him, Why hast thou not required of the Levites to bring in out of Judah and out of Jerusalem the collection, according to the commandment of Moses the servant of the Lord, and of the congregation of Israel, for the tabernacle of witness?

7 For the sons of Athaliah, that wicked woman, had broken up the house of God; and also all the dedicated things of the house of the Lord did they bestow upon Baalim.

8 And at the king's commandment they made a chest, and set it without at the gate of the house of the Lord.

9 And they made a proclamation through Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to the Lord the collection that Moses the servant of God laid upon Israel in the wilderness.

10 And all the princes and all the people rejoiced, and brought in, and cast into the chest, until they had made an end.

11 Now it came to pass, that at what time the chest was brought unto the king's office by the hand of the Levites, and when they saw that there was much money, the king's scribe and the high-priest's officer came and emptied the chest, and took it, and carried it to his place again. Thus they did day by day, and gathered money in abundance.

12 And the king and Jehoiada gave it to such as did the work of the service of the house of the Lord, and hired masons and carpenters to repair the house of the Lord, and also such as wrought iron and brass to mend the house of the Lord.

13 So the workmen wrought, and the work was perfected by them, and they set the house of God in his state, and strengthened it.

14 And when they had finished it, they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada, whereof were made vessels of the house of the Lord, even vessels to minister, and to offer withal, and spoons, and vessels for gold and silver.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord commonly effects great and important changes by those persons whom he has furnished with wisdom, courage, piety, and integrity; and who intend to do his will and promote his glory, and not to advance their own interests.—In the greatest emergencies, care ought to be taken that sacred things be not profaned; and that every one concur in a manner consistent with his character and calling; and as ministers are by profession holy persons, they should be careful to exhibit holy examples.—Civil transactions should be managed with a regard to the word and worship of God; and while men's hearts overflow with good wishes for their princes, commendations of them, or joy in their advancement; they should remember to conduct and terminate all in thanksgivings and praises unto God. This is peculiarly becoming, when persecuting tyrants and usurpers are removed and equitable rulers come in their places; the work is the Lord's, whatever instruments he is pleased to employ. Such national mercies should be acknowledged by public reformation: and by a concurrence of all ranks, in solemnly yielding themselves up to be the Lord's people, and in establishing his worship and ordinances according to his word. Where this is neglected, the joy and singing, which takes place upon great deliverances, NOTES.—CHAP. XXIV. V. 1-3. Note, 2 Kings 12: 2, 3.—Took, &c. (3) The Jewish expositors are of opinion, that Jehoiada took these two wives for himself, not for Joash; and they consider this as inconsistent with the character of the high-priest. But it is most obvious to understand the words for him, of Joash; and Jehoiada's advanced age, at this time, renders it highly improbable that he should take them for himself; for he must, on any computation, have been above a hundred years old, when Joash began to reign. (Note, 15, 16.) Nor are any sons of Jehoiada mentioned afterwards, except such as were grown up.—It is not indeed expressly said that Jehoiada was high-priest, but the way in which he is distinguished from the other priests, and the authority which he exercised, seem to put it beyond all reasonable doubt that he was.

V. 4-14. Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Kings 12:4-16.—Hasten, &c. (5) Things were in so bad a condition, that it required the work should be begun with speed. Yet such was the negligence of the Levites, and the backwardness perhaps of the people to part with their money, that in the twenty-third year of this king's reign nothing was done.¹ Bp. Patrick.

16 And they buried him in the city of David among the kings, because he had done good in Israel, both toward God, and toward his house.

[Practical Observations.]

17 ¶ Now after the death of Jehoiada came E. C.] the princes of Judah, and made obeisance ^{940.} to the king. Then the king hearkened unto them.

18 And they left the house of the Lord God of their fathers, and served groves and idols: and wrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem for this their trespass.

19 Yet he sent prophets to them, to bring them again unto the Lord; and they testified against them; but they would not give ear.

20 And the Spirit of God came upon Zechariah the son of Jehoiada the priest, which stood above the people, and said unto them, Thus saith God, Why transgress ye the commandments of the Lord, that ye cannot prosper? because ye have forsaken the Lord, he hath also forsaken you.

V. 15, 16. Jehoiada was born in the reign of Solomon, and had lived through six successive reigns, besides Athaliah's usurpation; namely, those of Rehoboam, Abijah, Asa, Jehoshaphat, Jehoram, and Ahaziah. He was honourably interred among the kings of Judah; but the reason assigned for this extraordinary respect was much more honourable; and perhaps it was inscribed on his monument: "He has done good in Israel, both toward God, and toward his house." He had eminently promoted true religion, and promoted the regular worship of God, and the repairs of the temple; in which the best interests of the people were greatly concerned. He had also been exceedingly useful in preserving the line of David in the person of Joash, and in terminating Athaliah's wicked usurpation. (Note, 31:20, 21.)—Israel, the general name of the whole nation, is sometimes used when the kingdom of Judah is meant.

V. 17, 18. Jehoiada had acquired his influence over Joash during his childhood; and his near relation to the king, and the immense obligations, which he had conferred upon him, concurred with his age, gravity, reputation, piety, and wisdom, to support him in authority. So that, while he lived, neither Joash, nor his courtiers, ventured to follow, or even to declare, their inclinations to idolatry; but externally conformed to Jehoiada's regulations. As soon, however, as he was removed by death, they threw off the mask; and the nobles paid court to Joash, and perhaps flattered him, as at length freed from priestly dominion, tuition, grave lectures, and restraints, and as now a king indeed, and intimated, that he would have no objection to release the rigour of Jehoiada's administration, in matters of religion. Perhaps, they only proposed, that he should tolerate their sacrificing upon the high places, as more convenient and agreeable to them, than always coming to Jerusalem: but he, being won by their homage, as well as induced by his own inclinations, joined with them even in more gross and avowed idolatry; in consequence of which, they soon experienced the tokens of the divine displeasure. (Note, 2 Kings 12:17, 18.)

V. 19—22. (Marg. Ref.) Both the king and his courtiers seem to have contemptuously disregarded the warnings of the prophets, first sent to them; so that they did not honour them even with hatred or persecution. But, at length, when they were assembled on account of some festival; (for the temple was not utterly forsaken;) the Spirit of God directed Zechariah to expostulate with them respecting their idolatry. Being the son of Jehoiada, a near relation to Joash, a chief priest, if not the high-priest, he seemed to be the most unexceptionable person, who could possibly have been selected for the service; while his piety, and the meekness and reasonableness of his plain address and warning, combined in entitling him to a favourable hearing, and evidenced his admonition to be seasonable. "The Spirit of God clothed him." (marg.) "He had a divine motion to speak publicly to the people and to reprove them, which that he might do and be heard of, he got up into a high place, where they might all both see and hear him." Bp. Patrick. But all this was in vain; the enraged

21 And they conspired against him, and stoned him with stones at the commandment of the king, in the court of the house of the Lord.

22 Thus Joash the king remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, but slew his son. And when he died, he said, The Lord look upon it, and require it.

23 ¶ And it came to pass at the end of the year, that the host of Syria came up against him; and they came to Judah and Jerusalem, and destroyed all the princes of the people from among the people, and sent all the spoil of them unto the king of Damascus.

24 For the army of the Syrians came with a small company of men, and the Lord delivered a very great host into their hand, because they had forsaken the Lord God of their fathers. So they executed judgment against Joash.

25 And when they were departed from him, (for they left him in great diseases,) his own servants conspired against him for the blood of the sons of Jehoiada the priest, and slew him on his bed, and he died: and they buried him in the city of David, but they buried him not in the sepulchres of the kings.

apostate, who hated reproof, ordered him to be stoned, and the unprincipled people, as if joined in a preconcerted conspiracy against God and his servants, with one accord executed the unrighteous sentence, even in the court of the temple! (23:14, 15. Note, 2 Kings 11:13—16.)—It is scarcely possible that a murder could contain more aggravated injustice and impiety: but the ingratitude of Joash is peculiarly noticed. Many, who have cast off all fear of God, retain some regard to their earthly benefactors; but this base man was lost to every thing, which had the least semblance of good.—Zechariah's dying words would be best rendered, "The Lord will look upon it and require it;" as a prophecy, and not a prayer (Marg. Ref. Notes, Matt. 23:29—36.) The event soon verified this prediction. (Note, 23:24.) It is likely that he was a younger son of Jehoiada. ... Ludovicius Capellus therefore thinks, that his brother the high-priest conniving at Joash's apostasy, this younger brother was inspired of God to reprove it, which boldness Joash and his courtiers thought they might punish with some colour, ... which they stirred up the people to chastise. ... Though Zechariah spoke by the Spirit of God, he only applied the prediction of Moses (Deut. 31:16, 17.) to the present time; that they might all learn to have a greater regard to Moses, and continually meditate in his law; unto which if they had attended, they would easily have discerned, who were true prophets, and who were false. Bp. Patrick.

V. 23, 24. (Note, 17:18.) A small company sent by Hazael plundered Jerusalem, and sent the spoil to Hazael at Damascus. They likewise "destroyed all the princes of the people;" the very persons who seduced Joash into idolatry. (17.) So that the judgment of God executed by them, singled out the principal criminals, as appointed to death. "They executed judgment, (or judgments) against Joash" also.—That so small an army should obtain so decided a victory over all the power of Judah, and the strength of Jerusalem; showed that the punishment was immediately from God himself, who forsook them, and "delivered a very great host into the hand of the Syrians;" because they had so wickedly forsaken him.

V. 25, 26. (Note, 2 Kings 12:20, 21.) "Many think he was sorely wounded in the battle, which brought him into great diseases, and they increased, it is likely, by the anguish of his mind, to see his country ruined; and by the hatred and contempt into which he was fallen." Bp. Patrick. Joash seems to have murdered some other sons of Jehoiada, perhaps lest they should avenge the death of Zechariah.—Whether the conspirators intended to punish Joash for this murder, or were actuated by private resentment or ambition; God was pleased to use them as executioners of his righteous vengeance. They were both born of foreign women: the idolatrous kings perhaps encouraged such forbidden marriages; but in this case they proved fatal to Joash. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—16. The best education, the most scriptural instructions, and the brightest examples, are insufficient of nim; ² Zabad the son of Shimeath an Ammonitess, and Jehozabad the son of ³ Shimrith a Moabitess.

²⁷ ¶ Now concerning his sons, and the greatness of the burdens laid upon him, and the repairing of the house of God, behold, they are written in the story of the book of the Kings. And Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XXV.

Amaziah at first reigns well, and justly punishes his father's murderers, 1-4. He gathers a great army, and hires, for a hundred talents, a hundred thousand Israelites against Edom; but, having paid the money, he dismisses them at the word of a prophet; and they depart in great anger, 5-10. He smites the Edomites, and exercises great cruelty towards the captives, 11, 12. The Israelites, on their return, spoil the cities of Judah, 13. Amaziah serves the gods of Edom, and rejects the admonitions of a prophet, 14-16. He challenges Jonah, who in vain warns him: he is unquieshed, and Jerusalem spoiled, 17-24. The rest of his reign, 25, 26. He is slain by a conspiracy, 27, 28.

AMAZIAH was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, but not with a perfect heart.

3 ¶ Now it came to pass, when the kingdom was established to him, that he slew his servants that had killed the king his father.

4 But he slew not their children, but did as it is written in the law in the book of Moses, where the LORD commanded, saying, The fathers shall not die for the children, neither shall the children die for the fathers, but every man shall die for his own sin.

5 ¶ Moreover, Amaziah gathered Judah together, and made them captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, according to the houses of their fathers, throughout all Judah and Benjamin: and he numbered them from twenty years old and above, and found them three hundred thousand choice men, able to go forth to war, that could handle spear and shield.

6 He hired also a hundred thousand mighty men of valour out of Israel for a hundred talents of silver.

7 But there came a man of God to him, saying, O king, let not the army of Israel go with thee; for the LORD is not with Israel, to wit, with all the children of Ephraim.

8 But if thou wilt go, do it, be strong for the battle: God shall make thee fall before the enemy: for God hath power to help, and to cast down.

9 And Amaziah said to the man of God, But what shall we do for the hundred talents which I have given to the army of Israel? And the man of God answered, The LORD is able to give thee much more than this.

themselves to convert the soul; they are, however, the general means by which the Lord works; and even, when not eventually successful to change the sinner's heart, they commonly produce effects salutary to the community.—Hypocrites often show extraordinary zeal for externals, but they foolishly neglect the heart.—The reluctance of men to part with their money, for pious and charitable uses, is increased by the avarice of many, through whose hands it should pass, and who basely intercept it: but exact fidelity and punctuality, in showing that it has been, or will be, expended for the end proposed, go far towards inducing men to contribute liberally in a good cause; and this alone can afford comfort upon reflection, or bring honour upon a man's character.—If we live to the glory of God, and endeavour to do good to men, especially in the great concerns of salvation; we may be satisfied that we have lived long enough, though we should die young; or we may be willing to linger out many years in infirm old age, if the Lord has any thing for us to do. But, whenever or however we pass from time into eternity, may we leave such a testimony in the consciences of our survivors, that if they were required to make an inscription for our tomb, they might be constrained to write; "He did good to Israel, both toward God, and toward his house." It is true, that many, who are over-awed by the personal qualities, the rank, or the reputation of eminent men, secretly hate their piety, and are weary of their authority. But a good conscience, the assurance of usefulness, and the approbation of God, may enable a man to disregard these painful effects of superior excellency.

V. 17-27. The authority or influence of parents, ministers, and pious friends, joined with transient serious impressions, and other incidental circumstances, may produce, and long maintain, a plausible profession of religion: but the lamp will go out when it is especially wanted; unless supplied from the oil in the vessel, the grace of God possessing the heart. (Notes, and P. O. Matt. 25:1-13.)—When a man is under the power of pride and worldly passions, he relishes those counsels, from which he has received the most important temporal advantage, and which tend to his eternal good: and then flattery, licentious liberty, arbitrary authority, and the most impious proposals, will be more welcome, because congenial to his judgment and affections. But he, who has not sense to direct his own conduct, and is too proud to take good advice, will soon be proved a fool, let who will flatter his wisdom.—"This is the love of God, to keep his commandments, and his commandments are not grievous." Yet the yoke of external obedience is very uneasy to the carnal mind; and, in this case, men will secretly rejoice, and perhaps openly congratulate one another, upon the death of pious monitors, or even parents. But impiety brings wrath, especially when consequent to apostasy, on such as cast off the fear of God.—No caution, tenderness, or gentleness, consistent with faithfulness; no respectability of character, eminent services, or personal obligations, can secure the ministers of God from persecution, if they rouse the dormant conscience, contradict the haughty spirit, or excite disquietude in sin: and, except their word be accompanied with the converting grace of God, the sinner will rage, in proportion to his power, pride, or impiety.—Some regard to justice, decency, and gratitude, may be expected from ignorant and profligate characters, and from infidels and heathen idolaters: but the rage of an apostate bursts all obligations and restraints; for he has so done violence to his conscience, that it has lost all its energy; and except he be restrained by human laws, every thing desperate may be expected from his resentment. The testimony of faithful ministers will, however, be accepted by God, when rejected by men; and he will recompense to them all their losses and sufferings for his sake.—Those who transgress the commandments of the Lord, cannot prosper, whatever they may presumptuously suppose; and when they forsake God, he will forsake them. Without the spirit of prophecy, we may confidently foretell that the Lord will look upon, and require, all the persecutions, slanders, mockeries, and ill-usage, which his servants meet with, except their prayers be answered, and he give the persecutors repentance and better minds.—The Lord can soon find such as will, for their own purposes, execute judgment upon murderers, and other atrocious criminals, however exalted; nor can any power avail against those, into whose hands he delivers his enemies to be punished. Then, superiority in station only ensures precedence in suffering: and how dreadful is it when a painful and miserable death transmits the impenitent rebel to a more miserable eternity! God help us to be in earnest, to take warning, to be upright in heart, and to persevere unto the end! that, having lived by faith, and in humble, devoted obedience, we may at length "die the death of the righteous, and that our last end may be like his!"

NOTES.—CHAP. XXV. V. 1, 2. Notes, 14-16. 26: 4. 2 Kings 14:1-4.

V. 3, 4. (Notes, 24:25, 26.) Even if he conspirators against Joash intended to avenge upon him the murder of Zechariah, they acted without a commission from that God, "to whom vengeance belongeth;" and were justly put to death for treason and murder. (Note, 2 Kings 14:5, 6.)

V. 5. Nearly four times as many soldiers had been numbered in the days of Jehoshaphat. (Note, 17:13-19.) The inhabitants of the land must have vastly decreased during the late reigns, in consequence of their wickedness, and as a punishment of it. But, perhaps, numbers were unwilling to enlist under Amaziah: and either he did not attempt to force them, or they found means to evade his inquiries. His army, however, seems to have been sufficiently numerous to reduce the revolted Edomites, against whom he was preparing to make war. (11, 12.)

V. 6-10. If Amaziah had previously consulted God, all the painful consequences of the measure which he adopted would have been prevented.—As a hundred talents would not divide above eight shillings apiece, among one hundred thousand men; we may suppose that it was only an earnest of their pay, or that they expected to be enriched with the plunder of the Edomites.—The kingdom of Israel was openly idolatrous, and the Lord would not have Judah join alliance with them. Perhaps the army which Amaziah had hired, was chiefly of the tribe of Ephraim; or that tribe, being the most considerable in the kingdom of Israel, is put for the whole.—As the Lord was not with the men of Ephraim, he declared by his prophet that he would not prosper Amaziah, if he employed them: and if, after this prohibition, he would persist in taking them with him, he was warned, that God would make him fall before the enemy: for he could help him

10 Then Amaziah separated them, to wit, the army that was come to him out of Ephraim, to go home again: wherefore their anger was greatly kindled against Judah, and they returned home in great anger.

[Practical Observations.]

11 ¶ And Amaziah strengthened himself, and led forth his people, and went to the valley of salt, and smote of the children of Seir ten thousand.

12 And other ten thousand left alive did the children of Judah carry away captive, and brought them unto the top of the rock, and cast them down from the top of the rock, that they all were broken in pieces.

13 But the soldiers of the army which Amaziah sent back, that they should not go with him to battle, fell upon the cities of Judah, from Samaria even unto Beth-horon, and smote three thousand of them, and took much spoil.

14 ¶ Now it came to pass, after that Amaziah was come from the slaughter of the Edomites, that he brought the gods of the children of Seir, and set them up to be his gods, and bowed down himself before them, and burned incense unto them.

15 Wherefore the anger of the Lord was kindled against Amaziah, and he sent unto him a prophet, which said unto him, Why hast thou sought after the gods of the people, which could not deliver their own people out of thy hand?

16 And it came to pass, as he talked with him, that the king said unto him, Art thou made of the king's counsel? forbear; why shouldst thou be smitten? Then the prophet forbore, and said, I know that God hath determined to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast not hearkened unto my counsel.

17 ¶ Then Amaziah king of Judah took advice, and sent to Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, Come, let us see one another in the face.

18 And Joash king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, The thistle that was in Lebanon sent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, saying, Give thy daughter to my son to wife: and there passed by a wild beast that was in Lebanon, and trode down the thistle.

19 Thou sayest, Lo, thou hast smitten the Edomites; and thy heart lifteth thee up to boast: abide now at home; why shouldst thou meddle to thy hurt, that thou shouldst fall even thou, and Judah with thee?

20 But Amaziah would not hear; for it came of God, that he might deliver them into the hand of their enemies, because they sought after the gods of Edom.

21 So Joash the king of Israel went up; and they saw one another in the face, both he and Amaziah king of Judah, at Beth-shemesh, which belongeth to Judah.

22 And Judah was put to the worse before Israel, and they fled every man to his tent.

23 And Joash the king of Israel took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, at Beth-shemesh, and brought him to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem from the gate of Ephraim to the corner-gate, four hundred cubits.

24 And he took all the gold and silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of God with Obed-edom, and the treasures of the king's house, the hostages also, and returned to Samaria.

25 ¶ And Amaziah, the son of Joash king of Judah, lived after the death of Joash, son of Jehoahaz king of Israel, fifteen years.

26 Now the rest of the acts of Amaziah, first and last, behold, are they not written in the book of the Kings of Judah and Israel?

27 Now after the time that Amaziah did turn away from following the Lord, they made a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem; and he fled to Lachish: but they sent to Lachish after him, and slew him there.

28 And they brought him upon horses, and buried him with his fathers in the city of Judah.

without the aid of idolaters; and he could cast him down, though he thus made himself "strong for the battle." (Notes, Is. 8:9, 10. Joel 3:9-17.) And as for the hundred talents, which he had given to the Israelites, and could not recover, and which he was unwilling to lose; the Lord was able to give him much more than that, and, as Grotius observes, he is rich enough, who is impoverished for God's sake. Bp. Patrick.—Amaziah, though destitute of true faith, paid so much regard to the Lord's message, that he discharged the hired army; and they were exceedingly offended at the affront put upon them, in being sent away as the enemies of God: and perhaps also by the disappointment of their avaricious or ambitious expectations.

V. 11, 12. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Kings 14:7.) No limitation is given, on what account, or for what provocation, this most cruel conduct towards the prisoners of war was adopted. The enmity between Israel and Esau seems to have been reciprocal, and deeply malignant. The victorious king and his army considered every individual of Edom, as a traitor and a rebel; and so adjudged them to death, and acted according to that judgment. But their conduct was wholly inexcusable, and could only perpetuate rancour to future generations, and provoke the surviving Edomites to cruel retaliations whenever they had it in their power.

V. 13. The Israelites seem to have returned home, when discharged by Amaziah, as his powerful army deterred them from attempting revenge at that time; but when he was engaged in war with the Edomites, they took the opportunity, marched from Samaria, and plundered all the cities till they came to Beth-horon, where they slew three thousand of the inhabitants.—Amaziah had indeed dismissed these auxiliaries in obedience to God; but his savage cruelty to the prisoners of Edom, and his subsequent idolatry, (Note, 14-16.) proved that he acted by constraint or terror, when he was obedient: he therefore received for his complicated misconduct a just rebuke. Had he broken the idols to pieces, and treated the prisoners with clemency; he might have expected comfort in his success, and not experienced such painful effects from dismissing the Israelites.—Perhaps the cities, which were destroyed on this occasion, being in the vicinity of Israel, were infected with idolatry.

V. 14-16. Ahaz, who worshipped the idols of Syria by whom he was vanquished, was not so senseless as Amaziah, who sought unto the gods of Edom, which could not deliver them from his cruelty. (Note, 28:22, 23.) Perhaps Amaziah worshipped them from fear they should owe him a spite, and contrive some mischief against him, in revenge of what he had done against the Edomites. Bp. Patrick. But Amaziah, who had borne with the prophet, who spoke to him concerning dismissing the Israelites, by which he lost one hundred talents, was so mad upon his idols, that he would not endure that subject to be insisted on.—He seems to have menaced the prophet with Zechariah's doom; and thus he made himself a sharer in the guilt of that atrocious murder. (Note, 24:19-22.) The prophet was a counsellor, whom the Lord had appointed him; and none of those whom he had chosen for himself gave him such honest, wise, and salutary counsel. But, as he would not hearken to it, the prophet desisted, having most solemnly warned him that the Lord had counselled to destroy him. (Marg. Notes, 17-27. Deut. 2:30. 1 Kings 21:19-23. Luke 22:21-23. Acts 2:22-24.)

V. 17-24. Notes, 2 Kings 14:8-14.—Took advice, &c. (17.) Amaziah having rejected the counsel of God, advised with his flatterers; and they counselled him to make a foolish challenge, which paved the way for his ruin, to which he had been doomed for his obstinate idolatry.—To boast. (19.) "Glory of this." 2 Kings 14:10.—It came of God, &c. (20.) The people had joined in Amaziah's idolatry; and therefore suffered through his folly and vain glory. (Notes, 14-16. 2 Sam. 24:1, 2. 2 Kings 23:26, 27.) "God binds the minds of those whom he intends to destroy for their sins." Bp. Patrick.—Obed-edom. (21.) Perhaps a descendant of him who received the ark in the days of David, had the charge of these treasures in the house of God. (1 Chr. 13:13, 14.)

V. 25-27. (Note, 2 Kings 14:17-20.) No intimation is given, that Amaziah repented during the whole space of the Lord's long-suffering. Probably he added tyranny and oppression to his idolatry: and this, with his imprudent and unsuccessful administration, rendered him so odious, that he was slain, as it appears, by the general consent of his subjects, and no one was called to account for his death.—He was, however, buried with the other kings of Judah. (Notes, 21:18—20. 24:15, 16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10. Many favour and support religion from motives of policy, who either do not appear, or who only appear, to be religious; but the Lord has no pleasure in dissemblers.—Traitors and murderers are sometimes so powerful, as, for a time, to set justice at defiance; but they will at length find those who are able to execute righteous vengeance upon them. In every case, however, the law of God should be adhered to, as our perfect rule of duty.—Unrepented sin will inevitably and finally ruin every one who continues in it: and in like manner it will infallibly enfeeble those nations where it prevails, and diminish their prosperity and consequence. Princes and statesmen professing Christianity, when forming alliances, or stipulating succours from foreign courts, seldom inquire, whether “the Lord be with them?” or not. Indeed, the very question would too generally excite ridicule and disgust: and yet this will be found of far greater efficacy, in the success of wars, and the prosperity of kingdoms, than the most sagacious ungodly devices. It is indeed certain, that no enterprise, public or private, should be engaged in, without seeking to know the will of God concerning it; if we would avoid those distressing consequences, which often follow from even the most politic measures. But no confederates are so dangerous as apostates.—Success cannot reasonably be expected by those, who act in defiance of the divine commands: they may be “strong for the battle,” or for the business; but, if God is pleased “to make them fall,” their strength will avail nothing; for he has power to help, and to cast down: and if men prosper in presumptuous wickedness, their success is the prelude of their ruin.—When those who have not true faith, or a spiritual mind, are convinced of the sinfulness of any part of their conduct or pursuits, they always object to self-denying obedience; and seem to say, “But what shall we do, for the hundred talents?” “What shall we do, if, by hallooing the sabbath, we lose so many good customers?” What shall we do, if we renounce this illegal traffic and exorbitant profit, to compensate so important a loss? What shall we do, if we affront our friends, obstruct our preferment, or lose the friendship of the world? How shall we maintain our families? “What shall we eat?” or what shall we drink? or wherewith shall we be clothed?” Penny and distress face us in the way which you point out to us: we are almost persuaded it is the road to heaven: but what shall we do about the expenses of the journey? Here numbers stumble and turn aside, or endeavour to quiet their conscience in a vain pretence, that such and such practices are necessary in their case; that the precept must be dispensed with: in short, their meaning is, however they may disguise it from others, and even from themselves, that by them, circumstanced as they are, both God and Mammon may be served; and that they may be Christ's disciples without “denying themselves, taking up the cross, and forsaking all for him.” But the answer to such objections is obvious: “The Lord is able to give thee much more than this,” and he has promised to “add all other things” to those “who seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness.” yea, to make up a hundred fold, even in this present world, all that has been conscientiously renounced for his sake and the gospel: and we are “compassed about with an innumerable cloud of witnesses” of his faithfulness to this promise. Unbelief, however, will trust the Lord no further, than it can understand in what way he will fulfil his word: but faith approves the security, and gives him full credit for his truth, power, and love; and makes every sacrifice, and ventures every consequence, in dependence on his word, and in obedience to his command. He, who in this way is reduced to poverty, is enriched for ever; and he may set down his largest losses as his most certain gains, assured, that “no good thing will the Lord withhold from those who walk uprightly.”—Yet, a single instance of self-denying obedience, performed on a sudden, under some vehement impression, does not prove that a man has true faith. A person, on a sudden emotion, might cut off his hand, for any cause, and upon reflection repent of it ever after: but the deliberate daily renouncing of the world, and opposing our strongest sinful inclinations, (though as painful to part with as a right hand, or a right eye,) for the sake of the gospel, and in obedience to the Saviour, forms the constant evidence of an interest in him, and all his precious promises; (Notes, Phil. 3:1—11, v. 7—9.) and to some measure of this temper and conduct every true believer has attained. But, the behaviour of the mere professor of true religion will frequently detect the hypocrisy of his obedience in particular instances, and justify God in punishing his other crimes, by the very consequences of that obedience.

V. 11—28. Those who are evidently and consciously irreligious, are yet often much offended with being treated as such: and affronted pride, united with disappointed rapacity kindles a resentment, from which the most fatal effects may be expected.—Abused mercies occasion man's most aggravated wickedness, and accelerate his ruin: so that, when we are prospered by Providence, we should be peculiarly careful, what return we make for the goodness of God, and what use we make of his bounty.—“The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel,” and none are so imperious and inhuman towards those who oppose their will, as they who dare to bid defiance to the authority of the Almighty.—The absurdities of superstition and idolatry, to which the human race has in all ages shown so strange a propensity, are as disgraceful to the understanding as to the heart: and if we did but consider how unavailing those worldly objects, which we are apt to idolize, have always proved, to the peace, safety, and happiness of their possessors; the reflection must check our eager pursuits of wealth, honour, or sensual pleasure; or at least show them to be as irrational, as the worship of useless, helpless idols.—They, who are mad upon their lusts, will not bear control or counsel: and he, who would expostulate with them for their good, may expect to be treated as impertinent, intermeddling, or insolent: especially if an inferior venture to admonish, in the name of the Lord, sinners of superior rank and station. These, indeed, seem generally to claim it as one of their prerogatives, to walk unmolested in “the broad way that leadeth to destruction,” and ridicule or menaces will be the recompense of him, who dares to warn them that it is a dangerous road. But, after all the contempt and obloquy to which such counsellors are exposed, the event demon-strates, that princes generally hearken to those who are far worse: and, though assuming churchmen have often disgraced their profession; yet no man, from the throne to the almshouse, will have cause to repent attending to the warnings, instructions, and counsel of the few, who honestly declare the truth and will of God, without courting the favour, fearing the frown, or respecting the person of any man. If, however, mild, serious, rational, and scriptural reproof is proudly rejected and resented, we are not required further to urge our admonitions, but must desist, by plainly giving men to understand what the consequence will be.—When the remonstrances of conscience are silenced, and the ministers of God are rejected and menaced, it is to be feared that he has determined upon the sinner's destruction; and if he also says, “Let him alone,” “my Spirit shall not always strive with him;” he will be given up to stolid delusion, to increasing vain confidence, infatuated projects, rash intermeddling, and obstinate perseverance in a course of folly, till the measure of his wickedness is filled up, and “destruction from the Almighty” comes upon him. Thus “a man's pride shall bring him low;” his ruin may be dated from his turning away from the Lord; and the longer he is spared, the more will he “treasure up wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who shall render to every man according to his works.” May the Lord preserve us from this dreadful doom, and prepare our hearts to receive his truth, to welcome his counsels and reproofs, and obediently to submit to his authority, and do his will!

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVI. V. 1—3. Notes, 2 Kings 14:21, 22. 15:1—7, v. 1—5.

V. 4. Uzziah, or Azariah, began his reign much better than he ended it, as Amaziah had done. But he seems to have supported the worship of God all his days; and he is never charged with idolatry, or any kind of immorality. (Notes, 25:14—16. 2 Kings 14:3, 4.) His reign must therefore have been very happy for his people, and favourable to the interests of religion, though the close of it proved disgraceful to himself.

V. 5. It is not known of what tribe or family this Zechariah was; though some conjecture, that he was the son of Philistines, and brake down "the wall of Gath, and the wall of Jabneh, and the wall of Ashdod, and built cities about Ashdod, and among the Philistines.

7 And "God helped him against the Philistines, and against "the Arabians that dwelt in Gur-baal, and the Mehunims.

8 And "the Ammonites gave gifts to Uzziah: and "his name spread abroad even to the entering in of Egypt: for he strengthened himself exceedingly.

9 Moreover, Uzziah built towers in Jerusalem at the "corner-gate, and at "the valley-gate, and at "the turning of the wall, and "fortified them.

10 Also he built towers in the desert, and "dugged many wells: for "he had much cattle, both in the low country and in the plains; husbandmen also, and vine-dressers in the mountains, and in "Carmel: for he loved "husbandry.

11 Moreover, Uzziah had a host of fighting men, that "went out to war by bands, according to the number of their account by the hand of Jeiel the scribe, and Maaseiah the ruler, under the hand of Hananiah, one of the king's captains.

12 The whole number of the chief of the fathers of the mighty men of valour were two thousand and six hundred.

13 And under their hand was "an army, "three hundred thousand and seven thousand and five hundred, that made war with mighty power, to help the king against the enemy.

14 And Uzziah prepared for them, throughout all the host, shields, and spears, and helmets, and habergeons, and bows, and "slings to cast stones.

15 And he made in Jerusalem engines, invented by "cunning men, to be on the towers and upon the bulwarks, to shoot arrows and great stones withal. And his name "spread far abroad; for he was marvellously helped, till he was strong.

that Zechariah whom Joash murdered. This, however, would be a singular instance in Scripture, of a son called by his father's name.—He was perhaps endowed with a peculiar gift in distinguishing between those, who are actually favoured with prophetic visions, and those who only pretended to be so. (1 Cor. 12:10.) At least he was well acquainted with divine things, an intelligent, prudent, pious, and heavenly-minded man; and an instructor, or counsellor, to Uzziah, who prospered by hearkening to his admonitions; whilst Amaziah, who had scorned to be counselled by a prophet, followed advice which brought him to destruction. (Notes, 25:14-24.) Had Zechariah been spared, he might perhaps have dissuaded Uzziah from that fatal attempt, which he afterwards made. (Note, 16-23.)

V. 6-9.—These verses contain some particulars, in which Uzziah, by the special help and blessing of God, was greatly prospered, while he adhered strictly to the worship of God according to the law. (Marg. Ref.)—He demolished all the fortifications of his enemies on the frontiers, and provided his own frontiers with works, garrisons, arms, and engines of war. . . . These Mehunims were a people in Arabia deserta. Bp. Patrick. Jabneh not mentioned elsewhere, nor Gur-baal.—"He built cities about Ashdod," or "in the country of Ashdod." (Marg.)—In the days of his father, the wall of Jerusalem had been broken down "to the corner-gate." (25:23.) and Uzziah not only repaired it, but added towers and fortifications to secure it.

V. 10. Towers.] These towers seem to have been built in the desert, for the protection of Uzziah's shepherds and flocks, from the depredations of the Arabian freebooters and others, upon whom he seems to have retaliated. (11)—A prince can hardly have a more rational, inoffensive, and indeed useful recreation from public business, than these rural occupations. (Notes, 1 Kings 4:7-19. 1 Chr. 27:25-31.)

V. 16-23. Uzziah had been remarkably prospered in 16 ¶ But "when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction: for he transgressed against the LORD his God, and "went into the temple of the LORD "to burn incense upon the altar of incense.

17 And "Azariah the priest went in after him, and with him fourscore priests of the LORD, that were "valiant men:

18 And they "withstood Uzziah the king, and said unto him, It appertaineth "not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incense unto the LORD, but "to the priests, the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense: go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed; "neither shall it be for thine honour from the LORD God.

19 Then Uzziah was wroth, and had a censor in his hand to burn incense: and while "he was wroth with the priests, "the leprosy even rose up in his forehead before the priests in the house of the LORD, from beside the incense-altar.

20 And Azariah the chief priest, and all the priests looked upon him, and, behold, he was leprous in his forehead, and they thrust him out from thence; yea, himself "hasted also to go out, because "the LORD had smitten him.

21 And "Uzziah the king was a leper unto the day of his death, and "dwelt in a "several house, being a leper; for he was cut off from the house of the LORD: and Jotham his son was over the king's house, judging the people of the land.

22 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Uzziah, "first and last, did "Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, write.

23 So Uzziah "slept with his fathers, and "they buried him with his fathers in the field of the burial which belonged to the kings; for they said, He is a leper: and Jotham his son reigned in his stead.

every thing; but pride, instead of gratitude, was fostered by it: so that, deeming himself at least as much favoured as the priests were, he thought it a reproach to him to be excluded from any part of the temple, or the worship of God.—Burning incense was the most honourable part of the sacerdotal office, and of that he became ambitious. (Note, Lev. 10:1, 2.) The law had forbidden any, but the priests of the family of Aaron, to enter the sanctuary, or to burn incense; and the fate of Korah and his company, was an awful example upon record, of the consequences to be expected from violating that statute. (Notes, Num. 16:17.) But perhaps Uzziah was tempted to disbelieve these ancient records, imagining that they had been falsified by the priests to keep up their own consequence; or that the law was now become obsolete: and he might be confirmed in this, by considering that nothing of the kind had taken place for many centuries. Thus "his heart was lifted up to his destruction;" his crime exposed him to eternal destruction, as well as present death; and though he was respited, yet his remaining days were spent, as it were, in a lingering ignominious execution.—None of the former kings of Judah had attempted to burn incense in the temple; none, perhaps, to invade the sacerdotal office in any way: though many of them had offended by forsaking the worship of God. Had Uzziah contented himself with imitating David, Solomon, and Jehoshaphat, in instructing, and praying with and for his people, he would have done commendably.—The idolatrous kings indeed burned incense to their idols, and it seems he took them for his pattern in this instance, though he would not forsake the God of Israel. (Note, Kings 13:1.)—Azariah and the other priests behaved nobly on this occasion: (Note, 2 Kings 16:10-16.) they opposed the king's design, not with violence or reproachful language, but with plain scriptural remonstrances, precepts, and counsels; and by warning him, that his attempt would expose him to disgrace from the LORD God. (Note, 1 Chr. 6:15-15, v. 10.) Yet he was insensible to their arguments, and enraged by their faithful opposition: and Josephus writes that he threatened them with death, when an extraordinary earthquake preceded his being smitten with leprosy. (Notes, Amos 1:1. Zech. 14:4, 5.) But, however that might be, when he found that this divine judgment was inflicted upon him, and was conspicuous in his forehead, he became sensible of his sin and danger, and yielded to the priests who hurried him out of the sanctuary, yea hastened to retreat, perhaps dreading still further judgments. It pleased God to continue this stigma upon him during the remainder of his life: and, in consequence, he was excluded from the precincts of the temple; from society, except that of the priests into whose office he had intruded; and from the exercise of his regal authority. It is not said how long this occurred before his death: but the age of Jotham, when he began to reign, implies, that it was late in Uzziah's reign, before he was smitten with the leprosy: and his reign must be considered as a very prosperous one for his kingdom. But, by aspiring after that honour which did not belong to him, he lost all his dignity and reputation, and was, in some sense, degraded beneath the meanest of his subjects, and even after his death, notwithstanding his good and prosperous reign, he was, as a leper, excluded from the sepulchres of the kings.—Yet the long-suffering of God gave him space for repentance: and his patient and quiet submission to this severe rebuke, and to all its most painful consequences, (as they must have been to so honourable and prosperous a monarch,) forms no inconsiderable proof of his repentance; and implies that his retirement was well improved, and his death happy. (2 Kings 15:1-7.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-15. Wise and pious instructors are an invaluable treasure to young people; especially to those who are advanced to exalted stations, and who are generally poisoned with the flattery of interested sycophants and dependents. Yet, unless they seek and serve God from an inward principle of piety; they will at length lose, or shake off, their preceptors and their religion together.—Many have experienced, and some have confessed, that, when they paid regard to the service of God, they prospered; but that every thing went wrong, from the time they grew negligent in religion. Indeed, external prosperity does not now so uniformly attend godliness, as it did in the case of Israel: yet every undertaking will succeed with the true Christian, as far as it is good for him; and God will help and prosper him in his spiritual warfare, in proportion to the simplicity of his dependence and obedience.—No lawful business will be the worse managed, or prove less pleasant to any man, on account of his diligence in the service of God, if he have learned to arrange his temporal and spiritual concerns in due order.—It would be happy for mankind, if able and powerful monarchs took more delight, and spent more of their leisure hours, in rural occupations, which are manly, useful, and truly honourable: but hitherto man's chief ambition, exertion, and ingenuity, have been directed to the destruction of his own species! If, however, it must be a part of his occupation to invent and forge instruments of destruction, and of shortening the already contracted duration of human life; surely these should be used only in self-defence, or in avenging the turbulent spirits of those public depredators, who cannot otherwise be prevented from disturbing the world.

V. 16-23. It is written, as with a sunbeam, that prosperity is most dangerous to fallen man. Some are "lifted up" by it "to their destruction," others to their deep disgrace and lasting distress; and we have all more cause to pray to be preserved from its fascinating influence, than from the depth of poverty, or from the anguish of the severest disappointment and afflictions.—The narrow way is one and straight; but the paths of transgression are numerous and various: and new ones are continually struck out, by the perverse ingenuity and presumption of rebellious man. Extremes are on every side. To avoid enthusiasm and credulity, men become profane and infidel; and, in shunning infidelity, they rush into superstition. Those who are not chargeable with immorality or gross profaneness, may yet provoke the Lord by their hypocrisy or self-righteous pride. We are not indeed, at present, kept at that awful distance from sacred things, which the people of God formerly were: yet let us not suppose, that we are in no danger of offending in this way. The sacred ministry may be intruded into, with a presumption and impiety bordering upon sacrilege and blasphemy; while mercenary and ungodly men make those monies, and prevailed against them. And the children of Ammon gave him the same year a hundred talents of silver, and ten thousand measures of wheat, and ten thousand of barley. So much did the children of Ammon pay unto him, both the second year, and the third.

6 So Jotham became mighty, because he prepared his ways before the LORD his God.

7 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jotham, and all his wars, and his ways, lo, they are written in the book of the Kings of Israel and Judah.

8 He was five and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem.

9 ¶ And Jotham slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city of David: and Ahaz his son reigned in his stead.

professions, engagements, and protestations, in the presence of God, "for filthy lucre's sake," which they deride as enthusiastic or superstitious! The Lord's table may be approached in hypocrisy, pride, unbelief, and impenitency; or even as a step to preferment, by infidels and debauchees who are the slaves to every lust! and in many ways men may be guilty of most awful and presumptuous profanations. Against these abuses the ministers of God must caution all persons, however wealthy, honourable, or powerful, with plain declarations of the truths and precepts of Scripture, and solemn warnings respecting the consequences of transgression. Yet, alas! few are found, who are valiant men, that dare, in meekness and faithfulness, oppose the powerful who attempt the most scandalous profanations; and venture all the consequences of their displeasure in refusing to concur in them. But the Lord will assuredly stand by those few, and mark their opposers with evident tokens of his anger.—No wonder that ungodly men are so enraged at opposition from the ministers of God; for even believers at some times cannot endure it. But his rebuke brings them to themselves, and they then make haste to renounce their wayward purposes; submit patiently to his severest corrections; and are humbled for the pride of their hearts. And, whatever humiliating or disgraceful events take place; however we may be excluded from the earthly courts of the Lord, the communion of his saints, and the comforts of society; if we are brought to true repentance, and at length obtain eternal life, we shall bless God for the whole. (Notes, and P. O. Dan. 4:28-37.) But the Lord always resists the proud; and contempt, either on earth or in hell, is the never-failing consequence of self-confidence and arrogance. When, however, the Lord sees good to throw prosperous and useful men aside, as a broken vessel; if he raises up their children, or other able persons, to fill their places, that the community be not losers, they may rejoice in renouncing all worldly concerns, and in employing the remnant of their days in preparing for death and heaven.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVII. V. 1, 2. Marg. Ref. 2 Kings 15:32-36.—He entered not. (1.) Jotham imitated his father in the best part of his conduct; but did not attempt to enter the temple, or to burn incense, as Uzziah had done. (Notes, 26:4, 16-23.)—The people did yet corruptly. [They offered incense in high places; (2 Kings 15:35.) and as some think committed idolatry.] Bp. Patrick. The general character also of the people, as to unrighteousness, fraud, oppression, and other crimes; as well as their ungodliness, hypocrisy, or idolatrous worship, seems to be implied.

V. 3. Ophel. This seems to have been a cliff, or high rock, where a tower and wall were built to fortify the city. These Jotham greatly strengthened and improved.

V. 4. 'He took care to fortify his kingdom strongly on all sides, against his enemies.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 5. (Marg. Ref.) It is probable that at the end of three years, the Ammonites recovered strength, and refused to pay the tribute.

V. 6. It has been observed, that most, if not all, the pious kings of Judah, have some evil thing laid to their charge; but Jotham has not; except as "the people did corruptly," and the high places were not demolished.

V. 7. It is supposed, that Jotham's deeds so attracted attention, that they were recorded in the Chronicles of Israel, as well as in those of Judah; though but little has been transmitted to us concerning him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The severest judgments of God have mercy connected with them, either to the persons themselves, or to others, who thence learn caution and circumspection.—It ought to be the constant aim of every one of us, to imitate the faith, piety, equity, kindness, self-denial, patience, and meekness, of those servants of God with whom we are acquainted, and of whom we read or hear; and carefully to avoid their failings and the sins into which they have been betrayed: but the reverse of this is general, and natural to mankind.—If we would attain to eminence in godliness or usefulness, we must diligently "prepare our ways before the LORD our God."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Ahaz reigns very wickedly, 1-4. He is defeated with terrible slaughter of his army by the kings of Syria and Israel, 5-7. The Israelites lead to Samaria an immense number of captives, 8. The people are induced, by the remembrance of a prophet, and the interference of the princes, to treat them kindly and send them home, 9-15. Ahaz, attacked by the Edomites, and Phisitians, sends to the king of Assyria, but receives no benefit from his assistance, 16-21. In his distress he adds to his idolatries, 22-25. He dies, and is succeeded by Hezekiah, 26, 27.

AHAAZ was twenty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem: but he did not that which was right in the sight of the LORD, like David his father:

2 For he walked in the ways of the kings of Israel, and made also molten images for Baalim.

3 Moreover, he burnt incense in the valley of the son of Hinnom, and burnt his children in the fire, after the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD had cast out before the children of Israel.

4 He sacrificed also and burnt incense in the high places, and on the hills, and under every green tree.

5 Wherefore the LORD his God delivered him into the hand of the king of Syria; and they smote him, and carried away a great multitude of them captives, and brought them to Damascus. And acting habitually as under his inspection, and depending on his assistance and merciful acceptance, from love to his name and zeal for his glory.—Many pious men have not fortitude or vigour to combat the difficulties, which must be expected by those who attempt reformation, in opposition to inveterate prejudices, errors, superstitions, and immoralities; yet all in public stations should remember, that this is incumbent upon them, and forms that improvement of their talents which God requires. They should therefore “arise and be doing,” according to the duties of their situations, “and the LORD will be with them for good.”—But even when the most unexceptionable example is united to the most strenuous and persevering endeavours, the success of pious reformers will not answer their desires and expectations. Many of “the people will stiffen to corruptly,” and, in righteous displeasure against those who hate to be reformed, the Lord often prematurely removes wise, prosperous, and pious rulers in church or state; and sends others, whose follies and vices severely punish a people, who did not value their mercies till they were withdrawn from them.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVIII. V. 1-4. Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Kings 16:3, 4. Lev. 20:2-5. Matt. 5:21, 22, v. 22.

V. 5. JEHOVAH was ‘the God of Ahaz,’ as his Creator, Upholder, and Governor, as Ahaz was born among the professing and covenant people of God, dedicated to him by circumcision, and educated in a religious manner; as he reigned over Judah, where alone the worship of God was instituted; and as he was bound by every obligation to serve and obey him. But he was not ‘the God of Ahaz,’ as he is the God of true believers, according to the covenant of grace; he was not Ahaz’s Portion and Salvation: nor was Ahaz the Lord’s servant and worshipper, for he was a most wicked apostate and idolater. In short, he had not the privilege of having “the LORD for his God,” his “Shield and exceeding great Reward;” but he had the guilt of violating the strongest obligations to his service; and of continuing impenitent and ungodly, in the midst of every advantage and means of grace. Had he been born and educated a heathen, he might perhaps have escaped remarkable judgments; but as he was an apostate, “the LORD his God” delivered him to be punished, into the hands of the Syrians and Israelites. (Notes, 2 Kings 16:5-9.) His people also were involved in the same guilt, and in the same punishment. They did corruptly under pious Jotham: for their correction Jotham was removed, and wicked Ahaz succeeded; and his idolatry and enormous crimes were punished by dreadful havoc made among his subjects. Thus, the sins and sufferings of kings and people resemble the case of the human body; in which the head must share the sufferings of the members, and the members those of the head, by reason of that unity which subsists between them. (Note, 2 Sam. 24:1, 2. P. O. 1-9.)

V. 6-8. This is the greatest slaughter of the men of Judah that we read of. (13:17.) And as they were “all valiant men,” and Israel was not in a very prosperous state, the defeat of Judah with such tremendous slaughter must be ascribed to some supernatural terror or confusion. “Because they had forsaken the LORD,” who therefore forsook them, and took away their courage, that they could make no resistance.” Bp. Patrick. Ahaz himself escaped; but he had a son and two of his chief officers slain, one of whom was next under him in authority; and an immense spoil, and multitude of prisoners, were collected from the defenceless country by he also was delivered into the hand of the king of Israel, who smote him with a great slaughter.

6 For Pekah the son of Remaliah slew in Judah a hundred and twenty thousand in one day, which were all valiant men; because they had forsaken the LORD God of their fathers.

7 And Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim, slew Maasiah the king’s son, and Azrikam the governor of the house, and Elkanah that was next to the king.

8 And the children of Israel carried away captive of their brethren two hundred thousand, women, sons, and daughters, and took also away much spoil from them, and brought the spoil to Samaria. [Practical Observations.]

9 But a prophet of the LORD was there, whose name was Oded: and he went out before the host that came to Samaria, and said unto them, Behold, because the LORD God of your fathers was wroth with Judah, he hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage that reacheth up unto heaven.

10 And now ye purpose to keep under the children of Judah and Jerusalem for bondmen the rapacious victors. It does not appear, however, that Jerusalem was taken by them. (Notes, Is. 7:1-9.)

V. 9-11. The Lord, provoked with Judah’s idolatries, had delivered them into the hands of their still more idolatrous brethren, who had shown the most exorbitant rage and cruelty in destroying them: and, as if this had been a small thing, they proceeded to gratify their inhuman avarice, by seizing all the women and children, to sell them, or to keep them for slaves. But, if the Lord had so severely punished their offending brethren of Judah, could the men of Israel expect to escape his fierce indignation? Were there no sins among them to provoke his displeasure? Rather, were they not already abundantly sufficient, without augmenting them by this iniquitous and cruel treatment of the women and children, who had never injured them? Or, could they hope for the mercy of God, if they neither showed mercy nor justice to their brethren? They were therefore required to set the captives at liberty; because they themselves were exposed to the fierce wrath of God. This was the Lord’s message to the conquerors by his prophet; and it naturally leads us to consider some questions concerning slavery.—Let it then be remembered, that there do not at present subsist any such distinctions between nations, as God for wise reasons, was pleased, for a time, to establish between Israel and the Gentiles; but every man is now our neighbour, and in one sense our brother; our fellow-man, if not our fellow-Christian.—They indeed attempt too much who argue, that slavery in all cases is contrary to scriptural principles; and this has given its advocates some advantage in the controversy. But no man, well acquainted with the word of God, needs fear to maintain, that the modern slave-trade stands in diametrical opposition to both the law and the gospel; as well as to the true interests of mankind. Who can possibly hold his unoffending brother in bondage, for his own gain, without violating the rule of doing to others, as he would that they should do unto him, and as he might fairly expect that they should do unto him? (Note, Matt. 7:12.) Suppose that an African should kidnap the son of an English merchant, carry him to Africa, and, pretending property in him, should sell him for a slave; and so he should be sold from one to another for life, and his children after him. Suppose that Africans gave such prices for Englishmen, as encouraged them to steal and sell one another, till it became a regular trade; would not free-born Britons execrate buyers, sellers, stealers, and all concerned in such a traffic? Those who have forfeited their lives by crimes against the state, have also forfeited their natural right to liberty; and might justly be sold for slaves, by public authority, declaring the crimes for which they were thus punished. Some other criminals, and some kind of fraudulent debtors, might be sold for a limited time, consistently with equity. Perhaps some prisoners taken in battle, in those wars, which are evidently undertaken by all concerned in them, from avarice and cruelty, might thus be punished, without transgressing the law of God; for the policy of it forms quite a distinct question. But to seize, enslave, and sell a fellow-creature, who has, by no criminality known to us, or cognizable by us, merited so severe a treatment, must in all cases be contrary to the law of “loving our neighbour as ourselves.” The poor Africans cannot be proved to be either criminals, debtors, or prisoners taken in rapacious or revengeful wars, waged by them against those who enslave them; on the contrary, they appear generally to be persons, who have been and bondwomen unto you: but are there *not with you, even with you, sins against *the Lord your God?

11 Now hear me therefore, and *deliver the captives again, which ye have taken captive of your brethren: for *the fierce wrath of the Lord is upon you.

12 Ther certain of *the heads of the children of Ephraim, Azariah the son of Johanan, Berechiah the son of Meshillemoth, and Jehizkiah the son of Shallum, and Amasa the son of Hadlai, *stood up against them that came from the war.

13 And said unto them, Ye shall not bring in the captives hither: for whereas we have offended against the Lord already, ye intend to *add more to our sins and to our trespass: for our trespass is great, and there is fierce wrath against Israel.

14 So the armed men left the captives and the spoil, before the princes and all the congregation.

15 And the men which were *expressed by name rose up, and took the captives, and with the spoil * clothed all that were naked among them, and arrayed them, and shod them, and *gave them to eat and to drink, and anointed them, and carried all the feeble of them upon asses, and brought them to Jericho, *the city of palm-trees, to their brethren: then they returned to Samaria.

16 ¶ At that time *did king Ahaz send unto the kings of Assyria to help him.

17 For again *the Edomites had come and smitten Judah, and carried away *captives.

18 The *Philistines also had invaded the cities of the low country, and of the south of Judah, and had taken *Beth-shemesh, and *Ajalon, and *Gederoth, and *Shocho with the villages thereof, and *Timnah with the villages thereof, Gimzo also and the villages thereof: and they dwelt there.

19 For *the Lord brought Judah low, *because of Ahaz king of Israel: for he *made Judah naked, and transgressed sore against the Lord.

20 And *Tilgath-pileser king of Assyria came unto him, and *distressed him, but strengthened him not.

21 For Ahaz *took away a portion out of the house of the Lord, and out of the house of the king, and of the princes, and gave it unto the king of Assyria: but he helped him not.

kidnapped from their relatives, or bought of them; or taken prisoners in wars, excited on purpose to supply that infamous market. If any of them be criminals, the European merchants know it not: they have no authority from either God or man to be their executioners; and their descendants certainly are not criminals. Were it indeed true, (which is far from being the case,) that if not bought by the Europeans, they would be slain by the conqueror; we need only answer, "You must not "do evil, that good may come." If you have no other way of rescuing them, you had better leave them to fight their own battles, and treat their captives as they please, without interfering: and you certainly would do so, if avarice were no more concerned in the business than humanity is.' It is true, that the Scripture throughout speaks of slavery as actually existing: but the judicial law was very distinct from the moral law, as has before been shewn. (Note, Ex. 21:1—6.) Like other municipal laws, it aimed to prevent those evils which originated from abuses and human passions, and which could not be terminated except by constant miracle; as in the case of divorces. The apostles and evangelists were preachers, not legislators; they were not empowered to subvert the foundations of civil government throughout the world; and they found slavery universally and inseparably interwoven with them. Every one must therefore perceive what confusion, what reproach, and what additional enmity to Christianity, must have been occasioned by such an attempt. They indeed laid down the principles, which, when reduced to practice, will infallibly annihilate slavery: and, taking things as they then stood in civil society, they taught all Christians how to accommodate themselves to their stations, consistently with their profession, even if they were slaves, and slaves in a heathen family.—The question is, therefore, to be decided not by facts, but by The Moral law of God, and the tendency of the GOSPEL. The practice could not then be regularly opposed, without creating convulsions in society; nor can it ever be successfully rectified by preachers; it is the work of enlightened, humane, and pious legislators.—Individual believers under both dispensations possessed slaves: they took matters as they were; and treated their slaves with such equity and humanity, as rendered it a kindness to them, to take them out of ungodly families. And a pious West Indian who laments the enormities which he cannot but witness, arising from this unnatural trade, and who sincerely wishes and prays for its entire abolition, may, in the mean time, deem it better, quietly to set his neighbours an example of treating slaves with brotherly lenity and kindness, conducive to their real happiness, than indiscriminately to liberate them: when perhaps it might occasion fatal effects upon the minds of the other planters and their slaves; if this were done by an individual, in opposition to all his neighbours, and without the interference of legal authority. When strangers are brought so far from home, and are not able to return, a truly pious and humane man may render the yoke tolerable to them. But, who had a right by compulsion to bring his unoffending brethren so far from their native land? And what proportion do pious and humane persons in most communities, bear to those of an opposite character? A succession of very wise and good kings, if that could be ensured, might render even absolute monarchy a blessing. But while mankind are what they are, men of reflection, and lovers of their brethren, will never be friends to despotism in kingdoms, or in families: and absolute monarchs and the holders of slaves, (except of such as are condemned by an equitable sentence, to that condition, as the punishment of their crimes,) will ever be justly exposed to the determined opposition of mankind, even when they do not merit detestation by any direct abuse of power.

V. 12—15. It is remarkable that Pekah is not mentioned in this transaction concerning the prisoners: but probably he was at the head of the army, when the prophet addressed them. (6)—The courage of these princes, who ventured thus determinedly to oppose the whole army, insolent with victory and enriched with booty, was admirable and highly commendable, and their arguments were cogent, and coincided with the message of the prophet. The apostasy, idolatry, and recent cruelty of Israel rendered their trespass very great: and if they reduced the captives to slavery, it would add still more to their sins, and hasten the execution of the fierce wrath of God upon them.—The compliance of the army, in leaving both the captives and the spoil, to the disposal of the princes, was very wonderful and perhaps unparalleled in history; and the humane treatment, and the carrying back of the captives to their brethren, deserves all possible applause.—The prophet's remonstrance had for the time its full effect: but alas! both princes and people still cleaved to their idols, and went on in their other sins. (Marg. Ref.) * What might not these great men have done, to bring them to repent of their idolatry, if they had been truly religious and exerted their authority? Bp. Patrick. The narrative also shows, that even Israel, amidst all their idolatries and iniquities, had not forgotten, and were not disposed to question, the divine authority of the law of Moses.

V. 16—18. (2 Kings 16:7—9.) 'This is the first time that we read of the king of Assyria, excepting 2 Kings 15:19, where Pul king of Assyria is mentioned as a powerful prince, who invaded the Israelites. Before his time, we read nothing of the Assyrian monarchy, which grew by degrees to its greatness from small beginnings. . . . If their large empire had been of long standing, we should in all probability have heard of them before this time, as we do often afterwards.' Bp. Patrick. V. 19. He made Judah naked.] The Lord himself was the glory and defence of Judah: but Ahaz, by seducing his subjects from his worship and service, had degraded them, stripped them of all their ornament, deprived them of all their protection, and left them defenceless and contemptible in the hands of their feeblest enemies. (Marg. Ref. Note Ex. 32:25.)

V. 20, 21. (Note, 2 Kings 16:7—9.) Tiglath-pileser 'did come to his assistance against the king of Syria, . . . he took Damascus, carried the people captive, and delivered Ahaz from the power of the Syrians. . . . But this did Ahaz little good; for he . . . rather weakened him by exhausting his treasures, and by destroying Samaria, whereby the way was opened to invade his country the more easily in the next reign. Thus many countries, in latter ages, by calling in the assistance of some foreign prince against their enemies, have been overthrown and conquered by those who came to their help.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 22, 23. This is that king Ahaz. (22) This is the pass yet more against the LORD: 'this is that king Ahaz.

23 For he sacrificed unto the gods of Damascus, which smote him: and he said, 'Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, therefore will I sacrifice to them, that they may help me. But they were the ruin of him, and of all Israel.

24 And Ahaz gathered together the vessels of the house of God, and sent in pieces the vessels of the house of God, and shut up the doors of the house of the LORD, and he made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem.

25 And in every several city of Judah he made high places to burn incense unto other gods, and provoked to anger the LORD God of his fathers.

26 ¶ Now the rest of his acts, and of all his ways, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the Kings of Judah and Israel.

27 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city, even in Jerusalem: but they brought him not into the sepulchres of the kings of Israel: and Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. Those who succeed eminently wise and pious men in the same important station, seldom enter into their views or imitate their conduct, in "doing that which is right in the sight of the LORD;" nay, frequently they seem ambitious of being as opposite to them as possible; especially when they run into wickedness, after having received a pious education. (Note, 2 Kings 21:3.)—When sinners "like not to retain God in their knowledge," he gives them up to the lusts of their own hearts, to perpetrate every thing horrible and unnatural; and when such monsters of iniquity are advanced to thrones, it is evident, that the Lord intends by them to punish a guilty land, by involving their subjects in the consequences of their crimes and follies. They, therefore, who are groaning under the oppression of cruel tyrants, or suffering from the effects of their infuriated counsels, are called on to humble themselves before God for their own sins, to submit to his justice, and to seek deliverance from his mercy. On the other hand, if we are governed with equity and clemency, and live in peace and prosperity, through the prudent and successful administration of our rulers; we should bless God for his mercies, and show forth our gratitude in our daily conduct: and it is the constant duty of us all to pray for those who are, or shall be, placed over us, that they may be the instruments of God's goodness and mercy to us, and not of his wrath.—Tempters and examples of iniquity are often employed as scourges; and the sentence, which God righteously denounces, man may unrighteously execute.—It is a lamentable reflection, that so many thousands of lives are sacrificed to the mad passions of potent individuals, who themselves escape: but they that thus are cut off, are sinners, and are punished for having forsaken or offended God.—The combined effects of several depraved passions is very dreadful: when revenge is satiated, avarice or ambition may take the reins; and if power be not wanting, the widow, the orphan, the stranger, and the helpless, will be oppressed, crushed, and enslaved without redress: while the oppressor will rejoice in growing rich by these detestable measures. But the Lord beholds and disapproves; and, in one way or another, he will plead and revenge the cause of the oppressed.

V. 9-27. It is happy when the authority of God's word, or the exhortations of his ministers, deter men from persisting in mercenary cruelties; or excite legislators and princes to put a stop to their iniquity. If the oppressed have provoked God to deliver them up into the hand of their oppressors; should not these remember, that "there are with them also sins against the LORD?" Even rigorous justice towards an offending brother, is a grievous offence, in one that only

CHAPTER XXIX.

Hezekiah reigns well, opens the doors of the temple, and exhorts the priests and Levites to prepare every thing for the worship of God, 1-11. They sanctify themselves, and cleanse the temple and its vessels, 12-19. Hezekiah offers solemn sacrifices; and the Levites show more zeal than the priests, 20-36.

¶ HEZEKIAH began to reign when he was five and twenty years old, and he reigned nine and twenty years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Abijah, the daughter of Zechariah.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that David his father had done.

3 ¶ He, in the first year of his reign, in the first month, opened the doors of the house of the LORD, and repaired them.

4 And he brought in the priests and the Levites, and gathered them together into the east street,

5 And said unto them, Hear me, ye Levites; Sanctify now yourselves, and sanctify the house of the LORD God of your fathers, and carry forth the filthiness out of the holy place.

lives and hopes through the mercy of God. (Notes and P. O. Matt. 18:23-35.) But for those, who have deserved the heavy wrath of God for their own sins, to injure and cruelly entreat their unoffending brethren, must "add exceedingly to the fierce wrath of the LORD that is upon them." If "he shall have judgment without mercy, who has showed no mercy," what will be his doom, who has been guilty of the most flagrant injustice to the inoffensive stranger, merely because he had it in his power to oppress him! Surely, in such a case, while the ministers of the gospel warn, exhort, and beseech the oppressors to deliver the captives up, whom they have taken of their brethren: the legislators and rulers of every state should peremptorily refuse admission into their dominions, to those bondslaves, whom men have so unjustly reduced under their subjection. For we have offended against the Lord already, and this connivance must add still more to our sin and to our trespass, till fierce wrath come upon the nation. Nay, if the poor captives, who have been violently torn from their native country, and who have no power to return to their beloved relatives, could, when dismissed and kindly treated, be carried back again to them, it would be a conduct becoming the disciples of Christ; it might tend to render the name of CHRISTIAN respectable in those distant regions, where the cruelty, treachery, and avarice of those who bear it have rendered it odious; and thus at length prepare the way for the propagation of the gospel among these poor benighted heathens. And, instead of injuring the interests of the community, or of any individuals; (except the most atrocious of the oppressors, who have no right to be considered;) we may venture, upon general scriptural principles, to foretell, that above all other measures, it would tend the most effectually to the lengthening of our tranquility and prosperity. (Note, Dan. 4:27.)—But if those, who commiserate their oppressed fellow-creatures, long to see their grievous servitude terminated, they must unite in prayer for the divine blessing upon the exertions of those, who honourably stand forth in this benevolent cause. For, except the Lord touch the hearts of such as are to decide upon it, every exertion will be in vain.—When sinners are left to their own hearts' lusts, they grow more and more callous, and desperate in wickedness; and "trespass yet more and more" in their distress, as if in defiance of God; seeking redress in their miseries, from those sins whence all their sufferings spring, and which will terminate in their ruin and in that of all who adhere to them. For when God casts down, none can raise up; and all helpers will increase distress, instead of affording deliverance.—The progress of wickedness and misery is often rapid: and it is awful to reflect upon the case of one, who has "trespassed more and more," and added one impiety to another, and done all in his power to lead others into the same destructive courses; being at once "driven away in his wickedness," into the eternal world. (Note, Prov. 14:32.) Yet, even this apparent severity of God, against the ring-leaders in iniquity, proves mercy to thousands, when righteous and useful persons are raised up in their stead.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIX. V. 1, 2. Notes, 2 Kings 18:1-3.

V. 3-5. 'This demonstrates his great piety and zeal for God, that he began so soon to reform religion. . . . The surest way to establish himself, he thought, was to establish true religion; though he ran a great hazard in attempting the abolishing idolatry, which had been confirmed by some years' prescription.' Bp. Patrick. It seems that he public worship at the temple was entirely suppressed and prohibited during the 7 Also they have shut up the doors of the porch, and put out the lamps, and have not burned incense, nor offered burnt-offerings in the holy place unto the God of Israel.

8 Wherefore the wrath of the LORD was upon Judah and Jerusalem, and he hath delivered them to trouble, to astonishment, and to hissing, as ye see with your eyes.

9 For lo, your fathers have fallen by the sword, and our sons and our daughters and our wives are in captivity for this.

10 Now it is in my heart to make a covenant with the LORD God of Israel, that his fierce wrath may turn away from us.

11 My sons, be not now negligent: for the LORD hath chosen you to stand before him, to serve him, and that ye should minister unto him, and burn incense.

latter years of king Ahaz. (7. 28:24. 2 Kings 16:17, 18.) The only reason advanced for a contrary opinion, is this: it is not said, that the sacred fire on the altar of burnt-offering was extinguished, or that it was rekindled by fire from heaven, as at the dedication of the temple. If, however, the service was not totally put a stop to, the people in general were shut out from attending.—Hezekiah must have witnessed this impiety of his father, with deep regret and indignation: but immediately upon his succession to the throne, he threw open the doors of the temple, and proceeded to re-establish the worship there, as in the days of David. Yet the priests and Levites delayed to do their duty, till excited to it by the king. Perhaps, Urijah was still the high-priest; (Note, 2 Kings 16:10-16.) the chief priests were infected with idolatry, and disaffected to the service of God; and their inferiors, even if well disposed, might be held back by the authority of the leading men, till required and authorized by Hezekiah.—Sanctify, &c. (5.) Personal repentance, and purification from legal and moral defilements, were requisite in the priests and Levites, before they could, according to order, proceed to purify the temple. (Marg. Ref. g, h.)—Much rubbish, dirt, and rust, would be contracted, through disuse and neglect, in the temple, the courts, and the sacred vessels; but the idolatry with which they had been polluted, and the altar, made after the model of that which Ahaz saw at Damascus, formed by far the worst filthiness, from which they needed to be cleansed.

V. 6, 7. (Marg. Ref.) Our fathers, &c. (6.) When the honour of God was concerned, Hezekiah did not hesitate to criminate those who had gone before. He did not indeed directly mention Ahaz, his father, because that was not needful; and the neglect and base compliances of the priests and Levites, had greatly contributed to the wickedness of the king and his nobles. (Notes, Matt. 10:37-39. 2 Cor. 5:16. P. O. 1 Pet. 1:17-21, latter part.)

Turned away, &c.] This seems to signify, that Ahaz brought in a way of worship directly contrary to the law of God, which commanded them to worship toward the ark, which was placed in the west. But he ordered that they should turn their backs upon that, . . . and worship toward the east, where he had set his altar. And at last he shut up the doors of the temple, that they should not worship there at all. Bp. Patrick. (Note, Ez. 8:16.)

V. 8, 9. The defeat and dreadful slaughter recorded in the foregoing chapter seem here referred to, as the effect of some extraordinary terror from God on the minds of the Jews; and the Edomites and Philistines had been successful, because God had employed them as the weapons of his indignation. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 28:6-8, 16-19.)

V. 10, 11. (Notes, 2 Sam. 7:1-3. 1 Kings 8:15-21. t Chr. 28:2.) He foresaw there was immediate destruction impending upon the whole nation for their iniquities, unless 15 And they gathered their brethren, and sanctified themselves, and came, according to the commandment of the king, by the words of the LORD to cleanse the house of the LORD.

16 And the priests went into the inner part of the house of the LORD, to cleanse it, and brought out all the uncleanness that they found in the temple of the LORD into the court of the house of the LORD. And the Levites took it, to carry it out abroad into the brook Kidron.

17 Now they began on the first day of the first month to sanctify, and on the eighth day of the month came they to the porch of the LORD: so they sanctified the house of the LORD, in eight days; and in the sixteenth day of the first month they made an end.

18 Then they went in to Hezekiah the king, and said, We have cleansed all the house of the LORD, and the altar of burnt-offering, with all the vessels thereof, and the show-bread table, with all the vessels thereof.

19 Moreover all the vessels, which king Ahaz in his reign did cast away in his transgression, have we prepared and sanctified, and behold, they are before the altar of the LORD.

[Practical Observations.]

20 ¶ Then Hezekiah the king rose early, and gathered the rulers of the city, and went up to the house of the LORD.

21 And they brought seven bullocks, and seven rams, and seven lambs, and seven he-goats, for a sin-offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah. And he commanded they did heartily and speedily repent of them. . . . Therefore this good king thought it absolutely necessary forthwith to make a thorough reformation, and engage the whole nation in a solemn covenant to worship God purely. Thus Conradus Pellicanus' Bp. Patrick. (Notes, 15:12-15. Deut. 29:10-15. Josh. 24:25-27. 2 Kings 11:17-20. 23:3. Neh. 9:38. 10:1, 28-39.) Hezekiah attempted to prevail with the priests and Levites to attend to their duty, by argument and affectionate exhortation, and not by compulsion. This condescending address assured them of his readiness to support and protect them, as a father would do his obedient children. He warned them not to be deceived; for God would certainly call them to a strict account, if they neglected the work to which he had chosen them: or he exhorted them not to be remiss, when extraordinary exertions were become absolutely necessary.

Be not now negligent. (11.) מִתְחַלְחֵל: "Be not deceived." Marg. Do not err: "do not persist in that error; in which you have neglected that worship of God, to which you were chosen." Junius in Robertson.

V. 12-19. All these leaders in the work were Levites of the different families of that tribe: (Marg. Ref. u-c.) not the chief in rank, but the most eminent for zeal and diligence. The high-priest is not mentioned. Some of the other priests concurred, and cleansed the inside of the sanctuary, whither the Levites might not enter.—When the ark was to be removed, and on other necessary occasions, the priests might enter the holy of holies, though not at other times. (Note, Num. 4:5).—Ahaz died about the close of the year; and Hezekiah had given timely orders to the priests and Levites, for them to begin this work with the new year. It is surprising that Ahaz did not cut in pieces all the tables of show-bread, and the other golden and silver furniture of the temple; but merely cast them aside.

According to the commandment of the king, &c. (15.) When Ahaz commanded Urijah contrary to the law of God, both he, and the priest who obeyed his impious command, acted most wickedly. (Note, 2 Kings 16:10-16.) But the priests and Levites acted right, in proportion as they obeyed "the commandment of the king by the words of the Lord." Hezekiah properly improved his talent, without intermeddling out of his province; and they as properly yielded obedience.—Why should not the case be the same, under the Christian dispensation? Was Hezekiah's interposition any part of the ritual law of Moses, which Christianity has superseded? (Note, 30:12.)

V. 20. Perhaps Hezekiah arose earlier on that day than common, that he might set the people an example of earnestness in the service of God. He would not lose a day, nor an hour, after the temple was ready, before he opened the solemn worship of God, by sin-offerings and other sacrifices. (Notes, Ps. 119:57-61. Matt. 6:33, 34.)

the priests the sons of Aaron to offer them on the altar of the Lord.

22 So they killed the bullocks, and the priests received the blood, and sprinkled it on the altar: likewise, when they had killed the rams, they sprinkled the blood upon the altar: they killed also the lambs, and they sprinkled the blood upon the altar.

23 And they brought forth the he-goats for the sin-offering before the king and the congregation; and they laid their hands upon them:

24 And the priests killed them, and they made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar, to make an atonement for all Israel: for the king commanded that the burnt-offering and the sin-offering should be made for all Israel.

25 And he set the Levites in the house of the Lord with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, according to the commandment of David, and of Gad the king's seer, and Nathan the prophet: for so was the commandment of the Lord by his prophets.

26 And the Levites stood with the instruments of David, and the priests with the trumpets.

27 And Hezekiah commanded to offer the burnt-offering upon the altar. And when the burnt-offering began, the song of the Lord began also with the trumpets, and with the instruments ordained by David king of Israel.

28 And all the congregation worshipped, and the singers sang, and the trumpeters sounded: and all this continued until the burnt-offering was finished.

29 And when they had made an end of offering, the king and all that were present with him, bowed themselves, and worshipped.

V. 21-24. (Marg. Ref. Note, Lev. 1:5-9).—One bullock was appointed for a sin-offering for the high-priest, and one for the whole congregation; but on this extraordinary occasion, when so many and great enormities had been committed, multiplied atoning sacrifices were offered. (Notes, Lev. 4:13-21. Num. 15:22-29). The ceremony of the king and the congregation laying their hands upon the head of the goats, expressed their confession of guilt, and the substitution of the guiltless animal to suffer in their stead; which prefigured him who bare our sins in his own body on the tree. (Notes, Lev. 1:4. 16:20-22). It is not, however, here stated, that the prescribed rules, respecting the sin-offerings, for the priest, the ruler, or the nation, as to carrying the blood into the most holy place, and burning the bodies without the camp, was observed. Perhaps this was not done: and in that case, these sin-offerings must be considered as in some respects different from those prescribed in that part of the law. (Notes, Lev. 4:3-7, 11, 12. 6:30. Heb. 13:9-14, vv. 11, 12).—The word here rendered he-goats, (21) is not used in Scripture till after the captivity, and learned men think that this is one proof that Ezra compiled these books. —The burnt-offering and the sin-offerings were presented, not only in behalf of the kingdom of Judah, but for all Israel, even the ten tribes, which were at this time governed by Hoshea. Hezekiah seems in this to have had respect to the plan which he afterwards proposed, and which is recorded in the ensuing chapter, namely, of uniting the whole nation of Israel in celebrating the passover, and in the worship of God.

V. 25-30. The temple-psalmody was regulated with the concurrence of these other prophets, as well as by the appointment of David. (Notes, 23:11-21, v. 13. 1 Chr. 9:22. 15:16. 16:6. 15:6. 25:1-8. Ezra 3:8-11. Ps. 33:2, 3. 81:1-5. 95:1-6. 104:6).

The priests with the trumpets. (26) The blowing of trumpets by the priests, on various occasions, and in particular over the sacrifices, was a part of the ritual law of Moses, and is here exactly distinguished from the psalmody instituted by David and the prophets. 30 Moreover, Hezekiah the king and the princes commanded the Levites to sing praise unto the Lord with the words of David, and Asaph the seer. And they sang praises with gladness, and they bowed their heads and worshipped.

31 Then Hezekiah answered and said, Now ye have "consecrated yourselves unto the Lord, come near and bring sacrifices and thank-offerings into the house of the Lord. And the congregation brought in sacrifices and thank-offerings; and as many as were of a free heart, burnt-offerings.

32 And the number of the burnt-offerings, which the congregation brought, was threescore and ten bullocks, a hundred rams, and two hundred lambs: all these were for a burnt-offering to the Lord.

33 And the consecrated things, were six hundred oxen and three thousand sheep.

34 But the priests were too few, so that they could not flay all the burnt-offerings: wherefore their brethren the Levites did help them, till the work was ended, and until the other priests had sanctified themselves: for the Levites were more upright in heart to sanctify themselves than the priests.

35 And also the burnt-offerings were in abundance, with the fat of the peace-offerings, and the drink-offerings for every burnt-offering. So the service of the house of the Lord was set in order.

36 And Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people, that God had prepared the people: for the thing was done suddenly.

burnt-offerings were in abundance; we may form some idea, how greatly the riches and prosperity of the kingdom of Judah were diminished; or, how greatly the general spirit of piety had declined. (30:24.)

V. 33. It is probable, that the consecrated things denote the peace-offerings and thank-offerings.

V. 34. It does not appear that any idolatrous priests were punished: but perhaps some were disgraced and excluded from attendance; while many neglected to sanctify themselves, being averse to the sacred service. It was therefore deemed more proper, that upright and duly sanctified Levites should flay the sacrifices, than unclean or profane priests. This is considered by many as irregular, but it is no where prohibited. Indeed, before the Levites were given to the sons of Aaron, it is probable, that they who brought the sacrifice both slaughtered and flayed it; (Notes, Lev. 1:5-9). afterwards these services seem to have formed a part of the ministry assigned to the Levites, at the will of the priests; but at length it became customary for the priests to perform them. The Levites might not in any case sprinkle the blood, burn the fat and flesh, or approach the altar.—The Levites were men of greater integrity than the priests: at least there were more men of zeal found among them, that readily offered themselves to the service of God. See 30:17. Bp. Patrick.

V. 35. Marg. Ref.

V. 36. The great and sudden change produced in the conduct of the people; and the alacrity with which they concurred in measures, to which much opposition had been expected, evidenced that "God had prepared" them; and Hezekiah and all the people rejoiced in it, as a token that he would prosper them in endeavouring a more complete reformation. (Marg. Ref. Note, 30:12.) God "had given this good mind to them, to join so forwardly in this reformation. "For the thing was done suddenly;" which argued a divine motion, whereby they were excited without long persuasions. Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-19. The removal of a single individual of very bad character, from any public situation, and the succession of a wise and pious person in his stead, may be productive of most important and extensive good effects; for authority, influence, and example, give such energy to the attempts of princes and nobles, that the consequences of their conduct are beyond all calculation. What an honour is it to be employed in diffusing piety and felicity through whole kingdoms! But how dreadful will be the condemnation of those, who spread guilt and misery in so extensive a manner!—Whether a godly man inherit a kingdom, or an estate; whether he change his station in society or his place of abode, or be removed to a new situation in the church; his first actions will be of considerable importance, and often leave an abiding impression: and regulations may frequently be then made without difficulty, before different habits and expectations have been formed; which would afterward become almost impracticable. — Even in that nation, in which God had appointed that apostates and idolaters should be punished with death, the most effectual revivals of true religion were produced by example, exhortation, and encouragement: and if it were in the hearts of kings and rulers, thus to join themselves in covenant with the Lord, and zealously to stir up all orders of people to do their duty, by earnest persuasions and affectionate exhortations, without using violence, or imposing on men's consciences; many would be excited willingly to coöperate in their pious designs, and to “come according to the commandment of the king, by the words of the LORD.” (Notes, 10,11, 30:12.) Happy and honourable will they be, who shall thus become “nursing fathers” to the church, not by bribes and preferments, but by countenancing those who zealously labour to promote acknowledged truth and practical godliness, even though not all exactly in the same way.

V. 20-36. The nominal ministers of religion have, in all ages, been lamentably backward, in labouring and venturing to promote the cause of God: and the higher their dignities, and the greater their emoluments, the more evident, alas, frequently, has been their aversion to the work of the ministry. Too generally indeed the infidelity and impiety of all orders in the community are justly chargeable upon the vices, the supineness, or the insufficiency of the stated ministers. Instead of exhorting all others to do their duty, no exhortations have been found effectual, to induce them to attend to their own: nay, they have often been found disposed to overawe and browbeat their inferior brethren, who were willing to “labour in the word and doctrine;” and to supply their lack of service, that immortal souls might not perish for want of instruction. But if the honour of a parent is not to be regarded, where the glory of God is concerned, such clergymen, however dignified, must not expect to be treated with respect, when the very existence of true religion is at stake: and the reputation of the clerical function must be supported by the holy lives, superior knowledge in divine things, and unwearied labours of the clergy: or else it will sink into neglect and contempt. The true minister of Christ, however, should take heed first to himself and then to his ministry. His own conscience, heart, and life must first be purified, by repentance and faith in the divine Saviour; and then he may hope to prosper in endeavouring to convert others also, and to promote the pure and spiritual worship of God. — In all reformation, personal or public, we must first be convinced in what particulars we have done wrong, and then consider how we may do better. Neglect of God and omission of duty lead to more direct impiety and iniquity; and our own transgressions prepare us to become tempters and seducers of others. Thus religion is run down, and the wrath of the Lord comes on apostate professors of the gospel, and on apostate nations. In returning to him, therefore, we must renounce our sins and begin to practise neglected duties, to use the means of grace, and to watch against the wickedness of the heart. We, indeed, have no occasion for multiplied sacrifices; as the one atonement of Christ is sufficient for all who rely on it: but we need repeated confessions of guilt, constant humiliation before God, and application to the Saviour's blood, for forgiveness and acceptance: we need to maintain daily communion with our reconciled Father through Christ, and to receive continual communications from him: and we should present our spiritual sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving, and devote our time, talents, and substance, yea, our bodies and souls, with a free heart, as sacrifices acceptable to the Father through the Redeemer's name. To these things we are encouraged by the joyful sound of his gospel: when we abound in these sacred exercises, according to the commandment of the holy prophets and apostles of Christ, we shall be enabled, though in ourselves most miserable sinners, to “rejoice in the Lord,” and to glory in his salvation. Those ministers, who are most diligent in preparing for their work, and in performing it, will eventually be most employed and honoured, even though inferior in external distinctions; and slothful disqualification will never excuse any man's negligence before God. But he alone can prepare the heart of man for vital godliness: when much real good is effected in a little time, the glory must be ascribed to him; and all who love him, or the souls of men, will rejoice. If we would have such blessings, we must make it our constant prayer to him, thus to “prepare our hearts” and those of others: for when he works, great things may suddenly be effected. The Lord grant, that none called ministers may be negligent; but that they may all act as chosen by him, to stand before him, and to serve him; and zealously do his will, that his wrath may be turned from them, and from others on every side, by his blessing upon their labours, and in answer to their fervent prayers and supplications!

NOTES.—CHAP. XXX. V. 1. The other tribes of Israel were as much bound to obey the law of Moses, as Judah and Benjamin were; but Hezekiah had no authority over them. Yet the circumstances, in which they were placed, encouraged him to address them by letters, with an amiable and pious invitation; which implied, that they might attend at the temple with perfect safety, though they were not his subjects. (Notes, 1 Kings 12:26-29. 2 Kings 17:18,19-12.) — Ephraim and Manasseh, as principal tribes, seem to be put for the whole kingdom of Israel.

V. 2-4. Hezekiah and his counsellors justly concluded, that the regulation of the fourteenth day of the second month, which had been made for individuals, who were hindered from eating the passover at the appointed season, might, in their present circumstances, be extended to the whole congregation. (Notes, Num. 9:6-14.) — A sufficient number of the priests had not been duly sanctified, to prepare the temple for that ordinance at the stated time, or to officiate in it; the people, long dissuaded from attendance, were not generally assembled; those who were present seemed well disposed to celebrate that solemn and significant ordinance; and it might have an abiding good effect, if the favourable opportunity were seized. (Notes, 35:1-19. Ex. 12:3-27.) For these reasons, it was determined to summon the people to attend, and to keep the passover in the second month.

V. 5. As it was written. It is probable that the passover and the other solemn feasts, were sometimes totally omitted for many years together; at other times very carelessly attended, and by very few persons, compared with what the law required: and the ten tribes had never been accustomed to repair to Jerusalem, since the division of the kingdom. (Notes, 25:27, 11:13-17. 1 Kings 12:26-32.)

V. 6-9. Hoshea was king of Israel at this time, and it does not appear, that he attempted to hinder his subjects from resorting to Jerusalem to worship, if they chose it. (Note, 2 Kings 17:2.) — In the preceding reign, Israel had made a most dreadful slaughter of the men of Judah: yet Hezekiah considered the Israelites as brethren, and greatly desired to bring them back, by kind treatment, to the religion of their fathers; therefore he sent his proclamation, or letters, into the parts of the land belonging to the ten tribes, as well as throughout his own dominions. — The word rendered “posts” signifies winners: for men were then, and still are in *the fierceness of his wrath may turn away from you.

9 For if ye turn again unto the LORD, your brethren and your children shall find compassion before them that lead them captive, so that they shall come again into this land: for the LORD your God is gracious and merciful, and will not turn away his face from you, if ye return unto him.

10 So the posts passed from city to city through the country of Ephraim and Manasseh, even unto Zebulun: but they laughed them to scorn, and mocked them.

11 Nevertheless, divers of Asher and Manasseh, and of Zebulun, humbled themselves, and came to Jerusalem.

12 Also in Judah the hand of God was to give them one heart to do the commandment of the king and of the princes, by the word of the LORD.

[Practical Observations.]

13 ¶ And there assembled at Jerusalem much people to keep the feast of unleavened bread in the second month, a very great congregation.

14 And they arose and took away the altars that were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for incense took they away, and cast them into the brook Kidron.

15 Then they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the second month: and the priests and the Levites were ashamed, and sanctified themselves, and brought in the burnt-offerings into the house of the LORD.

16 And they stood in their place after their manner, according to the law of Moses the man of God: the priests sprinkled the blood, which they received of the hand of the Levites.

17 For there were many in the congregation that were not sanctified: therefore the Levites had the charge of the killing of the passovers for every one that was not clean, to sanctify them unto the LORD.

18 For a multitude of the people, even many of Ephraim, and Manasseh, Issachar, and Zebulun, had not cleansed themselves, yet did they eat the passover otherwise than it was written. But Hezekiah prayed for them, saying, The good LORD pardon every one.

19 That prepareth his heart to seek God, the LORD God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary.

20 And the LORD hearkened to Hezekiah, and healed the people.

many places, trained, and kept on purpose, to convey despatches speedily by running.—Even then, the Israelites were but a remnant, which had escaped from the ravages of Pul and Tiglath-pilezer: and far heavier judgments awaited them for their apostasy and idolatry; which could not be averted, except by turning again to the God of their fathers. Hezekiah, however, most affectionately and plainly, cautioned them not to copy the crimes of their fathers and brethren, whose miseries they had witnessed: he warned them not to be "stiff necked," or obstinate in rebellion: (Note, Deut. 10:16.) and he exhorted them to "yield themselves unto the LORD," that is, to yield the victory to him, to submit to his authority, to lay down their rebellious arms, to implore mercy, and to become his servants. (Note, Rom. 6:12, 13.) He entreated them also to "enter into his sanctuary, which he had sanctified for ever," that is, to renounce their idolatries and self-invented worship, and to resort to their sacrifices to the temple at Jerusalem, and there to keep the solemn feasts.—The temple was not only the centre of God's worship, and the pledge of his gracious presence with his people; but likewise the type of those spiritual blessings which are from everlasting to everlasting upon all true believers.—Hezekiah also encouraged those whom he addressed, to hope from the abundant mercy and grace of God to the penitent, that if thus they turned to him, the fierceness of his wrath would be turned away from them; and even to expect the restoration of their brethren and children, who were already in captivity: for God, having all hearts in his hand, could and would make the enemies of those who pleased him to be at peace with them, and to show them compassion. In this, he evidently referred to the promises contained in the books of Moses. (Marg. Ref. y—b.) It is observable, that these letters carefully avoided all mention of the claim of David's family to dominion over all Israel; and of former injuries and quarrels, or whatever could give any shadow of offence, either to the prince or his subjects, except in the immediate concerns of religion.

V. 10, 11. The nation of Israel was almost ripe for destruction; and it is by no means wonderful, that most of them insulted and mocked the messengers, who carried these faithful exhortations and invitations: indeed we may rather wonder, that they met with no harsher treatment. Some, however, out of the several tribes were prevailed on; and, humbling themselves for former sins, resorted to Jerusalem; so that Hezekiah's pious design was not ineffectual, though not so successful as he had wished it to be.

V. 12. The language of this verse is entitled to special attention. "The commandment of the king and his princes, by the word of the LORD, act with ready and general obedience from the men of Judah, because 'the hand of God was to give them one heart to do it.'" If the rulers had commanded any thing contrary to the word of the LORD, or beyond it, in affairs of religion; it would have been a misapplication of their authority: but, as they required nothing but what God had expressly enjoined, they duly improved their talent; and the people, by the grace of God, knew and performed their duty.—It does not appear, to me at least, that Christianity has at all altered the duty either of rulers or subjects in this respect. (Notes, 29:10, 11, 12—19, v. 15.) "There was a marvellous unanimity in Judah, who were so obedient to the motions of the divine grace, (without which so great a charge could not have been made,) as generally to comply with the king's proclamation, made with the consent of the princes. They looked upon it as a divine command, which was brought to them by that authority: and it appeared so to be, by the mighty power of God, which wrought their hearts to a cheerful obedience." Bp. Patrick.

V. 13. The emphatical language here used fully proves, that the concourse of people to celebrate this passover, was exceedingly great, compared with all other instances with which the writer was acquainted. (Note, 35:18, 19.)

V. 14. The people assembled at Jerusalem some days before the passover; and they employed the intermediate time, in clearing the city of altars for idolatry, and from other abominations. This was an excellent preparation for the solemn ordinance, which they were about to celebrate. (Notes, 2 Kings 23:4—23.)

V. 15. The zeal and earnestness of the king, the princes, and the people in general, made the priests and Levites ashamed of their supineness, and stirred them up to prepare themselves, and attend on their work: "they blushed to see the people so forward, and themselves so negligent." Bp. Patrick. "The hand of God" was in this also, or they would have been the more irritated, as examples in ancient and in modern times abundantly prove. (Notes, 12. Matt. 21:14—16, 23—27.)

V. 16—20. (Marg. Ref.) Either the Levites, or the offerers, might receive the blood of the victims; but the priests alone might sprinkle it.—It is evident from this passage, that, in ordinary cases, the persons who brought the paschal lambs slew them; or this exception would not have been stated: and it is at least probable, that the case was at first the same with other sacrifices. (Notes, 29:34. Lev. 1:5—9.)—But many of the ten tribes, having come at a short warning, and being destitute of instruction, were ceremonially unclean, and therefore not regularly prepared to eat the passover. (Notes, Num. 9:6—14.) Yet it would have greatly discouraged them, had they been excluded from that sacred ordinance, to which they had been invited: they appeared sincere and earnest in returning to the Lord, and there was a prospect of important usefulness. They were therefore allowed to eat the passover, when the Levites had killed it for them, notwithstanding their ceremonial disqualification, and Hezekiah, sensible that there was danger in this deviation, earnestly prayed to the good and merciful LORD, "to pardon every one that prepared his heart to seek ... the LORD, ... though not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary." (Marg. Ref. a—d.) To this prayer the Lord granted a favourable answer, "and healed the people." Perhaps he had visited them with some sickness for their irregular attendance, which he then graciously healed. (Note, 1 Cor. 11:29—34.) Or, he gave peace to their consciences, and healed their souls.

V. 21, 22. The sacrifices, psalmody, and worship of the sent at Jerusalem kept 'the feast of unleavened bread seven days, with great gladness: and the Levites and the priests praised the Lord day by day, singing with loud instruments unto the Lord.

22 And Hezekiah spake comfortably unto all the Levites that taught "the good knowledge of the Lord: and they did eat throughout the feast seven days, offering peace-offerings, and making confession to the Lord God of their fathers.

23 And the whole assembly took counsel to keep other seven days: and they kept other seven days with gladness.

24 For Hezekiah king of Judah did give to the congregation a thousand bullocks and seven thousand sheep; and the princes gave to the congregation a thousand bullocks and ten thousand sheep: and a great number of priests sanctified themselves.

25 And all the congregation of Judah, with the priests and the Levites, and all the congregation that came out of Israel, and the strangers that came out of the land of Israel, and that dwelt in Judah, rejoiced.

26 So there was great joy in Jerusalem: for since the time of Solomon the son of David king of Israel there was not the like in Jerusalem.

27 ¶ Then the priests the Levites arose, and blessed the people: and their voice was heard, and their prayer came up to his holy dwelling-place, even unto heaven.

people, were accompanied by the reading and expounding of the law: and some of the Levites were employed to instruct the people in the good, the profitable, and pleasant knowledge of the Lord: (Note, 1 Chr. 28:9.) and the king peculiarly noticed and encouraged them in this useful work, which was very much wanted. (Notes, 15:1-7, v. 3. 17:7-9. Deut. 31:10-13. Ezra 7:6-10. Neh. 8:1-9,18. 9:1-3. 13:1-3.) This would excite others to apply themselves to the study of the law, that they too might be qualified for this service.—By "making confession," may be meant, either confessing their sins, or acknowledging the unmerited goodness of the Lord, or both combined.

V. 23-25. (Marg. Ref. Note, 29:31,32.) This passover must have been not long before the time of harvest: but the hearts of the people were so enlarged with holy affections, that they were neither weary of the sacred service, nor in haste to return to their secular business. (Notes, Ex. 23:14-18. Lev. 23:10-21. Deut. 16:9.) "They did not observe other seven days of unleavened bread, but offered sacrifices with praises and thanksgivings, and feasting, seven days." By Patrick.—The people in general, and those who came out of the kingdom of Israel, would be unprepared for the expense attending these sacrifices: and therefore both Hezekiah and his princes liberally gave cattle for sacrifices: in which no doubt they acted properly, and should be imitated according to the nature of the Christian dispensation, by princes and nobles, liberally supplying what is wanting to support the worship of God, and to make glad the hearts of their poorer brethren. (Notes, Ez. 45:16,17.) The example had also a salutary influence on the priests, who sanctified themselves, to take their part in the service.—Probably, "the strangers that came out of the land of Israel," as distinguished from "the congregation of Israel," were not Israelites by birth, but circumcised proselytes.

V. 26. The observance of this passover, and the solemnities that attended it, were attended with great joyfulness of heart, and crowned with a peculiar blessing: many of the priests and people were brought to a serious sense of religion, and an important revival was introduced among them; even superior to any which had taken place since the days of Solomon: and in no instance had seven additional days been added to the time assigned to any festival, since the dedication of the temple by him. (Notes, 1 Kings 8:63-66.)—As this occurred in the first year of Hezekiah's reign, and he reigned twenty-nine years, it must be supposed that he witnessed the effects of so good a beginning, to the end of his life. It was done suddenly, but, by the grace of God, it was done effectually.—Doubtless, the passovers and other solemn feasts were kept up, and attended to, during this reign, though not in so remarkable a manner as this first passover.

V. 27. This seems to have closed the solemnity, in a most suitable and impressive manner; and the fervent prayer of the priests was heard in heaven, and graciously accepted. (Notes, Num. 6:23-27.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. Favourable opportunities of fixing good impressions ought by no means to be neglected: and it is better that circumstantial irregularities should be admitted, than that divine ordinances should not be observed, or substantial usefulness prevented.—When duties have been long omitted, the time ought to be more carefully redeemed, that no further delays may be occasioned: former negligence, though it cannot be excused, may be forgiven; but persevering ungodliness will infallibly end in destruction.—We ought to embrace every proper opportunity of addressing men upon their eternal concerns, and of engaging as many as possible in the service of God: and we may employ arguments and persuasions with those, over whom we claim no authority. Injuries or enmities, however many or great, should not render us indifferent about the salvation of any man: no expense or labour ought to be regarded in our endeavours to do good: nor should we be discouraged by the prospect of the neglect, contempt, or even rage, of the very persons, whose happiness we are seeking. Numbers may and will "laugh us to scorn;" but several will be humbled and benefited: and perhaps were success was least expected, where impiety and profligacy were most notorious, and among those who appeared ripe for destruction. Such attempts should be made in plainness, meekness, and affection; all reproaches and upbraidings, and every thing assuming, or needlessly offensive, should be avoided; important and undeniable truths and duties should chiefly be insisted upon: and the conscience and passions, especially hope and fear, should be vigorously addressed. The consequences of impetent rebellion against God should be solemnly stated, and contrasted with the happy effects of returning to him by humble, penitent faith; and the whole enforced by arguments deduced from fact and experience. Addresses to this effect are peculiarly seasonable, while men are suffering for their crimes; and still deeper miseries present themselves to their view, from which they have no prospect of deliverance, but by the merciful interposition of God. And when, among their acquaintance and relatives, the prosperity of eminently pious persons can be compared with the misery of those who are notoriously profligate; the argument thence deduced, for repentance and returning to God, will have peculiar energy: for even the irreligious must see the absurdity of copying the wicked examples of fathers or brethren, who have been evidently ruined by their vices. But the rich mercy of God forms the grand argument, by which to enforce repentance on the sinner's conscience. "There is forgiveness with him," and "plenteous redemption" in the Saviour's blood; and we are under a dispensation of mercy. Nothing but stiffnecked, obstinate, impenitent wickedness can run us. The chief of sinners, "who yield themselves to the Lord," shall certainly be saved. Let them therefore trust in his mercy, attend upon his ordinances, and join themselves to his people, that they may serve him; and then the fierceness of his wrath will turn away from them; but not otherwise. To this "we should exhort one another daily, lest any of us be hardened, through the deceitfulness of sin:" to this we should invite and persuade all others without exception, as far as we are able; for "him that cometh" to the Saviour, "he will in no wise cast out;" but "will grant" unto all who believe in him "that being delivered from the hand of their enemies, they may serve him without fear, in righteousness and true holiness, before him, all the days of their life;" and the covenant made with them will prove for the good of their children and brethren also.—Oh, that messengers were sent forth to carry these invitations to every city and village, through our land, and every land! It is true, the Lord alone can render them effectual; but he works by the word of his ministers, and also by the commandment of kings and princes, when it accords with his word.—Faith comes by hearing; and true religion has uniformly flourished, in proportion to the measure in which faithful, scriptural preaching has abounded. In general, persons of wealth or authority might be instrumental in promoting this faithful preaching of the word of God, if they had the inclination, and were willing to bear the expense of it; nor can superior rank enjoy a higher privilege. All who are employed in such a work, should do it with their might; and neither be discouraged nor exasperated by opposition or reproach; and they will find at length that "their labour was not in vain in the Lord."

V. 13-20. When we are humbled for our transgressions, and declare war against all our idols, expecting and seeking forgiveness and salvation only through the atonement of Christ, we become welcome communicants at the Lord's table. The unhumiliated and impenitent indeed, the man who lives in known sin, and he who comes "trusting in his own righteousness," instead of the manifold and great mercies of God, may presume to commemorate the death of Christ; but he is an intruder, who comes to the marriage-feast, without the wedding-garment. (Note, Matt. 22:11-14.) Yet when the sinner has indeed begun to prepare his heart to seek the Lord; though his views be feeble, obscure, and in many things erroneous, and his approach be not exactly 9 Then Hezekiah questioned with the priests and the Levites concerning the heaps.

10 And Azariah the chief priest of the house of Zadok answered him, and said, "Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the Lord, we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty for the Lord hath blessed his people; and that which is left is this great store."

[Practical Observations.]

11 ¶ Then Hezekiah commanded to prepare chambers in the house of the Lord; and they prepared them,

12 And brought in the offerings and the tithes, and the dedicated things faithfully: "over which Cononiah the Levite was ruler, and Shimei his brother was the next."

13 And Jehiel, and Azariah, and Nahath, and Asabel, and Jerimoth, and Jozabab, and Eliel, and Ismachiah, and Mahathi, and Benaiah, were overseers under the hand of Cononiah and Shimei his brother, "at the commandment of Hezekiah the king, and Azariah the ruler of the house of God."

14 And Kore the son of Imnah the Levite, the porter toward the east, was over the free-will offerings of God, to distribute the oblations of the Lord, and the most holy things.

15 And next him were Eden, and Miniamin, and Jeshua, and Shemaiah, Amariah, and Shecaniah, in the cities of the priests, in their set office, to give to their brethren by courses, "as well to the great as to the small:"

16 Beside their genealogy of males, from three years old and upward, even unto every one that entereth into the house of the Lord, his daily portion for their service in their charges according to their courses;

17 Both to the genealogy of the priests by the house of their fathers, and the Levites from twenty years old and upward, in their charges, by their courses;

18 And to the genealogy of all their little ones, their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, through all the congregation: for in their set office they sanctified themselves in holiness:

19 Also of the sons of Aaron the priests, which were in the fields of the suburbs of their cities, in every several city, the men that were expressed by name, to give portions to all the males among the priests, and to all that were reckoned by genealogies among the Levites.

20 ¶ And thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah, and wrought that which was good and right and truth before the Lord his God.

21 And in every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments, to seek his God, he did it with all his heart, and prospered.

the Lord, who had given them the power and inclination to bring such abundance. (Notes, 1 Chr. 29:10-19. 2 Cor. 8:1-5, 16-24. 9:8-15.) "They gave thanks to God, who had given them such plenty of good things, and had likewise given them a heart to offer it plentifully." Bp. Patrick.

V. 9, 10. The king and the princes supposed, from the abundance which they beheld, that the priests, who had the superintendence of the business, had preserved the whole; and they inquired, wherefore they had not distributed the oblations of the people. But it was answered, that the Lord had blessed the people with such an abundant increase, that all this was left, after the priests and Levites had been sufficiently provided for! (Notes, Hag. 1:5-11. 2:15-19. Mal. 3:7-12.) The disinterestedness of the priests was highly commendable; for they might easily have enriched themselves, without being suspected; and the whole transaction enlarges our idea of the blessing which had attended the preceding solemnity: for before this, the priests seem to have been generally very careless and ungodly. (Notes, Mal. 1:9-14.)—It is probable, that Azariah was the chief priest, under the high-priest, and nearly related to him. (13. 1 Chr. 6:13, 14.)

V. 11-14. (Neh. 10:37-39. 12:44. 13:5, 9. Notes, 1 Kings 6:5-6. Neh. 13:10-14.) Hezekiah commanded "to build new storehouses; . . . because there was not room enough wherein to lay all the offerings and tithes, and other dedicated things." As he took care, they should all be faithfully laid up, so he set trusty persons to see that they were no less faithfully preserved, for their proper uses." Bp. Patrick.

V. 15-19. The priests and Levites, as they attended in their courses, had a certain portion allotted to them, according to their office and charge. The sons of the priests, who attended with them, as it seems, from three years of age, to learn the work of the sanctuary, previously to the time of their officiating, had a provision made for them. A list was taken of the wives, and of the other children, of the priests and Levites, and a proportionable allowance was assigned them: as also to those, who were excluded or excused from attendance; and for all of those who were absent from the temple, employed as magistrates and teachers in their several districts. Thus none appropriated an exorbitant proportion, and none wanted a suitable provision: "for in their set office, they sanctified themselves in holiness;" they separated themselves from other employments, and devoted themselves to serve God in their proper office, in a holy and believing expectation that he would provide for them; (for so the words seem to mean:) nor were they disappointed. And this regular provision kept them from the temptation of entangling themselves in worldly cares and employments, to the neglect of their ministry. "This seems to be a reason, why such care was taken of their wives and children; because their husbands were wholly given up to the service of God, and could not follow any other employment, whereby to provide for the maintenance of their families." Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Neh. 13:10-13. 2 Tim. 2:7.)

itself; he acted with equity and impartiality towards all his subjects in these regulations, and strict attention to the laws and institutions previously established. His heart also was upright in the sight of God; and in all that he attempted, to establish the worship of the Lord, and to obey and enforce the observance of his law, seeking his favour and glory, he was earnest and hearty, and single in his aim and dependence; and he was prospered accordingly. What a commendation was this as given by God himself! What a happy instrument was this pious king of good to his people! and what an encouraging and worthy example is this for princes, magistrates, ministers, and Christians to imitate!

PRactical OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. The finishing of one duty should form an introduction to the beginning of another; and he, who "delighteth greatly in God's commandments," will not complain of this as a weariness.—Public ordinances, and divine consolations, should stir up men to cleanse their hearts, houses, or shops, and every thing in which they are concerned, from the filthiness of sin, and the idolatry of covetousness; and to exhort and excite others to do the same, by every method, consistent with relative duties and the peace of society.—The subsequent improvement of solemn ordinances, is of the greatest importance to personal, family, and public religion. It is then our business to meditate on, and reduce to practice, what we have learned; to express our pious affections in every kind of good work; and to take care that the vigour of them do not subside, through unwatchfulness, neglect of prayer, or worldly indulgences. Inattention to these duties renders the private conversation and behaviour of most, who profess the gospel, inconsistent with their public profession, and apparently religious affections: their growth in grace is thus prevented, and religion does not appear so venerable by far as it otherwise would do.—Examples should concur with exhortations or injunctions, whether men act as magistrates or ministers: and this will give them greater effect, in many cases, than menaces, coercive measures, or severe rebukes. Those, who would have others expend their wealth in useful works, ought to take the lead: nay, the easiest method of enforcing the laws, and prevailing with others to pay their dues, is often found to be by receding from personal claims, and joining liberality with justice, in the magistrate's own conduct.—The proper use of superior riches is, to do superior good with them; and if this were generally understood and believed, the most blessed effects would be produced.—Every exercise of human authority in the church of God must be regulated and bounded by his law, and must enforce obedience to it, and not make additions to it, or alterations in it.—While ministers ought to attend upon their proper work, in their several places; they should be encouraged in it, and not constrained or tempted to neglect it, by the want of a suitable maintenance for their families; or made uneasy and distressed in attending on it: nor should any excuse be afforded to those, who by choice leave the word of God for secular engagements.—A man is never impoverished by prudent liberality, in works of piety and charity: indeed, this is

CHAPTER XXXII.

Sennacherib invades Judah; and Hezekiah fortifieth Jerusalem, and encourages the people, 1-8. Sennacherib's blasphemous messages and letters, 9-19. Hezekiah and Isaiah pray for deliverance: an angel destroyeth the Assyrian army; and their king, when returned to Nineveh, is slain by his sons when worshipping his idol, 20, 21. Hezekiah prospers and is renowned, 22, 23. Ishki acknowledges his prayer, and is miraculously recovered; his heart is lifted up, he is unrepentant towards himself, 24-25. His riches and works, 27-31. His unrepentance in respect of the goodness done to him by the king of Assyria, 32. He does his money in investment, and Sennacherib succeeds him, 33-34.

AFTER these things, and the establishment thereof, Sennacherib king of Assyria came, and entered into Judah, and encamped against the fenced cities, and thought to win them for himself.

2 And when Hezekiah saw that Sennacherib was come, and that he was purposed to fight against Jerusalem,

3 He took counsel with his princes and his mighty men to stop the waters of the fountains which were without the city: and they did help him.

4 So there was gathered much people together, who stopped all the fountains, and the brook that ran through the midst of the land, saying, Why should the kings of Assyria come, and find much water?

5 Also he strengthened himself, and built up all the wall that was broken, and raised it up to the towers, and another wall without, and repaired Millo in the city of David, and made darts and shields in abundance.

6 And he set captains of war over the people, and gathered them together to him in the street of the gate of the city, and spake comfortably to them, saying,

7 Be strong and courageous, be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him: for there be more with us than with him:

V. 11-21. A proper use of authority, joined with a good example, and convincing arguments, will induce many to do their duty in those things in which they before were entirely negligent: but, whatever means are used, when men abound in good works, we should bless the Lord for it; and due commendation should not be withheld from them.—Disinterestedness, impartiality, and frugality, are requisite in those who have the management of public charities, or other public funds: for when proper care is taken of the sums already contributed, and they are evidently expended for the sole purpose intended, encouragement is given to further contributions.—It would tend greatly to the welfare of the church, if ministers were provided for, with some degree of equality, proportioned to their diligence, their families, and their necessary expenses: and it is a shameful abuse, that funds anciently appropriated for the maintenance of the clergy, are in a great measure applied to aggrandize those who do very little for them; whilst the real labourers in the vineyard are scarcely kept from starving, and leave no provision for their families when taken from them. Legislators should rectify such abuses. But the faithful servant of God needs not be discouraged: let him study to live, and to preach, according to the word of truth, and “give himself wholly” to his work; and let him do it in faith, and the Lord will not suffer him to want; yea, he will provide for his children after him. But all pious men are not able to go on comfortably in this manner; and it is a grievous thing, that their spirits should be depressed, and their hands weakened, in their work, on this account; but it is still far worse, when they are tempted to leave their proper employment, to earn a morsel of bread for their wives and children. May the Lord raise up in every nation zealous men, who in such matters, and in all others, will “work that which is good, and right, and truth, before the LORD;” and who will do their utmost, “with all their hearts in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments,” to seek the honour of the Lord—

8 With him is an arm of flesh; but *with us is the Lord our God to help us, and to fight our battles. And the people rested themselves upon the words of Hezekiah king of Judah.

9 ¶ After this did Sennacherib king of Assyria send his servants to Jerusalem, (but he himself laid siege against Lachish, and all his power with him,) unto Hezekiah king of Judah, and unto all Judah that were at Jerusalem, saying,

10 ¶ Thus saith Sennacherib king of Assyria Whereon do ye trust, that ye abide in the siege in Jerusalem?

11 I do not Hezekiah persuade you to give over yourselves to die by famine and by thirst, saying, *the Lord our God shall deliver us out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

12 Hath not the same Hezekiah taken away his high places, and his altars, and commanded Judah and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall worship before one altar, and burn incense upon it?

13 Know ye not what I and my fathers have done unto all the people of other lands? were the gods of the nations of those lands any ways able to deliver their lands out of my hand?

14 Who was there among all the gods of those nations, that my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of my hand, that your God should be able to deliver you out of my hand?

15 Now therefore let not Hezekiah deceive you, nor persuade you on this manner, neither yet believe him: for no god of any nation or kingdom was able to deliver his people out of my hand, and out of the hand of my fathers: how much less shall your God deliver you out of my hand?

Whether we have few or many talents, may we thus improve them, and encourage others to do the same: we shall then assuredly be prospered in some measure; and shall obtain that “honour which cometh from God,” being graciously addressed by him with, “Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.”

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXII. V. 1. Most of the transactions, recorded in the preceding chapters, took place in the first year of Hezekiah's reign: and from that time he proceeded to establish and complete his reformation, without any very memorable occurrences, till his fourteenth year, in which Sennacherib's first invasion occurred. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Kings 18:13-16.)

V. 3, 4. (Marg. Ref.) The brook here mentioned, is supposed to have been Kidron, or Cedron, called also “the upper water-course of Gihon.” (30) Through subterraneous or concealed channels, Hezekiah brought the waters of this rivulet into the city, to supply certain pools there formed for the use of the inhabitants. Or, by some means, he turned or concealed the course of it, in order that the Assyrians might be distressed for water, if they undertook the siege of Jerusalem.—“The kings of Assyria” had, during several successions, been formidable enemies to Israel and Judah: and this measure was intended, not only for a present defence against Sennacherib, but also as a security against future invasions of him or his successors. (Note, Is. 22:8-14.)

V. 5-8. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 20:14-19. 2 Kings 6:15-17. 1 John 4:4-6.) These measures seem to have been adopted, and this most encouraging exhortation given, at the approach of Sennacherib's first invasion: and the people in general had a strong confidence, that the Lord would deliver them according to the word of Hezekiah. “They relied on what he said, as if it had been spoken to them by God himself.” Bp. Patrick. Some, however, seem to have confided rather in their fortifications.—Yet Hezekiah himself was afterwards induced to submit to Sennacherib, and pay him tribute; on this he departed, but not long after he renewed his attempts. (Note, 2 Kings 18:13-16.)

V. 9-16. Notes, 2 Kings 18:17-25.—That he abide in the siege, &c. (10) Or “in the strong-hold in Jerusalem.” Marg.—How much less, &c. (15) This haughty conqueror the LORD God, and "against his servant Hezekiah.

17 He "wrote also letters "to rail on the LORD God of Israel, and to speak against him, saying, "As the gods of the nations of other lands have not delivered their people out of my hand, so shall not the God of Hezekiah deliver his people out of my hand.

18 Then "they cried with a loud voice, in the Jews' speech, unto the people of Jerusalem that were on the wall, "to affright them, and to trouble them; that they might take the city.

19 And they "spake against "the God of Jerusalem, as against the gods of the people of the earth, which were "the work of the hands of man.

20 And for this cause "Hezekiah the king, and "the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz, "prayed and cried to heaven.

21 ¶ And "the LORD sent an "angel, which "cut off all the mighty men of valour, and "the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria. So he returned "with shame of face to his own land. And when "he was come into the house of his god, they that came forth of his own bowels "slew him there with the sword.

22 Thus "the LORD saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, and from the hand of all other. and "guided them on every side.

23 And many brought "gifts unto the LORD to Jerusalem, and "presents to Hezekiah king of Judah: so that "he was magnified in the sight of all nations from thenceforth.

[Practical Observations.]

a. c.] 24 ¶ In those days "Hezekiah was sick to "the death, and prayed unto the LORD: and he spake unto him, and he "gave him a sign.

25 But Hezekiah "rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him; for this heart was lifted up: "therefore there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem.

26 Notwithstanding, "Hezekiah humbled himself for the "pride of his heart, both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, so that the wrath of the LORD came not upon them "in the days of Hezekiah.

27 ¶ And Hezekiah had "exceeding much riches and honour: and he made himself "treasuries for silver, and for gold, and for "precious stones, and for spices, and for "shields, and for all manner of "pleasant jewels:

28 "Storehouses also for the increase of corn, and wine, and oil; and "stalls for all manner of beasts, and "cotes for flocks.

29 Moreover, he provided him cities, and "possessions of flocks and herds in abundance: for "God had given him substance very much.

30 This same Hezekiah also "stopped the upper water-course of "Gihon, and brought "it straight down to the west side of the city "of David. "And Hezekiah prospered in all his works.

31 ¶ Howbeit, "in the business of the "ambassadors of the princes of Babylon, who sent unto him to inquire of "the wonder that was done in the land, God "left him, to try him, "that he might know all that was in his heart.

32 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and his "goodness, behold, they are written "in the vision of Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, and "in the book of the Kings of Judah and Israel.

33 And Hezekiah "slept with his fathers, "b. c. and they buried him in the "chiefest of the "sepulchres of the sons of David: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem "did him honour at his death: "and Manasseh his son reigned in his stead.

supposed that JEHOVAH was even inferior to the gods of the nations! Probably he grounded this notion on the inferiority of Judah, in extent and population, to many of the kingdoms which he had subdued; especially as he was master of almost the whole land already.—"If the LORD had a mind to help them, he would have them believe, that he was not able; because no gods had been able to deliver those that worshipped them, from his power." Bp. Patrick.

V. 17—22. Notes, 2 Kings 18:26—35. 19.—God of Jerusalem. (19) Sennacherib called JEHOVAH "the God of Jerusalem," either because that city alone remained in the hands of his worshippers; or because Hezekiah, by abolishing the high places, seemed to have confined to Jerusalem alone, the worship of his God, which before had been spread over the land.

V. 23. Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. 60:4—9.

V. 24—26. (Notes, 2 Kings 20: Is. 38: 39:) These events are supposed, by many learned men, to have been previous to Sennacherib's first invasion, as evidently occurring in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah's reign. (Note, 2 Kings 18:13. 20:1.)—The princes and the people of Judah, as well as the king, had been very ungrateful for their many mercies: and when "Hezekiah was humbled for the pride of his heart," and had received Isaiah's alarming message, it is probable he made open confession of his offence, and called upon the people to join with him in solemn humiliation and prayer on that account. It may, however, be doubted, whether the ambassadors from the king of Babylon came to Jerusalem before Sennacherib's last invasion of the land; as the treasures, which Hezekiah showed them, seem to have been obtained by the result of that invasion, and the presents, which were afterwards brought to him. (Note, 27—29.)—This chapter is in great measure an abridgment of those chapters in the Second of Kings, and in the prophecy of Isaiah, which are referred to.—Gave him a sign. (24) Or, "wrought a miracle for him." Marg.

V. 30—33. Marg. Ref. Notes, 3, v. 4. 2 Kings 20:20, 21.—The princes. (31) "The princes of Babylon sent to inquire of the wonder that had been done in the land;" but it is not certain, that the Chaldeans observed any change in the motion of the heavenly bodies. The report of the miracles which attended Hezekiah's recovery, might suffice for that purpose. Yet, in Isaiah it is said, "The sun returned, &c." (Note, Is. 38:8.)—The Lord on this occasion withdrew from Hezekiah the immediate efficacy of his grace, and left him to follow the dictates of his own natural propensity, "to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart." "The omniscient God before knew the whole; but, having by the trial made the case evident, he thus pointed it out to Hezekiah, and to all succeeding ages, for their humiliation, warning, and instruction. (Notes, Deut. 8:2, 3.) For it here appears undeniable, that the best of men, if left to themselves, are prone to pride and ostentation, to idolize themselves and their fellow-creatures, to withdraw their dependence from God, to rob him of his glory, and to be ungrateful for his mercies. (Note, 2 Cor. 12:7—10.) "God suffered him to behave according to his own inclinations, without any special motor from him; that Hezekiah might know, he was not so strong as he imagined, if he were left to himself without God. . . . God made proof of Hezekiah, as he had done of many other good men, whether he would entirely obey him or not. . . . God no doubt . . . saw the pride and vanity that lurked in Hezekiah's heart; which was hid from every one but God himself, who now suffered him to discover it for his humiliation." Bp. Patrick.—They buried, &c. (33) Notes, 16:13, 14. 21:18—20. 24:15, 16.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Manasse, reigns long, is very wicked, multiplies idolatries, corrupts the people, and rejects the admonitions of God, 1-10. He is carried captive to Babylon; he humbles himself greatly before God, with earnest and fervent prayer; and is restored to his kingdom, 11-13. He fortifies his dominions, and restores the worship of God, 14-17. His acts and prayers, 18, 19. He dies, and Amon succeeds, who reigns wickedly, and is murdered, 20-24. The people slay the murderers, and make Josiah king, 25.

MANASSE was ^{twelve} years old when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem:

2 But did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, like unto the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD had cast out before the children of Israel.

3 ¶ For he built again the high places which Hezekiah his father had broken down; and he reared up altars for Baalim, and made groves, and worshipped as ^{the} host of heaven, and served them.

4 Also he built altars in the house of the LORD, whereof the LORD had said, In Jerusalem shall my name be forever.

5 And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the house of the LORD.

6 And he caused his children to pass through the fire in the valley of the son of Hinnom: also he observed times, and used enchantments, and used witchcraft, and dealt with a familiar spirit, and with wizards: he wrought much evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

7 And he set a carved image, the idol which he had made, in the house of God, of which God had said to David and to Solomon his son, In this house and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen before all the tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever:

8 Neither will I any more remove the foot of Israel from out of the land which I have appointed for your fathers; so that they will take heed to do all that I have commanded them, according to the whole law and the statutes and the ordinances by the hand of Moses.

9 So Manasse made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err, and to do worse than the heathen, whom the LORD had destroyed before the children of Israel.

10 And the LORD spake to Manasseh, and to his people: but they would not hearken.

[Practical Observations.]

permitted, under certain restrictions, to assault us.—It is very lawful and proper to employ prudent precautions and means of defence; and to be united and vigorous in every advisable measure, when there is a prospect of danger or difficulty: but it is seldom that men attend to these things, without confiding in them. We should therefore encourage ourselves and each other, to trust wholly in the Lord: and if he is for us, there will be more with us than with our foes; should all the men on earth, and all the legions of fallen angels, combine and actually approach to assault us. What need then have we to fear the strongest arm of flesh, when we have the "LORD our God to help us, and to fight our battles?" These are words, that may safely be rested upon, by all who "repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance." Yet such a confidence will excite the contempt and reviling of idolaters, infidels, and other proud, ungodly men; those who venture to do their duty, in defiance of the persecuting rage of some powerful king, professing to rely on the Lord of hosts, will be deemed obstinate and infatuated: and in various difficulties, it will be inquired, whether "they will be persuaded to give themselves over to die by famine and thirst." The more undaunted any one is, while trusting the Lord in the path of duty, the more will some impious wretches rail, blaspheme, menace, boast, and triumph; especially when grown insolent by success, and intoxicated with absolute authority. But let the oppressed and insulted believer pray earnestly to the Lord, that he may not be driven from his confidence. In due time it will appear, that "none ever hardened himself against God and prospered;" and that none were ever confounded who put their trust in him. For, as the power and justice of God are displayed in the destruction of his enemies; so, his rich and free mercy are glorified in the salvation of his people.

V. 24-33. Alas! how seldom do we in any good degree render to the Lord according to his benefits! None, who know themselves, and watch over their own hearts, will venture to cast a stone at Hezekiah; but they will all, one by one, depart convicted in their consciences of similar guilt, and crying out, "God be merciful to me a sinner!"—If we be not left to expose our foolish and wicked pride before the world, the Lord sees and abhors the risings of it in our hearts, and might justly pour out his wrath upon us: yet, if humbled for this pride of our heart, he will forgive us and continue to bless us. But we ought to watch and pray always, that we may not "enter into temptation," and that God would not leave us to ourselves: we ought to repress every vain-glorious thought, and to welcome even afflictions and severe rebukes, and painful conflicts and temptations, when they keep us from being "exalted above measure." Blessed be God, death will soon end the believer's conflict; then every sin will be abolished, and he may safely be trusted with the most glorious exaltation and uninterrupted felicity; and will no more, to all eternity, be tempted to intercept the least mite of that revenue of praise, which belongs to the God of his salvation.

While we are here, we ought to honour those to whom honour is due, though they be far from perfect: and we may well respect the memories, and should imitate the example, of those who have been pious and useful in their generation:

for, a short time may perhaps awfully convince survivors, that the loss of them was far greater, than at first could be at all supposed.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXIII. V. 1-5. (Notes, 2 Kings 21:1-5.) Perhaps Hezekiah named his son Manasseh from the circumstance, that many of the tribe of Manasse had come at his invitation, to attend the passover. (Note, 30:1.)

V. 6-8. Manasseh seems to have studied to find out what God had forbidden in his law, that he might practise it. Bp. Patrick. (Notes, 2 Kings 21:6-8.)—A carved image, the idol, &c. (7) "A graven image of the grove," 2 Kings 21:7.

V. 9, 10. (Notes, 2 Kings 21:9, 10.) "A most prodigious change from the height of piety in his father's time, into the sink of impiety in this! ... Victorinus Strigelius, ... professor of theology at Heidelberg, left this remark in his lectures on this place, near a hundred and forty years ago." (that is, soon after the establishment of the reformation in Germany.)—"Now we have the word of God abundantly in all wisdom, and pious princes patronise both those that preach, and those that learn the gospel. But this plenty of the word we now enjoy, (I tremble to speak it, but I must speak it, because it will come to pass,) shall be taken away and that sad mournful time will come, when the public assemblies of the church shall be scattered, and a few pious souls shall meet with fear in a corner, to communicate among themselves the fragments of the heavenly doctrine, and give God thanks for these remainders." Which we have seen fulfilled in that country, and in France, and other places. Bp. Patrick.—This apparent prophecy seems to have been merely a presage grounded on the vicissitudes of things, especially in respect of religion, and the tendency of prosperity to induce carnal security.

V. 11. There is not the least intimation, in the Second Book of Kings, either of Manasseh's captivity, or of his repentance: and it might have been concluded from the narrative there given, that he persevered in his career of impiety and iniquity, with impunity, till his death. Here, however, we find a most instructive view of his latter years; and this very man became as eminent an instance of the power, riches, and freeness of divine mercy and grace, as any recorded in the Scripture.—When he and his people had long disregarded the admonitions of the prophets, and added persecutions, and multiplied murders, to their other crimes; (9, 10. Notes, 2 Kings 21:16. 23:26, 27.) "the LORD brought upon them the captains of the host of the king of Assyria." We are not informed what devastations these invaders made in Judah and Jerusalem: but Manasseh, being either vanquished or intimidated, attempted to conceal himself in a thicket; where, being discovered, he was taken prisoner, loaded with fetters, and sent to Babylon. God, in his providence, gave the Assyrians the power and opportunity of making this invasion, and he left them to follow their own ambition, or other worldly motives; and he also gave them success, in order to chastise Manasseh's enormous wickedness.—Many suppose, that Esar-haddon, having got possession of Babylon, and entirely changed the inhabitants of the kingdom of Israel, about the same time sent to invade Judah.

bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon.

12 And when he was in affliction, he besought the Lord his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, 13 And prayed unto him: and he was entreated of him, and heard his supplication, and brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom. Then Manasseh knew that the Lord he was God.

14 Now after this, he built a wall without the city of David, on the west side of Gihon, in the valley, even to the entering in at the fish-gate, and compassed about Ophel, and raised it up a very great height, and put captains of war in all the fenced cities of Judah.

15 And he took away the strange gods, and the idol out of the house of the Lord, and all the altars that he had built in the mount of the house of the Lord, and in Jerusalem, and cast them out of the city.

16 And he repaired the altar of the Lord, and sacrificed thereon peace-offerings and thank-offerings, and commanded Judah to serve the Lord God of Israel.

17 Nevertheless, the people did sacrifice still in the high places, yet unto the Lord their God only.

18 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and carried Manasseh captive to Babylon, in the twenty-second year of his reign. But the Scripture does not mention the date of this event, nor the name of the Assyrian king; and from the scriptural description of Manasseh's reign, as exceedingly wicked, it seems highly improbable, that he lived above thirty years after his repentance and reformation, as upon this supposition he must have done. 'This was three and thirty years before his death, as the Jews make account. ... But both Kimchi and Abarbanel confess, that this relies upon a weak foundation; as doth the other thing that he was carried away in the twenty-second year of his reign.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 12, 13. When Manasseh was deprived of his authority and liberty, and secluded from his evil counsellors and companions, and from all his pleasures; in chains, and in a prison; without any other prospect than of ending his days in that wretched situation; he had leisure to reflect on what had passed. He would then, no doubt, recollect the honour, prosperity, and great deliverances, with which his father had been favoured; his own good education, with the instructions and warnings of the prophets; and his atrocious, multiplied, and daring crimes: and he would remember that his miseries had been foretold by his faithful monitors. Thus, by the special grace of God, his solitude and affliction brought him to view his own conduct and character in another light than he had done before; and he began to pray for mercy and deliverance, "humbling himself greatly before the God of his fathers." (Note, Luke 15:17-19.) He confessed his sins, condemned himself, and was covered with shame before God, abhorring his crimes, and loathing himself for them, as guilty of most aggravated ingratitude, impiety, and iniquity; yet still hoping to be pardoned, through the abundant mercy of the Lord, who had always, in the days of his ancestors, shown himself ready to forgive repenting rebels. These humble supplications the Lord graciously accepted; and he inclined the king of Assyria to liberate his prisoner, and to reinstate him in his authority. "Then Manasseh knew that the Lord he was God," alone able to punish, or to deliver: he likewise became acquainted with him as a God of salvation; and learned to fear, trust, love, and obey him. (Note, 1 Chr. 28:9.)

V. 14. Marg. Ref.

V. 15-17. It is evident that Manasseh, on his return from Babylon, entirely renounced all idolatry; and set himself to suppress it in his kingdom, to revive the worship of God at the temple, and by his example and authority to prevail with the people to attend on it. These were "fruits meet for repentance."—It has indeed been asserted, that his public reformation was very imperfect, and that he did not show the zeal and vigour, which a true penitent ought to have done. It does not however, appear, from this short account, that he was remarkably deficient. He would have done better, if he had demolished the idols, instead of casting them out of the city. But he totally suppressed all open and his prayer unto his God, and the words of the seers that spake to him in the name of the Lord God of Israel, behold, they are written in the book of the Kings of Israel.

19 His prayer also, and how God was entreated of him, and all his sin, and his trespass, and the places wherein he built high places, and set up groves and graven images, before he was humbled: behold, they are written among the sayings of the seers.

20 ¶ So Manasseh slept with his fathers, and they buried him in his own house: and Amon his son reigned in his stead.

21 ¶ Amon was two and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned two years in Jerusalem.

22 But he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, as did Manasseh his father: for Amon sacrificed unto all the carved images which Manasseh his father had made, and served them;

23 And humbled not himself before the Lord, as Manasseh his father had humbled himself; but Amon trespassed more and more.

24 And his servants conspired against him, and slew him in his own house.

25 ¶ But the people of the land slew all them that had conspired against king Amon; and the people of the land made Josiah his son king in his stead.

idolatry; and it might arise from other causes than Manasseh's want of zeal, that the high places were not removed. The inveterate habits of the people; the powerful opposition of that party, which had concurred in his former idolatries, and of the nation in general; and the weakness of his authority, through ill success, and the power of the Assyrian monarch; would occasion obstacles, which he might not be able to overcome. (Notes, 142-5. 17:6. 20:31-34, v. 33. 1 Kings 15:14.) But there is not the most remote intimation, that God did not accept his endeavours. Yet the opposition or hypocrisy of the people, who had readily concurred in his iniquities, but refused to imitate his repentance, prevented it from being a national blessing, as his crimes had formed and occasioned a load of national sin, "which the Lord would not pardon." (Notes, 2 Kings 23:26, 27. Jer. 15:2-4.)

V. 18, 19. The repeated mention of Manasseh's prayer, "and how God was entreated of him," and of his being humbled, are well worthy of our notice. This humble, supplicating frame of mind forms, as it were, a crisis in the sinner's case; and from the moment that he is brought into it, he enters upon a new state, and commences a new life, however wicked he before has been. (Marg. Ref.) The prayer, contained in the Apocrypha, and ascribed to Manasseh, probably was composed long after: but no doubt he prayed continually and fervently, for all the blessings and mercies which so atrocious a sinner needed; and with particular confessions of his sins, and with all that unstudied copiousness, which a burdened conscience, a broken heart, trembling fears, wavering hopes, and fervent desires, will invariably dictate. (Notes, Job 33:19-30. Acts 9:10-14, v. 11.) 'As if he had said, How he continued to pray till God was entreated of him.' Bp. Patrick.—Instead of "the seers," (19) the marginal reading is Hosai, and some suppose it to have been the name of a prophet in those days.

V. 20. Note, 2 Kings 21:18.

V. 21-25. (Note, 2 Kings 21:20-24.) As soon as Manasseh was dead, Amon re-established all his father's idolatries; either bringing back those images which had been thrown aside, or forming others of the same kind. Perhaps he flattered himself, that he too should live many years; and should repent in his old age, if that were necessary, and so at last be saved, as his father was supposed to have been. But whatever warnings or convictions he had, he never "humiled himself" in true repentance; but "trespassed more and more." Or, "this Amon multiplied trespass." (Marg.) He was therefore soon cut off in his sins, and made an example of just severity; and placed as a beacon, to warn all men not to draw perverse conclusions from the example of the Lord's patience and mercy to Manasseh, and thus encourage themselves in impenitent wickedness. (Notes, Dan. 5:18-24. P. O. 18-31. Luke 23:39-43.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. It would be extremely distressing to pious parents, magistrates or ministers, if they could foresee the

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Josiah reigns well, and destroys idolatry both in Judah and Israel, 1-7. He provides for the repair of the temple, 8-13. Hilkiah finds the book of the law, and reads it before the king; who is greatly alarmed, and sends to the destruction of Jerusalem, but not till after Josiah's death, 23-28. He causes the law to be read in a solemn assembly, and renews the covenant between God and the people, 29-33.

JOSIAH was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem one and thirty years.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the ways of David his father, and declined neither to the right nor to the left.

3 ¶ For in the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David his father: and in the twelfth year he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places, and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images.

4 And they brake down the altars of Baalim in his presence; and the images, that were on high above them, he cut down; and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images, he brake in pieces, and made dust of them, and strowed it upon the graves of them that had sacrificed unto them.

5 And he burnt the bones of the priests upon their altars, and cleansed Judah and Jerusalem.

6 And so did he in the cities of Manasseh, and Ephraim, and Simeon, even unto Naphtali, with their mattocks round about.

7 And when he had broken down the altars and the groves, and had beaten the graven images

'into powder, and cut down all the idols throughout all the land of Israel, ^{he} returned to Jerusalem.

^{B. C. 7.} 8 ¶ Now in ^{the} eighteenth year of his ^{624.} reign, when he had purged the land, and the house, he ^{'sent} Shaphan the son of Azabiah, and ^{'Maaseiah} the governor of the city, and Joah the son of Joahaz the ^{'recorder}, to repair the house of the ^{Lord} his God.

9 And when they came to ^{'Hilkiah} the high-priest, ^{'they} delivered the money ^{that} was brought into the house of God, which the Levites that kept the doors had gathered of the hand of ^{'Manasseh} and Ephraim, and of all the remnant of Israel, and of all Judah and Benjamin; and ^{'they} returned to Jerusalem.

10 And they put ^{it} in the hand of the workmen that had the oversight of the house of the ^{Lord}, and they gave it to the workmen that wrought in the house of the ^{Lord}, to repair and mend the house :

11 Even to the artificers and builders gave they ^{it}, to buy hewn stone, and timber for couplings, and to ^{'floor} the houses which ^{'the} kings of Judah had destroyed.

12 And the men did the work ^{'faithfully} : and the overseers of them ^{'were} Jahath and Obadiah, the Levites, of the sons of Merari; and Zechariah and Meshullam, of the sons of the Kohathites, to set ^{it} forward; and ^{'other} of the Levites, ^{'all} that could skill of instruments of music.

13 Also ^{'they} were over ^{'the} bearers of burdens, and ^{'were} overseers of all that wrought the work in any manner of service: and of the Levites ^{'there} were ^{'scribes}, and ^{'officers}, and ^{'porters}.

14 ¶ And when they brought out the money that was brought into the house of the ^{Lord}, ^{'Hilkiah} the priest found a book of ^{'the} law of the ^{Lord} ^{'given} by ^{'Moses}.

15 And Hilkiah answered and said to Shaphan the scribe, I have found the book of the law in the house of the ^{Lord}. And Hilkiah delivered the book to Shaphan.

16 And ^{'Shaphan} carried the book to the king, and brought the king word back again, saying, All that was committed to ^{'thy} servants, they do ^{it}.

17 And ^{'they} have ^{'gathered} together the money that was found in the house of the ^{Lord}, and have delivered it into the hand of the overseers, and to the hand of the workmen.

18 Then Shaphan the scribe told the king, saying, Hilkiah the priest hath given me a book. ^{'And} Shaphan read ^{'it} before the king.

affairs, he began to worship God publicly, and propounded David unto himself for his pattern. When he was twenty years old, he began to bring others to the true religion, by reforming abuses in the worship of God. ^{Bp. Patrick}.—Something was attempted in the twelfth year; (which was before Jeremiah began to prophesy; but probably not much was effected till the eighteenth. (Notes, 2 Kings 22:3-7. 23:4-23. Jer. 1:1-3.) Yet the land was purged from its grosser abominations, before the repairing of the temple; but it is uncertain whether this extended to the land of Israel, or whether that be spoken of by anticipation; but it is plain that Josiah had authority over the country of the ten tribes, and the inhabitants of them.

19 And it came to pass, when the king had heard ^{'the} words of the law, ^{'that} he rent his clothes.

20 And the king commanded Hilkiah, and ^{'Ahikam} the son of Shaphan, and ^{'Aldon} the son of Micah, and Shaphan the scribe, and ^{'Asaiah} a servant of the king's, saying, 21 Go, ^{'inquire} of the ^{Lord} for me, and for them ^{'that} are left in Israel and in Judah, concerning the words of the book that is found: ^{'for} great is the wrath of the ^{Lord} that is poured out upon us, because our fathers have not kept the word of the ^{Lord}, to do after all that is written in this book.

22 And Hilkiah, and ^{'they} that the king ^{'has appointed}, went to Huldah ^{'the} prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of Tikvath, the son of ^{'Hasrah}, keeper of the ^{'wardrobe}, (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the ^{'college};) and they spake to her to that effect.

23 And she answered them, Thus saith the ^{Lord} God of Israel, ^{'Tell} ye the man that sent you to me,

24 Thus saith the ^{Lord}, Behold, ^{'I} will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, ^{'even} ^{'all} the curses that are written in the book, which they have read before the king of Judah:

25 Because ^{'they} have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore ^{'my} wrath shall be poured out upon this place, and ^{'shall} not be quenched.

26 And ^{'as} for the king of Judah, who sent you to inquire of the ^{Lord}, so shall ye say unto him, Thus saith the ^{Lord} God of Israel, ^{'concerning} the words which thou hast heard;

27 Because ^{'thine} heart was tender, and thou didst ^{'humble} thyself before God, when thou heardest his words against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, and humbledst thyself before me, and ^{'didst} rend thy clothes, and weep before me; I have even heard ^{'thee} also, saith the ^{Lord}.

28 Behold ^{'I} will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered to thy grave ^{'in} peace, ^{'neither} shall thine eyes see all the evil that I will bring upon this place, and upon the inhabitants of the same. So they brought the king word again.

29 ¶ Then ^{'the} king sent, and ^{'gathered} together all the elders of Judah and Jerusalem.

30 And the king went up into the house of the ^{Lord}, and all the men of Judah, and the inhato go to decay during the idolatries of Manasseh: and the wicked reign of Amon, and the long minority of Josiah, rendered it much in need of a thorough repair.

All that could skill, &c. (12) It seems, that the Levites, who attended by courses, in the intervals of their proper work, assisted by turns in superintending the workmen; nor were those excepted who were employed in psalmody: thus they became doubly useful, and saved the expense of other overseers. 31 And the king stood in his place, and made a covenant before the Lord, to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments, and his testimonies, and his statutes, with all his heart, and with all his soul, or perform the words of the covenant which are written in this book.

32 And he caused all that were present in Jerusalem and Benjamin to stand to it. And the inhabitants of Jerusalem did according to the covenant of God, the God of their fathers.

33 And Josiah took away all the abominations out of all the countries that pertained to the children of Israel, and made all that were present in Israel, to serve, even to serve the Lord their God. And all his days they departed not from following the Lord, the God of their fathers.

V. 33. While Josiah lived, the people were restrained from open idolatry: yet we learn from the prophets, especially Jeremiah, that, at this very time especially, they were ripening for destruction, by their hypocrisy and iniquity. (Notes, Jer. 3:6-11. 4:14. 25:3-7. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Several years of our lives must pass before we become capable of performing useful services: our earliest youth should therefore be dedicated to God, that we may not waste any of our remaining span. Happy and wise are they, who seek the Lord at a period of life when others are pursuing sinful pleasures, contracting bad habits, forming ruinous connexions, and making work for bitter repentance; either gracious repentance in this world, or that which is attended with despair in the regions of misery. None can express the anguish which is prevented by early piety, and its happy consequences.—If we would be useful, we must first "take heed to ourselves;" and when we are established in faith and grace, we shall be fitted for instruments of good to others. In this important work we must expect many opposers, and but few cordial helpers: and the more we look into the world, the church, or our own hearts, by the light of God's word, the more evidently shall we see how very much reformation and renovation are every where needed. (P. O. Ez. 8:1-6.)—The suppression of gross abominations makes way for the pure administration of God's ordinances; and when the filthiness and idols are cleansed out of our hearts, the Lord will prepare his temple there, and graciously come and dwell in it.—Liberality, integrity, and diligence are commendable in every work, but especially in whatever relates to the worship and service of God, and all undertakings immediately connected with it.—When God enables us to act conscientiously, according to our present knowledge, he will in due time give us still further and clearer views of his truth. (Notes, Hos. 6:1-3. John 7:14-17. v. 17.) The more we become acquainted with the Scripture, the more evidently shall we perceive our own guilt and danger: but if this discovery produces godly sorrow, contrition, humiliation, and further inquiries after the will of God, an answer of peace may be expected: while all the curses, which he has denounced, will fall upon the impenitent workers of iniquity.—Though we cannot prevent the ruin of sinners in general, or

3 And said unto the Levites that taught all Israel, which were holy unto the Lord, Put the holy ark in the house, which Solomon the son of David king of Israel did build: it shall not be a burden upon your shoulders: serve now the Lord your God, and his people Israel.

4 And prepare yourselves by the houses of your fathers, after your courses, according to the writing of David king of Israel, and according to the writing of Solomon his son.

5 And stand in the holy place according to the divisions of the families of the fathers of your brethren, the people, and after the division of the families of the Levites.

6 So kill the passover, and sanctify yourselves, and prepare your brethren, that they may do according to the word of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

8 And his princes gave willingly unto the people, to the priests, and to the Levites: Hilkiah, and Zechariah, and Jehiel, rulers of the house of God, gave unto the priests for the passover-offerings, two thousand and six hundred small cattle, and three hundred oxen.

of collective bodies, we should endeavour by our examples, prayers, instructions, and the regular use of authority, in domestic, or in public life, to engage as many as we possibly can to return to God, and walk before him, by trusting his promises and obeying his commandments.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXV. V. 1-3. Note, 2 Kings 23:21-23.—Taught, &c. (3) The Levites, by courses, served the priests at the sanctuary, as their primary employment: but when at home in their several cities, they were the stated teachers of the people. (Marg. Ref. e. Notes, 17:7-9. 30:21, 22. v. 22.)—Put, &c.] It is probable, that the most holy place had gone to decay, through neglect; and that while it was cleansed and repaired, the high-priest had committed the ark to the custody of some Levites of the family of Kohath who had been set apart and sanctified for that service: but when it was carried again into its place, they would be at liberty for other services, to the glory of God, and the benefit of his people.

V. 4. The regulations formed by David, and established by Solomon, concerning the courses of the priests and Levites, were committed to writing, and preserved for them to refer to continually. (Notes, 8:12-15. 1 Chr. 23:26-6.) Josiah, in like manner as Hezekiah had done, required the priests and Levites to attend to their several duties, and encouraged them in so doing; but he neither added, nor altered, nor retrenched anything thing; he merely enforced what had been established in the law, and in the regulations made by David and the contemporary prophets. (10:16.) "The commandment of the king... was by the word of the Lord." (Note, 31:12.)

V. 5. The meaning of this verse seems to be, that the Levites should be as exact, in ascertaining to what family, or subdivision of a family, every man belonged, as those of the other tribes were: that each might know and do his proper work, with as much certainty and accuracy, as the others knew what lands belonged to them by inheritance. Some, however, suppose, that only the arrangement of the Levites at this time is intended; and that they were directed to stand in regular order, according to their families, to receive the paschal lambs, which their brethren of the other tribes would bring, according to their families, one for each household. (6:10, 11.)

V. 6. Notes, 30:16-20. Ex. 12:3-10, v. 6. Lev. 1:5-9.

V. 7-9. The people at this time were neither very rich, nor very zealous, and the ordinances were expensive. That this therefore might not prevent their attendance on this solemn service, the king provided, at his own expense, an immense quantity of cattle suited to the solemnity; and after his example, the nobles, and the chief of the priests and Levites, liberally assisted their poorer brethren.—According to the calculation, that not fewer than ten, nor more than twenty persons, were to join for one lamb or kid, the num-bad, chief of the Levites, 'gave unto the Levites for passover-offerings five thousand small cattle, and five hundred oxen.

10 So the service was prepared, and 'the priests stood in their place, and the Levites in their courses, according to the king's commandment.

11 And they killed the passover, and 'the priests sprinkled the blood from their hands, and the Levites 'flayed them.

12 And they removed the burnt-offerings, that they might give according to the divisions of the families of the people, to offer unto the LORD, 'as it is written in the book of Moses. And so did they with the oxen.

13 And they roasted the passover with fire, according to the ordinance: but the other holy offerings 'sod they in pots, and in caldrons, and in pans, and 'divided them speedily among all the people.

14 And afterwards they made ready for themselves, and for the priests: 'because the priests the sons of Aaron were busy in offering of burnt-offerings and the fat until night; therefore the Levites prepared for themselves, and for the priests the sons of Aaron.

15 And the singers the sons of Asaph were in their place, 'according to the commandment of David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun the king's seer; and 'the porters waited at every gate; they might not depart from their service; for their brethren the Levites prepared for them.

16 So all the service of the LORD was prepared the same day, to keep the passover, and to offer burnt-offerings upon the altar of the LORD, according to the commandment of king Josiah.

17 And the children of Israel that were 'present

The Levites separated, as speedily as they could, the parts of the peace-offerings, which were to be burnt, from the rest, and added them to the other burnt-offerings; that the remainder, together with the paschal lambs, might, without delay, be prepared and distributed as the occasion required. (Notes, Lev. 3.)

V. 13—17. (Notes, Ez. 12:3—10, v. 8, 9. 1 Sam. 2:13—16. 1 Chr. 25:1—7. Ez. 46:19—24.) The priests were so fully employed, that they could not prepare the passover lambs for themselves; but the Levites, who were not otherwise engaged, prepared for them and for their brethren, who were occupied in other services; that all might be ready at the appointed hour.—The singing and music continued till all the sacrifices were offered, that is till night. . . . And their brethren, who were not singers, took care to provide for them their portion, when they had done. Bp. Patrick.—According to the commandment, &c. (16) Note, 4.

V. 18, 19. Hezekiah's remarkable passover seems to have been celebrated with greater fervency of devotion; but this of Josiah was far more regular, and in more exact conformity to the law; it was attended by very great multitudes, and the liberality of the king in furnishing the paschal lambs was without example. (Notes, 30:2—5, 16—27.)—Nothing is recorded on this subject, from the time that Israel obtained possession of the promised land: (Note, Josh. 5:10.) But even this passover, under Josiah, which exceeded all for several centuries, seems to have been very deficient as to genuine devotion.

V. 20—24. Josiah lived thirteen years after the remarkable passover before recorded, and zealously supported the worship of God to the end of his life. (Notes, 1—3, v. 3. 34: 33. 2 Kings 23:26, 27.) But the nation was all the while 'opening for destruction; and was adjudged unworthy of so pious and excellent a prince.—Josiah's conduct at the close of his life has been treated with great severity by most commentators: and he has been charged with engaging in an unjust war, and disregarding the express command of God; which may in great measure be ascribed to the groundless censure passed on him by the apocryphal Esdras, 'Not regarding the words of the prophet Jeremy, spoken by the mouth of the LORD.' (1 Esdras 1:28.) But the Scripture kept the passover at that time, and 'the feast of unleavened bread seven days.

18 And 'there was no passover like to that kept in Israel from the days of Samuel the prophet; 'neither did all the kings of Israel keep such a passover as Josiah kept, and the priests, and the Levites, and all Judah and Israel that were present, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

19 In the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah was this passover kept. [Practical Observations.]

20 ¶ After all this, when Josiah had prepared the temple, 'Necho king of Egypt came up to fight against 'Carchemish by Euphrates: and Josiah went out against him.

21 But he sent ambassadors to him, saying, 'What have I to do with thee, thou king of Judah? I come not against thee this day, but against the 'house wherewith I have war: for 'God commanded me to make haste: 'forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not.

22 Nevertheless Josiah would not turn his face from him, 'but disguised himself that he might fight with him, and hearkened not unto the words of Necho from 'the mouth of God, and came to fight in the valley of 'Megiddo.

23 And 'the archers shot at king Josiah; and the king said to his servants, Have me away; for I am sore 'wounded.

24 His servants therefore took him out of that chariot, and put him in 'the second chariot that he had; and 'they brought him to Jerusalem, and 'he died, and was buried 'in one of the sepulchres of his fathers. And 'all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah.

25 And 'Jeremiah lamented for Josiah: and no where condemns him. (Note, 2 Kings 23:29, 30.) Pharaoh, in marching his army through Josiah's territories, against his will, certainly committed an act of hostility. It is evident that Josiah was in possession of the whole land, and not of Judah only: (34:6.) and probably he held the northern parts of it as a grant from the king of Babylon; and was not only in alliance with him, but bound to guard his frontiers against hostile invaders. Doubtless the kings of Judah had been in some measure dependent on the kings of Assyria and Babylon, from the time of Manasseh's captivity and release. Pharaoh declared indeed by his ambassadors, that he did not mean to attack Josiah, but to march against a power with which he was at war. He was, however, in the heart of Josiah's kingdom before he sent this embassy, and he avowed his intention of attacking his ally: and therefore Josiah may fairly, on both accounts, be justified from the charge of unjustly meddling with a war that did not belong to him; for no king upon earth would think it unjust to declare war against another prince, who should forcibly march an army into his dominions, in order to attack another prince who was in alliance with him. It is true the ambassadors assured Josiah that "God had commanded Pharaoh to make haste;" and said, "Forbear thee from meddling with God who is with me, that he destroy thee not;" and he is therefore said, "not to have hearkened to the words of Necho, from the mouth of God." But Necho produced no proof, that he was a prophet of JEROBOAM, and Sennacherib had used similar language to Hezekiah, who had paid no regard to it. (Note, 2 Kings 18: 25.) The word used by Necho, (אֱלֹהִים) may signify gods, or idols: and critics have noted, that the expression "from the mouth of God," is no where used in the Hebrew Bible, for a revelation from the true God; but that it is always "from the mouth of the LORD."—It is not indeed at all probable, that God had commanded Pharaoh-necho by Jeremiah, or by any other prophet, to undertake this expedition: for in that case Josiah would doubtless have been informed, and have submitted. And if Pharaoh had received any monition in a dream or vision, which he concluded to be from the God of Israel, (and so meant something more, than his own auguries and superstitions;) Josiah might not give credit to his testimony, in matters so closely connected with his own interests.—Josiah, however, seems to have been guilty of precipitation, in not inquiring of the Lord when thus warned, before he proceeded to attack so formidable an enemy: his premature and violent death might therefore be a rebuke for his rashness; but it was chiefly a judgment on a hypocritical and wicked generation. Whatever sin Josiah committed, he doubtless repented of it: and the final state of one, who repenteth all the singing men and the singing women spake of Josiah in their lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance, in Israel: and behold, they are written in the Lamentations.

26 Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and his goodness, according to that which was written in the law of the LORD, 27 And his deeds, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the Kings of Israel and Judah.

V. 25-27. Though the people would not imitate Josiah's eminent piety, and disliked his reformation; yet they highly respected his character, and were sensible that they had sustained a very great loss. 'Whosoever they mentioned any calamity, they mentioned that as the greatest that had befallen them.' Ep. Patrick.—The book of Lamentations of Jeremiah was written on another occasion: (Preface to Lamentations) and what that prophet composed on the death of Josiah has not come down to us. But both the prophet and the people took several methods of doing honour to the memory of their prince; and of perpetuating the lamentations made on the account of his death; it is probable by an annual commemoration of that fatal event. (Note, Jer. 22:10-12.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-19. Extensive good may be done by persons in authority, who spare no labour or expense, in promoting the honour of God; and who unite their example and influence with most zealous endeavours, to excite and encourage other members of the community to do their duty.—Even those who teach others, and are "holy to the LORD," not only by office, but in their hearts and lives, need to be repeatedly exhorted and charged to serve God and his church, with increasing zeal and persevering diligence; and when one service is finished, to proceed with alacrity to another.—God alone can efficaciously sanctify and prepare our hearts for his holy worship; but the blessing must be sought, for ourselves and others, by attending to our several duties; and ministers should always sanctify themselves, before they attempt to prepare the people for the ordinances of God. In this way revivals of religion are both manifested and forwarded; and sacred ordinances at once honour the Lord, and become 'means of grace' to the souls of men. The support of them, in an orderly and public manner, must always be attended with expense; and the multitude of the poor will often be unable to defray it. On this account religion will, in some places and at some times, be neglected, to the discouragement of many, and the ruin of far more: it then becomes a noble generosity for kings, princes, rulers, and wealthy persons, to step forward and to communicate liberally to the assistance of the poor, that they may not want "the Bread of life" for their souls; and God will honour those who thus honour him. None, however, are more bound to liberality in such cases, than the superior clergy, who enjoy large revenues appropriated to the maintenance of religion: for surely they ought willingly to assist their poorer brethren, who commonly do a great proportion of the work, without even a decent provision for themselves and their families! Were these things duly attended to, the service of God might be prepared, and his ordinances conducted, in harmony and to edification: while mutual love would be cemented; discouragements and temptations to envy, discontent, and revilings, would be obviated; and the affluent might expect to enjoy their abundance, in reputation, beloved by their inferiors, with the blessing of God, and to his glory: while the whole would cause numbers

7 Nebuchadnezzar also carried of the vessels of the house of the LORD to Babylon, and put them in his temple at Babylon.

8 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and his abominations which he did, and that which was found in him, behold, they are written in the book of the Kings of Israel and Judah. And Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

9 ¶ Jehoiachin was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months and ten days in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

10 And when the year was expired, the king Nebuchadnezzar sent, and brought him to Babylon, with the goodly vessels of the house of the LORD, and made Zedekiah his brother king over Judah and Jerusalem.

to pray for each other, and "to abound in many thanksgivings unto God." (Notes, 2 Cor. 9:6-15.)—Those who are continually so taken up in the work of God and his church, that they cannot attend to their secular interests, ought particularly to be provided for by their brethren who have more leisure. In all things indeed we need reciprocal assistance; and they, who are much employed in the public exercises of religion, should be cautioned not to neglect their own souls, and the private exercise of meditation and communion with God.—Alas! how are the ordinances of God disregarded, or formally attended on! The church in its best days has fallen short hitherto of what it ought to be at all times: our most religious hours, in public or private, need forgiveness; and the mercy of God, through the Saviour's atonement, must still be our only plea, to the close of our days.—Very great exertions are requisite to produce even an outward attendance to religion: and after all, except we depend entirely on divine grace, the most excellent means and instruments will be ineffectual, and serve only to demonstrate the strength of man's depravity, and the justice of God in the sinner's condemnation: and abused mercies will after a time be withdrawn.

V. 20-27. No man suffers or ever will suffer, who has not merited his sufferings; yet public persons are often laid aside or removed, to punish the wickedness of the community: and even their indiscretions, contrary to their general character, and the fatal consequences of them, may be permitted as a national judgment.—We are not bound to believe all those who profess to speak by the authority of God: but it is always right to act with caution, to search the Scriptures, to seek the Lord's direction by prayer, and to consult wise, experienced, and pious friends; that we may discover as far as possible, what is the truth and will of God concerning us, and that we may not be found in any instance to fight against him. Men seldom prosper in those measures which are unadvisedly adopted; and those, who are honoured with great usefulness, should be doubly circumspect in their conduct, and careful of their lives; because so many are interested in them.—Believers, however, even when taken away by a sudden or premature death, are removed to a better world; and their survivors should honour them, notwithstanding their imperfections; and will frequently perceive that they have great cause to mourn for them. (Note, Is. 57:1, 2.) Yet many join in lamenting the death, and commemorating the goodness, of useful men, who neither regard their admonitions, nor imitate their examples. And many mourn over their own calamities, who do not repent, and forsake those sins, which have provoked God to inflict them. Yet this alone can avert still more tremendous judgments.

of Israel into Canaan; so that when the land had many sabbatical years together during the captivity, these bore a near proportion to those in which the law had been violated. Yet this intimated, that it was not to be given to another people, because the Israelites would be reinstated in it. (Notes, Ez. 23:10—12. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—16. When the wickedness of nations provokes God to remove wise and pious princes, and to advance others of a contrary character; avowed impiety and desolating judgments may be expected to come in like a flood, and to bear down all before them. Indeed Providence often raises up such wicked rulers, one after another, to scourge a guilty land; and then every change proves a step towards more complete destruction.—Inflated counsels and treacherous measures concur in bringing ruin upon those, who, in proud contempt of God, reject the warnings of his ministers from his word; and who thus “stiffen their neck, and harden their heart from turning unto the Lord.”—Yet he would not punish whole kingdoms for the impiety of their rulers, as did not the people also transgress very much: but when nations, favoured with his word and ordinances, become so corrupt, that nobles, priests, and people imitate, and even exceed, the abominations of the heathen; and add the shameless profanation of things most sacred, and the most obstinate contempt of his holy word, to all their other crimes; what can be expected but miseries as remarkable as their wickedness? And when the mockery and persecution of his ministers is added to all the rest, the “wrath of the Lord will arise against such a people, till there be no remedy.” He indeed delights in mercy, and is glorified by the repentance of sinners, and by pardoning and saving the penitent. The whole plan of redemption, the warnings, invitations, and entreaties of his word, and his long-suffering towards us, prove his rich compassion and love: but these endearing attributes are exercised in exact consistency with his justice, holiness, and truth, and according to the counsel of his infallible wisdom; and when no means, mercies, or warnings are effectual to bring sinners to repentance, there is no remedy, but he must vindicate the honour of his despised authority, patience, and mercy, in their condign punishment.—Nothing, except obsti-naïve impenitent unbelief and iniquity, can ruin our souls; but nothing can save those who persist in rejecting the salvation of the gospel: for the honour of the truths and ordinances of God, demands the destruction of men, who disgrace them while they profess to glory in them. Yet the ministers of the gospel must not yield to despondency or resentment, however disappointed, mocked, or misused: they must copy the patience and forbearance of the Lord; and spare no pains, and leave no proper method untried, to bring sinners to repentance.

V. 17—23. The instruments of divine vengeance against devoted nations are of themselves disposed for their bloody work; and the Lord arms them with power, and gives up the objects of his righteous indignation into their hands.

Then, no age or sex, no sacredness of place or character will move compassion; but all will be involved in one common calamity: and the abused privileges, in which hypocrites confide, will both add to their guilt, and enhance the poignancy of their sufferings. Yet all the miseries of this life are temporal; but the punishment of the wicked in another world is eternal.—Even the circumstances of severe calamities often forebode and make way for their removal. When the executioners of vengeance have cut off the more desperate transgressors, and the rest are humbled by means of their sufferings, and for their sins; the Lord “stirs up the spirit” of some instrument of his mercy, who patronises the afflicted, and becomes their deliverer: and “the gates of hell shall never prevail against his church.”

THE BOOK OF EZRA.

It is generally agreed that Ezra wrote this book, and also the preceding books of Chronicles. It is likewise recorded by the Jewish writers, that he revised all the preceding parts of Scripture, and published a correct copy of the whole: and indeed this account appears highly probable. He is not called a prophet, in the sacred Scripture: yet there can be no doubt, that he performed these services under the guidance of the Holy Spirit; as no distinction is made in the New Testament between one part and another of that volume, which was then called “The Oracles of God,” and as such sanctioned by our Lord and his apostles. The prophecies of Haggai and Zechariah confirm the history contained in the former part of this book: and as Ezra alone records the rebuilding of the temple; whatever in the New Testament relates to the temple, as then standing, is in some sense a sanction to the authenticity of the narrative: though I do not recollect any express references to it except in the genealogies. Neither does the book appear to contain any direct prophecies: but it is written in so pious a strain, and so much in the manner of the other Scriptures, that it has strong internal evidences of divine inspiration. As express mention is made in it of Jeremiah’s prophecies, and plain intimations are given of Isaiah’s extraordinary prediction concerning Cyrus; (1:1—4.) it is evident that the writings of these prophets were then extant: and the constant reference to the law of Moses and the preceding histories in this book, and that of Nehemiah, proves the same respecting them.—Ezra was peculiarly had in honour by the ancient Jews, and is so by the modern: and to this we must ascribe the forgery of several other books, under his name, especially the two apocryphal books of Esdras, or Ezra; for forgeries they undoubtedly are, and of a much later date than the authentic record of Ezra.—This history opens with the proclamation of Cyrus, the return of a company of Jews, and their attempts to rebuild the city and temple, and to re-inhabit the land: it proceeds to record the opposition with which they met, the delays this occasioned, and how, after a time, they in part succeeded. At length, about seventy-eight or seventy-nine years afterwards, (concerning the most of which nothing is recorded,) Ezra himself arrived with a commission, and large powers and grants, from Artaxerxes, and with many attendants: and the narrative closes with an account of the sin of the Jews in marrying heathen wives; Ezra’s grief, humble confession, and prayers on that account; and his pious endeavours to separate his people from idolaters.—In this and the subsequent history, the Jews no longer appear as an independent prosperous nation, governed by kings of their own race: but a small remnant, returned from captivity, by the favour of the Persian kings, and under their protection and dominion; and struggling, often feebly, with many difficulties and enemies: yet, in this condition, they were enabled to re-establish the worship of God at the temple in Jerusalem, to which they outwardly adhered till the coming of Christ; being effectually cured of gross idolatry, though in other respects, exceedingly prone to disobedience.—During the captivity nothing is recorded of the history of Israel, except what may be collected from the prophecies of Ezekiel and Daniel: and exceedingly little is contained in the Scripture of their condition, during 536 years, till the birth of Christ, compared with the regular history given of the nation from the days of Moses to the captivity. The old dispensation was about to expire and make way for Christianity; the Spirit of prophecy was about to be withdrawn for a season; and the people had so often and so flagitantly violated their national covenant, that they were not honoured and noticed as they had been in former ages.

CHAPTER I.

Cyrus issues a proclamation, allowing the Jews to go up to Jerusalem and build the temple; and exhorting those who stayed behind to assist them, 1—4. Many prepare to return, and others contribute to the expense, 5, 6. Cyrus restores the vessels of the temple to Sheshbazzar, 7—11.

His son Evil-merodach was slain by Neriglissar, his brother-in-law, after he had reigned two years; and probably Jehoachin died before him. (Note, 2 Kings 25:27—30.) After four years Neriglissar was slain in battle by Cyrus: after a few months Belshazzar, the son of Evil-merodach, mounted the throne; and at the end of seventeen years he was slain in Babylon by Cyrus. (Dan. 5.) Then Cyaxares, or Darius the Mede, the uncle and father-in-law of Cyrus, succeeded to the throne of all these kingdoms; and after two years he died, and left the whole of them to Cyrus, who, in the first year after his predecessor’s death, proclaimed liberty to the captive Jews. This is the first computation of the seventy years of the Babylonish captivity. (Note, 2 Chr. 36:21.)—As Daniel prospered in the reign of Darius the Mede, and of Cyrus the Persian, there can be little doubt, that he was instrumental in procuring this extraordinary proclamation in favour of the Jews: and probably he showed that prince the prophecy of Isaiah, which was known to have been long extant, and in which he was predicted by name, and his successes were described; and by which he was appointed to rebuild Jerusalem and the temple; and also those of Jeremiah, which foretold the exact duration of the captivity. (Notes, Is. 13:17. 21:1—5. 41:25. 44:25—28. 45:1—6. Jer. 25:10—13. 27:4—9. 29:10. 50: 51. Dan. 1:17—20. 6:25—28.) The prophecy of Isaiah was delivered about 120 years before the temple was destroyed; and about the same time before the birth of Cyrus. These predictions, set before Cyrus, by a person of Daniel’s venerable age, and high reputation for wisdom and eminent station, seem to have produced in the mind of this prudent and humane conqueror, a conviction that the God of Israel was the true God, and that the captive Jews were his chosen people, and Jerusalem the place where he was especially pleased to be worshipped. Thus “THE LORD stirred up his spirit” to issue a proclamation, which was publicly made known in every place, by heralds appointed for that service, and also committed to writing; that the Jews were now set at liberty, and should be protected, in returning to Jerusalem and rebuilding the temple.—In this proclamation Cyrus called the God of Israel, “JEHOVAH, the God of Heaven,” and avowed that he was “THE GOD,” in contradistinction to all others that were so called. He acknowledged, that he had received his dominions from JEHOVAH, whether acquired by inheritance or conquest. These, being far superior to any other empire then in the world, (as comprising the dominions of the Medes and Persians increased by those of the Assyrians, Babylonians, and others,) were called in the customary style. * all the king-of the ea th; and the hath charged me to build him a house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah.

3 Who is there among you of all his people? this God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the LORD God of Israel, (he is the God,) which is in Jerusalem.

4 And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, besides the freewill-offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem.

[Practical Observations.]

5 ¶ Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit God had raised, to go up to build the house of the LORD which is in Jerusalem.

6 And all they that were about them strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things, besides all that was willingly offered.

7 ¶ Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the LORD, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem, and had put them in the house of his gods;

8 Even those did Cyrus king of Persia bring forth by the hand of Mithredath the treasurer, and numbered them unto Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah.

9 And this is the number of them: thirty chargers of gold, a thousand chargers of silver, nine and twenty knives,

10 Thirty basins of gold, silver basins of a second sort four hundred and ten, and other vessels a thousand.

11 All the vessels of gold and of silver were five thousand and four hundred. All these did Sheshbazzar bring up with them of the captivity that were brought up from Babylon unto Jerusalem.

doms of the earth." And he declared that "the LORD had charged him, to build him a house at Jerusalem." Some think that this was done in a vision vouchsafed to him; but probably it was his inference from Isaiah's prophecies. He also wished the Jews success in the name of the Lord, and in some sense prayed for his powerful and favourable presence with them. And he exhorted others, in every place, to help those who went upon this undertaking, with such things as were needful for their expenses, and for accomplishing their pious intentions. Some interpret this as an order to the rulers of the provinces, to supply them from the public revenues: (Notes, 7:16—28.) others suppose that Cyrus allowed the Jews to collect voluntary contributions from his subjects at large; and some confine it to the Jews, who did not go up to Jerusalem, who were exhorted to assist their brethren that did. Without such assistance, many, that "remained in any place," waiting an opportunity of going up to Jerusalem, would have been eventually hindered.—Besides affording assistance to the Jews for their journey; the people in general were allowed, and even reminded, to send oblations for the temple, which was about to be built at Jerusalem.—By this decree the Jews, who had been held in bondage and captivity, were virtually released, provided they chose to engage in this enterprise. Any attempt of this kind would previously have been punishable as rebellion; but now, the government being favourable, their opposers would be restrained, and many would readily help them on that account alone.—As the kings of Persia still retained the sovereignty of the land, it could be no real impolicy to encourage the people to re-inhabit and cultivate a fertile territory, which had long lain desolate. But this measure was so contrary to the ancient prejudices and superstitions of these kings, that it was probably dictated by conscience, and a sense of duty to the God of heaven: though we find nothing in the subsequent history of this prince to favour a conclusion, that he really renounced idolatry, and became a true worshipper of JEHOVAH. The proclamation, however, was honourable to God; and would encourage the Jews to adhere to their religion, and be more zealous for it; and perhaps induce many of the Gentiles to respect, and even to embrace it.

V. 5, 6. Some readers may perhaps wonder, that, on this proclamation of Cyrus, the Jews did not assemble in one body, and directly go and take possession of their ancient inheritances: but a little reflection shows the matter in another light.—The city and temple lay a heap of ruins, and it would cost immense labour and expense to rebuild them. The land was either wholly desolate, or occupied by encroaching neighbours; and in either case, it would require much time and labour to procure for themselves habitations and provisions. The journey was long, arduous, and perilous, to those who were attended with families and substance: (Note, Gen. 31:23, 24.) and many enemies would endeavour to plunder them by the way, as far as they dared and were able. (Notes, 8:21—23. Neh. 2:7.) None of the Jews had seen Jerusalem or the temple, except such as were considerably above fifty years of age; at which period of life the spirit of enterprise commonly begins to decline: and those, who had merely seen it as children, would have little stimulating recollection of it. Few were attached to the temple by true piety: and most of them wanted even that attachment, which men naturally feel for the land of their nativity; having been born in the places, where they were then settled. Some persons of true and eminent piety were so situated, that they did not think it their duty to remove; as Daniel in the court of Cyrus; others would be hindered by the infirmities of old age, and the peculiar circumstances of their families and connexions. In short, the difficulties, hardship, and peril were manifest; the success of the attempt would be doubtful to all, but those who were "strong in faith;" its temporal advantages were remote and precarious, and not worth the venture; especially to such as had obtained comfortable settlements or occupations, in the land of their captivity. Even the spiritual advantages would appear to the pious mind, more intended for posterity than for that generation; and to engage in it, in this view, would require vigorous faith, lively hope, and an active zeal for the honour of God, and the benefit of his church, and establishment of his worship, in ages to come.—We may conclude, that in consequence of the captivities, many Israelites, and some of the Jews, were finally incorporated with the heathen, among whom they dwelt: yet these calamities seem to have had a very good effect on considerable numbers.—The chief fathers of Judah and Benjamin, who had the greatest influence in their tribes, first moved in this undertaking; and they were joined by the leading men among the priests and Levites, which doubtless rendered the design more honourable: and thus a considerable number were encouraged to attend them, whilst others both assisted them, and sent valuable oblations for the intended temple.—Many more returned, than we read of being carried away captive: (Notes, 2:64—67. Jer. 52:28—30,) but as the land had been utterly desolated, all the surviving inhabitants must have been driven into other countries, and most of them into those lands, which had been subject to the kings of Babylon, and which were now fallen under the dominion of the kings of Persia: and doubtless many of the ten tribes accompanied the Jews at this time. It is, however, evident that a great majority even of the latter, chose to continue in the settlements which they had there gained; some of them afterwards returned, but very many never did; and immense numbers of Jews were from that time dispersed, in every city and country, over all that part of the world. So that the new settlement, in Judea and at Jerusalem, formed but a small part of that people, as they continued to be distinguished from other nations; for they still increased and multiplied very rapidly, according to the promise of God to their fathers.—It is worthy of observation, that no Jews, who chose to go, were excluded by Cyrus's proclamation: yet the language of the sacred historian implies, that none would actually have gone, if He who "stirred up the spirit of Cyrus," had not also "raised the spirit of the people," to avail themselves of this permission: the original words are the same in both clauses. This transaction, (as Archbishop Usher has particularly observed,) furnishes a most striking illustration, or, as I would rather say, representation, of the way in which the gospel is proposed to sinners, and embraced by believers. It is in general set before the ruined descendants of Adam; with the Saviour's most solemn assurance, that "him who cometh . . . he will in no wise cast out." Yet "no man can come unto him, except the Father draw him." On one pretence or other, all who are left to themselves "neglect so great salvation," and are justly condemned. But God, by his preventing grace, "stirs up the spirits" of some, who thus thankfully embrace the proffered blessing, and are mercifully saved.

V. 7—11. Some of the vessels of the temple had been cut in pieces by the victors: (2 Kings 24:13.) but the most valuable had been providentially preserved through all the succeeding revolutions, and were now ordered by Cyrus to be restored to Sheshbazzar; and so were at last brought back to Jerusalem and again employed in the service of the sanctuary.—It is generally agreed, that the ark was lost or destroyed, when the temple was burnt; and it is likely, that by the absence of it, and the visible glory, God would signify, he was withdrawing his presence from that house of stone, to dwell in the temple of Christ's body, who offered himself to God, and thereby put an end to these figurative sacrifices. Bp. Patrick. The knives were used for slaying and preparing the sacrifices, as the original word signifies, and the vessels, for receiving the blood, for the meat-offerings, and other similar purposes. (*Marg. He was the grandson of Jehoiachin by Salathiel, and the heir of the house of David : as such he was regarded by the conquerors ; he possessed authority over the captive Jews ; and he was authorized, and willingly undertook, to lead those back, who now returned to rebuild the city and temple. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—4. As the architect progressively executes every part of the plan, which he had delineated for his intended structure, till the whole is completed ; so God in his providence performs in due order all the prophecies of his word : a great proportion of his grand design has already been accomplished, and revolving ages will hasten the performance of all the rest, in the appointed periods.—Difficulties, which to us appear impossibilities, form no obstruction to Omnipotence. The Lord our God turneth the hearts of kings, as he does the rivers of waters, which way he pleases : (Note, Prov. 21:1.) he subverts the deep-laid foundations of mighty empires, and establishes others in their room ; he lays aside the executors of his vengeance, when their work is done, to make way for the instruments of his mercy ; he gives, as he sees good, abilities, success, and authority ; and then secretly disposes men's minds to fulfil his word and do his will, and overrules every thing for the benefit of his church, and of those who trust in him.—When he has work to do, they, whom he has chosen to perform it, find their minds enlarged to entertain noble designs ; and, forgetful of their former habits, maxims, and superstitions, they serve his cause with all the authority which he has conferred on them. Even they, who live and die strangers to the power of true religion, have often received deep convictions of “his eternal power and Godhead,” and of their obligations and accountableness to “the God of heaven ;” and under these convictions, they have made public and honourable confessions to him, have shown for a time a regard for his authority, and have done many and great things for his cause and people ; speaking the language of piety, and being very useful to his worshippers ; and yet at last they have returned into their former idolatry or ungodliness ! (Notes, 7:11—18.)—If such things have heretofore been done in fulfilling former prophecies ; the Lord is equally able and faithful to provide for the ruin of every antichrist, the conversion of the Jews, and the calling of all the Gentiles into his church.—In every useful undertaking, all should endeavour to be helpful ; and it bodes well, when princes and ministers of religion take the lead, and give the example, in arduous and self-denying services. Some may be useful by their labours, some with their substance, and all by their prayers, to the common cause of truth and righteousness : and whatever is done willingly, and from love to God and his people, will be graciously accepted.

V. 5—11. No time should be lost in setting about those duties which belong to us in our several stations : and in stirring up others to abound in love and good works, we should give them an example.—That which is devoted to the service of the Lord, is intrusted to his protection : and he will especially keep and preserve those, whom he has “purified unto himself to be a peculiar people, zealous of good works.”

cially keep and preserve those, whom he has “purified unto himself to be a peculiar people, zealous of good works.” Even the very hairs of their head are all numbered ; and whatever tribulations they may pass through, no true believer shall perish ; but they shall all be forthcoming, at that day “when the Lord shall make up his jewels.”—Salvation is fully prepared in Jesus Christ ; “all power in heaven and earth is given unto him ;” the proclamation of the gospel is general to every creature. But pride, worldly lusts, and unbelief, render us averse to the gracious proposal : and it would be made in vain, did not the Lord raise up the spirits of a remnant, “according to the election of grace,” to renounce all for the sake of Christ and his salvation. Those who prefer carnal things to the eternal blessings which he confers, will find, that their pride and love of sin aggravate, and do not excuse, the guilt of their unbelief. Those, who feel a willingness to accept of what they have heretofore neglected, may come with encouragement : for Jesus “will in no wise cast them out.” And if by grace have been enabled to receive this salvation, and to bring forth the fruits of it ; while we take the comfort of it, we shall give him the glory, and offer our fervent prayers, that others also may “be made willing in the day of his power.”

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1. Province, &c. (Marg. Ref. a.) This terms seems to denote Judea, as now become a province of the Persian empire.—Some of the same persons returned, who had been carried captive, and the children or descendants of the others.

V. 2. These were the chief fathers, who were next in authority to Zerubbabel, and assisted him in this expedition. Jeshua, or Joshua, was the high-priest, the grandson of Seraiah, who was slain by Nebuchadnezzar. (2 Kings 25; 18, 21. Comp. 1 Chr. 6:14, 15. with Note, Hag. 1:1.)—Nehemiah and Mordecai were not the same persons of whom we afterwards read, who bore these names ; for they lived many years later. (Neh. 1:1. Esth. 2:5.)—As these persons renounced many advantages, and encountered many hardships and dangers, in attempting to rebuild the temple and city, and resume possession of the promised land ; it was proper that their names should be recorded, as a mark of honourable distinction to them and their descendants. “Their land and their cities had been laid so desolate, . . . and were infested also by such bad neighbours, that it was a great piece of generosity in these men to return thither ; and their names are recorded to the eternal honour of them, and of their posterity ; they being the first planters of this country, after it had been laid waste.” Bp. Patrick. The people of Israel. “They who were called “the children of the province” before, are now called “the people of Israel.” for from him they were derived, though most of them were of the tribe of Judah.” Bp. Patrick. (Note, 1:5, 6.)

V. 3—29. The Register, in the book of Nehemiah, answers to this here given in so many particulars, that there can be no doubt that the same is meant in both places. In general, the names and the numbers of each family are nearly the same ; and the sum total is computed in both exactly alike. Yet there are several considerable variations, in names and numbers, which cannot be readily and satisfactorily accounted for. The most material of these are marked in the margin.—It is probable, that Ezra, when he wrote his history, many years after the return of the Jews to Babylon, copied this register from the public records without alteration.—Some think, that several who had their names inserted in the register, altered their minds, or died before the company arrived at Jerusalem ; and that others came forward, so as to complete the same number in all. (Notes, Neh. 7:5, 73.)—The word children is sometimes used for the descendants from the several heads

V. 35. It is uncertain whether Senaah be the name of a person, or a place; but the greatest number of persons stated in the whole register are called the children of Senaah.

V. 36-39. Above four thousand priests went up to Jerusalem on this occasion; which was a very great number, in proportion to the rest of the company; yet only four, out of the twenty-four courses instituted by David, seem to have returned: at least only four of the persons, after whom the courses were first named, as here mentioned; namely, Jedaiah, Immer, Harim, and Pashur, who was the son of Malchijah: (1 Chr. 9:12. 24:7-9,14.) and his name appears to have stood in the public records, as head of his course, instead of his father's. The priests, however, were afterwards divided into twenty-four courses, under the ancient names, in order to preserve regularity in their ministrations.

V. 40-42. The very small number of Levites, compared with the multitude of priests, who returned from Babylon, is very remarkable. Perhaps during a course of years, having no employment in their appropriate services, they generally entered on other occupations; and felt little inducement or inclination to leave them, in order to be the assistants of the priests, in the present desolated condition of Judah and Jerusalem. But it may be supposed, that the priests, having a more sacred and honourable office, were reluctant to be deprived of it, and more ready to resume the exercise of their ministry.

V. 43-54. (Marg. Ref. Notes, s.20. 1 Chr. 9:2.)

V. 55-58. These were persons descended from the remains of the devoted Canaanites, who had been brought into bondage by Solomon; (Notes, 1 Kings 9:20-22.) and so their posterity were employed in menial services, perhaps about the sanctuary, along with the Nethinims; and though both the Nethinims and "the children of Solomon's servants," were of Gentile extraction, and not admitted to the privileges of Israelites; yet they seem to have been more ready to return to Jerusalem than the Levites were.

V. 61-63. Either Habaiah, or Koz, being of the sacerdotal family, had married one of Barzillai's daughters; and his posterity perhaps thought their descent from him, more honourable than their priestly character, and so neglected to preserve their genealogy. Yet, on their return from captivity, they desired to be admitted to the service of the sanctuary: but, not being able to trace their genealogy, they were 64 ¶ The whole congregation together was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore.

65 Besides their servants and their maids, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven: and there were among them two hundred singing-men and singing-women.

66 Their horses were seven hundred thirty and six; their mules, two hundred forty and five;

67 Their camels, four hundred thirty and five; their asses, six thousand seven hundred and twenty.

68 ¶ And some of the chief of the fathers, when they came to the house of the Lord which is at Jerusalem, offered freely for the house of God to set it up in his place:

69 They gave after their ability unto the treasure of the work threescore and one thousand drams of gold, and five thousand pounds of silver and one hundred priests' garments.

70 So the priests, and the Levites, and some of the people, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinims, dwelt in their cities, and all Israel in their cities.

CHAPTER III.

The Jews reassemble at Jerusalem, build an altar, offer sacrifices, keep the feast of tabernacles, and prepare to rebuild the temple, 1-7. Under the direction of Zerubbabel and Jeshua the foundation is laid, amidst the rejoicing of some and the weeping of others, 8-13.

AND when the seventh month was come, and the children of Israel were in the cities, the people gathered themselves together as one man to Jerusalem.

2 Then stood up Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren the priests, and Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and his brethren, and builded the altar of the God of Israel, to offer burnt-offer-excluded by the Tirshatha, (that is, the governor, or Zerubbabel, Neh. 8:9.) until a high-priest should arise with Urim and Thummim, who might, by immediate revelation from God, decide upon their case. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ex. 28:30.) But such a high-priest was not vouchsafed under the second temple. The Jews generally acknowledge, that there was no Urim and Thummim under the second temple; and even they that say there was, (because it was necessary the high-priest should have his garments complete,) yet say, there was no answer from God given by it.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 64. The number of the several families amounts only to twenty-nine thousand eight hundred and eighteen; and those in Nehemiah to thirty-one thousand and eighty-nine; yet the sum total is in both said to be forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty, besides their servants. (Neh. 7:66, 67.) The surplus are supposed to have been priests and Levites who could not produce their genealogy, and Israelites from the other tribes, who accompanied their brethren of Judah and Benjamin. 'It is remarkable that the two accounts' (of Ezra and Nehemiah) 'agree in the total amount; and the sum of the numbers, as separately detailed, will correspond, if to the 29,818, specified by Ezra, we add the 1765 persons reckoned by Nehemiah, which Ezra has omitted: and on the other hand, to the 31,089 enumerated by Nehemiah, add the 494, which is an overplus in Ezra, not noticed by Nehemiah: both writers including in the sum total 10,777 of the mixed multitude, not particularized in the individual detail. . . . Prideaux attributes the difference to alterations made by Nehemiah, in compliance with changes, that had happened since the departure from Babylon. . . . The accounts unquestionably agreed, when they were received into the canon, except where there might be some cause for variation; and probably the differences that now exist have originated in the carelessness of the copyists.' Grey's Key.

V. 65. Among the servants were "two hundred singing-men and singing-women," (or two hundred and forty-five, according to Nehemiah,) who probably were employed in families, to assist their mournings, or their thanksgivings. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 66, 67. How exceedingly reduced and impoverished does Israel appear in this narrative, compared with the condition of the nation in the days of David and Solomon!—The number of asses, compared with that of the horses, shows in how general use asses were at that time; but horses as belonging to the patriarchs or their descendants, are not mentioned, till the time of David.

V. 68-70. Under the divine protection this company arrived safe at Jerusalem, without any memorable occurrence. They found the city and all around it in ruins, and it seems the neighbouring cities totally unoccupied. These they rebuilt as well as they could, and dwelt in them for the present. (Notes, 1 Chr. 9:2. Neh. 7:73.) But the house of God chiefly occupied their thoughts; and it seems that their obligations to it were made, before they separated to seek habitations or subsistence. The whole amounted to nearly eighty thousand pounds sterling, besides the priests' garments; which was a considerable sum for them to contribute in their present poverty: (Note, Neh. 7:70-72.) but probably their brethren who stayed behind, contributed part of it; as the sacrifices and the burning of incense at the temple, were for the benefit of those who worshipped at, or towards, that typical residence of the God of Israel. (Notes, 1 Kings 8:28-30. Dan. 6:10, 11.) 'By this it appears, that the Jews were not such poor slaves in Babylon as wrought for their . . . masters, but had liberty to trade, and get riches for themselves; some of them being advanced to considerable offices in the king's court.' Bp. Patrick.—The whole history shows, that they were not reduced to personal slavery.—Every thing seems to have been conducted with much harmony and regularity. The foundation of this poor commonwealth was laid in a marvellous concord. . . . They had one heart and soul like the first Christians, without which unity no people can be preserved. And that it may be cherished, they must avoid those things that destroy it, which are (as Joseph Wolphius here observes) principally . . . self-love, and meddling in other men's matters.' Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord will honour those, who renounce their own ease or interest for the sake of his service and glory; and all, who avail themselves of the proclamation of liberty and salvation sent in the gospel, have their names recorded in the book of life; whilst others shall be written in the dust of oblivion or disgrace. Those orders of men, which have on one occasion been most zealous in the cause of God, may at another time become most negligent; and the reverse is often exemplified; "for the first shall be last, and the last first." (36-42. 2 Chr. 29:34.)—Those who are ashamed of religion, or undervalue their external relation to God, in times of reproach, persecution, or distress; will have no benefit from it, when it becomes honourable and profitable: and they who have no evidence that they are, by regeneration, and adoption, spiritual priests unto God through Jesus Christ, have no right to the peculiar comforts and privileges of Christians. But there are many cases of which we cannot judge, but must leave them to be determined at the second coming of our High-Priest, whose illuminations and perfections are unchangeable and eternal.—Those who "seek first the kingdom of God," his favour, and his glory, will have all things else added to them: they will readily offer according to their ability for the house and service of God: and "where there is a willing mind it is accepted, according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not." (Notes, 2 Cor. 8:1-5, 10-15, v. 12.)—Sin always impoverishes and degrades both individuals and societies; but that poverty and degradation are often sanctified, and finally promote their true interest and honour.—Our gracious Lord will carry us through those undertakings, which are entered on according to his will, with an aim to his glory, and in dependence on his assistance; and then we shall be made superior to all difficulties, hardships, and dangers. Thus they, who at the call of the gospel, renounce sin, and return unto the Lord, shall be guarded and guided through all the perils of the way; and arrive safe at those mansions, which are prepared for them in the holy city of our God.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1. It is probable, that the Jews began their journey in the beginning of the spring; and that they did not reach Jerusalem till three or four months after. (7:9.) They employed a short time in providing habitations and necessities for their families; and then they all met together in the seventh month. This was the season of the first solemnities which occurred after their arrival. On the first day the feast of trumpets was kept; the great day of atonement followed on the tenth; and the feast of tabernacles began on the fifteenth. All these they seem to have observed with great devotion. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Lev. 23:24-43.)

V. 2, 3. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:7-11. 2:2.) The Jews built the altar upon the same foundation, and therefore of the same size, with that of Solomon. Probably it was formed of rough stones, with a large hearth of brass on the top. (Note, Ex. 20:21-25, v. 24, 25.) So large an altar, built all of brass, would have cost a sum far beyond their present circumstances. (Note, 2 Chr. 4:1.)—The fear of the tribes or nations around them, whom the people knew to be their enemies, did not induce them to take arms, or to erect fortifications, but to prepare an altar and to offer sacrifices; by which they put themselves under the immediate protection of the Almighty God. (Notes, Josh. 5:2-10.)—They began by offering the daily burnt-offerings, morning and evening, which constituted the principal part of the stated worship required by the law. (Note, Ex. 29:38-41.)

ings thereon, 'as it is written in the law of Moses the man of God.

3 And they set 'the altar upon his bases; 'for fear was upon them, because of the people of those countries; and they offered burnt-offerings thereon unto the LORD, even 'burnt-offerings morning and evening.

4 They kept also 'the feast of tabernacles, as it is written, and offered 'the daily burnt-offerings by number, according to the custom, 'as the duty of every day required;

5 And afterward offered 'the continual burnt-offering, both of the new moons, and of all the set feasts of the LORD that were consecrated, and of every one that 'willingly offered a freewill-offering unto the LORD.

6 From the first day of the seventh month began they to offer burnt-offerings unto the LORD. But 'the foundation of the temple of the LORD was not yet laid.

7 They 'gave money also unto the masons, and to the 'carpenters; and 'meat, and drink, and oil, unto them of Zidon, and to them of Tyre, to bring cedar-trees from Lebanon to the sea of 'Joppa, according to the grant that they had of Cyrus king of Persia.

8 ¶ Now in the second year of their coming unto the house of God at Jerusalem, in the second month, began 'Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and the remnant of their brethren the priests and the Levites, and all they that were come out of the captivity unto Jerusalem; and appointed the Levites, from 'twenty years old and upward, to set forward the work of the house of the LORD.

9 Then stood Jeshua 'with his sons and his brethren, Kadmiel and his sons, the sons of 'Judah, 'together, to set forward the workmen in the house of God: the sons of Henadad, 'with their sons and their brethren the Levites.

10 And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the LORD, they 'set the priests in their apparel with 'trumpets, and the Levites 'the sons of Asaph with cymbals, to praise the LORD, 'after the ordinance of David king of Israel.

11 And 'they sang together by course in praising and giving thanks unto the LORD; 'Because he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever toward Israel. And all the people 'shouted with a great shout, when they praised the LORD, 'because the foundation of the house of the LORD was laid.

12 But 'many of the priests and Levites, and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men, that had seen the first house, 'when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice; and many shouted aloud for joy;

13 So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping of the people: for the people 'shouted with a loud shout, and 'the noise was heard afar off.

V. 4. (Notes, Num. 29:12-37. Neh. 8:14-18.) The sacrifices appointed on the several days of the feast of tabernacles, were numerous; and the observance of it seems to have been greatly neglected: yet the returned captives strictly complied with the requirements of the law, 'which put this poor people to great expenses; but their piety was now such, that they valued nothing so much as the service of God.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 5, 6. Some of the people had come to Jerusalem and had prepared the altar, before the first day of the seventh month. And the rest being assembled as one man, they then began their solemn worship, with the daily sacrifices, those appointed for the new moons, and those for the feast of trumpets, the day of atonement, and the feast of tabernacles. Besides those sacrifices which were expressly appointed, many 'willingly offered freewill-offerings unto the LORD.' (Marg. Ref.)—Until the temple was completed, it is likely they had erected a tabernacle near the altar, in which the sacred vessels and treasures were deposited and guarded. (Note, 1 Chr. 9:19, 21.)

V. 7. It seems, that the Jews were authorized by Cyrus to cut as much timber in Lebanon, as they wanted: but the Zidonians and Tyrians would expect to be paid for their labour; and they would prefer corn, wine, and oil, to money.—'According to the grant that they had of Cyrus,' 'who commanded, I suppose, those of Tyre and Zidon to assist them.' Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 4:4-6. 6:4.)

V. 8-11. The people did all that they could, during the winter, in making preparations for building the temple; for immense labour must have been requisite, in clearing the ground for the foundation, as well as in providing materials. In the second month, however, of the second year, or in a little more than a year after they left Babylon, Zerubbabel and Jeshua, having appointed the priests and Levites to attend in their courses, laid the foundation of the temple, with songs of praise and thanksgiving to the LORD. (Notes, Num. 10:2-10, v. 10. 1 Chr. 16:37-43. 23:2-6, 24-28. 2 Chr. 5:11-13. 34:8-13, v. 12.)—Thus after their long afflictions, they were encouraged again to sing, 'The LORD is good, for his mercy endureth for ever towards Israel,' even as the prophet Jeremiah had foretold. (Note, Jer. 33:11.)

Jeshua, &c. (9) 'Not Jeshua the high-priest before mentioned, but another Jeshua, who was a Levite, mentioned 2:40.—'The sons of Judah,' who is called there Hodaviah.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 12, 13. The Jews, who had heard of the temple and its solemn worship, and the blessing and comfort which it had been to their fathers, but had never seen it, were elated with joy that they were once more to have a temple, as the symbol of the LORD's presence with them, and his favour to them, and expressed their joy and thankfulness, by loud acclamations. On the other hand, the old men, who remembered the splendour of the former temple, (which had now been destroyed about fifty-three years,) were led by the recollection of past prosperity, to give vent to their regret in copious tears and loud lamentations. By this they undervalued their present mercies; and it was the more reprehensible, as the priests and Levites, and chief persons, led the way in this unseasonable sorrow, so as to discourage their brethren, and interrupt their fervent praises. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Zech. 4:8-10.)—The temple itself is supposed to have been rebuilt of the same dimensions as before; but probably it was formed chiefly with the old stones dug out of the ruins, and with inferior workmanship; and it was not overlaid with gold, as Solomon's temple had been: neither was it, for a long time at least, surrounded with such magnificent out-buildings. Moreover, the ark of the covenant, the tables of the law, and the mercy-seat, were irrecoverably lost; and it is uncertain whether any thing was substituted in their stead: no visible glory, it is said, now appeared in the most holy place; there were no answers by Urim and Thummim; and no fire from heaven to consume the sacrifices, but common fire was used for that purpose. (Marg. Ref.) These and other circumstances seemed to indicate, that the LORD was not with them as in times past; but they really showed, that the types were waxing old, and ready to vanish away, by the coming of the great Antitype. (Notes, Jer. 3:16-18. Heb. 8:7-13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is true wisdom to prefer the service of God to our most urgent temporal concerns.—The greater difficulties, and the more formidable enemies, we are exposed to, the more evidently we need the friendship and assistance of God; and we should be proportionately earnest and constant in seeking and serving him, according to his word, through the great atonement of our heavenly Advocate.—These, who rule over others, should go before them in every good work: and we should worship the LORD in respect of outward things, according to what our circumstances will permit, though we cannot attain to all that is desirable. That which is expended in obedience to his commandment, will never impoverish us or our families: we should therefore rather save in any thing, than grudge the expense of works of piety and charity, which is like sowing the seed of a future harvest. (Notes, Prov. 11:24, 25. Ec. 11:1, 2. Luke 6:37, 38. Acts 11:27-30. P. O. 19-30, latter part. Notes, 2 Cor. 9:6-15. P. O. 8-15.)—Every day brings its peculiar duties: these will not be grievous, but pleasant, to the true and consistent servant of the LORD; and when zeal and love prevail, he will be looking out for opportunities of usefulness, and cheerfully bringing his freewill-offerings.—Unanimity, activity, and promptitude, in contriving and executing good designs, will surmount many difficulties, and perform great things in a little time; especially if all orders in society concur in their proper places.—The trumpet of the gospel not only warns the sinner to flee from the wrath to come, but animates the believer to his 'work of faith and labour of love.'—Every recent token of the loving-kindness of the LORD should remind us to celebrate his former goodness and mercy, and to anticip-

2 Then they came to Zerubbabel, and to the chief of the fathers, and said unto them, Let us build with you: for we seek your God, as ye do; and we do sacrifice unto him since the days of Esar-haddon king of Assur, which brought us up hither.

3 But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua, and the rest of the chief of the fathers of Israel, said unto them, Ye have nothing to do with us to build a house unto our God; but we ourselves together will build unto the LORD God of Israel, as king Cyrus the king of Persia hath commanded us.

4 Then the people of the land weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and troubled them in building,

5 And hired counsellors against them, to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus king of Persia, even until the reign of Darius king of Persia.

pate future blessings: for, notwithstanding our chastisements and distrustful murmurs, "the LORD is good, and his mercy endureth for ever towards Israel." The conviction of this truth, and the consideration of our own unworthiness, should enlarge our hearts with hope and gratitude, at every renewed token of his favour; and render us joyful at our work, and even amidst our trials. But we are too prone to bemoan lost comforts, disappointments, and scanty possessions; to give way to discontent, impatience, and distrust; and thus to mar our own enjoyment of present mercies, to interrupt the joy of others, and to refuse our God the praise and thanksgiving due unto his name. Against this propensity we should continually watch and pray. Even when we compare the present low state of true piety, and the small success of the gospel, with those primitive times when "great grace was upon all" the company of believers, and "the LORD daily added to the church such as should be saved;" or when we lament declensions in congregations, churches, or nations; we should be careful not to undervalue the present goodness of our God; to "despise the day of small things;" or to weaken our own hands, and discourage the hearts of others, in seeking a more signal and effectual blessing.—In this world, however, joys and sorrows will be blended, for it is a mixed state: hereafter there will be a complete separation; in one place there will be "fulness of joy and pleasures for evermore;" in the other there will be eternal weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth. May "Jesus deliver us from the wrath to come," and prepare us for his glorious and eternal felicity; "that where he is, there we may be also."

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1. (Note, 2, 10.) The Cushites, or Samaritans, who had been planted in the land of Israel by Esar-haddon, had perhaps encroached upon the countries belonging to the Jews; and doubtless they were envious of the favour shown them by the king of Persia: and thus they took occasion to become their determined enemies. But they were chiefly influenced by the enmity which "the seed of the serpent" bears to the true church of God; arising from contrariety of character, and hatred to the holiness of God, as displayed in his holy law, ordinances, truths, and people. And they might also fear, lest the establishment of the true worship of JEHOVAH should expose their spurious religion to disgrace. (Notes, 2 Kings 17:24-28, 41. Neh. 13:23-30.)

V. 2. "This people no doubt were desirous to partake of the privileges, which were granted to the Jews by the king of Persia. . . . Though they worshipped God, yet they joined other feigned gods with him, and therefore could not be admitted into communion with them at the temple." Bp. Patrick.—The Samaritans professed to worship the God of Israel: yet they were not guided by his word, but by their own imaginations, devices, or traditions, in the service which they rendered to him; and they worshipped with him their tutelar deities: so that their religion was a mixture of idolatry, superstition, and ignorance; far worse at this time than it was when our Lord himself declared that "they knew not what they worshipped." (Notes, John 4:19-27.)

V. 3. The Samaritans were neither Israelites by birth, nor yet true proselytes; so that the law of God forbade all coalition with them: neither were they included in the decree of Cyrus. Probably, the rulers of the Jews perceived, that they only meant to insinuate themselves, in order to obtain pre-eminence, foment dissensions, introduce their idolatries and superstitions, prejudice the minds of the people against their rulers; and in short to seize the temple, when built, for their own use; or to retard, injure, and put a stop to the work. It was, however, plain, that they did not mean to unite cordially with them, in the worship of the true God alone, according to his written word; and therefore nothing but mischief could have resulted from so unnatural an alliance, which they decidedly declined.

V. 4-6. This opposition of the Samaritans is supposed to have begun soon after the foundation of the temple was laid. During the remainder of the reign of Cyrus for almost five years, however, they did not openly oppose a work which that prince had commanded; but they discouraged the people, and perhaps intercepted their materials for building; and by bribing counsellors to oppose their application to the ministers of Cyrus, for supplies or protection, they greatly obstructed the design. This would be more easily done, as it is probable that Daniel, the powerful friend of the Jews, died about this time. (Note, Dan. 6:25-28.)—Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, called here (as it is probably supposed) Ahasuerus, reigned above seven years; and was a very impolitic and wicked prince: but regard to his father's memory, it may be supposed, prevented his attending to the accusations brought by the Samaritans against the Jews. Darius. (5) Notes, 5: &c.

V. 7-9. Upon the death of Cambyses, Smerdis the Magian usurped the throne: and as no other king reigned in Persia, after Cambyses, and before Darius Hystaspis, under whom the temple was finished, he must be the Artaxerxes here mentioned. (Note, 6:13-15.) unless, as some think, Artaxerxes is only another name for Ahasuerus. To him, however, the rulers of the Samaritans wrote a letter, which Ezra seems to have copied from the records of Persia. (Marg. Ref. o.) It was written at first in Syriac, or Chaldee: but perhaps it was entered into the records in Persian; so that Ezra, when he extracted it, again translated it into Syriac; and therefore it stands in the original Scriptures in that language, as does all that follows to the end of the sixth chapter.—Bishlam, Mithredath, and Tabeel seem to have been the principal persons who counselled the people to send this letter; and Rehum and Shimshai, it is probable, drew it up.—The Dinaites, &c. (9) These nine nations came out of Assyria, Persia, Media, Susiana, and other provinces of that vast empire; who with one consent joined in this letter, or petition. Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref. p-s.)

V. 10. Ananias, &c.] Probably Ananias was the name by which Esar-haddon was known, in the eastern parts of the Assyrian empire: (2 Kings 19:37.) or as some think, he was a great captain, employed by Esar-haddon in this transaction.

At such a time.] The date of the letter seems to have followed in the records; but it was omitted by the transcriber, as it were with an et cetera.

14 Now because we ^{have} maintenance from ^{the king's} palace, ^{and} it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour, therefore have we sent and certified the king;

15 That search may be made in the book of the records of thy fathers: so shalt thou find in the book of the records and know that ^{this city is} a rebellious city, and hurtful unto kings and provinces, and that they have ^{moved} sedition ^{within} the same of old time: ^{for} which cause was this city destroyed.

16 We certify the king that, if this city be builded ^{again}, and the walls thereof set up, by this means ^{thou shalt have} no portion on this side the river.

tion under the kings of Babylon, the Jews certainly showed a very obstinate and treacherous spirit of rebellion; they created their new masters a great deal of trouble, and they provoked them to their own destruction. But in so doing, they transgressed the commandments of their law, by violating their own solemn oaths and engagements. (Notes, 13-16. 2 Kings 24:1, 20. 25:6, 7. 2 Chr. 36:13. Ez. 17:15-21.)—No attempt at this time had been made to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem; and the Samaritans were not in reality so much displeased at any thing, as at the building of the temple, though they artfully avoided the mention of it: and the letter also contained a most direct false accusation. "When it is said, there was an order from the king, that this city should not be built, and accordingly the work was stopped, it is thus expressed, ver. 24, "then ceased the work of the house of God, which is at Jerusalem." . . . Thus wicked men compass their ends by lies and fallacies, with which they prepossess men's minds against the truth. Bp. Patrick.

V. 13-16. David and Solomon had reigned over all the countries from the river Euphrates, to the river of Egypt: but this was long before the commencement of the Babylonish, or Persian monarchies. And after the death of Solomon, their successors had been confined within much narrower limits. The Samaritans, however, aimed to insinuate a jealousy into the mind of the king of Persia, that the Jews intended to claim and seize upon all those regions, and hold the whole, as independent on the kings of Persia; than which nothing could be more groundless and absurd. All their offence seems to have been, that they had prepared to defend themselves against their enemies, whilst acting under the authority of Cyrus. The Samaritans cloaked their slander and enmity, under the fair pretence of fidelity and gratitude to the king of Persia: the ruling persons among them were maintained by revenues from the court of Persia; and it was not meet for them to see the king's dishonour, and the loss which would accrue to him, if the Jews were allowed to go on with their undertaking. (Notes, 53-17.)

Fathers. (15) So they called the kings, who had reigned before Artaxerxes, over those countries.

V. 17-24. The king of Persia found by the records, that Jerusalem had been the seat of government for powerful princes, many ages before; and that afterwards rebellion and sedition had been made in it: and, as thus much was true in the letter of the Samaritans, full credit was given them for all that they advanced, concerning the progress and intentions of the Jews, and the consequences of their proceedings; though nothing could be more improbable, false and malicious! A commission therefore was sent back, in which the temple was not mentioned; for though that created the jealousy in the minds of the Samaritans, it was little regarded by the king of Persia; (Note, 12.) but they were ordered "to cause them to cease" this was sufficient for their purpose; and without delay they forcibly put a stop to the work.—The usurpation of Smerdis did not continue a whole year; so that if he be intended, their commission was soon vacated; but the Jews, being greatly intimidated, and not so zealous as they had been, the work ceased till the second year of Darius, who, having assisted in killing the usurper, was advanced to the throne in his stead. (Note, 51, 2.) It is very observable, that in neither of their letters, nor in the king's answer, there is one word of the command which Cyrus gave; nor any thing said of the building of the temple, which was the great thing in which they were employed, and the building of which could be no damage to the king. Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. Every vigorous and successful attempt to revive or promote true religion, will excite the opposition of Satan, and of "the children of disobedience" in whom he works. Indeed all ungodly men despise or hate holiness: yet they, who do not profess much regard to religion, commonly treat pious persons with mere neglect or ridicule; but hypocrites and heretics have always been the most unwearied and cruel enemies of the true church of God. The labours and lives of his servants undermine their reputation, affront their pride, and expose their hypocrisy: and their enmity is thus imbibed by envy and resentment. Sometimes indeed they seem desirous of being admitted to the fellowship of believers; and avow themselves to be of the same sentiments, and to be minding the same things. But they only want to insinuate themselves, that they may gain pre-eminence, and manage every thing for their own purposes. These "false brethren, unawares crept in, bring in privily damnable heresies," form parties and excite contentions; introduce their own coalition between the world and religion; mislead and prejudice some and pervert others; lessen the influence of pious persons, and render the minds of the people disaffected towards them. And while their lives disgrace the cause, their insinuations "eat as doth a canker," till an internal decay corrodes the very vitals of piety, in every church where they obtain admission, and preserve their authority or influence. Let then all the friends of truth and holiness beware of such characters, and let them withdraw from them; "by their fruits ye shall know them;" and let no plausible pretences, or hopes of support from their superior rank or wealth, bribe Christians to admit them "to build with them," unless they mean to build a Babel, instead of a temple. It is true, if you will not have their friendship, you must expect their bittered resentment, which is more dreaded, but is far less dangerous. By insinuations, objections, and discouragements, they weaken the hands of the Lord's people, and induce them to suspect or dislike their faithful ministers, or their lawful rulers; and by slanders and reproaches, they attempt to prejudice others against them. But it is no wonder, that we cannot enumerate all their practices, when they have the old Serpent for their prompter, and spare neither trouble nor expense, nor crimes of any kind, to accomplish their designs. For the same part is acting over and over again, from age to age, with only circumstantial variations; and the less we are aware of it, the more we are in danger of being injured by it.

V. 7-24. The gates of hell, in directly assailing the church of Christ, often labour to excite rulers to suppress his truths and ordinances, by statutes and penal sanctions. To this end ungodly men bestow great pains to obtain the ear of princes. If they find them disposed to countenance pious Christians, they use deceitful methods to poison their minds with prejudices and suspicions. But when weak and wicked kings succeed to the thrones, which have been filled by wiser men; these slanderers venture to speak more plainly: and professing great loyalty and attachment, and even pleading the ties of gratitude and conscience, they pour in their false accusations, and petition for leave to persecute.—It is an old slander, that “Jerusalem is a rebellious and bad city,” and that the prosperity of the church would be injurious to kings and provinces: for “the Accuser of the brethren” knows how prevalent such considerations are with the princes of this world. Yet nothing can be more false: for true godliness teaches us to honour and obey the king; to “submit to every ordinance of man for the Lord’s sake;” to pay tribute, and “to render unto Cesar the things that are Cesar’s;” to be upright, peaceable, and blameless; and even to fulfil the oath or engagement which we have entered into to our own hurt; it admits of only a single exception; namely, where the command of God requires one thing, and the law of the land another, we must “obey God rather than man,” and patiently submit to the consequences.—But it must be allowed, that ambitious and turbulent men have often disgraced the cause of God, by their usurpations, seditions, rebellions, treacheries, and perjuries: real Christians also have been seduced into inconsistent practices: and “oppression” which “maketh a wise man mad,” has sometimes excited them to use unwarranted weapons. A few instances of this kind, standing on record, while the blameless lives and patient sufferings of thousands are unnoticed and forgotten, serve through revolving ages as a pretext, by which malignant enmity misleads worldly policy. All who love the gospel, should therefore walk circumspectly, avoiding all appearance of evil, especially in this particular, lest the church of God and posterity should suffer through their misconduct: for the whole body will be condemned without a hearing, if only a few individuals act improperly. (Note, Rom. 13:1, 2.)—Indeed we cannot behave so quietly, and endeavour to serve God and to promote religion so unexceptionably, but our endeavours will be ascribed to ambition or avarice, and we shall be suspected of harbouring the basest intentions. For kings and princes are seldom able to discover the truth in such cases, even when disposed to inquire after it. Surrounded with flatterers and interested dependents, they must see with other men’s eyes, and receive every information, concerning those whom their courtiers dislike, with a false colouring: and as they are too generally careless about religion, if not prejudiced against it, Satan and his emissaries seldom find much difficulty, in using them as the tools of their persecuting enmity. These considerations should teach us to count our cost; that we may be prepared for all events, and not be too easily discouraged or made remiss, as we are apt to be, upon every appearance of opposition: they should excite our gratitude for our peculiar privileges in this favoured land, and teach us to place our dependence on that God, who has all hearts in his hands, and not on the mutable decrees of princes and senates. We should also be in haste to seize on every opportunity of doing good; even as the adversaries of the church do in their mischievous devices; for, as we receive all from our wise, gracious, and righteous God; it is not meet that we should quietly witness his dishonour, or neglect any method by which we may glorify his name, and promote his cause in the world.

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1, 2. A great part of the book of Haggai, and the former part of Zechariah, refer to the events here recorded, and the reader will find it worth while to compare them with the history.—The Jews resumed their work about fourteen years after the first opposition, given to them by the Samaritans; but within two or three years after they had been compelled to desist entirely from it. In the mean time they had rebuilt their own houses, without being in the least molested. It may be supposed that they had an altar and tabernacle, and kept up their stated worship; but they were persuaded, that it was not yet time to build the temple. For this neglect the Lord corrected them, and reproved them by the prophets, who came to “prophecy even unto them,” or rather “against them.” Their remonstrances excited the rulers and the people to resume the work; and their subsequent encouraging prophecies greatly helped them in accomplishing it. (Notes, Hag. 1: Zechar. 3:1-7. 4:4-10.)

V. 3. It is probable, that the governors of Samaria had been changed, on the accession of Darius, for men of greater temper and impartiality. The “companions” here mentioned with the governors, seem to have been some of the chief persons of the nation, who formed the council. Excited, however, by the envy and jealousy of the Samaritans, they interfered, as soon as the Jews resumed the building of the temple.—This wall. The wall about the temple seems to be meant. (Notes, Neh. 1:3. 2:12-16. 4:1-3. Dan. 9:25-27.)

V. 4. Then, &c. It is uncertain whether these are the words of the governors of Samaria inquiring of the Jews the names of their rulers, who presided over the work; (10) or those of the workmen referring the inquirers to Zerubbabel and Jeshua, for information.—Ezra may fairly be supposed to have inserted the words of the record without alteration: so that the first person plural neither proves that he was then at Jerusalem; nor yet that he was not the writer of the history, as some learned men have argued.

V. 5. (Marg. Ref.) The Lord so watched over his people, that the Samaritans, though full of enmity, were restrained from using violence to obstruct the work: and he gave them so many encouragements, in his providence and by his word, that they were not terrified from proceeding; till at length the matter having been referred to Darius, a favourable answer was obtained. (Notes, Hag. 2:3-19. Zechar. 1:12-21.)

V. 6-17. It is probable, that this epistle likewise was copied from the public records, and interpreted into the Chaldee language: but it forms an entire contrast to the malevolent, slanderous, and disingenuous letter of the foregoing chapter. (Notes, 4:10-16.) It fairly stated facts to the king; and the writers merely desired to know his pleasure, after proper search had been made. The ingenious account,

14 And the vessels also of gold and silver of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took out of the temple that was in Jerusalem, and brought them into the temple of Babylon, those did Cyrus the king take out of the temple of Babylon, and they were delivered unto one, whose name was Sheshbazzar, whom he had made governor;

15 And said unto him, Take these vessels, go, carry them into the temple that is in Jerusalem, and let the house of God be builded in his place.

16 Then came the same Sheshbazzar, and laid the foundation of the house of God which is in Jerusalem: and since that time even until now hath it been in building, and yet it is not finished.

17 Now therefore, if it seem good to the king, let there be search made in the king's treasure-house, which is there at Babylon, whether it be so, that a decree was made of Cyrus the king to build this house of God at Jerusalem, and let the king send his pleasure to us concerning this matter.

CHAPTER VI.

Darius finds the decree of Cyrus, confirms it, allows out of his revenues the expenses of building the temple, and denounces penalties on all opposers.
1-12. The temple is finished and dedicated, and the passover is celebrated with great joy, 13-22.

THEN Darius the king made a decree, and search was made in the house of the rolls, where the treasures were laid up in Babylon.

2 And there was found at Achmetha, in the palace that is in the province of the Medes, a roll, and therein was a record thus written:

3 In the first year of Cyrus the king, the same Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, Let the house be builded, the place where they offered sacrifices, also, which the Jews gave of their nation, and the cause of the calamities that had befallen them, (which Tatnai and his associates faithfully stated to Darius,) is worthy of observation and of imitation.

Sheshbazzar, &c. (16) Hence it is evident, that Zerubabel and Sheshbazzar are only two names of the same person. (Notes, 1:7-11. Zech. 4:4-10.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The enemies of the church are active, powerful, and malicious, and alas, its friends too often dispirited and negligent: yet the Lord will not suffer his cause to be run down, but will raise up instruments to revive and carry on his work.—It especially belongs to the office of the ministers of God to warn, exhort, encourage, and direct all orders in society to attend to their several duties: when this is properly performed, it will be found the most effectual means of forwarding reformation, and the power of godliness: and humble and pious men, in the most exalted stations, will think themselves helped, by the faithful labours and animated remonstrances of those, who really declare to them the word of God.—While professed Christians are satisfied with forms, and attentive mainly to their secular interests and accommodations, opposition may seem to be slain: but when they bestir themselves to do the work and seek the glory of God, it will soon be found that it was not dead, but merely asleep. Nothing, however, can harm those whom the Lord protects, or cause the work of those to cease whom he employs. He finds other employment for some opposers, he restrains others by the moderation of their superiors: some are removed by death, or by revolutions in governments; and others are softened or changed; as it seems good to him, “who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will.”—There are men who have no true religion, yet are possessed of equity, candour, and generosity: and these qualities entitle them to our respect, though they will not justify them in the sight of God.—A fair statement of facts forms the honest man's best method of pleading a good cause.—The servants of the God of Heaven need not, and must not, be ashamed of so great and good a Master; and it seems at first sight strange, that they should ever be tempted to so preposterous a crime.—Those religious peculiarities, which ignorant slanderers deem novel or singular, may boast an antiquity beyond all other sentiments or observances in the world; and have been maintained by the wisest, greatest, and most excellent men who ever lived upon earth.—While we continue in this world, we shall always have to confess, that our sins have provoked the God of hea-

6 Now therefore, Tatnai, governor beyond the river, Shethar-boznai, and your companions the Apharsachites, which are beyond the river, be ye far from thence:

7 Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews, and the elders of the Jews, build this house of God in his place.

8 Moreover, I make a decree what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews for the building of this house of God: that of the king's goods, even of the tribute beyond the river, forthwith expenses be given unto these men, that they be not hindered.

9 And that which they have need of, both young bullocks, and rams, and lambs, for the burnt-offerings of the God of heaven, wheat, salt, wine, and oil, according to the appointment of the priests which are at Jerusalem, let it be given them day by day without fail:

ven unto wrath; and that all our sufferings spring from this source, and all our comforts from his unmerited mercy.—We ought fully to acknowledge the favours which we have received from man: but should generally be silent as to the ill-treatment that we have met with. Even when we are exposed to censure, whilst the blame belongs to others: except the honour of God and the gospel requires it, it is seldom useful to vindicate ourselves.—The faithful worshippers of God are generally traduced, before they are persecuted: yet their cause demands nothing more than an impartial hearing to obtain a favourable decision; and many princes have persecuted more from misinformation and slanderous misrepresentation, than from malice.

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1, 2. The decree of Cyrus in favour of the Jews had been a matter of great notoriety, and not more than sixteen years had elapsed since it had been granted: but in the changes which had taken place, and the multiplicity of affairs which occurred continually in the government of so vast an empire, it is probable that its purport had been forgotten. When, however, it could not be found at Babylon, Darius, unwilling to decide in this cause, without clear evidence, ordered it to be searched for at Achmetha, afterwards called Ecbatana, the chief city of Media; and there it was at length found, having probably been laid up in that city by Cyrus's orders.

V. 3. (Marg. Ref.) Some suppose that Cyrus did not allow the Jews to build the porch of the temple more than sixty cubits high, lest they should fortify it as a citadel; and that the sixty cubits in breadth included the chambers on each side the temple. Perhaps he permitted them to build the temple itself sixty cubits high and sixty wide, as well as sixty long; but they chose to build it of the same dimensions as their former temple: for it is generally agreed, that thus it was at last builded; and it is clearly proved, that the porch was raised to the same height. (Notes, 1 Kings 6:3, 4. 2 Chr. 3:3, 4.)

V. 4. Expenses, &c.] It is likely that the Jews had been deprived of this advantage, by the counsellors who were hired against them. (Notes, 3:7. 4:4-6.)

V. 5. Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:1-4, 7-11.

V. 6-12. Darius, in order to ingratiate himself with his subjects, showed respect to the memory of Cyrus in every thing; and this might induce him to be more favourable to the Jews, when the decree of Cyrus was produced. But he seems to have been deeply convinced, that the God of the Jews was the God of heaven, who ought to be worshipped from his house, and being set up, let him be hanged thereon; and let this house be made a dunghill for this.

12 And the God that hath caused his name to dwell there destroy all kings and people, that shall put to their hand to alter and to destroy this house of God which is at Jerusalem. ¶ Darius have made a decree; let it be done with speed.

[Practical Observations.]

13 ¶ Then Tatnai, governor on this side the river, Shethar-boznai, and their companions, according to that which Darius the king had sent, so they did speedily.

14 And the elders of the Jews builded, and they prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet and Zechariah the son of Iddo. And they builded, and finished it, according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes king of Persia.

s. c.] 15 And this house was finished on the third day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king.

16 ¶ And the children of Israel, the priests, and the Levites, and the rest of the children of the captivity, kept the dedication of this house of God with joy, 17 And offered at the dedication of this house of God a hundred bullocks, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs; and for a sin-offering for all Israel, twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel.

18 And they set the priests in their divisions, and the Levites in their courses, for the service of God, which is at Jerusalem; as it is written in the book of Moses.

19 And the children of the captivity kept the passover upon the fourteenth day of the first month.

20 For the priests and the Levites were purified together, all of them were pure, and killed the passover for all the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the priests, and for themselves.

21 And the children of Israel, which were come again out of captivity, and all such as had separated themselves unto them from the filthiness of the heathen of the land, to seek the Lord God of Israel, did eat,

22 And kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with joy: for the Lord had made them joyful, and turned the heart of the king of Assyria unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of God, the God of Israel.

according to the law of Moses. His steady intention that sacrifices should be offered, at his expense, at Jerusalem, "of sweet savours to the God of heaven;" that the people of God "might pray for him and his sons;" and the expression, "the God, that hath caused his name to dwell there," (12) show, that he had been instructed in several important truths of genuine religion, and had a conviction of his dependence upon God, and entertained high and honourable thoughts of him, and that he regarded the prayers of his worshippers, as efficacious. (Marg. Ref.) The account indeed given of this transaction by the apocryphal Esdras is absurd, and inconsistent with facts; for Zerubbabel had been long at Jerusalem, before Darius granted this decree. (1 Esdras 4:13-63. 5.) But probably some pious Jews had access to the king, who had so explained the matter, as to give him these favourable sentiments, and to dispose him to the service assigned him by Providence. He thought that the continuance of his life and the prosperity of his family, might be secured by the prayers of the Jews: but he seems not to have considered his future and unspeakably more important interests; and it does not appear, that his convictions had any abiding effect upon his own mind or conduct.—Knowing also the envy and malice of the adversaries of the Jews, Darius denounced a most dreadful punishment against those who should any more molest them; and he concluded his decree, with a most remarkable, and almost prophetic, execration against all kings and people, who should attempt to alter or destroy the temple, after it was built. (Marg. Ref. x. Note, Zech. 14:1-3.) Thus the Samaritans, by opposing the Jews, most effectually served their interests; their governors, perceiving the king's inclinations, zealously concurred; and so the work was speedily completed.

V. 13-15. If we allow a year for the message of Tatnai to the court of Darius, the search made among the records, and all delays and obstructions: for the granting of the decree, and its publication in Judea; it will appear, that it was published just seventy years after the destruction of the temple by the Chaldeans.—Zechariah, who prophesied at this time, mentions, that the people had kept annual fasts for the ruin of the city and temple, during seventy years; (Notes, Zech. 7:1-7.) and this absolutely fixes these events to the time of Darius Hystaspes; for no other Darius reigned in Persia till many years afterwards.—The historian inserts the name of Artaxerxes with those of Cyrus and Darius, as concurring in this work: (14) for though the temple was built before Artaxerxes came to the throne; yet probably it received great accessions of splendour and convenience, under the government of Ezra and Nehemiah, whom he patronised. (Notes, 7:1-5. Neh. 1:1.)—The temple was finished in rather more than four years after the Jews returned to the work, when excited to it by Haggai and Zechariah; (Note, 5:1, 2.) in something more than two years after the decree of Darius had been published; and in about twenty years after the Jews returned from captivity. Cyrus reigned seven years; Cambyses, or Ahasuerus, seven; Artaxerxes, or Smerdis, one; and it was finished in the sixth of Darius. (Notes, 3:8-11. 4:4 -6, 17-24.)

Through the prophesying, &c. (14) "Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah" . . . directed and encouraged them in their work; representing to them, it is likely, the wonderful goodness of God, who had inclined the heart of the king of Persia to be so highly favourable to them. Bp. Patrick.

V. 16, 17. (Notes, Num 7:1-14. 1 Kings 8:63-66.) The tribes of Judah and Benjamin, with the priests and Levites, which had constituted the kingdom of Judah, formed also the bulk of the people after the captivity. But numbers from the other tribes had been incorporated with them in the reign of Rehoboam, and afterwards; and many returned with them from Babylon, probably some of all the other tribes. As the nation sprang from the twelve sons of Jacob, and some of the descendants of each remained; they were still considered as consisting of twelve tribes, and called "the children of Israel," and a sin-offering was offered up for each of them. Doubtless the same reference to the twelve tribes took place in respect of the show-bread, and the writing of their names on the high-priest's garments and breastplate, as when they had been united under one government. (Marg. Ref. n, o.)

V. 18. Moses had given laws, concerning the ministry of the priests and Levites, with reference to the place which God would choose to place his name there; and subsequent events had proved Jerusalem to be that chosen place; but the courses of the priests and Levites were appointed by David. (Marg. Ref. Note, 3:8-11.)

V. 19-21. It is probable, that the Jews who returned from their captivity had observed the passover, before the temple was finished; but not in so regular and solemn a manner, as at this time. (Notes, 2 Chr. 30:35.)—Separated. (21) Including such as had been fully proselyted to their religion.

V. 22. Of Assyria, &c.] Darius, reigning over the country of Assyria, is here called "the king of Assyria;" though the Persian monarchy had succeeded to the monarchies both of Assyria and Babylon.—The pious acknowledgment of God in all these transactions, as influencing the king to be kind to the Jews, and as thus making them joyful, is highly rational: though it has now almost sunk into disuse, even among professed Christians! (Notes, 7:27, 28. 2 Kings 5:1. Prov. 21:1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. Nothing but impartial and diligent investigation can give truth and innocence a decided advantage against lies, malice, and perjury: and much injustice may be committed merely through the indolence and inattention of magistrates.—Enmity or rapacity often intercepts the favours which were intended for the people of God: but when his plan requires the interposition of princes, he can easily dispose them to use all diligence, to exert their authority, and to expend their treasures, in supporting his cause; and, for a time, these things have often been done by those who would not give him their hearts, and never became his true worshippers! (Note, 2 Cor. 8:1-5.)—Did kings know their true interests, even in this world, they would support the worship of God, and give liberty and protection to his people, that acceptable services might be rendered to his name throughout their dominions, and that many prayers might be daily offered up for them. We ought indeed to "pray for kings, and all in authority," whatever be their character and conduct; yet we are very apt to be remiss and formal in this service; till encouragement enlivens our desires and expectations: but when princes decidedly favour the cause of truth and righteousness, the hearts of pious Christians are enlarged with hopes, and they pray for them with greater earnestness. Their lives are then looked upon as a public advantage; and their persons, families, and undertakings, as well as their immortal souls, are daily recommended to the favour and blessing of the Almighty, by those "effectual fervent prayers of righteous men which avail much."—Such as interrupt and injure the worshippers of God, when protected by the civil government, are desperate rebels both against God and the king; and even tolerating laws will be insufficient for the protection of the harmless servants of God, if the executive power do not vigorously interpose, to punish such as illegally assault them. But the protection of God can alone be entirely depended on; and he will at length awfully destroy those persecutors who attempt to destroy his people, however powerful or numerous they may be.

V. 13-22. When the Lord turns the hearts of princes, to strengthen the hands of his servants in their work; inveterate enemies will be over-awed; indifferent persons will become helpers; the commandment of the king will be regulated by the commandment of God; and good designs, which had been long interrupted, will be speedily completed.—The revival of public ordinances, where they had been obstructed, should excite our rejoicing, because honour is thus ascribed to the Lord, and benefit accrues to the souls of men. Nor can the consideration of former sorrow, or of present meanness and poverty, mar the believer's joy in communion with his gracious God and Father.—When sinners are redeemed from the bondage of Satan, and separate themselves from the filthiness of their wicked connexions and practices; when they humbly seek the Lord, depending by faith on the atonement of the great Redeemer, attending on his ordinances, and observing his commandments, according to the duty of their place; they are children of captivity, who are set at liberty; and they shall be made joyful by his salvation; they shall be feasted at his table, and enjoy the light of his countenance, and he will be glorified in them, and rejoice over them to do them good for ever.—As nothing contributes more to the conversion of sinners, and to the purity and prosperity of the church, than the holiness and faithfulness of ministers; let us all unite in daily prayers to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, that all those who bear that sacred character may live and preach according to his holy word, and rightly and fully administer his holy sacraments.

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1-5. Artaxerxes, here mentioned, was evidently a different person from Darius. (6:14.) Xerxes, the son and successor of Darius, cannot be intended; for he reigned only twenty-one years; but Nehemiah, who was contemporary with Esra, mentions the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes. (Neh. 5:14.) Artaxerxes Longimanus, the son and successor of Xerxes, must therefore be meant.

8 And he came to Jerusalem in the fifth month, which was in the seventh year of the king.

9 For upon the first day of the first month began he to go up from Babylon, and on the first day of the fifth month came he to Jerusalem, according to the good hand of his God upon him.

10 For Esra had prepared his heart to seek the law of the LORD, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments.

and the seventh year of his reign was no less than seventy-nine years after the proclamation of Cyrus. The temple had been finished, and its worship restored within about twenty years: and nothing very memorable occurred during the subsequent fifty-nine or sixty years.—In all probability Zerubbabel, Jeshua, Haggai, and Zechariah were dead before this time; and the civil and ecclesiastical state of the Jews remained very unsettled, until this commission was granted to Esra. (Note, Dan. 9:25-27.) Esra, was the son, that is, the descendant of Seraiah, who had been dead above one hundred and thirty years. (2 Kings 25:18, 21.) Many other persons are omitted in this abbreviated genealogy. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Chr. 6:4-15.)

V. 6-10. Esra had no doubt been educated to sacred learning, and had made great proficiency in it. Having, therefore, laid aside other employments and studies, and taking great delight in the Scriptures; and having an ardent zeal for the honour of God, and an earnest desire of being useful to his people: he applied himself with great assiduity to obtain the suitable qualifications. He "gave himself wholly thereunto," and was careful to do, as well as to teach others, the statutes and judgments of God. (Notes, Deut. 33:10. 2 Chr. 17:7-9. 30:21, 22. v. 22. Neh. 8:1-8. Mal. 2:4-9.) Thus he became very eminent, and waited for an opportunity of rendering important service to his people; employing himself, probably, in the mean time, in instructing the Jews at Babylon, as circumstances allowed; and, being a man of learning, ingenuity, and reputation, the king became acquainted with him; so that Esra requested and obtained from him a commission to go up to Jerusalem, that he might regulate all things which related to the worship of the God of heaven.—The language used on this subject is well deserving of our most serious attention. Every thing is ascribed to God, for his is "the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever;" yet the agency of instruments and second causes is properly noticed. "God was so favourable to him, as to incline the king to give a gracious answer to his petition. Bp. Patrick. (Note, 27, 28.)—The word scribe here used, does not merely signify one who wrote out copies of the law, but rather an interpreter of the law. The scribes mentioned in the New Testament, professed to be interpreters of the law; but they in general "made it void by their traditions." (Notes, Jer. 8:8, 9. Matt. 13:51, 52. 15:1-14.)—Many learned men are of opinion, and indeed with good reason, that Artaxerxes was the Ahasuerus, who soon after this married Esther; and that this commission, as well as that of Nehemiah, was obtained through her influence. (Note, Neh. 2:5, 6.)—Of the priests, &c. (7) Notes, 8:1-20.—He came to Jerusalem, &c. (8) Note, 8:21-23.

V. 13. The Jews, who had not taken the benefit of the proclamation of Cyrus, seem afterward to have been strained from going to Jerusalem, till this decree of Artaxerxes again allowed them that liberty. (Note, 1:1-4.)

(Note, Esth. 1:13, 14.) 'By this commission he gave him authority to make inquisition in Judea, whether every thing there was done conformably to the law of Moses. That is, he granted to the Jewish nation... a liberty to live by their own laws, and to judge all causes according to them.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 15, 16. (Marg. Ref.) The king and his counsellors set the example to the people, of giving gold and silver on this occasion.—Canst find, &c. (16) That is, all the money, which Ezra could obtain by the voluntary contributions of the people, whether Jews or Babylonians. (14-16.)

V. 17, 18. (Marg. Ref.) It is remarkable, that a heathen prince should lay no other restriction on Ezra and his brethren, in disposing of the treasures which they collected, except that they should be employed, "after the will of their God." The whole commission implied a chartered right to the Jews of living according to their own laws.

V. 19-22. (Note, 6:6-12.) 'This was a wonderful large concession, that he should have whatever he desired: and that they should not make him attend upon them, and wait long for it, but furnish him immediately.' *Bp. For they express an exceeding great sense of God, and of his supreme authority, and the regard that is due from the greatest kings and potentates, to his most sacred commands." The like is not easy to be found any where.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 24-26. The king likewise exempted all employed about the worship of God, from paying any kind of tax; and as the Jews were far from affluent at that time, this was a very reasonable encouragement. He also authorized Ezra, as governor over the Jews who lived west of the Euphrates, to constitute magistrates under him, as he saw good. He allowed him to provide for the instruction of the people in the law of God, and even to proselyte the Gentiles; and he empowered him to punish all who proved refractory, according to their crimes.—David, Jehoshaphat, or Hezekiah could scarcely have done more for the Jews, than this heathen prince did: except as their examples, exhortations, and prayers would have concurred, to render these external helps and regulations effectual.

V. 27, 28. This pious scribe, instead of expatiating in the praises of his patron, or boasting of his own services, took occasion to bless God for "putting such a thing in the king's heart." (Marg. Ref. p, q.) and for all the assistance and favour shown him, by the king and his counsellors! (Note, 6:22.)—Whatever external decorations might be at this time added to the temple; the provision made for the orderly conducting of its sacred worship tended most effectually "to beautify it."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. When the Lord removes some useful instruments, he raises up others to fill their places.—Those, who desire to be "scribes well instructed for the kingdom of God," must lay aside all inconsistent pursuits and studies, and have their hearts purified from sinful passions, weaned from earthly affections, and filled with zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men. They must "prepare their hearts" to seek the word of the Lord; that they may first understand it, then practise it, and afterwards teach it to others. In these sacred studies they should be diligent and unwearied; and meditation, prayer, and a spiritual mind will render them delightful. Thus they will become "able ministers of the New Testament," "men of God, thoroughly furnished for every good work," ready scribes, apt to teach, bringing forth out of their treasures things new and old; and, beginning with faithfulness and diligence in a narrow circle, they may in due time expect, "according to the good hand of God upon them," to be favoured with more extensive opportunities of usefulness.—But knowledge, even of the sacred Scriptures, except it be reduced to practice, and communicated to others, will become useless and worthless.

V. 11-28. The servants of God cannot vary from their rules at the instance of the greatest princes, or "teach for doctrines the commandments of men;" but they may want the countenance and external assistance of rulers, in order that they may employ their gifts, and perform their duty, without molestation and to greater advantage. And when kings will grant them protection, intrust them with authority, and bear the expenses of their useful designs; and then leave them to conduct every thing by the rule of the word of God, and according to his will, as it appears to them and their brethren; they may without hesitation avail themselves of such assistance: nay, they may properly petition for it, when there appears a prospect of success. (Note, 2 Chr. 30:12.) But in whatever way great and effectual doors are opened to them, they should regard men only as instruments; and ascribe it to the power and goodness of God, if princes grant their requests; bless his name for putting such a thing in their hearts; and receive a commission from man merely as an external opportunity of executing a higher commission from God, according to his instructions, and under his protection.—

The liberality of heathen kings, in beautifying the house of God, and supporting the expense of his worship, reproached the conduct of many kings of Judah, and of all that reigned in Israel; and it will rise up in judgment, and condemn the avarice of many nominal Christians, who refuse to employ their superfluous treasures in supporting the worship of God, and propagating the gospel in the world.—Unconverted men may perceive, that "whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven," should be diligently done; and that the neglect of his worship will bring wrath upon kingdoms, and upon the persons and families of princes. But divine faith alone, as working by love and gratitude, is capable of producing unreserved, persevering, and delightful obedience.—The exorbitant and pernicious exemptions, which ambitious ecclesiastics once claimed, have rendered magistrates reasonably jealous in this matter: but when ministers are poor and diligent, there would be a great propriety in favouring them with such exemptions, as consist with the welfare of society, and leave them to attend upon their work without embarrassing cares and distresses.—The wisdom, which God communicates through his word, is peculiarly useful in the choice of magistrates: that they may be indeed "a terror to evil-doers, and a protection to those who do well." It belongs to civil governors to enact laws, and to proportion punishments to offences for the welfare of the community, the suppression of immorality, and the encouragement of those who endeavour to obey God and the king. And when wise and just laws are enacted, and impartially executed, it should animate us to proceed in our proper work with redoubled diligence and alacrity, in full confidence that "the good hand of our God will be upon us," and prosper our attempts. But the weapons of our warfare, as Christian ministers, are not carnal: faithful preaching, holy lives, fervent prayers, and patient suffering, are the means we must use, to teach the ways of God to those who know them not, and to bring increasing numbers into subjection to the obedience of Jesus Christ. (Notes, 2 Cor. 10:1-6.)

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1-14. Doubtless Ezra took proper methods of making his commission known to his brethren, throughout their dispersions: but, though extraordinary favours were granted, and the city, temple, and land were now prepared for their reception, very few were willing to undertake the journey. Most of the Jews, who remained in those countries, were either settled to their minds, or were averse to labour and peril. They probably had synagogues, where they met for public worship and instructions; and they were sensibly indifferent about the temple and its service. (Note, 1:5, 6.) But God, on this occasion also, raised up the spirits of a remnant to accompany his servant Ezra.—They are 11 And of the sons of Bebai; Zechariah the son of Bebai, and with him twenty and eight males.

12 And of the sons of Azgad; Johanan the son of Hakkatan, and with him a hundred and ten males.

13 And of the last sons of Adonikam, whose names are these, Eliphelet, Jeiel, and Shemaiah, and with them threescore males.

14 Of the sons also of Bigvai; Uthai, and Zabud, and with them seventy males.

15 And I gathered them together to the river that runneth to Ahava; and there I abode we in tents three days: and I viewed the people, and the priests, and found there none of the sons of Levi.

16 Then sent I for Eliezer, for Ariel, for Shemaiah, and for Elnathan, and for Jarib, and for Elnathan, and for Nathan, and for Zechariah, and for Meshullam, chief men; also for Joarib, and for Elnathan, men of understanding.

17 And I sent them with commandment unto Iddo the chief at the place Casiphia, and I told them what they should say unto Iddo, and to his brethren the Nethinims, at the place Casiphia, that they should bring unto us ministers for the house of our God.

18 And by the good hand of our God upon us they brought us a man of understanding, of the sons of Mahli, the son of Levi, the son of Israel; and Sherebiah, with his sons and his brethren, eighteen;

19 And Hashabiah, and with him Jeshaiah of the sons of Merari, his brethren and their sons, twenty;

here numbered according to the chief of the fathers, to whose families they belonged. Some of the names of these families were mentioned before; as the descendants of those who stayed behind, seem to have taken this opportunity of following their brethren. (2:2-42.) Thus we read of "the last sons of Adonikam," as no more of that family remained in the land of their captivity. (Marg. Ref. o.) The males only are mentioned; so that the number including the women, was double, at least, what is here mentioned.

V. 15. Ahava seems to have been the name both of a town, and of a rivulet which ran into the Euphrates, near the town. The whole company must have lodged in tents, during the journey, as well as before they entered on it.—No Levites, who were not also priests, were found among them: for Ezra himself was a priest, and we read of two other priests who had joined them. (2) A considerable treasure had been given to the temple at Jerusalem, by a Gentile king and his nobles; and yet no Levites offered themselves to take the charge of it! (7:14-19.)

V. 16, 17. (Marg. Ref.) It is uncertain where Casiphia lay, or who Iddo the chief was. The Nethinims are called his brethren: and, if he were one of that company, no doubt he had been advanced, on account of his extraordinary qualifications or services. Some, however, suppose the word rendered "his brethren" to be a proper name; and that, translated Nethinims, to signify appointed. They therefore render the passage thus; "I told them what they should say to Iddo and Achio, who were constituted in the place Casiphia."—It may be supposed there was at Casiphia a seminary for the education of priests, Levites, and Nethinims, over which Iddo presided: where they had the free exercise of their religion, and had so comfortable a support, that they were not inclined to remove. "It is very probable they had their synagogues, (as they had afterward in their dispersion,) or other places, where they met for religious worship. For we find the people resorting to Ezekiel in their captivity, and him preaching to them the word of God, in many places of his book. (Ez. 33:30, &c.) And Ezra in all likelihood was an instructor among them, as Joarib and Elnathan also were, and Iddo to whom these were sent." Bp. Patrick.—Iddo, by reason of his age, or his employment, was not desired to go, but to send proper persons for this service, which the men of understanding would duly explain to him. (16) It seems, Ezra knew that subordinate ministers especially were wanted for the service of the house of God, and was therefore the more earnest in this matter.

V. 18. "God inclined their hearts to comply with his desire." Bp. Patrick. Sherebiah, no doubt, was "the man of understanding" here meant; and the passage should be read, 20 Also of the Nethinims, whom David and the princes had appointed for the service of the Levites, two hundred and twenty Nethinims: all of them were expressed by name.

21 ¶ Then I proclaimed a fast there, at the river of Ahava, that we might afflict ourselves before our God, to seek of him a right way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance.

22 For I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken unto the king, saying, 'The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him.

23 So we fasted and besought our God for this: and he was entreated of us.

[Practical Observations.]

24 ¶ Then I separated twelve of the chief of the priests, Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren with them,

25 And weighed unto them the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, even the offering of the house of our God, which the king, and his counsellors, and his lords, and all Israel there present, had offered:

26 I even weighed unto their hand six hundred and fifty talents of silver, and silver vessels a hundred talents, and of gold a hundred talents;

27 Also twenty basins of gold, of a thousand drams; and two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold.

28 And I said unto them, 'Ye are holy unto the Lord; the vessels are holy also; and the silver and the gold are a freewill-offering unto the Lord God of your fathers.

29 Watch ye, and keep them, until ye weigh them, before the chief of the priests and the Levites, and chief of the fathers of Israel, at Jerusalem, in the chambers of the house of the Lord.

30 So took the priests and the Levites the weight of the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, to bring them to Jerusalem unto the house of our God.

31 ¶ Then we departed from the river of Ahava on the twelfth day of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem: and the hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of such as lay in wait by the way.

32 And we came to Jerusalem, and abode there three days.

33 ¶ Now on the fourth day was the silver and the gold and the vessels weighed in the house of our God, by the hand of Meremoth the son of Uriah the priest; and with him was Eleazar the son of Phinehas; and with them was Jozabab the son of Jeshua, and Noadiah the son of Binnui, Levites;

34 By number and by weight of every one: and all the weight was written at that time.

35 Also the children of those that had been carried away, which were come out of the captivity, offered burnt-offerings unto the God of Israel, twelve bullocks for all Israel, ninety and six rams, seventy and seven lambs, twelve he-goats for a sin-offering: all this was a burnt-offering unto the Lord.

36 ¶ And they delivered the king's commissions unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors on this side the river: and they furthered the people, and the house of God.

"A man of understanding ... even Sherebiah." (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20. The Gibeonites were appointed to the service of the Levites in the time of Joshua: (Note, Josh. 9:27.) and some think that others (perhaps a remnant of the devoted Canaanites, or of those who were vowed to the Lord by themselves or their parents, Note, Lev. 27:2-8.) were added to them, or placed in rather a superior station, by David and his princes, and afterwards by Solomon; and that these were, strictly speaking, the Nethinim.

V. 21-23. Ezra had collected his company at Ahava, in order to enter upon a journey of several hundred miles, which they were nearly four months in completing. (Notes, 31. 7:6-10, v. 9.) It lay chiefly through the desert: and, as they were incumbered with families and possessions, they could make but slow progress, and a feeble defence in case of an assault. They carried large treasures with them, which would invite the attempts of the Arabian freebooters, and others who infested that neighbourhood. (Note, 26,27.) In ordinary cases it would have been very proper to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen for their defence, which no doubt would have been readily granted: but Ezra, in order to impress Artaxerxes with a proper sense of the power and perfections of JEHOVAH, had confidently declared to him, "that the hand of their God was upon all them for good that seek him, and that his power and wrath were against all them that forsook him." Being therefore afraid lest the king should not at once understand the distinction between using means, and confiding in them; and lest he should be led to question the power, faithfulness, and goodness of Israel's God, or the sincerity of Ezra's dependence on him; he determined to travel without a guard, except that of the Almighty, being ashamed to ask any other, after his former avowed confidence in him. Yet, lest former sins should provoke God to leave them unprotected; and in order the more solemnly and publicly to put the whole company under his gracious protection; he proclaimed and observed a fast; that they might "afflict themselves before God," in deep repentance and self-abasement. Thus humbling themselves before the Lord, and seeking his merciful forgiveness, they besought him to be the Guide and Guard of them, their families, their substance, and also of the consecrated treasures. Accordingly he was entreated of them, their enemies were restrained or disabled, and they arrived unmolested at Jerusalem.

V. 24. Sherebiah and Hashabiah, before-mentioned, (18, 19.) were descendants of Merari, the son of Levi, and not of Kohath, Aaron's progenitor; and consequently they were not priests. Either, therefore, the persons specified in this verse were priests who bore the same names; or they were the above-mentioned eminent Levites, who on this occasion were joined in trust with ten priests in the care of the sacred treasures. (30)

V. 26, 27. These treasures are computed to have been at least worth a hundred thousand pounds sterling, besides the sacred vessels, which were very valuable. The far greater part of this was offered by a pagan king, with his princes and nobles!

V. 31. As Ezra departed from Babylon on the first day of the first month, (7:9.) and having sent to Casiphia to procure Levites and Nethinim, the company set off from Ahava on the twelfth day of the same month; it is evident that Casiphia was not far from Ahava.—It seems Ezra was aware that there were enemies who lay in wait by the way, to assault, plunder, or destroy him and his company; yet he trusted in God to protect them, and they were accordingly delivered.

(35) The company that came up with Ezra from Babylon offered these sacrifices, as expressing humiliation for sin, faith in the mercy of God through the typical atonement, and gratitude for his late mercies: this they did, not only for themselves, but for their brethren of all the twelve tribes of Israel.—They furthered. (36) The kings, lieutenants, and the governors, having received the king's commission, (Notes, 7:11-26.) furthered Ezra and the Jews in their undertakings; yielding prompt obedience to the orders of Artaxerxes.

Practical Observations.

V. 1-23. While love of the world, and fear of the cross, induce most men to neglect the salvation of the gospel; they who obey the gracious call stand recorded in the book of life, and will be honoured by God himself.—When some of a family embrace the gospel, those who linger behind may pro-baby follow; till sometimes, in answer to fervent prayers, and by means of zealous, affectionate, persevering endeavours, the very last are brought in.—Alas! that professed ministers of religion, who ought to take the lead in every good work, are generally so backward to labour, or venture, or suffer in the cause of God; and need to be stirred up by the example and exhortations even of their lay-brethren! But such as address them on these occasions should be chief men, or men of understanding and established character; lest they should be irritated instead of being persuaded. They must not, however, be left to their negligence: and their superior brethren, having given them a good example, may send or speak to them with more authority and effect than others can, and often those who were before inattentive, will profit by meek and faithful admonitions.—When ministers for “the work of the house of our God” are raised up, who are men of piety and understanding, we should acknowledge “the good hand of our God upon us,” and give him the praise; as we ought at all times to lift up our prayers for this blessing to his church.—It is an invariable rule, that “the hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and wrath is against all them that forsake him;” and we ought to live in the habitual firm belief of this, and should not be ashamed, if called to it, to avow our confidence before the greatest monarchs upon earth: but we should be ashamed to act inconsistently with these professions, or even to appear distrustful of the Lord in the path of duty. On some occasions we ought to omit those precautions for personal safety, and refuse to make that provision for our families, which in other circumstances are very lawful; lest our weaker brethren, or inquirers, should be stumbled, and so our God should be dishonoured. We have therefore great need to ask wisdom from him, that we may know how to use, or to refuse, lawful things, as expedient, or otherwise: and we shall be no losers by venturing, renouncing, or suffering for his sake; as “it is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes,” or in armed hosts.—We should “acknowledge him in all our ways;” but we may especially commend ourselves and our works into his hands, when we are simply endeavouring to serve the cause of true religion. Instead of anxiously seeking help from an arm of flesh, (to which we are all shamefully prone,) when unexpected difficulties or dangers obstruct our path, we should more earnestly and explicitly commit our way unto the Lord. In such circumstances, seasons appropriated to secret or social fasting and prayer, form the most effectual method that we can take; because they best prepare our own souls properly to receive the blessing, and most immediately lead us to seek the forgiveness and mortification of our sins; which are more formidable hindrances to our success than mountains, rivers, seas, or armies of hostile invaders or assailants. Indeed few enterprises, good in themselves, finally fail of success, which are begun and conducted in this way. And when we thus humbly beseech the Lord, he will be entreated of us; and by his good hand upon us, we shall bring all our undertakings in due season to a happy termination.

V. 24-36. They should be holy persons, who have the charge of holy things. Ministers are stewards of the most precious mysteries of God; and watch for the souls of men, every one of which is more valuable than all the world: and if any are wanting through their default, they will be required at their hands. The meanest of them, therefore, needs at least as much wisdom, vigilance, integrity, fidelity, and zeal, as the chief of those who carried the vessels of the Lord. And if any of us are intrusted with the gold and silver of the freewill-offerings of our brethren; or of the princes and affluent persons of this world, for pious or charitable uses; we should “provide for things honest, not only in the sight of God, but also in the sight of men;” that we may be able, when required, to give a punctual account of the whole to those, by whom, or for whom, we have been employed. A clear conscience, and an evidently upright conduct, are both comfortable and reputable: yet our whole dependence for the acceptance of our persons and of all our services, must be rested on the merits and sacrifice of our great Surety: through him we must devote ourselves, and consecrate our services, to our reconciled God, and then walk before him in his commandments and ordinances, as we have opportunity and ability.—“When our ways please the Lord, he maketh even our enemies to be at peace with us;” and if he disposes a few of the great ones of the earth to favour his cause; numbers will afford their external assistance, not to please God, but the prince.—If preservation in peace and safety during our journeys on earth demand our tribute of grateful praise: what acclamations of gratitude shall we raise, when the Lord has conducted us safe through the perilous and wearisome pilgrimage of life, and through the gloomy vale of death, out of the reach of all our enemies, into the regions of eternal felicity!

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. After it was known that Ezra was come to Jerusalem, commissioned by the king of Persia, to be ruler over those countries, and especially to reform the state of religion among the Jews; some of the princes informed him concerning the gross misconduct of their brethren, which they had not been able to prevent. It seems there was still a remnant of the old inhabitants dwelling in the borders of the land: (Marg. Ref.) and the Jews being poor and exposed, opened an intercourse with them, and with other neighbouring nations; and intermarried with them, in violation of the law. This had always proved an introduction to idolatry; and their sin was the more aggravated, and threatened the worst consequences, because the priests, whose marriages had been carefully regulated by the law, (Notes, Lev. 21:7-15.) and the princes, to whom it belonged to enforce obedience to it, were ringleaders in the transgression; and thus, both encouraged others by their example, and deterred such as wished to enforce the law against the criminals. (Notes, 10:18-44. Ez. 34:11-17. Neh. 13:1-4, 23-31. Mal. 2:10-12. 2 Cor. 6:14-18.) They had not indeed yet proceeded to direct idolatry; but they were in the direct way to it, and already chargeable with doing in some respects “according to the abomination of the Gentiles.”

Holy seed, &c. (2 Notes, Ex. 19:6. Is. 6:13. Mal. 2:13-16. 1 Cor. 7:10-14.) They are called a “holy seed,” because of the covenant of God with them, which made them a peculiar people, separated from all other nations. It is likely those princes, who informed Ezra of this enormous practice, had endeavoured to reform them, but could not, because they were opposed by as great men as themselves. But we must not cast away all hope, though we cannot presently reform men’s lives: the time may come, when it may be done. Bp. Patrick.

V. 3, 4. When Ezra first arrived at Jerusalem, and was received with professed cordiality; when he saw the temple prepared, and the worship regularly conducted, with apparent piety; we may suppose, that he was joyful and thankful. But having been informed of these forbidden marriages, which threatened a speedy repetition of former crimes and judgments, he was affected with deep consternation and sorrow; and he expressed his concern for the honour of God and the interests of Israel, by the customary tokens, and even by such as were used to denote the greatest indignation, terror, or distress. (Marg. Ref. 2 Kings 22:19. Note, Josh. 7:6-9.) This seems to have been done publicly in some place of resort; and the matter being reported, many others became suitably affected, and trembled at the words of God, because of the transgression of Israel: (Note, Is. 66:1, 2.) and were prepared to join in humiliation before him, and in effecting a reformation.—The Jews are here called, “Those that had been carried away;” which might remind them of the captivity from which they were lately returned, and which had been brought upon them by similar transgressions.—It is probable, that Ezra observed a profound silence for some time, which indicated that the confusion and distress of his mind were too big for utterance. (Notes, Neh. 1:4. Job 2:11-13.)

V. 5. (Marg. Ref. q. r.) It is probable that Ezra chose the time of the evening-sacrifice, to go from the place where he first showed his alarm and sorrow; and that he went up to the house of God, (10:1.) because the priests at that hour, whilst the sacrifice was offering, burnt incense in the temple, and the people met together in the courts of it to pray. (Note, Luke 1:8-10.)

ment and my mantle, I fell upon my knees, and spread out my hands unto the Lord my God.

[Practical Observations.]

6 And said, O my God, I am ashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens.

7 Since the days of our fathers have we been in a great trespass unto this day; and for our iniquities have we, our kings, and our priests, been delivered into the hand of the kings of the lands, to the sword, to captivity, and to a spoil, and to confusion of face, as it is this day.

8 And now for a little space grace hath been showed from the Lord our God, to leave us a remnant to escape, and to give us a nail in his holy place, that our God may lighten our eyes, and give us a little reviving in our bondage.

9 For we were bondmen; yet our God hath not forsaken us in our bondage, but hath extended mercy unto us in the sight of the kings of Persia, to give us a reviving, to set up the house of our God, and to repair the desolations thereof, and to give us a wall in Judah and in Jerusalem.

10 And now, O our God, what shall we say after this? for we have forsaken thy commandments, 11 Which thou hast commanded by thy servants the prophets, saying, The land unto which ye go to possess it, is an unclean land with the filthiness of the people of the lands, with their abominations, which have filled it from one end to another with their uncleanness.

12 Now therefore give not your daughters unto their sons, neither take their daughters unto your sons, nor seek their peace or their wealth for ever: that ye may be strong, and eat the good of the land, and leave it for an inheritance to your children for ever.

13 And after all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great trespass, seeing that thou our God hast punished us less than our iniquities deserve, and hast given us such deliverance as this;

14 Should we again break thy commandments, and join in affinity with the people of these abominations? wouldest not thou be angry with us till thou hadst consumed us, so that there should be no remnant nor escaping?

15 O Lord God of Israel, thou art righteous: for we remain yet escaped, as it is this day: behold, we are before thee in our trespasses; for we cannot stand before thee because of this.

V. 6. Ezra was not personally guilty in this matter: but he spake and acted, as the representative and the mouth of the whole people; being a member, and in some respects the head, of that body which had thus violated the covenant of God. (Notes, Dan. 9:3—20.) He came to establish the civil and ecclesiastical state of the nation, "according to the good hand of his God upon him;" and he was ashamed and blushed, when he considered the rebellious and ungrateful conduct of that people, whose cause he had to plead continually before the Lord. Indeed the former crimes of Israel were like an inundation, which being swelled by their present transgressions, would flow even over their heads, and entirely overwhelm them: or they formed an enormous pile, which, increasing by continual accessions of presumptuous rebellion, reached even to the heavens, to call down the vengeance of God upon them. The people it may be supposed, persuaded themselves, that as they were free from idolatry, and adhered to the worship at the temple, all was very well and commendable among them; that their deviations as to these marriages were excusable, if not justifiable by necessity or policy; and that on the whole they might expect the favour and protection of God. (Notes, Rom. 7:9—12.) But the vehement language of this eminent man was well suited to give them a very different view of the case; and to convince them that they were abominable in the sight of God, and in danger of his severest vengeance: and it loudly called on them all, especially the criminals, to humble themselves before God in deep repentance.—Grown up unto the heavens. This signifies, the high presumption and insolence of their wickedness. Bp. Patrick.

V. 7. (Marg. Ref.) As it is, &c.] Jerusalem and the temple had been rebuilt, and a remnant had returned from captivity: but the nation in general was in a dependent, impoverished, and abject state; in comparison with that prosperity which their fathers had enjoyed in the times of David and Solomon, and which they had forfeited by their sins: (Note, Neh. 9:36, 37.) and the bulk of it yet remained in a state of captivity and dispersion.

V. 8. A remnant of the Jews had now occupied Jerusalem and Judea for nearly eighty years; having thus had a revival for a comparatively little space from the state of national death, as it were, which had continued during the captivity: (Notes, Ez. 37:11—14.) and it might have been supposed, that the miseries of their ancestors would have effectually deterred them from imitating their crimes: yet in so short a time, they had made considerable progress in the very same path; and in case they proceeded in that way, a speedy period would be put to this reviving of their prosperity. (Note, Ps. 85:1—8.)—A nail given them in the Lord's holy place, seems to signify, that the rebuilding of the temple formed a sure ground of confidence in the Lord, whilst they adhered to his service, and rested all their hopes and dependence on him. (Marg. Ref. Note, Is. 22:20—25.)

V. 9. Notes, 7:11—28.—A wall, &c.] The temple, being the pledge of God's presence among them, was as a wall, by which the Jews were effectually secured from their enemies; unless they provoked him to desert them. Jerusalem was not at this time surrounded with a wall. (Notes, Neh. 13:212—16. 3:41—3. Dan. 9:24—27.) The Hebrew word (גדר) doth not properly signify a wall, but a hedge or fence, such as were made for the folds of sheep. Whereby Ezra expresses, (as Huetius well notes), the singular care of God of them; who being "the Shepherd of Israel," had brought them back into their ancient folds, wherein he preserved them safe, even when they had no wall to defend them, under the powerful protection of the king of Persia. Bp. Patrick.

V. 10—12. (Marg. Ref.) What shall any one say for such a wretched people as this, who had no regard to their prophets, nor to Moses himself, who had charged them to have nothing to do with the people of Canaan? Can we expect less than utter destruction of this small remnant, when, after all the punishments he hath inflicted upon us for our sins, and his ceasing to punish us, and rescuing us in this manner from our captivity, we return to those sins which are so odious to him, because so expressly against his commandments? Bp. Patrick.—Nor seek their peace, &c. (12) The Israelites might seek the conversion of the heathen, or do them acts of common humanity: but they must not interfere with them, nor seek their peace or prosperity in the land of Canaan, whilst they continued idolaters. (Note, Josh. 23:11—13, v. 13.)

V. 13, 14. Both the judgments and mercies, experienced by the people, aggravated the guilt of their transgressions, which would now speedily fill up their measure of iniquity, and bring final and total ruin upon them, except they took warning in time. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15. Though the Jews had endured many and heavy sufferings, yet they had been punished less than they deserved; for they had broken their covenant, and merited utter ruin. (13. Note, Lam. 3:21—23.) Whatever therefore should hereafter befall them, the Lord would be righteous in his dealing with them: and if they were yet spared, it would be entirely the effect of his mercy.—Thus Ezra closed his address, without adding one petition to his humble confessions. He knew not what to say, to ask, or to do. He could say nothing to excuse his people; he was sure they could not stand in judgment before God. He dreaded the consequences; yet he had not given up all hopes. His own mind was affected, and his manner could scarcely fail to affect others: and by this abrupt conclusion, as one who was assured that the righteous Lord would do what was right, he referred the whole matter to him, to do what was good in his sight. (Notes, 10:1, 2. Josh. 7:5—9. 2 Sam. 24:12—14.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

CHAPTER X.

The people weep with Ezra, 1. Shechaniah proposes that the people should disperse their venial wives, and encourages Ezra to attempt this; who requires the priests, and others, to engage by oath so to do, 2-5. By proclamation he assembles the people, who promise to comply, 6-14. The measure is regularly carried into execution, 15-17. The names of those who put away their strange wives, 18-19.

NOW when Ezra had prayed, and when he had confessed, weeping and casting himself down before the house of God, there assembled unto him out of Israel a very great congregation of men and women and children: for the people wept very sore.

2 And Shechaniah the son of Jehiel, one of the sons of Elam, answered and said unto Ezra, shameful practices: and those useful designs, which are undertaken with great pleasure and sanguine hopes, will seldom be completed without many anxious and painful sensations. Those who deal in frivolous, slanderous, and malicious informations, are justly the objects of public execration: but when a pious regard to the honour of God, and a disinterested concern for the benefit of the community, induce men to give information of gross and flagrant abuses, to those who are authorized to repress them; they perform a most useful and honourable service: and even princes may glory in such an employment, though the criminals will generally hate and revile them for it. (Note, Gen. 37:2.) Men, who pride themselves in being free from gross iniquities, often venture into the very path which leads to the commission of them: and even the miseries of sinners in the ways of vice fail to deter the spectators from copying their examples.—If we would, as the servants of God, “a holy seed,” devoted to him by solemn covenant, be preserved from the abominations of the wicked, we must separate from their society, and break off all connexions with them: and intermarriages, between his people and ungodly persons, have in all ages been a successful device of Satan, to prevail against the cause of truth and righteousness, and to produce apostacies, superstitions, idolatry, or impiety.—Too often, through the artifice of the enemy, they, who should warn or restrain others, sanction transgression by their own example, and by protecting the criminals from censure or punishment. Indeed formalists of every description make light of alliances or intimacies with those who are ungodly, and explain away the exhortation to “come out from among them and be separate:” but those who are best acquainted with the word of God, with the human heart, and with the history of the church, and who have the most affectionate regard for the souls of men, view the subject in another manner. They mourn over such transactions, and forebode the worst of consequences from them; and are constrained most solemnly to express their concern and consternation. But alas! the evils, which are allowed and pleaded for, by many who profess to be “the holy seed,” may well excite our astonishment as well as deep regret; and we ought to show our abhorrence of their abominations in the most earnest and decided manner. When this is done by those who are had in reputation for piety or wisdom, it will excite the attention of others, and cause them to tremble at the words of God, because of the transgression of the people: and this will produce greater watchfulness, lead to self-examination and humiliation, and subvert the purposes of reformation.—Silent grief and astonishment sometimes form the most expressive protestation against enormous crimes: and when men speak on such occasions, it may be more effectual to address themselves to God, than to the offenders.

V. 6-15. Whatever may afflict our hearts, we must not yield to inactive despondency, but arise from our heaviness, to spread our sorrows before the Lord, with humble and reverent devotion.—In confessing the sins of churches, or nations, all who form a part of them should bear a share: for every individual has, one way or other, added his transgressions to the aggregate of guilt: and all are interested in the event, and stand related to such as have committed those crimes, from which they have been preserved.—We should endeavour to affect ourselves and others with the greatness and heinousness of our sins: for often, when we think little of our transgressions, they have grown up even to the heavens, and are ready to overwhelm us with the vengeance of the Almighty.—National guilt accumulates from age to age, whilst children copy the iniquities of their fathers. Hence spring all our miseries: yet the Lord “punishes us less than our iniquities deserve:” and no past or present sufferings will exempt us from greater in future, unless “we repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.”—Every respite, and every degree of former mercies and privileges, should be thankfully received: but they all say to us, “Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee.” Even the gospel and the ordinances of God, which are “a nail in his holy place,” on which to suspend all our hopes and interests; and which are given us to lighten our eyes, and to deliver us from our bondage, and to be a reviving to our souls, will only aggravate the doom of those who rest in them, and go on in their

we have transgressed against our God, and have taken strange wives of the people of the land: yet now there is hope in Israel concerning this thing.

3 Now therefore let us make a covenant with our God to put away all the wives, and such as are born of them, according to the counsel of my lord, and of those that tremble at the commandment of our God; and let it be done according to the law.

4 Arise; for this matter belongeth unto thee: we also will be with thee: be of good courage, and do it.

sins.—In this world God afflicts sinners, yet spares them, that his goodness may lead them to repentance: he corrects, but he does not utterly forsake, his people: he extends mercy to them, by disposing others to be kind to them: yet his favour forms their best security and comfort. But “what shall we say,” when judgments, mercies, warnings, and respites leave sinners hardened in impenitence? The case is dreadful, and it may be expected that the Lord will be angry with them, until they are consumed without remnant or escaping.—Indeed every penitent, reflecting upon his own conduct, and comparing it with his mercies, will be “ashamed and blush before God;” his mouth will be stopped, and he will not know what to say. The law is holy, just, and good: obedience would have been reasonable and profitable; his guilt is undeniable and inexcusable: the wrath of God is dreaded and deserved; he feels himself in the Lord’s hands, without plea, or power to escape. “It is of his mercies that he is not consumed,” and if he perish the Lord will be righteous: his only hope arises from a belief of abounding grace, and he casts himself before the Lord with this only plea, “God be merciful to me a sinner.”—Even the believer, though he habitually “walks in newness of life,” often breaks God’s commandments, exposes himself to rebukes and chastisements; and must come ashamed, and confounded, and blushing before God, on account of his foolish and ungrateful conduct, and again adopting the publican’s prayer. Indeed every individual in the whole church, has cause to wonder, that his ingratitude, perverseness, and folly have not wearied out the patience of God, and brought utter destruction upon him. What then must be the case of the ungodly world around us? However, though the true penitent has nothing to plead in his own behalf, the heavenly Advocate pleads most powerfully for him; and prevails in behalf of all those who unfeignedly condemn themselves, and cast themselves wholly upon the mercy of God, through his atoning blood.

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 1. The exceedingly deep sorrow and consternation of so eminent a person as Ezra, who had come to Jerusalem, with so ample and favourable a commission from the king of Persia, and with such pious and beneficent purposes; with his prayer, and most humble confession of deep criminality, were no doubt speedily reported all over the city; and the high esteem generally entertained of his piety and wisdom, induced the people seriously to reflect upon their conduct, and its consequences: so that numbers, of their own accord, gathered around the governor, and united with him in lamentations and humiliation before God. And, the alarm becoming general, even the women and children joined the assembly in the court of the temple; probably fearing lest the wrath of God should immediately be poured out upon them.

V. 2. Shechaniah is not mentioned among those who were guilty: but his father and several of his relations are. (Note, 20-43, v. 26.) He spoke, however, as one of the offending community, though not personally criminal; and he would not be deterred from decisive measures by regard to his nearest relatives.—Probably he observed that Ezra was too desponding, and ready to conclude that reformation would be impracticable, where so many of the chief persons were concerned. (Notes, Num. 25:4-15.) But he perceived very favourable symptoms in the case. The people were generally convinced of their guilt and danger, and the most daring criminals would not venture to oppose the general opinion of the governor and the congregation. There “was therefore hope in Israel concerning this thing,” an effectual reform might be made; and then the Lord would turn from his fierce wrath against them, as “he delighted in mercy.”

V. 3. (Marg. Ref.)—To put away, &c.] This is not any where expressly commanded in the law; yet the spirit of the precept seemed to require it. (Notes, 9:1-4. Ez. 34:11-17. Josh. 23:11-13, v. 13. Neh. 13:23-30.) The prohibition of marriages with idolaters was given to prevent temptations to idolatry; and retaining an idolatrous wife formed a continual temptation. Divorces were permitted to the Israelites, by the judicial law, to prevent worse consequences; but the seducing of a man to idolatry was the worst consequence imaginable. This measure would also tend to prevent the contracting of such marriages in future

5 ¶ Then arose Ezra, and made the chief priests, the Levites, and all Israel, to swear that they should do according to this word. And they swore.

6 ¶ Then Ezra rose up from before the house of God, and went into the chamber of Johanan the son of Eliashib: and when he came thither, he did eat no bread, nor drink water: for he mourned because of the transgression of them that had been carried away.

7 And they made proclamation throughout Judah and Jerusalem unto all the children of the captivity, that they should gather themselves together unto Jerusalem;

8 And that whosoever would not come within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be forfeited, and himself separated from the congregation of those that had been carried away.

[Practical Observations.]

9 ¶ Then all the men of Judah and Benjamin gathered themselves together unto Jerusalem within three days. It was the ninth month, and the twentieth day of the month; and all the people sat in the street of the house of God, trembling because of this matter, and for the great rain.

10 And Ezra the priest stood up, and said unto them, Ye have transgressed, and have taken strange wives to increase the trespass of Israel.

11 Now therefore make confession unto the

6 That which was done contrary to the law of God, was looked upon as null, and therefore these were accounted no marriages; and their children . . . were not to be a part of the family, but to be put away with their mothers. . . . Being educated in superstition, they might corrupt other children. Bp. Patrick. It is probable, however, that none were put away, but such as continued idolaters; and that they were provided for out of the estates of those who divorced them. It does not appear, whether the children were generally sent away with their mothers, or not; but doubtless such were provided for, as were not admitted into the congregation of the Lord. (Note, 10, 11.) Under the New Testament, the marriages of believers with ungodly persons are evidently sinful, and of very bad consequence; yet when contracted they must not be dissolved. The partition-wall between Jews and Gentiles is broken down; such matters are determined by the municipal laws of every country; and divorces, except for adultery, are expressly disallowed. (Notes, Matt. 5:31, 32, 19:3-9. Mark. 10:2-12. 1 Cor. 7:10-16.)

V. 4, 5. Shecaniah's mind being more composed than Ezra's, perceived that it was a favourable crisis for action: so that he exhorted him, instead of indulging grief and yielding to heartless dejection, to arise and exercise his authority, according to the commission of Artaxerxes; and assured him of the hearty assistance of himself and others in the arduous attempt. (Note, Josh. 7:10-12.) Thus encouraged, Ezra entertained hopes of remedying the evil, and immediately engaged all present, by a solemn oath, to concur in this design.—The commission given to Ezra, supposing a full leave to the people to live according to the law, enabled him to govern them by it, yea, to swear them to observe it; for he might do whatsoever he found necessary to keep them in obedience. Bp. Patrick.

V. 6. He did eat, &c. Some render the words "Until he came thither, he had neither eaten bread, nor drunk water." He had no heart to take food, till the prospect of reformation opened to him; but spent his time in fasting, weeping, and prayer.

V. 7, 8. Marg. Ref.—All his substance, &c. (8.) That is, his estate should be confiscated, and put among the sacred treasures, and he should be treated as a heathen, and denied the privileges of a Jew. (Marg. Notes, Lev. 27:28, 29. Josh. 6:17-19.) 'In the Hebrew devoted; which signifies, that his goods were to be so forfeited, as to become sacred to God; and so incapable to be restored to the former owner, being put into the treasury of God's house.' Bp. Patrick.—Doubtless, reasonable excuses would be admitted: and the punishment was only inflicted on the refractory, and those who showed a determination to oppose the measure. Ezra was authorized to punish such persons more severely; (7:26.) but he was not disposed to put any one to death, if it could be avoided.

LORD God of your fathers, and do his pleasure: and separate yourselves from the people of the land, and from the strange wives.

12 Then all the congregation answered and said with a loud voice, As thou hast said, so must we do.

13 But the people are many, and it is a time of much rain, and we are not able to stand without, neither is this a work of one day or two: for we are many that have transgressed in this thing.

14 Let now our rulers of all the congregation stand, and let all them which have taken strange wives in our cities come at appointed times, and with them the elders of every city, and the judges thereof, until the fierce wrath of our God for this matter be turned from us.

15 Only Jonathan the son of Asahel and Jahaziah the son of Tikvah were employed about this matter; and Meshullam and Shabbethai the Levite helped them.

16 And the children of the captivity did so. And Ezra the priest, with certain chief of the fathers, after the house of their fathers, and all of them by their names, were separated, and sat down in the first day of the tenth month to examine the matter.

17 And they made an end with all the men that had taken strange wives by the first day of the first month. [B. C. 456.]

18 ¶ And among the sons of the priests there were found that had taken strange wives: namely,

V. 9. For the great rain. The periodical rains, common at that season, seem to have been more abundant than usual, and as no building could be large enough to contain the whole multitude; this providential circumstance added to their distress, and seemed an indication of the divine displeasure. (Note, Jer. 32:3.)

V. 10, 11. (Marg. Ref.) As Ezra mentions only the strange wives, and not their children, some think that the children were retained, and brought up in the Jewish religion.—"Though Shecaniah propounded the putting away the children also; (3) yet it may be thought that Ezra, to whom the matter was referred, mitigated the severity of it; because we do not read any thing of them, but only of the wives, when he came to order what should be done." Bp. Patrick.

V. 12-14. The congregation at once declared their readiness to divorce their heathen wives, in all cases where it was determined to be their duty: but the difficulties of the business would require more consideration than could be given them, in their present situation, and by a popular assembly. They therefore proposed, that the principal counsel or senate should convene at Jerusalem, who might summon before them the parties concerned, from every city, together with the judges and elders of their cities; and so deliberately investigate and decide upon every case; that the business might be settled effectually, and in an unexceptionable manner.—It would be needful to determine, whether the women had been proselyted, either before or after marriage; whether they had relapsed into idolatry, or shown a propensity to do so; or whether they had given satisfactory evidences, that they had sincerely embraced the Jewish religion. These and many other similar questions must be resolved, before sentence was denounced; and this would take up much time. The proposal was therefore very reasonable: Ezra readily assented to it, and thus the business was peaceably and happily terminated.

V. 15. Ezra and the chief persons in the nation, as forming a council, decided on the several cases brought before them; and on this ground some think, that the four persons here mentioned, and no more, opposed the measure. The words indeed may bear that sense: yet the more general opinion is, that these four men were appointed by the council, to bring the business before them in due form.

V. 16, 17. The cases, brought before the council, were either so many, or so complicated; that though they separated themselves from other employments, to attend on this exclusively, they were three months in finishing it. This took place just a year after Ezra left Babylon.

V. 44. Providence had so ordered it, that not many of the people had children by their heathen wives. Thus the separation was more easily effected; and at the same time it was a token of the divine disapprobation of such marriages.—Perhaps these were the principal persons who were criminal; for all circumstances combine to induce an opinion, that a far greater number were concerned than those here expressed by name.—Ezra continued nearly twelve years after this in authority at Jerusalem, no doubt zealously labouring to promote a revival of true religion. And in many ways he established the ecclesiastical state of the Jews: though he seems not to have been so well qualified as his successor Nehemiah, to attend to the civil government, to defend the city and state against enemies and invaders, and to effect outward reformation by the authority of the magistrate. Accordingly he is introduced in the ensuing book, as well employed in his proper line, though superseded by Nehemiah in his civil authority. (Notes, 1 Sam. 12:23. Neh. 8:1—8.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8. Genuine humiliation before God, and sorrow for sin, always produce "works meet for repentance." Yet they who are greatly affected with the view of the evil and aggravation of their own sins, or those of the community to which they belong, are in danger of being "swallowed up by overwhelming sorrow," and so discouraged from present duty. In this case the grounds of hope should be pointed out to them; and so rich is the mercy of God through the great Redeemer, that there is always encouragement for those who are willing to accept of his salvation: and when the most atrocious criminals humbly mourn on account of their sins, and tremble at his word, there is good reason to expect that they will obey his commands.—In order to affect others with godly sorrow and hatred of sin, or holy love and gratitude, we must ourselves be greatly affected: for evident earnestness in these important concerns is far more impressive upon the mind, by a kind of holy sympathy, than the most laboured eloquence or reasoning. Indeed the effect of such earnestness frequently bears a proportion to the rank, reputation, piety, or wisdom of him who is thus affected: so that the silent grief and contrition, or the humble prayers and confessions of one eminent person may, by the blessing of God, excite serious alarms and inquiries among great multitudes. These are critical seasons, and call for decision in proposing and executing measures of extensive and durable usefulness. Yet vehement passions in those to whom great concerns belong, are attended by considerable disadvantages; and far inferior persons may give seasonable advice, suggest suitable encouragement, or propose adequate assistance.—We cannot too solemnly engage ourselves and each other, to renounce all interests, connexions, or indulgences, which are contrary to the law of God. And when leading men set the example, and then propose the same things to others, many may be prevailed on by conviction, fear, or shame: and thus opposition will be prevented, or rendered ineffectual.—Excessive sorrow, terror, and self-abasement; and a great engagement of heart about the things of God and the eternal world, indispose us to animal recreation: so that fasting then becomes a natural expression of our feelings, as well as a suitable concomitant of our prayers and supplications.—Fervent affections should not be allowed to subside, till our most beloved sins have been renounced; and we should "know no man after the flesh," when a revival of pure religion is attempted. (Note, 2 Cor. 5:16.)

V. 9—44. That which must be done, should be set about without delay: they are not worthy of the privileges of God's people, who will not concur in promoting obedience to his commandments: and those deserve severe punishment from the civil magistrate, who oppose his authority, especially when he is doing his duty according to the oracles of God.—When the frowns of Providence unite with the terrors of an awakened conscience, to distress the trembling sinner, he becomes an object of deep compassion: and though no favour must be shown to his sins, much tenderness should be exercised to his person.—The most effectual divorce from lucrative or beloved sins, is generally preceded by examination and deliberation: for that which is hastily resolved, seldom proves durable.—Cases, at first sight similar, upon mature investigation appear very different: and in correcting abuses, caution and compassion should unite with impartiality and decision; that there may be no subsequent cause for reasonable complaint.—When sin is repented of and forsaken, God will mercifully forgive: but the blood of Christ, our Sin-offering, is the only atonement which takes away the guilt of it.—No apparent repentance, amendment, or restitution, will benefit those who reject this propitiation; for their self-dependence proves them still unhumiliated.—It is peculiarly afflicting to a pious mind, (though, alas! exceedingly common), to see those who fill up the most important stations in society, or the most sacred offices in the church, and who are related to the most excellent persons, leading the way, and setting the example, in the most evident violation of the divine law! But when they confess and forsake their sins, avowing publicly their dependence on the atoning blood of the Saviour; their pattern in these respects may in some measure counterbalance the effects of their former misconduct: and all the names which are written in the book of life, are those of penitent believing sinners; not of the self-righteous who think that they have no need of repentance.

THE BOOK OF NEHEMIAH.

This book resumes the history of the Jews, about twelve years after the close of the book of Ezra; and contains the latest canonical records of the nation till the days of Christ; reaching down to about a hundred and ten years after the captivity. It was evidently written by Nehemiah himself, who throughout speaks in the first person; and probably it was received among the canonical Scriptures by Ezra and his assistants or successors.—Nehemiah, a Jew, the cupbearer to Artaxerxes king of Persia, hearing of the distressed state of his countrymen; in great affliction petitions him for leave to go up to Jerusalem as governor, with a commission to rebuild the walls, and to provide for the security and the prosperity of his people. Having obtained his request, he executes his commission for twelve years with great success. After which he returns to Artaxerxes, but at length comes back to Jerusalem; and employs various measures to promote the prosperity of the Jews, and the reformation of abuses.—The frequent devout ejaculations with which the narrative is interrupted, are peculiar to this pious writer: and his zeal, activity, and disinterestedness are well worthy of imitation; especially by those employed in arduous undertakings, for the good of the church or the community.—This book has many internal proofs of divine inspiration, and always has been considered by the Jews as a part of their sacred Scriptures, and indeed as a continuation of the book of Ezra: it does not, however, seem to contain any prophecies, nor is it explicitly referred to in the New Testament.

CHAPTER I.

Nehemiah, being informed of the afflicted state of the Jews, mourns, fasts and prays, 1-4. His prayer, 5-11.

THE words of Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah. And it came to pass in the month Chislew, in the twentieth year, as I was in Shushan the palace,

2 That Hanani, one of my brethren, came, he and certain men of Judah; and I asked them concerning the Jews that had escaped, which were left of the captivity, and concerning Jerusalem.

3 And they said unto me, The remnant that are left of the captivity there in the province are in great affliction and reproach: the wall of Jerusalem also is broken down, and the gates thereof are burned with fire.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, when I heard these words, that I sat down and wept, and mourned certain days, and fasted, and prayed before the God of heaven, and night, for the children of Israel thy servants, and confess the sins of the children of Israel, which we have sinned against thee: both I and my father's house have sinned.

7 We have dealt very corruptly against thee, and have not kept the commandments, nor the statutes, nor the judgments, which thou commandedst thy servant Moses.

8 Remember, I beseech thee, the word that thou commandedst thy servant Moses, saying, If ye transgress, I will scatter you abroad among the nations:

9 But if ye turn unto me, and keep my commandments, and do them; though there were of you cast out unto the uttermost part of the heaven, yet will I gather them from thence, and will bring them unto the place that I have chosen to set my name there.

10 Now these are thy servants and thy people, whom thou hast redeemed by thy great power, and by thy strong hand.

11 O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name: and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day, and grant him mercy in the sight of this man. For I was the king's cupbearer.

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1. This book is here called, "The words," (or, as it may be rendered, "The actions,") of Nehemiah; that is, the history of the services which he performed to the Jewish church and state.—It is uncertain to what tribe or family Nehemiah belonged, though tradition records that he was of the tribe of Judah.—His father Hachaliah seems to have obtained a settlement in the city of Shushan, or Susa, the capital of Persia, where the kings had a royal palace; and thus his son Nehemiah became cupbearer to Artaxerxes. This was a place of great trust, honour, and emolument; and it was peculiarly desired by those who sought preferment, because it gave access to the king at those seasons of hilarity, when men are most disposed to grant favours.—Nehemiah was cupbearer to the same Artaxerxes who before commissioned Ezra. (Note, Ezra 7:1-5.)—The month Chislew coincides with part of our November and part of December.—Twentieth year. 2:1. Ezra 7:8.

V. 2. It is supposed, that Hanani, the brother of Nehemiah, and some other Jews, came to Shushan, in order to solicit help from the king against their enemies. (Note, 7:2,3.)—Nehemiah's station in the Persian court had hitherto prevented his going to Jerusalem: but he was an eminently godly man, and deeply concerned about the city and temple of God, and the condition of his brethren in Judea.

V. 3. Ezra's commission, and his attention, had chiefly respected the state of religion, and the re-establishment of the affairs of the Jewish church: and he was not empowered or enabled to fortify the city, or to repel the hostile attempts of the enemies of his people. It is supposed, that the Samaritans, and other adversaries, not only hated the true religion, but were provoked at being dispossessed, by the return of the Jews, from the lands which they had seized upon; and as these returned Jews were but a remnant, compared with the whole nation, and in an unsettled situation, they were unable to defend themselves. The seat of government was very distant; the king's lieutenants were in general unfavourable; and probable the king never heard a full account of the injuries done them.—Either the walls had not been at all built after the captivity; or their enemies had thrown them down again, and burnt the gates with fire: and being thus defenceless and exposed, they were also insulted and reproached for their confidence in God.—Jerusalem lay without any walls or gates to defend it from injuries. . . . It was burnt by Nebuchadnezzar, and the walls beaten down; therefore their meaning is, that the walls and gates lay as the Chaldeans left them, after that devastation, and were not repaired, though the temple was built again.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 4. Nehemiah seems, immediately on hearing the afflicted state of his brethren, to have conceived the design of going to their relief, if he could obtain permission and assistance from the king his patron. But his first application was to that God, in whose hand are the hearts of kings. He therefore spent some days in mourning over the affliction of his people, and in humbling himself before God by fasting and prayer, in order to find mercy from him, and success in his undertaking. (Notes, Ezra 9:3,4. Dan. 9:2,3.)

V. 5-11. In the prayer here recorded, which probably formed the substance of Nehemiah's constant supplications

CHAPTER II.

Artaxerxes, observing Nehemiah and before him, asks the cause, 1, 2. Nehemiah is afraid, assigns the reason, prays, petitions the king, and obtains authority to rebuild the wall of Jerusalem, 3-8. He delivers the king's letters to the governors beyond the river; the enemies of the Jews are much grieved; and he arrives at Jerusalem, 9-11. He examines the state of the walls secretly by night, 12-16. He encourages the Jews to build, 17, 18. The scorn and menaces of their enemies, and his answer, 19, 20.

AND it came to pass in the month *Nisan, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes the king, that wine was before him: and I took up the wine, and gave it unto the king. Now I had not been beforetime sad in his presence.

day and night, he adored the greatness and terrible nature of God, and his covenanted mercy to his people; (Notes, 1 Kings 8:23, 24. Dan. 9:4. Luke 1:67-75. Heb. 6:13-15.) thus acknowledging that if they had not provoked him to anger, by their numerous and heinous crimes; their enemies, instead of triumphing over them, would have experienced his terrible power fighting for them. But alas! Nehemiah was constrained to confess, that both the people in general, and he himself, and his father's house, were deeply guilty, and by dealing very corruptly, (that is, perversely, ungratefully, and deceitfully,) had given the Lord just cause to leave them in the hands of their adversaries. Yet, while he justified God in the miseries of his people, he expressed a confidence in his mercies. The nation of Israel alone professed to worship and serve the God of heaven: he had forewarned them, that if they transgressed, he would scatter them abroad among the nations; but he had also repeatedly and expressly promised, that if they returned to him, and obeyed his commandments, he would gather them again to their own land, and to his chosen city. (Notes, Lev. 26:31-45. Deut. 4:25-31. Dan. 9:5-16.) Now many of those, who had gone up to Jerusalem, were turned to the Lord, and "desired to fear his name:" and it might be hoped that numbers even of those, who remained in other countries, were truly penitent and uprightly obedient; among whom Nehemiah was conscious he was one. And as God had already done great things, both in former ages, and lately, in redeeming and delivering his people from their enemies; he trusted that he would compassionately hear his prayer, and the prayers of all those who were pleading with him in that behalf. (Notes, 1 Chr. 16:34-36. Ezra 9:5-15. Ps. 74:20. 79:6-13. Is. 63:15-19. 64:6-12. Dan. 9:17-19.)—The particular request which he made on this occasion, is remarkable: he prayed that God "would grant him mercy in the sight of this man." The mighty monarch of the Persian empire would be addressed by his flatterers, as if he were more than man; yet Nehemiah knew, that in the sight of God, he was upon a level with his meanest subjects. (Note, 2:4.)—A deep sense of our own unworthiness is a good qualification for the mercy we beg of God. This Nehemiah expresses very sensibly. Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-4. Eminent men of God may sometimes be found in situations, where they might be least expected: his grace will be sufficient for them, wherever his providence has cast their lot: and it is seldom advisable to leave the place, where he has blessed us, without an evident call, or a substantial reason; even though we might remove into situations, apparently more favourable to our growth in grace.—The church militant is like the bush, which burned, but was not consumed, because the Lord was there: (Note, Ex. 3:2. P. 7-12.) afflictions and reproaches are its portion in this evil world; its enemies often presumptuously expect finally to prevail; and its friends through unbelief are sometimes ready to fear that they will. But in the crisis, some unexpected help is afforded, and again it revives and flourishes.—No prosperity can render the real believer inattentive to the cause and people of God. (Notes, Ps. 137:1-6, v. 6.) The prevalence of iniquity, the decay of piety, and the ravages of persecution, whilst infidels or idolaters insult and reproach, are like "a sword in his bones." (Ps. 12:10.) As a member of the suffering body of Christ, he will sympathize in its affliction; but this must not suffice. (Notes, 1 Cor. 12:12-26.) He will be inquiring, what service he can render to the common cause, by improving his talents and the advantages of his situation. If he have no more in his power, he may lift up his prayer without ceasing for the remnant that is left: and fasting joined with supplication may well express the believer's penitent sorrow for sin, sympathy with his afflicted brethren, distress to see the cause of God run down, and earnestness in seeking help from him: so that he has no relish for common comforts and enjoyments. Such fervent, humble prayers have always been honoured with signal prevalence and success. And these seasons of humiliation are peculiarly suitable, when we are entering upon arduous or perilous undertakings for the benefit of the church.—As the people of God all over the earth form one body; it is good to inquire how our brethren fare in the most remote regions, that we may at least know in what manner we may direct our prayers and praises in their behalf, in the most appropriate manner.

V. 5-11. In all our addresses to the God of heaven we must remember his greatness and terrible majesty; that we

2 Wherefore the king said unto me, "Why is thy countenance sad, seeing thou art not sick? this is nothing else but sorrow of heart. Then I was very sore afraid,

3 And said unto the king, 'Let the king live for ever: why should not my countenance be sad, when the city, the place of my fathers' sepulchres, lieth waste, and the gates thereof are consumed with fire?

4 Then the king said unto me, ^bFor what dost thou make request? ^cSo I prayed to the God of heaven.

may worship "with reverence and godly fear," and in deep humiliation before him. His infinite holiness, justice, truth, and power are terrible to all the workers of iniquity; and they would be so to us all as fallen creatures, were he not also infinitely merciful; and did he not deal with such as repent and believe the gospel, according to a new and gracious covenant. For all have broken his perfect law, in numberless instances: and indeed all are disposed to reject, oppose, or pervert his gospel. And if, by his grace, we are now true believers; we have, even since we became so, "dealt very corruptly, in not keeping the commandments of God." He therefore is righteous in our sufferings, and merciful in all our comforts. We must still come before him as sinners, pleading his gracious promises, and craving to be gathered into his church, and finally into heaven, the place where he displays those glories, which here by faith we feebly apprehend, love, and adore. In this humble, supplicating manner, we may expect all desirable success. May he then grant unto us a spirit of simple dependence on his mercy and grace, united with zeal for his glory, and affection to his people. May we endeavour to improve every talent, as those who are waiting for his coming and never tarnish or defeat the success of our endeavours, by pride and self-confidence. And may our gracious God stir up those, to whom he has committed many talents, thus humbly and zealously to serve his cause, with faith and prayer; with self-denial, promptitude, and diligence; and with simple dependence on him and devotedness to him!—When worldly men would solicit any favours from kings or nobles, they spare no pains to obtain the interposition of those distinguished persons who have influence with them: but the children of God must seek to their Father, who could at once secure to them the assistance of all the kings upon earth, if good for them; and though other means may be used, yet "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth" most of all; and, "Grant me mercy in the sight of this man," offered in faith to that God, in whose hand are the hearts of all men, will do more to ensure success, in any good cause, than all our applications to nobles and princes, to support our petitions. (Notes, 2:4. Gen. 32:28, 29. Ezra 7:27, 28. Prov. 21:1.)

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. About four months passed from the time when Nehemiah made his inquiry, before he presented his petition to the king; for Nisan answers to part of March and part of April. (Note, 1:1.) It is probable, that his turn of waiting on the king did not arrive before this: and he could not come into his presence uncalled, except at the hazard of his life; (Note, Esth. 4:1.) but he could approach the King of heaven at any time, and doubtless all the while continued instant in prayer. Yet, when at length he attended on his office, his inward concern was visible in his countenance, which no doubt had always before been very open and cheerful: so that the king observed it; and, not perceiving that he was ill, seemed ready to impute his melancholy to discontent or disaffection. Indeed the words rendered "sad," and "sorrow of heart," might be rendered evil, and wickedness of heart. This excited great alarm in Nehemiah; and in fact these arbitrary monarchs were generally suspicious, in proportion to their tyranny. Lest poison should be mixed with their wine, they required the cup bearers to drink before them out of the same cup: and some conjecture that Nehemiah, being oppressed with grief, had forgotten to observe this custom. Had the least suspicion, however, been excited of criminal designs, the immediate torture or execution of Nehemiah might have been the consequence: for the Persian monarchs frequently, with little ceremony, thus treated those who had before been their chief favourites. He might also fear that he should fail of his purpose, as the king seemed displeased, and no favourable opportunity for his request was yet afforded.

V. 3. Nehemiah in answering the king, testified his cordial and loyal affection, by wishing the long continuance of his life and prosperity, in the customary manner. He perhaps meant the words likewise as a prayer for his salvation; but they were not generally understood in that sense. Thus 'God save the king,' as generally used, means no more than, 'Let the king live and prosper:' but the words, when duly attended to, contain a solemn prayer to God, for his temporal preservation, and his eternal salvation. (Marg. Ref.)—Nehemiah said nothing to Artaxerxes concerning the religion of the Jews: perhaps, he saw that he was more regardless in that respect than formerly; (Notes, Ezra 7:6-28.) or: he might suppose that the king would not attend to that subject

5 And I said unto the king, 'If it please the king, and if thy servant have found favour in thy sight, that thou wouldest send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it.

6 And the king said unto me, (the 'queen also sitting by him,) For how long shall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? 'So it pleased the king to send me; and I set him a time.

7 Moreover, I said unto the king, If it please the king, let letters be given me to the governors beyond the river, that they may convey me over till I come into Judah;

8 And a letter unto Asaph the keeper of the king's forest, that he may give me timber, to make beams for the gates of the palace which appertained to the house, and for the wall of the city, and for the house that I shall enter into. And the king granted me, according to the good hand of my God upon me. [Practical Observations.]

9 ¶ Then I came to the governors beyond the river, and gave them the king's letters. Now the king had sent captains of the army and horsemen with me.

10 When Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, heard of it, bit grieved them exceedingly that there was come a man to seek the welfare of the children of Israel.

so candidly, from a young courtier, as he had done from an aged priest and learned scribe of the law of God: and some think that he was induced to wave it, because the company present were unfavourable. He therefore represented the afflicted, defenceless state of that city, where his ancestors lay interred; and how could he but be grieved that their sepulchres should be so disgraced, or how avoid sympathizing with his distressed countrymen?—Arguments of this kind the men of the world well understand; but alas! they little feel the force of those which are infinitely more important. Some infer from the expression "my fathers' sepulchres," that Nehemiah was of the tribe of Judah; but his ancestors might have been buried in Jerusalem, if he were of the tribe of Benjamin, or of Simeon.

V. 4. Nehemiah could not, in this emergency, retire for prayer; but he lifted up his heart in a silent ejaculation to "the God of heaven," to prosper him, according to the tenor of those prayers which he had for a long time been presenting before him; and perhaps the concluding part of the prayer contained in the preceding chapter was secretly offered at this time.—"Prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day, and grant him mercy in the sight of this man." "In his mind he silently beseeched God to guide his tongue, and to bow the king's heart to grant his request." Bp. Patrick. "The God of heaven" seems to have become the usual style, so to speak, in addressing the Lord, among the returned captives; perhaps as contrasting him with the idols of the regions in which they had sojourned. (20. 1:4, 5. Ezra 5:11, 12. Note, Jer. 10:11.)

V. 5, 6. It is probable, that Esther was the queen who was present at this time, and that she seconded Nehemiah's request. Perhaps he had been preferred through her interest, and that of Mordecai; and her presence seems to be mentioned, as a favourable and not a common circumstance, and as an answer to his prayers.—For Mordecai's advancement preceded the commission granted to Nehemiah several years. (1:1. Esth. 1:3. 10:3.)—The king was not willing to be long deprived of the service of one, who possessed his confidence and affection: and we may suppose, that Nehemiah obtained leave of absence for a shorter time than he actually continued at Jerusalem; but he either returned to obtain a new commission, or had it renewed in his absence by the special favour of the king.

V. 7. (Note, Ezra 9:21—23.) Ezra was a priest and a scribe, though armed with civil authority; and in consistency with his character and professions, he would not require a guard. But Nehemiah went to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, and to defend the Jews against their enemies; and it was very consistent with his avowed design, to petition the king, that the governors should be ordered to escort him with proper military attendants, which would afford him protection, and add dignity to his undertaking.—The king likewise ordered him a guard, till he had crossed the Euphrates. (9) for Susa was beyond that river, further to the east than Babylon.

V. 8. 'I suppose he means the forest of Lebanon, from whence he might be furnished with materials for his building.' Bp. Patrick. The word (פרדס) is used only in two other places, (Ec. 2:5. Cant. 4:13.) where it is rendered orchard, 11 So ¶ I came to Jerusalem, and was there three days.

12 ¶ And I arose in the night, I and some few men with me; neither told I any man what my God had put in my heart to do at Jerusalem: neither was there any beast with me, save the beast that I rode upon.

13 And I went out by night by the gate of the valley, even before the dragon-well, and to the dung-port, and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which were broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire.

14 Then I went on to the gate of the fountain, and to the king's pool: but there was no place for the beast that was under me to pass.

15 Then went I up in the night by the brook, and viewed the wall, and turned back, and entered by the gate of the valley, and so returned.

16 And the rulers knew not whither I went, or what I did; neither had I as yet told it to the Jews, nor to the priests, nor to the nobles, nor to the rulers, nor to the rest that did the work.

17 ¶ Then said I unto them, Ye see the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire: come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more a reproach.

and the word παράδεισος, or paradise, seems to have been derived from it, yet here it must signify a forest of timber trees. The palace here mentioned seems to mean the temple, or some of those buildings which surrounded it, or 'the gates of the temple'; for though the temple was rebuilt, much might be wanting in respect of the surrounding walls and gates. Nehemiah proposed to build a house also for the governor, and to do all other things, which might place his people in a more secure and respectable situation. (Marg. Ref.) The good hand of my God. (8) Marg. Ref. s. Note, Ezra 1:6—10, v. 9.

V. 10. (Marg. Ref.) Sanballat is supposed to have been a Moabite, of Horonaim, a city of Moab. (Is. 15:5.) Tobiah was an Ammonite, and had been a slave. Moab and Ammon were subjugated and carried captive by the kings of Babylon; but it appears that they had been restored, according to the predictions of Jeremiah. (Notes, Jer. 48:47. 49:6.) And it is likely that Sanballat and Tobiah (as well as Geshem the Arabian afterwards mentioned) were placed by the king of Persia in authority over their own people, and over the Samaritans, or other tribes in that neighbourhood, who were general enemies to the Jews.—Sanballat and Tobiah, however, were full of malice against them; and exceedingly grieved and displeased to find that one was come from the king of Persia to protect them from further injuries; with such authority from the king, and in such favour with him; as appeared by the letters brought with him, and the guard that attended him, and the diligence of the several governors, through whose provinces he passed, to serve him. Bp. Patrick. (Notes, 19:20. 4:1—3. 6: Ezra 4:)

V. 11. It would doubtless soon be known, that Nehemiah was come with a commission from Artaxerxes; but he did not disclose the nature of his business, till he had made previous observations, and consulted with a few select friends, in whom he could place the most entire confidence.

V. 12—16. Nehemiah seems to have used every precaution to conceal his intentions, till he had obtained the unanimous consent of the people, and they were actually employed in the work; knowing that their enemies would attempt to divide or discourage them.—We may suppose that the moon shone, when he made his observations, and that he had provided skilful guides to accompany him in this survey. Yet even they, who afterwards presided and did the work, were not at this time consulted.—The account here given is well suited to show us the ruinous and defenceless state of the city, nearly a hundred years after the return of the Jews from captivity; and Nehemiah's personal survey formed a suitable preparation to his address to the people, and would enable him to obviate any objections, and prevent any misrepresentations, which might be made.—Nothing more is known of the several places mentioned, than what may be collected from the marginal references.—My God had put, &c. (12) Marg. Ref. g. Note, Ezra 1:27, 28.

V. 17, 18. The reader will note the poetry of the language used by Nehemiah on this as well as on every other occasion, which resembled that of Ezra. (Marg. Ref. s. in v. 8.) When he exhorted the Jews to arise and exert themselves in rebuilding the wall of the city: he showed them that the kindness of the Persian king to him, was the effect of the power-

18 Then I told them of 'the hand of my God which was good upon me; as also the king's words that he had spoken unto me. And they said, Let us rise up and build. 'So they strengthened their hands for this good work.

19 But when 'Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, and 'Geshem the Arabian, heard it, they laughed us to scorn, and despised us, and said, What is this thing that ye do? 'will ye rebel against the king?

ful interposition of God in their behalf. Thus they were animated and emboldened to undertake the work.

V. 19, 20. Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geshem, as determined enemies to the Jewish nation, soon got intelligence of Nehemiah's designs, notwithstanding his precautions; (Note, 6:17—19.) and they derided the efforts of the Jews, as if the work were impracticable: nay, they represented the undertaking, as an act of rebellion against the king; though they could not but know that Nehemiah acted by his commission! They intended if possible, to frighten, to disunite, and to dishearten the people, that they might abandon the undertaking. But Nehemiah only answered, that the God of heaven would prosper his servants: but as to their adversaries, they had no portion in him, no right to interfere; nor any memorial in Jerusalem, to prove, that either by birth, or by being proselyted, they were Israelites, as the Samaritans pretended to be. He therefore, very prudently, avoided all further communication. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 10. Ezra 4:3.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. Unavoidable delays, when employed in fervent persevering prayer, often forward the success of pious undertakings.—Cheerfulness is in general an ornament to religion; but there are seasons for mourning when grief cannot be concealed.—“The children of this world” understand the propriety of our grieving, when we are sick and in pain: when impoverished, bereaved, or disappointed in our temporal pursuits; but they cannot conceive, why the heart should be heavy, or the countenance sad, if no outward calamity has befallen us. Yet conscious guilt, the fear or sense of the divine displeasure, the afflictions of God's people, the prevalence of impiety, and the decays of religion, are far more reasonable and important causes of grief: under which no confluence of earthly delights can afford comfort. We must, however, expect that worldly men will ascribe such sorrows to melancholy, discontent, moroseness, or even some more criminal cause: and those, who are strangers to the believer's consolations, are apt to infer from his complaints, that religion is uncomfortable, and unfits men for social life. We should therefore in general conceal our grief, or disclose it only to the Lord and to his people.—The very persons, from whose favour many advantages may be expected, are also greatly to be dreaded. Inconstancy is connected with all the partialities and affections of absolute princes; and suspicions are multiplied in proportion as power is abused. They cannot confide in those, who do not, as they think, serve them from affection: but so many causes may induce courtiers to feign attachment, that they cannot but distrust at times even their favourites. Hence often arises the speedy ruin or disgrace of those, on whom honours and emoluments have been most lavished; without any cause, but caprice or groundless jealousy. “It is therefore better to trust in the Lord, than to put any confidence in princes.” (Note, Ps. 118:9.)—A meek and modest explanation best tends to banish groundless suspicions. Yet we should study consistency with our character, professions, and relative situations; and consider those of the person we speak to; if we would behave “with wisdom towards them that are without,” avoid giving any needless disgust, and do important good to the church of God by their means.—We must not speak falchood: but we are not bound always to speak all that we think; when a part of it will best answer every useful purpose.—Ejaculatory petitions may be presented to the Lord in any place or company, and should be intermixed with every transaction in which a Christian is engaged. They neither supersede, nor are rendered unnecessary by our more stated devotions: and the habit of thus keeping up an intercourse with Heaven, is of peculiar importance and advantage. Indeed we ought never to engage in any pursuit, in which it would be improper thus to expect and seek the divine direction, assistance, and blessing. The Lord so orders every circumstance as may best answer the prayers of his people. He turns their most distressing fears into grateful praises; he exceeds their largest hopes; and even those, who know him not, will be inclined to favour his servants, “according to the good hand of their God upon them.”

V. 9-20. The enemies of the Lord must grieve, in proportion as his servants rejoice, when those in authority, and endowed with suitable qualifications, are raised up to promote the cause of truth and holiness, and the welfare of his church: for the enmity of the serpent's seed against the cause of Christ is confined to no age or nation; it springs from hatred of God himself, and is irritated in proportion as he is glorified. But we ought steadily to proceed with our proper work, possessing our souls in patience, and uniting in our conduct, wisdom, and zeal, vigilance and courage, self-denial and activity. If we even attempt any thing good, in a proper manner, “God hath put it into our hearts.” But we should first carefully consider what is most necessary to be done, both in the concerns of our own souls, and in those of the church: and investigation will generally discover a great deal which needs to be rectified.—When matters are fairly proposed, and men in authority or reputation take the lead, and animate others also, the most timid and indolent may be roused and encouraged to action. But favourable opportunities should be seized: and those who would accomplish any useful design, to rescue the church of God from just occasion of reproach, must be strengthened to endure contempt, reviling, and menaces, as well as labour and hardship. “The God of heaven” will prosper his people, and clear their characters from aspersions, as well as deliver them from affliction: but wretched are they, who have no portion, nor right, nor memorial in the new Jerusalem, the city of our God! However, we should always be ready to give a meek and reasonable answer to objectors: and, blessed be God, even despisers and revilers, while they are warned of their danger, may be invited to cease from their opposition, and to be reconciled to God: that, after all, they may have their lot among his people, and not among his enemies.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1. It is supposed that “the sheep-gate” immediately communicated with the temple: and that the cattle for sacrifices were usually brought in that way, and the priests undertook this part, as most properly belonging to them. (Note, John 5:2-4.) Eliashib, the grandson of Jeshua, (12:10.) was the high-priest at this time, and he, with his brethren, either his near relations or the chief priests, the heads of their several courses, rebuilt this part of the wall at their own expense; and perhaps some of them on this emergency laboured at it with their own hands. Along with the gate, they builded a part of the wall on each side. (Marg. Ref. d.) This was the case, it may be supposed, in other instances where the gates alone are mentioned.—Of this part alone it is said, that “they sanctified it,” which may mean, that they began the work with prayer and concluded it with praise, and thus consecrated their service to the Lord, for the security of his temple and worshippers. (Notes, 12: 27-43.)

V. 2-4. (Marg. Ref.) After all the pains, which some learned men have bestowed on the subject, which is indeed not very interesting to us, little satisfactory information can be obtained on the situation of the places mentioned in this chapter, beyond what may be collected from the marginal references.

V. 5. Their nobles, &c.] It seems the chief persons of Tekoa refused to give any assistance, either by their labour, their substance, or their servants. Disregarding the authority of God himself, whose work it was, no wonder that they would not submit to the commands of Nehemiah, their governor, who seems to be meant by the expression “their lord” and for this they are branded with disgrace in the word of God. (Note, 1 Sam. 8:6-9.)—But the inferior citizens, instead of following their example, undertook a second part, the son of Paseah, and Meshullam the son of Besodeiah; they laid the beams thereof, and set up the doors thereof, and the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

7 And next unto them repaired Melatiah the Gibeonite, and Jadon the Meronothite, the men of Gibeon, and of Mizpah, unto the throne of the governor on this side the river.

8 Next unto him repaired Uzziel the son of Harbajah, of the goldsmiths. Next unto him also repaired Hananiah, the son of one of the apothecaries, and they fortified Jerusalem unto the broad wall.

9 And next unto them repaired Rephaiah the son of Hur, the ruler of the half part of Jerusalem.

10 And next unto them repaired Jedaiah the son of Harumaph, even over against his house. And next unto him repaired Hattush the son of Hashabniah.

11 Malchijah the son of Harim, and Hashub the son of Pahath-moab, repaired the tower piece, and the tower of the furnaces.

12 And next unto him repaired Shallum the son of Halohesh, the ruler of the half part of Jerusalem, he and his daughters.

13 The valley-gate repaired Hanun, and the inhabitants of Zanoah; they built it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof, and a thousand cubits on the wall unto the dung-gate.

14 But the dung-gate repaired Malchiah the son of Rechab, the ruler of part of Beth-hacerem; he built it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

15 But the gate of the fountain repaired Shallum the son of Col-hozeh, the ruler of part of Mizpah; he built it, and covered it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof, and the wall of the pool of Siloah by the king's garden, and unto the stairs that go down from the city of David.

16 After him repaired Nehemiah the son of Azbuk, the ruler of the half part of Beth-zur, unto the place over against the sepulchres of David, and to the pool that was made, and unto the house of the mighty.

17 After him repaired the Levites, Rehun the son of Bani. Next unto him repaired Hashabiah, the ruler of the half part of Keilah, in his part.

18 After him repaired their brethren, Bavi the son of Henadad, the ruler of the half part of Keilah.

19 And next to him repaired Ezer the son of Jeshua, the ruler of Mizpah, another piece over against the going up to the armory, at the turning of the wall.

20 After him Baruch the son of Zabbai, earnestly repaired the other piece, from the turning of the wall unto the door of the house of Eliashab the high-priest.

21 After him repaired Meremoth the son of Urijah, the son of Koz, another piece, from the door of the house of Eliashab even to the end of the house of Eliashab.

22 And after him repaired the priests, the men of the plain.

23 After him repaired Benjamin and Hashub over against their house. After him repaired Azariah the son of Maaseiah, the son of Ananiah, by his house.

24 After him repaired Binnui the son of Hanadad, another piece, from the house of Azariah unto the turning of the wall, even unto the corner.

25 Palai the son of Uzai, over against the turning of the wall, and the tower which lieth out from the king's high house, that was by the court of the prison. After him, Pedaiah the son of Parosh.

26 Moreover, the Nethinims dwelt in Ophel, unto the place over against the water-gate toward the east, and the tower that lieth out.

27 After them the Tekoites repaired another piece, over against the great tower that lieth out, even unto the wall of Ophel.

28 From above the horse-gate repaired the priests, every one over against his house.

29 After them repaired Zadok the son of Immer, over against his house. After him repaired also Sheamiah the son of Shechaniah, the keeper of the east gate.

30 After him repaired Hananiah the son of Shelemiah, and Hanun the sixth son of Zalaph, another piece. After him repaired Meshullam the son of Berechiah, over against his chamber.

31 After him repaired Malchiah the goldsmith's son, unto the place of the Nethinims, and of the merchants, over against the gate Miphkad, and to the going up of the corner.

32 And between the going up of the corner unto the sheep-gate repaired the goldsmiths and the merchants.

when they had completed that which was first allotted them. (27)—The expression "put not their necks," renders it probable, that those who were earnest in the cause, of whatever rank, assisted by their personal labours. "Well-disposed persons, though ever so great," "put their necks," that is, laboured hard, not refusing to carry burdens, &c. Bp. Patrick.

V. 6, 7. Marg. Ref.—The throne, &c. (7) This seems to have been some judgment-hall, to which the governors of the kings of Persia, over the country west of the Euphrates, came, from time to time, to administer justice. Probably, Nehemiah now occupied it; for his particular commission superseded their more general authority.

V. 8-10. (Marg. Ref.) Several persons are mentioned who built, or repaired, the wall which was over against their own houses, or chambers. (Marg. Ref. a.) They lived near the wall; so that this arrangement was most convenient for them: and thus at the same time they provided for their own security, and the common benefit of the city. Perhaps, where any part of the old wall remained, the persons mentioned "repaired;" where none, they "built."

V. 11. It is not known what the expression "the other piece," or, the second measure, (marg.) refers to.

V. 12. Several rulers of half parts of cities are mentioned. (Marg. Ref. f.) It is probable that two superior magistrates were placed over the principal cities, with equal authority, to reside in different parts of them.—Shallum seems to have had no sons; and his daughters, as heiresses, contributed with him to the expense of the work. Perhaps they were widows.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ministers of God should always be ready to labour and venture for the good of their brethren; and those, who have the precedence in rank, ought to take the lead, in setting that good example which gives energy to their instructions.

CHAPTER IV.

Sanballat and his company are very wrath, and mock the Jews: but Nehemiah prays, and builds the wall, 1-6. He discovers that they secretly are plotting against him, and sets a watch, 7-12. He aims the builders, and gives them suitable ears and directions, 13-23.

BUT it came to pass, that when ^aSanballat heard that we build the wall, he was wroth, and took great indignation, and ^bmocked the Jews.

but especially they should teach the people, how to sanctify their secular employments, by beginning, conducting, and completing them, with prayer and thanksgiving, according to the word of God, and to his glory.—The security and prosperity of the church, in every part of the world, is the common cause of all Christians, wherever they reside; and all orders of men should assist in promoting them. No age, sex, or station of life, can free any person from this obligation: every one, in some way or other, may contribute towards it; and where "much is given, much will be required." But alas, the rich and noble generally count it their privilege to be idle, or useless; which they cannot be, without setting an example, mischievous in proportion to their influence; and no wonder that they disregard the proclamations of the prince, which call them to attend the service of God, when they disdain the yoke of the almighty Lord himself. But before him they are upon a level with the meanest of their inferiors; except that a more dreadful punishment, and deeper disgrace, await their impudent and ungrateful rebellion. Frequently the zeal and activity in the cause of God, of those in the inferior orders, expose and condemn the pride, sloth, and self-indulgence, or impiety, of those who are intrusted with more talents; and thus they whom men despise, obtain and engross that "honour which cometh from God."—If in times of prevalent ungodliness, numbers, in different stations would agree, first to look to themselves, and to reform their families as far as they could; and then to use all their influence to promote the general work of reformation, we might expect that much good would speedily be done; and though most men neglect this duty; let those who lament the triumphs of iniquity and the desolations of piety, every one "repair opposite to his own house" or "chamber;" and let all endeavour to do what they can, by their prayers, their example, the education of their children, and pious conversation, to promote and recommend that cause which they have espoused. And when such attempts are directed by men of vigour, prudence, and piety, and conducted with entire harmony, remote from envy, contention, or divisions; and when every one, beside doing his proper work earnestly, is ready to assist those who are overburdened; there is no reason to doubt of success: "for the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace."—May the Lord stir up the hearts of all his people, to lay aside their disputes, and to disregard their worldly interests, in comparison of "building the walls of Jerusalem," and defending the cause of evangelical truth, and vital godliness, against the assaults of avowed enemies. May those offences cease, which weaken the common cause, and expose it to reproach; and may the church of Christ thus fortified, as "a city that is at unity in itself," and adorned by the beauties of holiness, attract the attention, the admiration, and the love of beholders; the reproaches of calumniators, and dismay the heart, or repel the assaults, of every hostile invader! Amen.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1-3. (Notes, 29, 10, 19, 20.) Sanballat, and the other enemies of the Jews, though enraged at them for undertaking to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, were restrained from openly opposing them, partly because they despised their feeble attempts. They concluded, either that they would not venture to undertake such a work; or if they did, that they would make little progress, however earnest they might be. But when they heard that all hands were diligently employed, they became very angry; yet they effected to treat the undertaking with the utmost disdain. Sanballat uttered his sarcasms before his brethren, (or the principal commanders in that neighbourhood) and the army of their sin be blotted out from before thee: for they have provoked thee to anger before the builders.

6 So built we the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof: for the people had a mind to work.

7 But it came to pass, that when ^aSanballat, and Tobiah, and the Arabians, and ^bthe Ammonites, and ^cthe Ashdodites, heard that the walls of Jerusalem were made up, and that the breaches began to be stopped, then they were very wroth,

8 And conspired all of them together to come and to fight against Jerusalem, and to hinder it.

9 Nevertheless we made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch against them day and night, because of them.

10 And Judah said, The strength of the bearers of burdens is decayed, and there is much rubbish; so that we are not able to build the wall.

Samaria; whom he knew to be more inveterate against the Jews, than any other of the tribes under his command: but he supposed what he said would soon be reported at Jerusalem, and tend to discourage the builders. With a mixture of scorn and indignation, he inquired "what the feeble Jews were doing." Could they think of fortifying so large a city? Did they intend to complete such a work in a day, and to secure themselves from interruption, while they spent the next in sacrificing? And what would they do for materials? The stones formerly used in this work were broken in pieces, or decayed, by lying so long under the rubbish; the builders could not "revive" them, or make them new again, nor could they procure any others. With equal disdain Tobiah replied, that a wall built by them, in such haste, and of such materials, would be no security at all; for the weight of a fox running over it would break it down! But this contempt and ridicule induced them to lose the opportunity of attempting more effectual opposition.

V. 4, 5. The Jews were at this time the church of God: they were actually employed in his service: their enemies, without the smallest ground of complaint against them, despised and hated them for his sake; if they succeeded in their designs they would subvert true religion; and their condign punishment would form a salutary example to all other adversaries, and be subservient to the cause of truth and righteousness. So that, zeal for the honour of God, and love to his people, induced Nehemiah to pray, that these scornful might be exposed to that reproach which they cast on the Jews, and become "a prey to their enemies in the land of captivity;" and that their sins might not be covered, or blotted out, by the merciful forgiveness of God: seeing they had endeavoured to discourage the builders, and render them disaffected to their work; (Marg. Ref. i-1.)—Such scriptural requests are prophetic, or declaratory of the judgments of God against persecutors: and the subsequent doom of these nations was an answer to this prayer. (Notes, Ps. 69:21-28. 109:6-20.) "This prayer . . . was confirmed by the destruction of these nations by the Maccabees and their successors." Bp. Patrick.

V. 6. The half, &c.] The whole circuit of the wall was completed to half of the intended height.—Had a mind to work.] They were very much set upon it, and went about it cheerfully, notwithstanding their jeers and contempt. Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref. n.)

V. 7, 8. All these nations, (except perhaps the Arabians,) were subjects of the kings of Persia; and were induced by Sanballat to unite against Nehemiah and the Jews, when acting by the king's commission; so that their attempt was a conspiracy in the most criminal sense. Dreading either the resentment of the king, or the valour of the Jews; they had not hitherto dared to attack them openly, notwithstanding the greatness of their malice. (Notes, Matt. 26:3-5. Acts 23:12-22.) "The last words in the Hebrew are to make an error in it; that is, to put them by the work, or to make them not know which way to turn themselves." Bp. Patrick.

V. 9. The connexion, here marked, between the greatest simplicity and piety, in trusting God alone and seeking help from him by prayer, and the most vigilant and diligent activity in the use of all proper means, is well worthy of notice.

V. 10. Some of the principal persons among the Jews while the work was in hand, represented to Nehemiah, that the people were so worn down, and the remaining labour (especially in removing the rubbish to get materials) was so great, that their design was impracticable, and must be abandoned.

11 And our adversaries said, "They shall not know, neither see, till we come in the midst among them, and slay them, and cause the work to cease."

12 And it came to pass, that when the Jews which dwell by them came, they said unto us "ten times, 'From all places whence ye shall return unto us they will be upon you.'"

[Practical Observations.]

13 ¶ Therefore set I in the lower places behind the wall, and on the higher places, I even set the people after their families with "their swords, their spears, and their bows."

14 And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, "Be not ye afraid of them: 'remember the Lord, which is great and terrible, and fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives, and your houses."

15 And it came to pass, when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, and God had brought their counsel to naught, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one unto his work.

16 And it came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons;

and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah.

17 They which builded on the wall, and they that "bare burdens, with those that laded, every one" with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon.

18 For the builders, every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded. And he that sounded the trumpet was by me.

19 ¶ And I said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, "The work is great and large, and we are separated upon the wall, one far from another."

20 In what place therefore ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us: "our God shall fight for us."

21 So we laboured in the work: and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning, till the stars appeared.

22 Likewise at the same time said I unto the people, "Let every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day."

23 So neither I, nor my brethren, nor my servants, nor the men of the guard which followed me, none of us put off our clothes, saving that every one put them off for washing."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

done at least for the present. This must have been a great discouragement to him, in conjunction with all his other difficulties and dangers. (Notes, Ps. 11:1-3. Hag. 1:2, 4.)

V. 11. Some think, that certain of the princes reported these sayings of the adversaries, in order to intimidate the builders: being themselves weary of the labour, and not cordially affected to the cause. It was not however likely, that Sanballat could introduce into the city so large a number of soldiers, as would suffice to overpower and destroy all the Jews, and stop the work; without being discovered, till he and his troops were in the midst of the builders. Indeed the conduct of those, who reported such a design, was more suited to intimidate the inconsiderate, than to convince wise men that they really expected it would be carried into execution.

V. 12. This verse is of difficult construction; which seems to have been the effect of the abrupt manner, in which the persons intended expressed their excessive terror. They lived near the hostile nations, and some of them were continually coming to Jerusalem with information, that the enemy was preparing to attack the builders from every quarter; and would certainly fall upon them, whether they continued at their work, or attempted to return home. Probably, they meant to put their brethren upon their guard; but such alarming rumours tended to intimidate them and drive them from the work. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 13-15. (Marg. Ref.) "All was at stake, therefore he exhorts them to be valiant, trusting in God, who was stronger than all their enemies." Bp. Patrick. After all the preparations which Nehemiah and the Jews had made, the conspirators did not venture to attack them: and, neither being able to surprise them, nor fright them from their design, they for the present desisted; and so the Jews returned to their work.

V. 16-18. The builders could not possibly have made any progress, if they had literally held a weapon in one of their hands. Indeed it is evident, that they wore their swords by their sides. But the expression is figurative, implying that every man was both a builder, and a soldier.—They worked, and bare arms, by turns: they wore swords at their labour, and those behind them had other arms ready, when the alarm should be given.—Nehemiah, being earnest in the undertaking, employed all his attendants in one way or other about it.

V. 19, 20. The priests were directed to blow the sacred trumpets; (Note, Num. 10:2-10.) and no doubt some of them constantly attended, one at least, in the different stations, which were selected for the purpose, to sound the alarm when needful: and this was a token that the Lord would fight for his people against their enemies. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 22. Those who lived in the adjacent cities and villages, were required to lodge, with one or more servants, in Jerusalem, to guard the work, and be ready for it in the morning; for this was to be attended to in preference even to their own families, as being more exposed to the assaults of their enemies. (Note, 11:1, 2.)

V. 23. Nehemiah and his attendants, in order that they might always be prepared against any alarm, took necessary rest by turns, in their clothes and armour: never undressing themselves, except for cleanliness, or ceremonial purification. Or as the margin renders the words, "Every one went with his weapon for water."

V. 1-12. The pious labours of those who endeavour to promote true religion, must always excite the indignation of such as are "haters of God," and of his truth and holiness: nay, in this case, the wisest and most excellent behaviour will be reproached and derided, as madness and folly.—The most sacred things may easily be represented in so ridiculous a light, as to excite profane laughter: a small measure of wit, united with competent malice, impiety, and impudence, will suffice for these pernicious and profane scoffings; and such presumptuous jesters whet one another's ingenuity, and embolden each other to the most daring blasphemies. Contempt and derision are indeed very painful to us: but they frequently prove the Christian's protection, and give him leisure to effect his designs, without more formidable opposition.—The means which he uses appear feeble to proud despisers; but, by the power and blessing of God, they produce durable and extensive effects: and all the efforts of man, seconded by the power and policy of hell, have failed, and ever will fail, to subvert the cause, which infidels have dreamed would fall of itself, or on the first assault. Ere long the church on earth will triumph over every adversary: and all believers will soon offer the sacrifice of praise, for complete and eternal victory and salvation; notwithstanding the scoffs and rage of their enemies.—When insulted or injured, let us then give up ourselves to prayer: and the supplications of believers, throughout the world, for the prosperity of the church, and the success of the gospel, will eventually be answered in the reproach and merited punishment of all impenitent opposers. So long as they reject the atonement, their sins cannot be covered; and their endeavours to hinder the progress of the gospel will provoke the Lord above all their other sins.—Those, who disagree in almost every other thing, will often unite in persecution. (Note, Matt. 22:15-22.) and that enmity, which at one time dictates contempt and derision, will at another suggest more violent and cruel measures; especially, when the servants of God are active, united, and successful. So that proud scornors are not fit to be trusted with power; whatever professions of candour they may make, or however they may plead for toleration.—When we engage in important and useful undertakings, we should expect discouragement from every quarter. For we shall be tried, not only by the anger, contempt, treachery and cruelty of enemies, but also by the inconstancy and lukewarmness of friends and helpers: and many who wish well to us will weaken our hands, by regarding and reporting the menaces, or slanders, or boastings of our adversaries.

V. 13-23. No opposition will prove any real hinderance to us in our endeavours to do good, if we be led by it to a more simple confidence in God, and to the more diligent use of proper means for obtaining success. A believing remembrance of his power, truth, and love, will prove a sufficient support in every danger; for "if God be for us, who can be against us?" and, however craftily the plots of opposers are laid, he is able to detect them, and to bring to naught all their counsels.—If our enemies cannot fright us from our duty, or deceive us into sin, or find us unwatchful, they cannot hurt us. When ministers of religion or other active instruments, add the example of diligence, courage, self-denial, and pe-

Rephaim Jews complain of the debts which they had unavoidably contracted, and which compelled them to mortgage their lands, and even sell their children, 1-5. Nehemiah rebukes the rich usurers, who oppress their brethren; and obliges them to engage by oath to make full restitution, 6-13. He refuses the governor's customary allowances, and maintains great hospitality at his own charge, 14-19.

V. 6, 7. Nehemiah appears to have possessed a far more bold and eager spirit, than his contemporary Ezra. For, in a situation something similar, Ezra fasted, prayed, wept, and almost desponded: (Notes, Ezra 9:) but Nehemiah, fired with a holy indignation, united by sympathy with the poor sufferers, proceeded immediately, with all his authority and influence, to redress the grievances of his oppressed brethren; neither fearing the resentment of their powerful oppressors, nor doubting but he should be able to effect his purpose. (Notes, Job 29:12-17. 31:33,34. Ps. 82:2-4. Prov. 31:8, 9.) He did not, however, act without consideration; but, having formed his plan after mature deliberation, he first sharply rebuked the nobles and rulers, who, instead of punishing other criminals, were themselves the most notorious usurers and extortioners. And, as he feared lest they should prove refractory, he convened an assembly of the people; that perceiving how generally their conduct was disapproved, they might be shamed into proper concessions, without the necessity of direct compulsion.

V. 8. Nehemiah and Ezra, and other pious persons, had not only, with great zeal and earnestness, endeavoured to establish the security and prosperity of the nation; but they had redeemed from slavery several of the poor Jews who had been sold among the heathen. (Note, Lev. 26:47-55.) What a contrast then was the conduct of these usurers, to their disinterested and liberal love to their countrymen! Did the one company redeem their enslaved brethren, that the other might sell them again for slaves, in direct violation of the divine law? Or did they expect to sell their enslaved brethren to Nehemiah and his friends, even as the Gentiles took their money for such as they redeemed?—It was indeed impossible to reply to this animated and reasonable expostulation. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9. When Nehemiah said, "It is not good that ye do," his words imply that they had acted very wickedly. "A soft form of speech, used when they mean it is very bad. Prov. 16:29. Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref. t).—The exposed and distressed condition to which sin had reduced the nation, and the recent mercies which they had received, combined to enforce it upon them, to "walk in the fear of God," lest he should give them up as a reproach to their enemies; or rather, lest the heathen, who were full of malice, should reproach them, as they justly might, for their avarice and cruelty; and thence take occasion to revile their religion, and blaspheme the name of God himself. (Marg. Ref. u, x.)

V. 10-13. Had Nehemiah, and his brethren and servants acted towards the people as these oppressors did: the authority of the Persian king would have enabled them to exact large contributions, from the rich especially. But as they, instead of such exactions, did not so much as take what was justly their due; (Note, 14:15.) surely the ^ure ought to be ashamed of extorting from the poor ^vwhat they covet ^vhave tience, to their exhortations; others will be stirred up, who were before drawn or driven from their work.—Every true Christian is both a labourer and a soldier, working with one hand and fighting with the other, and called by the sound of the gospel, alternately to his work and to the conflict. We are widely dispersed in our several employments; but we all form one army, and must prepare to unite against the common enemy, in whatever place the assault is made. In this important cause personal and relative interests must be comparatively disregarded; or rather they are most wisely attended to, when we commit them to the Lord, and labour for the benefit of his church. While we stand armed and watching, as for the battle, we shall have the best security for peace; for Satan fears assailing the vigilant Christian: or if we are attacked, "our God will fight for us." Thus must we wait to the close of life, never putting off our armour, till our work and warfare be ended; and then we shall be crowned as conquerors, and welcomed to the rest and joy of our Lord.

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1-5. It seems, that the attention of Nehemiah was interrupted, before the wall was completed, by the affair recorded in this chapter. (Note, 6:15, 16.) Amidst the depredations to which the Jews were exposed, and their attention to self defence, it is likely that tillage was in some degree neglected, and that a scarcity of corn ensued. It is also supposed by learned men, that these events occurred in the sabbatical year; which if indeed it were so, would increase the difficulties of the poor, as well as aggravate the guilt of those, who thence took occasion to oppress their brethren. The nation seems also to have been visited with scarcity for their sins. Such persons, therefore, as were in low circumstances, and had large families, were unable to buy necessary food, except upon credit, and probably at an exorbitant price; and they were compelled to raise money, by borrowing on interest, for the tribute imposed by the king of Persia. (Note, 9:36,37.) Of these difficulties the pious men took advantage, and obtaining mortgages of their lands, got them into their possession: taking usury also for the money, of one hundredth part every month, or twelve per cent. a year, as is generally supposed; which soon reduced the debtors to deep poverty; and at length to the necessity of selling into slavery their sons, and even their daughters; who would be peculiarly exposed in that situation: while there appeared no prospect of redress, no hope of redeeming either their lands or their children, no period to their accumulating distresses, except in entire and perpetual bondage. Yet they were not only of the same nature, but of the same chosen seed, the children of the covenant, equally with the more prosperous Jews. They had the same affection for their children, and accounted a numerous family a blessing, as long as they could provide for it. They had not reduced themselves to this distress by extravagance; but were necessitated to contract debts, through hard times and heavy taxes, and for necessary provisions: and the conduct of their oppressors was contrary to the letter and the spirit of the whole law. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 47:13-26. Ex. 22:

shadow of a right to! Nehemiah therefore urged them voluntarily to leave off their usury, and to restore the lands of their poor brethren, and the increase of money and provisions, which they had exacted from them; to lend them without pledge or usury, in this time of distress; and to wait for payment till better times. This seems the immediate purport of his proposal: though probably he required the free remission of former debts, and the liberating of the children which were in bondage, as in the year of release.—His remonstrance had its desired effect, and the guilty persons promised to do so: but less they should delay, or go back from their word, he called the priests as witnesses, and bound the persons concerned with a solemn oath to perform their promise; and then with a significant action, he denounced the vengeance of heaven against every one who failed of this engagement. To this the congregation solemnly assented, and praised the Lord for sending them so just and merciful a ruler. (Notes, Jer. 34:8-22.)—Thus this matter was in one assembly amicably settled, by motives and arguments taken from true religion, and the law of God: yet one of a similar kind distracted the Roman state for ages, and the oppression was never effectually prevented! (Notes, 2 Chr. 28:9-15. 1 Tim. 6:1-5.)

V. 14-18. This passage must have been added by Nehemiah several years after the date of the transaction before recorded: for that occurred soon after he came to Jerusalem.—The former governors had received from the people an income of about five pounds a day, (as it is generally interpreted:) besides a proportion of bread and wine for their households; while their attendants (as it is too commonly the case) lorded it over the people, and increased their burdens. It is not said who these governors were. Perhaps Ezra, who seems not to have been rich, was necessitated to take sufficient for the expenses of his station; but we may be sure that he allowed of no oppression. It is probable, however, that the Persian governors west of the Euphrates were meant: for they seem to have had authority over the Jews in all civil concerns, until Nehemiah's commission was granted. But he, acting in the fear of God and from the pure motives of religion, and perceiving the poverty of the people, and the burdens in other respects laid upon them, would not receive this customary emolument; and, being very rich and liberal, he supported his dignity with great hospitality at his own expense, all the time he filled that exalted station; setting his rich countrymen an example of receding from legal claims for the public good. At the same time he spared neither trouble nor expense in forwarding the fortifications of the city; and required his attendants to assist also: and would neither himself take, nor allow them to take, any advantage of the poverty of the Jews, by purchasing estates at a low price, as they might easily have done.—In reading this account which he gave of himself, we should remember that he wrote under the guidance of the Holy Spirit: and it was proper that his magnanimous, disinterested, and liberal conduct should stand upon record for an example to all others, what use to make of great riches; how to render authority a public blessing; and how to induce mankind to acts of justice and every good work, by taking the lead in them. (Notes, 1 Cor. 9:13-18. 2 Cor. 11:7-12, 16-20. 12:11-15.)—¹ He loved religion better than riches, and took not his own due, that the people might serve God more cheerfully. . . . They' (his servants) were constantly employed also in the same work, and received no pay for their labour, though it could not be done without neglect of his private business. . . . There is no reason to think that he speaks too much of himself and his own worthy acts; for it was no more than . . . St. Paul was constrained to speak of himself in his epistle to the Corinthians; of whom he would take nothing, that he might stop the mouths of false apostles and covetous people. Bp. Patrick.

V. 19. Nehemiah had shown great kindness to his brethren, to which they had not in strict justice any claim: and he lifted up his heart to God, when recording it, entreating him to show like kindness to him, and to remember him for good. His conduct in these circumstances evidenced that he was a true believer: he desired no recompense from man, but confidently expected one from a merciful God: he evidently spoke and acted as one that knew himself to be a sinner; and he did not expect a recompense as of debt; but in the manner that the Lord rewards a cup of cold water given to a disciple for his sake. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

18 Now that which was prepared for me daily was one ox and six choice sheep; also fowls were prepared for me, and once in ten days store of all sorts of wine: yet for all this required not I the bread of the governor, because the bondage was heavy upon this people.

V. 1-13. Every domestic or relative comfort may become to us an occasion of increasing anguish: we should not then be discontented in the want of children, or anxious about temporal things; but seek our whole happiness from God alone.—It is the peculiar duty and privilege of the poor to trust the promise and providence of God, to supply their families with food and raiment, and to be content with necessities; and of the rich, and of those who have no children, to contribute liberally to the support of their indigent brethren. But alas! too many take advantage of the necessities to which others are reduced, in order to exact of them; that they may increase their own useless abundance, or support their luxurious and extravagant expenses! They wilfully forget that the poor are of the same nature with themselves; and that they have the same wants, inclinations, natural affections, and feelings of pain and suffering. Instead of "doing to others as they would that others should do to them," they grow careless of the welfare, and callous to the miseries of their fellow-creatures; and usurp authority over them as bondslaves, in proportion as wealth, power, and prosperity increase. Every gratification is deemed requisite for the lordly oppressors; but the meanest morsel is good enough for the poor and enslaved, though far better characters than themselves. Thus men prey upon their own species, and, by "despising the poor, reproach their Maker," and aggravate, instead of relieving, those distresses which are always entitled to compassion and assistance; and especially when they are not the effect of extravagance or sloth; but of hard times, heavy taxes, large families, and debts, constituting for bare necessities. (Notes, Prov. 14:31. 17:5. P. O. 1-15, latter part.) Such conduct disgraces even human nature; but who can express sufficient abhorrence of it when adopted by professed Christians? It exposes our holy religion to the reproach, scorn, and abomination of heathens, and gives occasion to our enemies to blaspheme that worthy name, by which these selfish wretches are improperly distinguished. Thus, in all the four quarters of the globe, millions of Mohammedans and Pagans abhor Christianity, through the avarice, treachery, and cruelty of men called Christians!—Well then may the report of such crimes, and the cry of the oppressed, kindle an honest indignation in the breast of every friend of mankind, of his country, and of the gospel. Those in authority should consult with themselves, and with each other, how to redress these scandalous abuses: and if fair means will not do, rough and decisive measures should be employed, notwithstanding the clamours of interested oppressors; if princes would have the blessing of God upon their dominions. Too often nobles and rulers are the chief in such exactions; and their power and affluence seem to defy investigation, and frequently prevent or intimidate those who ought to promote the execution of justice: yet neither rank nor authority should screen them; nay, they should be first punished for an example to others: and if they disregard the rebuke of an individual, the great assemblies of nations should be convened against them. If, however, they can be shamed or persuaded into a proper conduct, harsher measures are ineligible: and when earnestness, affection, wisdom, piety, humanity, a decided example, and cogent reasonings, concur, they will sometimes produce effect beyond expectation.—In expostulating with selfish people, it is good to contrast their conduct with that of others, who are remarkably liberal and benevolent; but it is best to point out to them the example of him, who "though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich." When this is compared with the conduct of those who do not care how many they reduce to the most abject penury or slavery, to enrich themselves; the contrast between the Master and his professed disciples, is so striking that it implies an argument which is silencing, and unanswerable on any scriptural principles. It may further be inquired, whether such oppression is good in itself, or consistent with the fear of God, regard to his authority, and his command to love our neighbours as ourselves: whether men can deny that the enemies of our holy religion do reproach us, because of such practices, and are prejudiced to their irreparable damage: and how they would approve it, if their superiors tyrannized over them, and extorted from them as they do from their inferiors; and what will become of them if God show them no more mercy than they show their poor brethren. (Note, Jam. 2:9-13, v. 13.) If our oppressors and slave-dealers were not, by habits long persisted in, more callous than these Jews, we might be encouraged to entreat and beseech them to leave off their extortion; to make restitution to the injured, and to show mercy to the poor. But alas! these methods are seldom successful! and more conclusive reasons alone prevail. This remains for the magistrate; and here the preacher must leave them. If arguments, expostulations, warnings, and persuasions will not induce them ¹⁴ to repent, and to do works meet for repentance: ¹⁵ we must "shake off the dust of our feet as a testimony against them;" ¹⁶ assuring them that God will soon shake them out from their ill-gotten treasures, and cast them down into destruction; (Note, Jam. 5:1-6.) if they continue to neglect the salvation of Christ, or refuse to imitate his example of loving-kindness and mercy: and when the righteous Judge shall denounce this tremendous sentence against them, all the multitudes of the redeemed will cry, "Amen, and will praise the LORD."—We may further observe, that wise and good men may be of very different tempers, and consequently go about the same thing in a different manner. But they should not censure each other, nor should others censure them: let them serve God according to that ability which he has given them; and let it never be supposed that one mere man is a perfect model for all others to follow.

V. 14-19. We must not do our works to be seen of men, and it is seldom expedient to speak of them ourselves. Yet we should "let our light shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify God;" (Notes, Matt. 5:14-16. 6:1-4.) and sometimes a good man may be called upon, as in his presence, and with an appeal to the consciences of many witnesses, to declare his own disinterested and upright conduct, and the motives of it, for a reproof, an instruction, and an example, to mankind. But it is always necessary for those to set a decidedly good example, who are bold reprovers and active reformers of others, and who speak and act with decision and sharpness against their crimes. In this case a man should give up his right, neglect opportunities of gain, be willing to labour and endure hardship without recompense, and to expend his substance in the support of a good cause. And it is not enough for public characters themselves to avoid evil, and the appearance of it: their servants and dependants must be restrained also. But the fear and love of God, and genuine love of the brethren, will influence a man to do this and much more; and will constrain him to abound in hospitality and every good work, according to the ability that God has given him. These are proper evidences and expressions of living faith; and our reconciled God will look for good, on as much as abound in these fruits of righteousness, according to all that they have done to his people.

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1-4. Sanballat and his confederates, not daring openly to attack the Jews, yet earnestly desiring to prevent the completion of the fortifications, which were daily carried on; formed a stratagem to draw Nehemiah from his station, and to slay or imprison him, when they

5 Then sent Sanballat his servant unto me in like manner the fifth time with an open letter in his hand;

6 Wherein was written, "It is reported among the heathen, and Gashmu saith it, that thou and the Jews think to rebel: for which cause thou buildest the wall, that thou mayest be their king, according to these words.

7 And thou hast also appointed prophets to preach of thee at Jerusalem, saying, There is a king in Judah: and now shall it be reported to the king according to these words. "Come now therefore, and let us take counsel together.

8 Then I sent unto him, saying, "There are no such things done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart.

had him in their power. They therefore, on some plausible pretence, invited him to an interview: but he was aware of their intentions; and on that account would not have gone if he had not been so fully engaged. He, however, only answered, that, being fully employed in a most important work, his presence at Jerusalem was absolutely necessary; and that the work would stop if he left it: why then should he come down, in such circumstances? This was true, and a sufficient reason: and their subsequent importunity could not induce him either to comply, or to enter into any altercation with them; as indeed it was well calculated to confirm his suspicions. (Notes, Judg. 16:6-16.) "They thought, I suppose, that if they did not take this opportunity to overthrow what he had done, before he set up the doors upon the gates, they should never be able to enter the city afterwards, He still persisted constantly to give no other answer; whereby they might understand he was resolved to finish the work."

Bp. Patrick.

V. 5-9. When these most inveterate enemies had been baffled in their design, they devised a more dangerous stratagem.—Sanballat sent, under a pretence of friendship, to inform Nehemiah of a report in circulation, that the Jews were preparing to revolt from the king of Persia, and place him on the throne; and that he employed prophets, who should preach this to them, as the will of God. This Gashmu, or Geshem, (2) attested to be fact, and was prepared to prove: and, being circulated in the surrounding nations, it was likely soon to come to the ears of Artaxerxes, and to bring upon the Jews the whole weight of his indignation.—If such reports had indeed been circulated and credited, there would have been cause for alarm: for those despotic kings, upon the least suspicion, often drove their lieutenants into rebellion, as their only hope of self-preservation. But it was entirely a fiction invented to frighten Nehemiah, or render him incapable of proceeding. The letter was sent open; that the contents, being known to the people, might excite them to mutiny, or to forsake the work for fear of the Persians: (Notes, 2 Kings 18:26-35.) and the proposal of taking counsel with him, as if Sanballat and his friends were desirous of concerting measures for the common safety, was an artful device made in order to get him into their hands, that they might do him mischief. But Nehemiah, being conscious of his innocence, and satisfied that no such reports were circulated, simply denied the charge, and let them know, that he was aware that the whole was their own fiction: and, as they intended to weaken his hands from his work, he took occasion to beg of God to "strengthen his hands." The words, O God, are not in the original; and some interpret the sentence, as Nehemiah's resolution to proceed with increasing earnestness; but they seem rather to be an ejaculation; and the omission of the address implies the holy, yet reverend familiarity, with which this pious man communed with his condescending Father and Friend, and shows that his heart was habitually employed in thinking of his God. (Note, John 20:11-17.)

V. 10-14. Sanballat and his party being once more baffled, employed a still more subtle and dangerous expedient, suborning persons, who were reputed to be prophets, to give Nehemiah evil counsel in the name of God. The principal person concerned was Shemaiah, of whom Nehemiah seems previously to have had a good opinion. He was "shut up" in some chamber adjoining the sanctuary, probably as a token of his own fear, and a sign to Nehemiah of what he ought to do; who, perhaps being sent to, went to confer with him, as a friend and a prophet. The environs of the temple were secured by walls and gates, and a maiah the son of Delaiah, the son of Mehetabel, who was shut up; and he said, "Let us meet together in the house of God, within the temple, and let us shut the doors of the temple: for they will come to slay thee; yea, in the night will they come to slay thee."

11 And I said, "Should such a man as I flee? and who is there, that, being as I am, would go into the temple to save his life? I will not go in."

12 And lo, I perceived that ^hGod had not sent him; but that he pronounced this prophecy against me: for Tobiah and Sanballat had hired him.

13 Therefore was he hired, that I should be afraid, and do so, and sin, and that they might have matter for an evil report, that they might reproach me.

14 My God, think thou upon Tobiah and Sanballat, according to their works, and to the prophetess Noadiah, and the rest of the prophets, that would have put me in fear.

15 So the wall was finished in the twenty and fifth day of the month Elul, in fifty and two days.

16 And it came to pass, that when all our enemies heard thereof, and all the heathen that were about us saw these things, they were much cast down in their own eyes: for they perceived that this work was wrought of our God.

17 Moreover, in those days the nobles of Judah sent many letters unto Tobiah, and the letters of Tobiah came unto them.

18 For there were many in Judah sworn unto him, because he was the son-in-law of Shechaniah the son of Arah; and his son Johanan had taken the daughter of Meshullam the son of Berechiah.

19 Also they reported his good deeds before me, and uttered my words to him. And Tobiah sent letters to put me in fear.

gates of the city were not set up. Shemaiah therefore professed great concern for Nehemiah's safety; and counselled him to take refuge in the temple with him, lest his enemies should come and murder him by night; or that very night, as his words seem to imply. If Nehemiah had followed this advice, he would have lost his reputation for courage and confidence in God; and have appeared weak and contemptible: the people would have taken the alarm, deserted the work, and sought their own safety: the accusations of his enemies would have gained credit, even in the Persian court; and he would have appeared conscious of bad intentions. In short, it would have overturned his whole design, and given his enemies their desired advantage. (Notes, Matt. 4:1-11.) But Nehemiah soon saw through this project likewise. From the nature of the counsel, and by proper investigation, he perceived that Shemaiah was not delivering a message from God; but that he pronounced this prophecy against him, intending his ruin; having been hired by Tobiah and Sanballat, that Nehemiah might contract guilt, and expose himself to reproach.—When the rank of Nehemiah, and his authority, were considered, with his conscious integrity and professed confidence in God, and the importance of his work, it appeared very inconsistent for him to flee and hide himself. In such circumstances, even the preservation of life formed but a subordinate consideration: the support of the public cause, by an example of intrepidity, firmness, and consistency ought to be first considered. Any brave commander would venture his life, when the event of a decisive battle, and the fate of his country were at stake, and would scorn to flee at the appearance of danger: how much more then should Nehemiah venture his, for the glory of God and the benefit of his church! To take refuge in the temple in such a case, would be to prefer a disgraceful short life safety, to the most important of all causes. (Note, Acts 8:1.) Nehemiah, therefore, not only with decided firmness rejected this counsel, as inconsistent with the most evident scriptural principles: but, as Shemaiah, and Noadiah the prophetess, and the other pretended prophets, had most basely sold their services to the enemies of God and religion; he subjoins his prayers for their confusion and disappointment. (Note, 2 Tim. 4:14,15.)

V. 15, 16. This important and difficult work was completed in so very short a time, and under so many disadvantages, that even the adversaries of the Jews were convinced that God had prospered them. He had given them health, strength, courage, and unity; he had restrained their opposers and kept off interruptions; and he succeeded the whole by his blessing: so that "the work was wrought of their God." This dejected their enemies, and made them foreode the future prevalence of the Jews; but it did not allure him to desire a portion among that favoured people. (Notes, 1 Sam. 24:16-22. Esth. 6:13.)—Elul. (15) Answering to part of August and part of September, as it is supposed: for it is not elsewhere mentioned.

V. 17-19. While the wall was building, and afterwards, several of the nobles of Judah were in the interest of Tobiah, and held a traitorous correspondence with him: some of them, having joined affinity with him, had engaged others to swear to serve him, as they had opportunity. Nay, they had the confidence, or rather insolence, to report the good deeds, or supposed excellent endowments, of this bitter enemy of God and his people, to Nehemiah; either intimating to him that he ought to imitate them, or to form an alliance with so worthy a character! And at the same time they betrayed Nehemiah's measures to him. But his pious and excellent man, who had so strenuously pleaded the cause of the oppressed poor, would not, in his present circumstances, exercise the authority, with which he was invested, against his own enemies in Judah, however basely they acted towards him; but persevered in serving his people, notwithstanding their treachery and ingratitude!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. The whole power and policy of Satan and his servants have always been directed against those, who zealously seek the welfare of the church of God; and though often baffled, they are unwearied in their projects.—The rage of persecutors, though terrible, is not so dangerous as the professed friendship of concealed enemies: so that except there is good evidence that men, who have opposed the cause of God, have truly repented, and been reconciled to him, they cannot safely be trusted, when they court the favour of his people, but should rather be suspected of some mischievous design. (Notes and P. O. Ezra 4:1-6. Notes Acts 9:10-16,23-30.) If we received no other damage from their insincere friendship, we should be taken off from our work to no purpose: we should not then suffer ourselves to be overcome by importunity; for we had better offend man by a refusal, than sin against God by compliance.—Even our common lawful business ought to have a decided preference to all matters of mere compliment: how much more then our peculiar duties as Christians, magistrates, or ministers of religion, in proportion to their importance and difficulty!—It is desirable to be constantly engaged in some useful employ; among other reasons, that we may have an answer ready for those invitations and proposals, which we cannot profitably accept, and scarcely know how to refuse. The active servant of God, may, on any such occasion, say, "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down; why should the work cease, while I leave it, and come down to you?" And this is enough, as a reason for avoiding those circles, where no good can be got or done; and which interfere with the duties of the closet and the family, and prevent the redeeming of our time and the improvement of our talents.—The deceitful smiles of the world frequently form our first temptation in the path of duty. But if we steadfastly withstand them, and will not be diverted from our work, we must prepare for reproaches, slanders, and menaces, from the same quarter. Our firmness will be called obstinacy; our zeal, rashness; and our activity, ambition: nay, we shall be warned, that we are about to affront all our friends, and turn them into enemies; and to bring ourselves into dangers and difficulties, from which we cannot extricate ourselves, unless we follow other counsels, and act more circumspectly. The zealous servants of God have also, in every age and place, been unjustly traduced, as rebellious to the ruling powers; and their malicious enemies have often represented their own slanders, as the general sentiments of mankind. (Notes, Ezra 4:11-24. P. O. 7-24.) These misrepresentations tend to weaken the hands of the courageous; and the prejudice, alarm, and draw off such as were helpful to their pious designs. But a clear conscience, a lively faith, an assured persuasion that we are doing our duty, and a zeal for the honour of God, will carry us above all discouragements; and, being satisfied with denying the charges brought against us, it is best to persevere in our proper employment, without wasting time in altercations or self-vindication; only lifting up our prayer to God, to "strengthen our hands," and encourage our hearts.

V. 10-19. A thousand slanders will die away, one after another; while the malice of their authors will be exposed: but one real crime sometimes leaves an indelible stain upon a man's character, and obstructs his future usefulness: let us then fear the least sin far more than a calumny. But

NOW it came to pass, when the wall was built, and I had set up the doors, and the porters, and the singers, and the Levites were appointed,

2 That I gave my brother Hanani, and Hananiah the ruler of the palace, charge over Jerusalem: for he was a faithful man, and feared God above many.

3 And I said unto them, Let not the gates of Jerusalem be opened until the sun be hot; and while they stand by, let them shut the doors, and bar them: and appoint watches of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, every one in his watch, and every one to be over against his house.

4 Now the city was large and great: but the

those temptations are the most dangerous, which come from professed servants of God, and our own friends. When persons of this description, with apparent piety and affection, counsel the zealous to be more moderate and cautious, the diligent "to spare himself," and the bold to take care of himself: the insinuation has great effect. Our appeal, however, in this case, must be to the word of God. (Notes, 1 Kings 22:13, 14. Matt. 16:21-23.) That cannot be from him, let who will speak it, which contradicts his plain precept or truth; or which would induce us to neglect our duty, or prefer our own ease, emolument, credit, liberty, or life, to his glory and the welfare of his church, or which would persuade us to shrink from the cross, or refuse self-denial. Many such counsellors are in the pay of the enemy: for, being induced to timeserving in their own case, from interested motives, they consider the conduct of the more zealous as a reproach, and want to be kept in countenance by their example: and if we knew from what motives grave advice is sometimes given, we should understand from what quarter it came, without further information. We need not always, however, judge the adviser, but we ought in all cases, to try and prove the advice, and without scruple to reject all that is contrary to the word of God. Every man should also study consistency with his profession, former character, station, and engagements. That which is allowable in one man, may be very improper in another; and we ought to venture any thing in a good cause, trusting in the Lord, and committing ourselves to his protection. It is therefore useful frequently to inquire, 'Should such a man as I do so and so? Should I, who am a Christian, a saint, a child of God, a member of Christ, a temple of the Holy Spirit, a ransomed sinner, an heir of heaven; one set up to be "a light in the world," and "the salt of the earth," a preacher of righteousness, and "a steward of the mysteries of God;" should I even appear to be covetous, or sensual, or proud, or envious? Should I yield to impatience, discontent, or anger? Should I be slothful, unbelieving, or unmerciful and unkind? What effects will such conduct in me have upon others? Will not some be grieved, many misled and prejudiced; others emboldened in ungodliness and enmity to the truth? Will not this prevent the effect of my exhortation or persuasions, in my family, among my connexions, or from the pulpit?' Thus, all that God has done for us, or by us, may become an argument for watchfulness, diligence, self-denial, and perseverance.—It is also peculiarly instructive to consider, how others in similar circumstances would act. 'Would Peter or Paul have done so, to save their money, to indulge their sloth or pride, to escape a cross, a prison, or death? Do even the men of the world suffer themselves so easily to be diverted from their object, by every appearance of difficulty or peril?—In all cases indeed they, who would lead others in arduous services, must share the danger and the hardship: and this is the reason, why the enemy of souls employs so many instruments, and forms so many projects, to discourage, or bring a reproach on, the active servants of God. If the shepherd can be frightened away, the flock will be scattered.—Every success of the gospel discourages the enemies of God: and they sometimes perceive that it is his work, and yet hate it the more on that very account: but false brethren are the severest trial to the faithful servants of God. "They who forsake the law praise the wicked!" (Note, Prov. 28:4.) and those who form marriages with the avowed opposers of the gospel, will probably soon join their party, notwithstanding their present pretensions. Many leading men, yea, preachers and prophets in the visible church of God, will be found "workers of iniquity." But under every discouragement, we should "consider Jesus, who endured the contradiction of sinners against himself lest we be weary, and faint in our mind;" and who "laid down his life for his sheep;" that after his example we may persevere in our duty, amidst every danger and opposition not being overcome by the treachery, ingratitude, or perverseness of those around us, but still endeavouring to "overcome evil with good;" and "in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1. The singers, &c.] This either refers to some regulations made by Nehemiah concerning the ministrations of the Levites at the temple; or to his preparations for solemnly dedicating the wall. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 12:27-43.)

V. 2, 3. It has been supposed by some learned men that Nehemiah, having finished the wall, and made other needful regulations, returned to the Persian court; but that he not long after came again to Jerusalem with a new commission: and that on this occasion he placed his brother Hanani, and Hananiah over the city, and gave them instructions how to manage in his absence. The charge, however, here given, and the service required, would be necessary even when Nehemiah resided at Jerusalem: for he could not superintend the gates and the watchmen, without being taken off from other important and numerous engagements. Doubtless Hanani was a proper person, or else Nehemiah would not have preferred him to this important trust; and his journey to Shushan, if it indeed took place, may be supposed to have been undertaken out of a zealous regard to his people and his religion: (Note, 1:2.) but of Hananiah it is expressly said, that "he was a faithful man, and feared God above many." (Notes, 5:14-18. 1 Kings 18:3, 12-16. Ps. 101:6.)—At night he charges them to stand by, and see the gates shut and barred in their presence.' Bp. Patrick.—Ruler of the palace. (2) 'So the house where Nehemiah dwelt is called, because he was governor for the king, and a kind of Viceroy, who did all the king's business, and here gave audience to the people, as the king was wont to do in his palace.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, 2:8.)

V. 4. The walls had been built upon their old foundations, in confidence that God in due time would replenish the city: but there were only a small number of inhabitants, compared with those of former ages; so that large spaces remained unoccupied. This would render it the more requisite that a strict watch should be kept, lest their enemies should scale the walls unobserved: and on the same account it was absolutely necessary that proper measures should be adopted for replenishing the city with inhabitants.

V. 5, 6. This account was taken of the people, in order to bring the tenth part of them to reside in Jerusalem. (Note, 11:1, 2.) and as it proved an useful measure, Nehemiah piously and reasonably ascribed the first thought of it to God, who "put it into his heart." (Marg. Ref. Note, Jam. 1:16-18.) In conducting this business he found the register of those who came up with Zerubbabel; which is here inserted nearly as we had it before. (Notes, Ezra 2:1-67.) Nehemiah found that list of those who came up in the first of Cyrus, as it was taken then: and . . . he called over the names of the families as they lay in order there: . . . but he took the number of them as they were now when he numbered them. Some families were now more in number than they were when that first was made, some were less; and some that were in that list were not to be found now. . . . Some . . . had come from Babel; some . . . were now gone back. Lightfoot, as quoted by Bp. Patrick.—As, however, the greatest part of the families consist of exactly the same number in both places; and the sum total in each, with several other particulars, entirely coincides; it can hardly be conceived that almost a hundred years should have made no greater changes.—Should any, however, conjecture, that 71 And some of the chief of the fathers gave to the treasure of the work twenty thousand drams of gold, and two thousand and two hundred pounds of silver.

72 And that which the rest of the people gave was twenty thousand drams of gold and two thousand pounds of silver, and threescore and seven priests' garments.

73 So the priests, and the Levites, and the porters, and the singers, and some of the people, and the Nethinims, and all Israel, dwelt in their cities; and when the seventh month came, the children of Israel were in their cities.

CHAPTER VIII.

The people are greatly affected; but Nehemiah, Ezra, and the Levites, exhort them to joy in God, to cheerful feasting, and to liberality towards the poor, 9-12. Being instructed from the law concerning the feast of Tabernacles, they keep it with great solemnity, 13-18.

Nehemiah, who was the Tirshatha or governor at this time, as Zerubbabel had been at the first return of the Jews from captivity. The principal persons also concurred with him liberally, according to their ability.

V. 73. This verse so accords with the last verse of the second of Ezra, and the first of the third, that it is doubtful whether it should be understood of the Jews who returned under Zerubbabel; or of what followed after Nehemiah had registered them. If it be taken in the latter sense; and if the events next recorded took place in the same year with the building of the wall, as probably they did; there could be no time for Nehemiah to go to Babylon: (Note, 2, 3,) for the wall was not finished till the twenty-fifth day of Elul, or the sixth month. (6:15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The active servants of God, and of his church, will never want employment; for the completion of one design will make way for the commencement of another.—The fear of God powerfully possessing the heart, produces proportionable fidelity and conscientiousness in a man's whole character and conduct: and it is happy for the community when men of this character have the charge of public affairs.—“Except the Lord keep the city,” the walls are built, and “the watchmen wake in vain;” yet in this and all other concerns, God is to be trusted in the use of prudent and proper means, and not to be tempted by the neglect of them. (Note, Ps. 127:1. P. O. Matt. 4:5-7.)—Magistrates and ministers have more extensive charges than others: but every man ought to watch over his own heart, and his own house, that sin, the worst enemy, may be kept at a distance as much as possible.—Provision is made in the gospel, and in the city of our God, for immensely greater numbers than have yet been enrolled citizens: we should therefore be devising means for replenishing it with inhabitants, as well as for building its walls.—“All holy desires, all good counsels, and all just works are from God:” to him belongs the praise: when good thoughts are suggested; we should be careful not to “quench the Spirit,” by rejecting them; (Note, 1 Thes. 5:16-22, v. 19.) and we ought continually to pray that our God would put more and more of them into our hearts, and enable us to bring them to good effect; and that he would do the same for increasing numbers. Then we might hope that many would concur in designs, as yet scarcely thought of, for propagating the gospel and promoting the salvation of souls.—The Lord delights to honour those who willingly face danger, and endure hardship for his sake: and he knows the names of all his people, and will produce the register at last. But we be to those who turn back from him, loving this present world: and happy they who willingly come to dedicate themselves, and consecrate their substance to his service and glory!

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1, 2. The feast of trumpets was observed on the first day of the seventh month; and the people assembled to celebrate it, though not explicitly required. (Note, Lev. 23:24, 25.)—It is probable that Nehewas before the water-gate; and they spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel.

2 And Ezra the priest brought the law before the congregation, both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding, upon the first day of the seventh month.

3 And he read therein before the street that was before the water-gate from the morning until mid-day, before the men and the women, and those that could understand; and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law.

4 And Ezra the scribe stood upon a pulpit of wood, which they had made for the purpose; and beside him stood Mattithiah, and Shema, and Ananiah, and Urijah, and Hilkiah, and Maaseiah, on his right hand; and on his left hand, Pedaiah, and Mishael, and Malchiah, and Hashum, and Hashbadana, Zechariah, and Meshullam.

5 And Ezra opened the book in the sight of all the people; (for he was above all the people;) and when he opened it, all the people stood up.

6 And Ezra blessed the Lord, the great God. And all the people answered, Amen, Amen, with lifting up their hands: and they bowed their heads, and worshipped the Lord with their faces to the ground.

miah having formed a plan for their instruction from the law, called on them by this early attendance to concur in it. Doubtless the appointed sacrifices were offered; (Note, Num. 29:1-6.) but the courts of the temple not being so spacious or convenient, the congregation assembled in a broad street of the city to hear the law read and expounded: and not only the women, but even the children who were capable of understanding, attended. Accordingly Ezra the priest, being a learned and ready scribe, having long been bestowing much pains on the sacred Scriptures, and preparing correct copies of them, was called upon to take the lead in this service: and though it does not appear that the measure originated with him, yet he most cordially concurred in it. (Note, Ezra 7:6-10.) Some conjecture that Ezra had been at Babylon during the preceding events, in which he is not mentioned; and that he had lately returned: but perhaps he had been privately occupied in his own line for the good of the people, and was well satisfied to leave public affairs entirely to Nehemiah. (Note, 1 Sam. 12:23.)

V. 3. The reading and expounding continued about six hours from “the light” (marg.) till noon; and as most of the people must have stood in the open air during a great part of the time, it appears that they were not soon wearied. (Notes, 9:3. Acts 20:7-12. 28:23-29.) Indeed “the ears of all the people were unto the book of the law,” or hearkening to it with profound attention. (Notes, Luke 19:45-48, v. 48. Heb. 2:1-4.)

V. 4. “Ezra the scribe stood upon a pulpit of wood,” to raise him higher than the people, that he might be the better seen and heard by them all: whence in the Hebrew, it is called a tower of wood; but was not like our pulpits, ... but large and long, that many persons might stand in it, as appears by what follows. Bp. Patrick. Beside, &c.] Some suppose that these persons, being priests or Levites under Ezra's directions, assisted by turns in the service, to prevent his being worn down with it: but others think that they were principal persons who thus showed their concurrence, by standing on his right hand and on his left: or that they were priests or Levites preparing for the same service on future occasions. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5, 6. Ezra having reverently opened the sacred volume; before he began to read first “blessed the Lord, the great God,” he gave him thanks for the good gift of his holy law, and for all his mercies; he adored his great and glorious Majesty; and he implored his blessing on the service before him. To this the people gave a cordial and repeated assent; and, prostrating themselves on the ground, added their most solemn worship. This was an excellent preparation for a due regard to the sacred Scriptures; and the example should be imitated by those who preach and expound, or read and hear the word of God.

V. 7. The persons mentioned in this verse must not be confounded with those who stood by Ezra in his pulpit or tower: for only one of the same name occurs in both places;

*Kelita, *Azariah, *Jozabab, *Hanan, *Pelaiah, and the Levites, *caused the people to understand the law: and the people stood in their place.

8 So they read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading.

[Practical Observations.]

9 And *Nehemiah, which is the *Tirshatha, and *Ezra the priest the scribe, and *the Levites that taught the people, said unto all the people, *This day is holy unto the LORD your God; *mourn not, nor weep. For all the people wept, when they heard the words of the law.

10 Then he said unto them, *Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and *send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto our LORD: neither be ye sorry; for *the joy of the LORD is your strength.

11 So the Levites *stilled all the people, saying, Hold your peace, for the day is holy; neither be ye grieved.

12 And all the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to send portions, and to make great mirth, *because they had understood the words that were declared unto them.

and, no doubt, in that instance, different men of the same name were meant. The persons here mentioned were most of them, if not all, priests and Levites: (Marg. Ref.) and as they "caused the people to understand the law," and were not in the pulpit with Ezra; and as it can hardly be supposed that he merely read, and that they expounded what he read: it is not unlikely that they had separate audiences in different places, where they read and expounded the law, as Ezra did in the station assigned him: for one man's voice could not reach so great a multitude. (Note, Acts 2:14-21, v. 14.) Perhaps different orders and descriptions of persons formed separate circles: and therefore it is added, that "the people stood in their place," as it had been appointed to each of them. "The people stood in their place," *listening both to what was read, and what was delivered as the explication of it. Bp. Patrick.

V. 8. It is here said, "So they read, &c." which confirms the preceding supposition, there being evidently more than one reader.—The persons engaged in this service read the text distinctly, and then gave the interpretation: thus the meaning was declared to the people, with all plainness, and application to their present circumstances and conduct, for their conviction and instruction. This seems the obvious meaning of the passage. Some learned men, however, suppose, that the Jews had forgotten the Hebrew, during the captivity; and that the expo-sitors merely rendered what was read into Chaldee. *But if this were true, why did the prophets write in Hebrew after their return from captivity? and this very book shows the contrary, (13:23,24.) where the Jews' language appears to have been spoken by the people? Bp. Patrick. The opinion indeed is grounded chiefly on Jewish traditions, and customs introduced in later ages, and has no support in the Scriptures themselves.

V. 9. The people, when the law of God was read and explained to them, were convinced of their guilt and danger; and, with tender consciences and broken hearts, mourned for their transgressions. (Notes, 2 Kings 22:8-11, v. 11. Rom. 3:19,20. 7:9-12. Gal. 2:17-21, v. 19.) This was indeed a proper and highly beneficial effect of that service: but as it was a holy festival, which the Lord would have kept with joy and gladness, they were instructed by their teachers to repress their grief, and to turn their thoughts to the mercy of God, and to hope and rejoice in him.—"The Levites," as well as Ezra, "taught the people." (Notes, 2 Chr. 17:7-9. 30:21,22. v. 22. 35:1-3, v. 3.)

V. 10, 11. After the former part of the day had been spent in the ordinances of religion, the people were allowed, and even required, (probably by a public notice from Nehemiah, enforced by the priests and Levites,) to spend the remainder in cheerful feasting, as a representation of the believer's joy in the service of his gracious God. (Notes, Deut. 12:5-7. Ec. 3:1-11.) It is probable that peace-offerings had been offered, and they were now called to feast together on them; and might lawfully drink the sweet or rich wines, which their vineyards produced, in as liberal a manner as consisted with temperance. But then they must remember to send portions to those for whom nothing had been prepared; to the poor, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow.

13 ¶ And on *the second day were gathered together the chief of the fathers of all the people, the priests, and the Levites, unto Ezra the scribe, even ¶to understand the words of the law.

14 And they found written in the law which the LORD had commanded ¶by Moses, that the children of Israel should *dwell in ¶booths in the feast of the seventh month:

15 And ¶that they should publish and proclaim in all their cities, and ¶in Jerusalem, saying, Go forth unto ¶the mount, and ¶fetch olive-branches, and pine-branches, and myrtle-branches, and ¶palm-branches, and branches of thick trees, to make booths, as it is written.

16 ¶ So the people went forth, and brought them, and made themselves booths, every one upon ¶the roof of his house, and in their courts, and in ¶the courts of the house of God, and in ¶the street of the water-gate, and ¶in the street of the gate of Ephraim.

17 And all the congregation of them that were come again out of the captivity made booths, and *sat under the booths; for since the days of *Jeshua the son of Nun unto that lay ¶had not the children of Israel ¶done so. And ¶there was very great gladness.

(Deut. 12:13,19. P. O.) For this would distinguish their religious feasting from the sensual indulgence of carnal men, and complete the due solemnization of the holy day. They were also again reminded, not to indulge grief, on the present festival; (Note, 1,2.) "for the joy of the LORD was their strength." A grateful, adoring recollection of his late mercies, and his ancient distinguished favours to the nation, and powerful interposition in their behalf; with cheerful meditation on his promises and perfections, inspiring confidence, love, and zeal, and leading them to abound in joyful praises and thanksgivings; would fortify their souls to meet the dangers, encounter the difficulties, resist the temptations, and perform the duties, which still lay before them. Whereas, indulged sorrow would induce desponding fear, enfeeble their resolutions, and unfit them for labours, trials, and conflicts. (Notes, Ps. 28:6-8. Prov. 15:13. Is. 12:1-3. 35:3,4. 2 Cor. 2:5-11. Phil. 4:4-7.) "What Nehemiah had said to as many as could hear him, the Levites said to the rest of the people; going about, and persuading them to lay aside their heaviness, and make it a good day." Bp. Patrick.

V. 12. The people in general had not only understood from the law, the will of God and their own sinfulness, but they had learned, in some degree, the grounds of holy rejoicing in the Lord; and having begun by sowing in tears, they soon were enabled to reap in joy. (Note, Ps. 126:5,6.) "This was an extraordinary reason for their mirth, that they were illuminated in divine knowledge, and understood the will of God better than they did before." Bp. Patrick.

V. 13. This was no festival; but, having profited from the word the day before, the people were desirous to be further instructed: and the chief of the fathers, priests, and Levites were the most forward to request Ezra to favour them with an exposition of some other part of the law, being convinced of his superior knowledge in it. Hence it appears, that he instructed even those who assisted in teaching the people.

V. 14-16. (Notes, Lev. 23:34-43. Num. 29:12-38. Zech. 14:16-19. John 7:2,14-17,37-39.) It may be supposed, that Ezra selected those portions of the law, which prescribed solemnities to be observed in the seventh month: especially the feast of tabernacles, as it had not in general been duly observed, and the season was approaching for it. (Note, Jer. 1:22-25.)

V. 17. It is evident that this and the other solemn feasts were totally neglected, at some times, and for a long while together: yet a few instances occur of the feast of tabernacles being kept; and these words must therefore be understood of the exactness, unanimity, and joyfulness, with which it was at this time celebrated. (Notes, 1 Kings 8:63-65. Ezra 3:4.) "They rejoiced in the days of Joshua, that they had got possession of Canaan; and now they rejoiced that they were restored to it, and quietly settled in it." Bp. Patrick. (Notes, 1 Kings 8:66. 2 Chr. 30:26,27.)

V. 18. The reading of the law every seventh year at the feast of tabernacles had been enjoined by Moses, but it seems not in general to have been duly attended to at this time, however, it formed a part of the daily service, through the whole continuance of the feast. (Note, Lev. 31. 10-13.)

18 Also "day by day, from the first day unto the last day, he read in the book of the law of God. And they kept the feast seven days; and on the eighth day was a solemn assembly, 'according unto the manner.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. Pious men of different dispositions may serve the church in their several ways. The studious may, as it were, prepare materials with which the active may work; and the active may make way for the studious, to bring forth their treasures for public use. They ought therefore reciprocally to assist each other; and to welcome such assistance, without envy, competition, or prejudice.—The public reading, expounding, and preaching of God's word has, in all ages, been the grand method of promoting true religion: they, therefore, who are eminently capable of this service, should be called forth from obscurity and retirement, and excited and encouraged to abound in it; all, of every age, sex, or rank, who are capable of understanding, should assemble to attend, and all ought to "give earnest heed to the things which they hear." (Note, 2 Chr. 17:7-9. P. O. 7-19.) Those who are in reputation should set an example of diligence in this respect, and even teachers should be "swift to hear" other ministers, especially younger ministers their approved seniors, as they have opportunity, that they may become more competent for the service.—When the value of the Scriptures, and of the immortal soul, is properly understood; and when we are earnestly engaged, and in a spiritual frame of mind; we shall not soon be weary of divine ordinances. Short sermons, therefore, or tired hearers, prove a very low state of religion: for facts demonstrate, that where the word of God is precious, even inconvenient situations and uneasy postures will be patiently endured: and when ministers, who are themselves in earnest, perceive the people thirsting for instruction, and drinking it in, they will be encouraged to proceed, and to preach as much and as often as required, so long as God gives them health for the work.—Reading and preaching should be attended with solemn worship: the perfections of our God are worthy of all adoration; his mercies call for our most grateful acknowledgment; and a sense of our own wants and unworthiness, love to his people, compassion for sinners, and regard to all orders of mankind, where they prevail, will dictate many prayers and supplications. In these services one person must speak, but all should join in their hearts, and express their solemn and cordial assent.—We cannot too humbly or reverently worship "the LORD, the great God," yet, blessed be his name, we may call him Father in filial confidence and hope.—Whenever we open the sacred volume, we should bless the Lord for that precious gift, and proceed to peruse it, with entire submission to his teaching and authority.—Ministers should endeavour to make it evident to every one, that they preach according to these sacred oracles; producing clear scriptural warrant for all their doctrine; reading the word distinctly, diligently causing the people to understand it, by familiar explanations and illustrations; and applying it in the most plain and simple manner to their hearts and consciences.

V. 9-18. The divine law, when faithfully unfolded, in its extensive demands and righteous sanction, is generally made successful by the Holy Spirit, in bringing the stout, hard, and proud hearts of sinners to tremble, to melt into godly sorrow, and to become abased before God. For it pierces the conscience, fills the soul with dismay, and thus prepares for the sweet consolations of the gospel, by which is "the knowledge of salvation, through the remission of sins." Thus the broken heart is bound up, and the sinner learns to rejoice in God our Saviour.—Both godly sorrow and holy joy are profitable, and beautiful in their season: and it is peculiarly desirable to have all our passions regulated according to the will of God, and the duty of the present occasion. Those who mourn for sin should be comforted, instructed and directed to rejoice in the Lord. This they have abundant reason to do, nover many their sins have been, when they humbly come o trust in his mercy. His salvation is perfectly free; the provisions of his grace are plenteous; "his righteousness is for ever;" his "ways are pleasantness;" his protection sure; his consolations strong; and "hope" in his mercy and of his glory "maketh not ashamed because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost." (Note, Rom. 5:3-5.) Joy in God, if genuine, adds strength and courage to the soul for every duty and for every trial; it inspires resolution for service, and vigour in resisting temptation; it satisfies, and sanctifies, and enlarges the heart in cheerful obedience, and in love to our brethren. Indeed, that joy is a mere counterfeit, which has not these effects: and they are ene-with fasting, and with sackclothes, and earth upon them.

2 And "the seed of Israel separated themselves from all 'strangers, and stood and 'confessed their sins, and the iniquities of their fathers.

3 And "they stood up in their place, and read in the book of the law of the LORD their God one fourth part of the day; and another fourth part they confessed, and worshipped the LORD their God.

4 ¶ Then stood up upon the 'stairs, of the mies to their own sanctification, who always indulge sorrow, even for sin, and put from them those consolations, which are tendered to them by the word and Spirit of God.—It is consistent with godliness, cheerfully and moderately to use the comforts of Providence; when they are received with thanksgiving, and "sanctified by the word of God and prayers," and by liberally communicating to the poor and needy. But those who "eat the fat and drink the sweet," and send no portion, or only scanty pittances, to those for whom nothing is prepared: have not this sanctified enjoyment of their abundance. This especially distinguishes a Christian feast, from the revellings and banquetings which are ranked by the apostles with abominable idolatries. (Note, 1 Pet. 4:3-5.)—Whatever causes a believer to rejoice, should excite him to abound in thanksgivings to God, and liberality to the poor. But his joy will not so much arise from worldly prosperity or indulgence, as from having understood the words of God, and from perceiving that sinners may hope in his mercy, and exult in the prospect of eternal glory.—Those, who have profited by the word of God, will be glad of an opportunity of hearing it on any day, as far as consistent with other duties: and when the people are so disposed, the minister is called to be "instant in season and out of season."—Some portions of Scripture are more suitable to the circumstances of our congregations than others would be, especially when they remind them of present duty. For even true Christians neglect many things, through ignorance and forgetfulness, and for want of particular instructions. But it is admirable, when they no sooner hear the command of God, than they prepare for obedience; when attending on the word excites an increasing appetite for it; and when the ordinances afford great gladness to their souls.—Yet, alas, how little have the commandments and institutions of our God been hitherto observed even among his professed worshippers! So that when individuals or collective bodies, come near the standard of his word, in the power of godliness, they become "men wondered at." But though none, from age to age, or through whole nations of professed Christians, have ever served God, as some small company may aim to do; yet if these be evidently obeying the plain meaning of Scripture, they ought not to be censured as singular, precise, or affected; but to be commended and imitated.—True religion will make us strangers and pilgrims upon earth: and those who refuse conformity to the world, and have their conversation in heaven, and their joy in the Lord, must appear strange and uncouth in the eyes of the servants of that other master, who "worketh in all the children of disobedience."

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1. No doubt the day of atonement, on the tenth day of the seventh month, had been duly observed: the feast of tabernacles lasted from the fifteenth to the twenty-second day of it; (Notes, Lev. 16:29-31. 23:26-43.) and then, only one day having intervened, the people kept a solemn fast, with every customary expression of godly sorrow and humiliation. This seems to have been done, not only by the authority of the governor, but by the general approbation of the people; who, by hearing the law read and expounded, had discovered their own numerous and heinous transgressions, with those of their fathers, and of the nation in preceding ages; (Notes, 8:9-13.) and it was intended as an introduction to their solemn covenanting with God, as afterwards recorded. (Notes, 38. 10:1.) It is probable that Nehemiah had formed the plan of this from the beginning of these solemnities, and had consulted with Ezra, and other principal persons, about the best method of accomplishing his purpose; which he accordingly did with their hearty concurrence.

V. 2. Before the appointed fast began, the Israelites carefully separated from among them those strangers, or Gentiles, who either by marriage or amity were intermingled with them. This was intended as a preparation for the solemn observance: for it seems that the people had again intermarried with the surrounding nations, after Ezra had separated them from their heathen wives. (Notes, Ezra 10:1)

V. 3. The persons afterwards mentioned, (4,5.) stood up to perform the services of the day: and they spent "one fourth" of it in reading the law, (probably expounding it also, as in the former instances, Notes, 8:1-8.) and "one fourth" in confessing their sins, and in other acts of solemn worship.—Some think that six hours, (a fourth part of the twenty-four,) were at once spent in each of these sacred duties.

17 And 'refused to obey, neither were 'mindful of thy wonders that thou didst among them; but hardened their necks, and in their rebellion 'appointed a captain to return to their bondage: but thou art sa God 'ready to pardon, 'gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and 'forsookest them not.

18 Yea, 'when they had made them a molten calf, and said, This is thy god that brought thee up out of Egypt, and had wrought great provocations;

19 Yet thou 'in thy manifold mercies forsookest them not in the wilderness: 'the pillar of the cloud departed not from them by day, to lead them in the way; neither the pillar of fire by night, to show them light, and the way wherein they should go.

20 Thou 'gavest also thy 'good Spirit to instruct them, and 'witheldest not thy manna from their mouth, and 'gavest them water for their thirst.

21 Yea, 'forty years didst thou sustain them in the wilderness, so that they lacked nothing; 'their clothes waxed not old, and their feet swelled not.

22 Moreover, 'thou gavest them kingdoms and nations, and didst 'divide them into corners: so they possessed 'the land of Sihon, and the land of the king of Heshbon, and the land of Og king of Bashan.

23 Their children also 'multipliedst thou, as the stars of heaven, and 'broughtest them into the land, concerning which 'thou hadst promised to their fathers, that they should go in to possess it.

24 So the children went in and possessed the land, and 'thou subduedst before them the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, and gavest them into their hands, with their kings, and the people of the land, that they might do with them 'as they would.

25 And they took 'strong cities, and 'a fat land, and possessed houses full of all goods, 'wells digged, vineyards and olive-yards, and 'fruit-trees in abundance: so they 'did eat, and were filled, and became fat, and 'delighted themselves in thy great goodness.

26 Nevertheless, 'they were disobedient, and rebelled against thee, and 'cast thy law behind their backs, and 'slew thy prophets which testified against them to turn them to thee, and 'they wrought great provocations.

27 Therefore 'thou deliveredst them into the hand of their enemies, who vexed them: and 'in the time of their trouble, when they cried unto thee, thou heardest them from heaven; and according to thy manifold mercies thou gavest them 'saviours, who saved them out of the hand of their enemies.

28 But after they had rest, they 'did evil again before thee: therefore ledest thou them in the hand of their enemies, so that they had the dominion over them: yet when they returned and cried unto thee, thou 'heardest them from heaven, and 'many times didst thou deliver them; according to thy mercies;

29 And 'testifiedst against them, that thou mightest bring them again unto thy law: 'yet they dealt proudly, and hearkened not unto thy commandments, but sinned against thy judgments, ('which if a man do, he shall live in them;) and 'withdrew the shoulder, 'and hardened their neck, and would not hear.

30 Yet 'many years didst thou 'forbear them, and testifiedst against them 'by thy Spirit in 'thy prophets: yet would they not give ear: 'therefore gavest thou them into the hand of the people of the lands.

31 Nevertheless, 'for thy great mercies' sake thou didst not utterly consume them, nor forsake them; for thou art a 'gracious and merciful God.

[Practical Observations.]

V. 20. The Spirit of prophecy, in Moses, Joshua, the seventy elders, and the subsequent prophets, both instructed the Israelites by their ministry, and testified against them when rebellious. (30) The example, conversation, and exertions of those who partook of his sanctifying influences, tended to reform the nation: and no doubt, the Spirit of God, by his convictions, powerfully excited, in the consciences of the unconverted, a sense of guilt and dread of punishment; and in other ways strove with them. But in all these respects 'they resisted the Holy Ghost.' (Marg. Ref. n. o. Notes, Is. 63:10. Acts 7:51-53. 1 Thes. 5:16-22, v. 19. Heb. 10:28-31, v. 29.)—The unspeakable condescension and compassion of the blessed Spirit of God, in his operations upon the polluted souls of sinful men, as well as the beneficent tendency of those operations, are strongly marked in the words 'thy good Spirit.' (Note, Ps. 143:10.)

V. 21, 22. Marg. Ref. Notes, Deut. 8:2-5, 29:5, 6.—Into corners. (22) That is, into all the corners of the promised land, from which the old inhabitants had been driven. Some expositors think, that the situation of Canaan, as favourable to Israel's separation from other nations, being divided by seas, mountains, and deserts, from the most flourishing kingdoms in the world, was denoted by this expression. And indeed it is observable, that Jerusalem, which God chose for the metropolis of his people, was situated at a distance from the sea, and from all navigable rivers; and therefore could not become a place of extensive commerce.—Others, however, suppose, that the dispossessed nations are meant, who were driven into corners.—Heshbon being the city of Sihon, the word should be rendered, 'even the land of the king of Heshbon.' (Notes, Num. 21:21-34.)

V. 23, 24. Notes, Josh. 3:—11. Ps. 105:42-45. Is. 63:11-14.

V. 25. (Marg. Ref. Deut. 6:10-12.) 'They were enriched with the estates of the people whom they destroyed, having houses ready built, and well furnished, together with all sorts of trees planted to their hands.' Bp. Patrick.—Delighted themselves, &c. 'Their highest pleasure indeed ought to have been, in their thoughts, how good God was unto them. But the meaning of these words is no more than this:—That God had bestowed so many blessings upon them, that they took great pleasure in the enjoyment of them.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 26-30. Notes, 2 Chr. 36:14-16. Ps. 106:34-42. Jer. 3:26-30. Ez. 16:20:28-39, 23: Matt. 21:33-39, 23:34-39. Acts 5:51-53.—And testifiedst, &c. (26, 29, 30.) The prophets were sent from God to explain to the people his judgments and mercies: and to testify against them, that their miseries were deserved by their sins, and that far worse would come upon them unless they turned to God with true repentance. (Notes, Jer. 26:12-15, 44:2-6. Zech. 1:5, 6, 7:4-13. Acts 20:18-21, v. 21.)—Saviours, &c. (27.) The deliverers, which God immediately raised up for his people, as the judges, and king David, by whom they were rescued from the miseries into which their sins had plunged them, were all types of the great Saviour, who delivers us from wrath, and from our enemies, that we may become the servants of that God whom we have offended.—If a man, &c. (29) Note, Lev. 18:5.—Thy Spirit, &c. (30) Marg. V. 36, 37. The situation of Israel was very different, at this time, from what it had been under their own kings, and in the days of their prosperity. God had for their sins set over them the kings of Persia, who exacted from them heavy taxes; and who had their property, liberty, and lives entirely in their power. (Note, John 8:30—36.) It was very distressing for the worshippers of God, to be in slavery to the worshippers of dumb idols: and though they had no intention of revolting from the kings of Persia, who allowed them to live according to their own laws, and in many respects showed them much favour; yet they hoped, that, upon their deep repentance, and more entire return to God, he would more effectually deliver them from captivity and bondage, and restore them in du season to their former liberty, independence, and prosperity. (Note, 5:1—8. Ps. 85:1—8. 106:46—48.)

V. 38. 'In consideration of which, they resolved to renew their covenant with God, of better obedience, which they promised under their hands and seals, as the only remedy to procure perfect deliverance. And to make it more effectual, they . . . declare this in the presence of God, at the conclusion of the foregoing confession and prayer.' Bp. Patrick.
(Note, 10:1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. The diligent study of God's word will more and more show us both our own sinfulness, and the plenteousness of his salvation; and thus alternately call us to mourn for sin, and to rejoice in him.—Seasons of comfort should remind us of his condescending goodness, and so lead us to deeper self-abasement on account of our crimes against him: and thus joyful feasts and solemn fasts may properly succeed, and prepare our hearts for each other.—Our sorrow and humiliation for sin must be evidenced to be genuine by separation from it, and from every occasion or temptation to it.—
Every discovery of the truth and will of God should endear to us his sacred word, and render us more unwearied in our attendance on it, and on his worship. A few hours, or even occasionally a whole day, cannot be too long to spend in those exercises and meditations, which are preparations for heaven, and anticipations of its sacred joys: yet alas, we are most of us sooner weary in the courts of the Lord, than the trifler is at his diversions, or even the labourer at his work!—Our God knoweth our thoughts before we speak, and mental prayer may suit our secret intercourse with him: but those who address him in public, should speak audibly and with animation; that the people may hear and be affected: and if, on some occasions, "they cry with a loud voice unto the Lord their God," or be more copious than usual, they cannot be censured, without involving those who are commended in the sacred Scriptures.—Whether we feast and rejoice, or fast and mourn for sin, we should be ready to bless and praise the Lord our God for his eternal excellencies; for his goodness to us as our Creator, and the sole Author of all our temporal comforts; and above all, "as the God of salvation," for the wonders which he has done for his church of redeemed sinners from the beginning hitherto.

V. 7—31. In reviewing this abstract of the Lord's conduct toward Israel, as a people, from the choice and call of Abraham to the days of Nehemiah; we perceive a continued display of his power, wisdom, truth, and love, requited by per-evering ingratitude, and perverse disobedience. All their distinguishing advantages originated from the Lord's choice of them; and accorded to his gracious promises, which he most faithfully performed. But while surrounded with the riches of his bounty, and the demonstrations of his power and presence; while his holy law yet sounded in their ears, Sinai's fiery top was before their eyes, and they were guided, guarded, sustained, and instructed by miracles; they rebelled against God, set up idols, attempted to return to Egypt, and rushed vehemently into their daring provocations! Yet he did not destroy them, he withdrew not his mercies from them, he was ever ready to hear their prayers, to pardon their sins, and to do them good; though they still relapsed into murmurings and provocations! The dealings of the Lord towards them, as a nation, in their warnings, corrections, and deliverances, throughout the whole history; and their ingratitude, perverseness, neglect of his worship, contempt and persecution of his prophets, relapses into idolatry and other enormities; tended to show the riches of his goodness, forbearance, and long-suffering, and the hardness of their impenitent hearts. And even when at length justice demanded, that they should be given up into the hands of their enemies, and their temple, city, and country desolated; his tender mercy prevented him from utterly casting them off!

their miseries were great and terrible; but the Lord was just in all that he had done: yea, it was of his mercies that they were not consumed, and that a remnant had been brought back to their own land; who soon began to show the same spirit of unthankful and perverse disobedience.—And is not their conduct a specimen of human nature? Our land, for instance, has for ages been favoured with deliverances, opportunities, and benefits, little, if at all, inferior to those vouchsafed to Israel: and have we not copied Israel's ingratitude, rebellion, and iniquity? Oh, may a general reformation, while yet we are spared, prevent our being given up into the hands of foreign conquerors, or domestic oppressors! (P. O. Deut. 32:15—35. Ps. 78:12—54. 106:
28—48. Ez. 16: 20:10—19.)

But especially we should each of us study our own history.
Let us look back to the time when we received our being, as rational creatures, from the goodness and power of the Lord; let us recollect the distinguishing advantages of our infancy and childhood: then let us ask ourselves, what were our first returns to our kind Friend and Benefactor? what were our first thoughts, words, and works?—As our faculties began to unfold, revolving years brought with them recent comforts and advantages: and did they not witness increasing perverseness, ingratitude, and ungodliness? Let us divide our lives past into distinct periods, and carefully investigate the mercies and the transgressions of each, until we have brought down the inquiry to the present hour: praying all the while, that the Holy Spirit may assist our recollection, and enable us to form a proper estimate of the Lord's dealings with us, and our behaviour towards him; and to deduce proper conclusions, from the whole, with suitable affections. And if prejudice, ignorance, or self-flattery do not blind our minds, we shall certainly see abundant cause for deep humiliation and for admiring gratitude: and to acknowledge, that all our sufferings have been justly merited, all our comforts mercifully bestowed.—Besides the temporal provision which we have from the Lord's bounty, (though not by miracle;) we are favoured with means and opportunities of becoming wise unto salvation, even beyond what Israel enjoyed in their most favoured times. We have the sacred oracles, now completed and ever at hand, to give us light, and to show us the way in which we should go. We have the Gospel preached among us, and the holy sabbaths and ordinances of our God: but have we never neglected, profaned, and despised them? We have not been without salutary chastisements, and merciful deliverances perhaps in answer to prayer: but have we not requited them by returning unto sin? We have had, not only the testimony of God's servants, but the strivings of his good Spirit: but have we never hated or despised the one, and quenched the other?
nay, we are especially "under the ministration of the Spirit;"
yet perhaps have neglected to pray for his gracious influences, and derided those who did! And have not we proudly cast off the authority of God's law; and as proudly endeavoured to justify ourselves before him? This I say, was the case with us once, perhaps is so still with some who read these observations. Yet, whilst others have been cut off, we are spared! May this review of the Lord's mercies, and of our sins, bring us to true repentance, and induce us to condemn ourselves, as having imitated and vindicated all the trans-gressors who have gone before us: may it bring us to submit to the Lord's righteousness, to accept of his salvation, and to set our seal to his new covenant of mercy and grace: that "being delivered from all our enemies, we may serve him in righteousness before him" the remainder of our days. (P. O. Deut. 9:32:1-14. Ps. 106:1-27. Ez. 20:1-9.)

Even, if by the Lord's choice of us, and his grace given to us, we have on the whole been made and found faithful to him; and if his covenant have been ratified to us with all its precious promises; we shall not only have cause to adore him for these inestimable mercies, and for his Son Jesus Christ, and redemption by his atoning blood, as the Foundation of them all; but we shall, upon every review, see cause to admire his present patience and gentleness, and to lament our ingratitude and disobedience. We have been delivered from a far worse oppression than that of the Egyptian tyrant, and by a far more wonderful exertion of almighty power and love. We are guided by a superior light, sheltered by a more glorious protection, and favoured with stronger consolations, than Israel of old. We feed upon "the Bread of life, which came down from heaven, to give life unto the world;" we drink the Waters which flow from "the Rock of ages" who was smitten for us; we are clothed with the robe of righteousness and salvation; our "feet are shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace;" and the good Spirit of God, is not only our condescending Instructor and Sanctifier, but our Comforter also, who deigns to make our hearts his temple! and we possess the hope and earnest of everlasting glory. But, while we rejoice in the Lord's great goodness to us, what requital do we make? We are, perhaps, kept from habitual and gross disobedience: but we are conscious how often we are setting up our idols, and in heart returning to our bondage; how often we forget him, "grieve his Holy Spirit," and neglect his service; and how often we are kept from still greater revolts by no higher motives than the terror of his judgments, and the anguish of his salutary chastisements, which yet we soon forget, when he has mercifully removed them. Were he not slow to anger and ready to pardon, he would have cast us off long ago. But our heavenly Advocate still pleads, and we are spared; and his mercies and our privileges are continued to us!

V. 32-38. On every review of our past conduct we shall find cause to lie down ashamed before God, praising his great goodness, and confessing our great unworthiness. Let us then thank him for his merciful corrections, as well as his consolations: let us renew our acceptance of his salvation, and ratification of his covenant: let us beg of him to deliver us from all other lords, that we may serve him more entirely. And let us frequently meditate on these subjects, that we may be preserved humble, thankful, and watchful; as well as be prepared for communion with him in every sacred ordinance.—It behoves all men to reflect seriously and frequently on the greatness, justice, and goodness of the Lord; to consider the terrible power of his indignation, and the infinite value of his favour. And they should remember that pride, obstinacy, and impenitence are the sins which ruin the soul; and that no former crimes can ruin the penitent believer. Let then the sinner trust in the mercy of him, who is a God of pardons, and "ready to forgive;" let the backslider repent and return to him; let the believer walk humbly with him: let the prosperous fear abusing the Lord's goodness: let the afflicted be warned to seek deliverance from the wrath to come. Let us ever remember that all our miseries are the effect of sin, and that they are all less than we deserve, though hard for us to bear: let us then pray to be delivered from "the bitter pains of eternal death;" and not forget to entreat the Lord to deliver his church from the oppression of every enemy, and to establish it in the beauty of holiness.

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 1. We have several times read of the rulers, priests, and people solemnly covenanting before God, to renounce their transgressions and to adhere to his service. Such transactions were sometimes ratified with sacrifices, solemn oaths, and other expressions of the most entire consent to them: but this is the only instance met with of a covenant drawn up in writing, and ratified by the names and seals of the persons who consented to it. (Notes, 29. Ez. 24:3-11. Deut. 26:17-19. 29:10-15. Josh. 8:30-35. 24:14-27. 2 Kings 11:17-20. 23:3. 1 Chr. 15:12-15. Is. 44:3-5. P. O. 1-5.) No doubt this was devised, to render the transaction more affecting; and that the deed might remain as a durable testimony, under their own hands and seals, against those who violated it: the explicit ratification thus given would render the persons concerned more sensible of their obligations, and more afraid of transgression; it would fortify them against temptation, preserve them from forgetfulness, and to be a constant argument for them to insist upon in cautioning, exhorting, or reproving each other.—The same uses may be made of those professions, and of that consent to the new covenant, which are virtually made in baptism, whether personal or that of our children; and in the Lord's supper: when those ordinances are duly explained and understood, administered and attended on. (Notes and P. O. Matt. 19:13-15. Note, 26:26-28. P. O. 26-35.)—To this covenant the chief persons alone set their names and seals; and Nehemiah the governor first. Perhaps Zidkijah was one of the princes; but no other name is explicitly mentioned of that order.

V. 2-8. All the persons named in these verses were priests, and no doubt chief persons of that order.—It is observable that Eliashib, the high-priest, is not found among those who sealed the covenant. And it is probable, that neither he nor his sons favoured the measure. (Notes, 13:4. 23-30.)—But it is more surprising, that the name of Ezra is wanting. There is no reason to think that he was absent; for he was at Jerusalem both before and after this transaction: (8:1-6. 12:36.) perhaps he was confined by sickness or infirmity; or the measure so entirely originated with him, and he had bestowed so much pains in drawing up the covenant, and inducing others to consent to it, that his further ratification of it was deemed superfluous. (Note, Deut. 38-12.)

V. 9-17. Most, if not all, of the Levites, who led the public devotions, set their seal to the covenant; which may be admitted as a probable indication that they were earnestly and zealously engaged in that service. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 9:4,5.)

V. 18-27. (Marg. Ref.) Many of the names, here mentioned, are found among those who returned with Zerubbabe about ninety years before: so that, either the same names were preserved in the several families; or the principal descendants of these persons, when in general favourable to the measure, subscribed their family name; that is, the name of that ancestor, by relation to whom they were commonly distinguished. (Luke 1:61.)

V. 28. (Marg. Ref.) All that did not subscribe and seal, because they were too many, yet gave their consent to what the forenamed persons did: and not only the men, but their wives and their children, who were arrived at years of discretion, engaged themselves. Bp. Patrick. All they that had separated, &c.] It is probable, that these were the proselytes, who, having been circumcised, separated from their idolatrous connexions, and kept the law of Moses, and thus were numbered among the native Jews

V. 29. By the nobles, in this place, the superior persons, priests, or Levites, are evidently meant. The body of the people, who were old enough to be capable of knowing what was intended, assembled together, and signified, by some appointed token, their consent to the covenant, as in the presence of God, and under the solemn obligations of an oath, and to an awful curse, which was denounced against such as violated these obligations. (Notes, 5:10—13. Deut. 27:15—26.) They engaged in general to obey the whole law of Moses: and some instances were specified, in which they had been remarkably guilty, or which were peculiarly enjoining.

V. 30, 31. (Notes, Ezra 9:10)—It seems, that Nehemiah would not venture, in the present unsettled state of the Jews, to exercise his authority, to prevent their heathen neighbours from vending provisions at Jerusalem, or in the cities of Judah, on the sabbath: and he supposed, that by engaging the people, in this solemn manner, not to buy of them, they would be discouraged from coming. But he soon found that many evaded or violated the engagement, without regard to consequences; and he was afterwards constrained to employ coercive measures. (Notes, 13:15—22.)—It may be concluded from this narrative, that none of the Jews attempted to carry on trade on the sabbath; though some of them would buy of the Gentiles. This gave the latter an undue advantage, and proportionably injured the Jews. And certainly, carrying on trade is as contrary to the law of hallowing the sabbath, as any kind of labour whatever.

The exaction, &c. (31) Notes, 5:6—13. Lev. 25:1—7. Deut. 15:2, 3. Matt. 18:23—35.

V. 32, 33. A half shekel apiece had been collected for erecting the tabernacle in the wilderness; and that sum is supposed to have been paid from time to time, for the purchase of sacrifices, and other expenses of the stated worship. (Notes, Ex. 30:11—16. 2 Kings 12:4, 5. Matt. 17:24—27.) But it was now computed, that one third of a shekel apiece, or something less than a shilling of our money, annually, would suffice for these expenses. During prosperous times, the treasury of the temple, replenished by voluntary oblations, it is probable, supplied what was wanted: and on some occasions the liberality of kings and nobles rendered such contributions unnecessary: but the circumstances of the nation now required them.

V. 34. It is probable, that the wood for fuel had hitherto been provided for, out of the same fund with the sacrifices: but on this occasion it was deemed expedient to bear the expenses of it in another manner.—It seems each family engaged to send in a regular supply at an appointed time every year; and that the order was determined by lot.

V. 35—39. (Marg. Ref.) The priests had a tithe out of the tithe given to the Levites; and one of them was at this time appointed to see that it was regularly paid. (Notes, Num. 18:25—32. 2 Chr. 31:5—10. Mal. 3:7—12.)

are bound by his authority to obey all his commandments, and are exposed to a tremendous curse for violating them. But our offended Sovereign, in his infinite mercy, has provided a better covenant, according to which believers are delivered from this curse, and are taught and enabled to perform a new, sincere, and acceptable obedience through Jesus Christ. The word of God calls us to consent to this covenant, and to partake of its inestimable benefits. And when we humble ourselves in godly sorrow and penitent confessions of sin; when we receive the atonement and reconciliation, which the Mediator of this covenant has made by his precious blood, and seek for mercy through his intercession by fervent prayers; and when in our purposes of renewed obedience, we rely on his gracious assistance:—when these transactions have indeed taken place in secret, between God and our souls; our public sealing and ratifying the covenant at the Lord's table, or in any other solemn way, will be honourable to God, edifying to his people, and encouraging to ourselves; and we may trust in him to enable us to fulfil the engagements with acceptance. But where this preparation of heart is wanting, such public engagements are mere hypocrisy.

(P. O. Deut. 29:1—17. 2 Chr. 30:13—27.) This detestable evil will intrude in all great revivals of religion, after every possible precaution; and the hypocrites must be left to the judgment of a heart-searching God. But men should be warned, that those, who in baptism, or at the Lord's table, or when admitted into the ministry, or in any other way, engage for what they do not intend, or afterwards do not take care to perform, bring themselves under an additional and most awful curse: as do all, who trifle with solemn oaths, vows, or sacramental engagements of any kind; and all who despise, oppose, or pervert the salvation of the gospel.—Every one, capable of understanding, is alike required to obey the law of God; all need the mercy and grace of the gospel; all therefore should be exhorted and commanded, to set their seals to the new covenant; but those who have the pre-eminence in society, or take the lead in religious exercises, ought to set the example; and they, who are remarkably zealous to reform others, should be as remarkably zealous in every good work.—The influence and example of the great will always have a powerful effect upon their inferiors: their distinction is truly honourable, when, in following and cleaving to them, others follow and cleave to the Lord: and the Christian equality of the common people, as brethren to believing nobles and rulers, will influence them to render the more heartily "honour to whom honour is due." (Notes, 1 Tim. 6:1—5.)

V. 30—39. We are not sincere in covenanting with God, except we aim to obey all his commandments: for if we allow ourselves in violating one of them habitually, it is evident that we have not truly repented of our former transgressions in that particular; that we have never sought forgiveness of them in a due manner; that we do not desire the sanctifying Spirit of Christ, to mortify that peculiar sinful propensity: and consequently that we are not born of God, nor interested in the righteousness and atonement of Christ. But real believers, at least all who by a consistent conduct give satisfactory evidence that they are such, place the strongest guard where there there is the greatest danger; and ^{use} every means of avoiding and subduing those sins, which have the most foiled and ensnared them. Separation from intimate connexions with ungodly persons, and the conscientious hallowing of the Lord's day, are peculiarly attended to by them. They do not infringe upon the sacred rest, and they show a marked disapprobation of those who do; they carefully remove occasions of transgression, and previously so arrange every thing, as may best promote the strict observance of that holy day. Their attention to the ordinances of God is connected with justice to all men, and mercy to those who need it. They do not exact from their brethren, when it would distress them; but they trust the Lord to repay what they thus lose or expend. Though they be poor or burdened, they will find a little to spare for pious or charitable uses; that little will be accepted; and, coming from great numbers, will form large funds for useful purposes.—As the ordinances of God are the appointed means of sustenance to our souls, the believer should not grudge the expense of them. Even the poor will part with their money for bread: yet most men leave their souls to starve! But the covenanted servant of God "honours him with his substance and with the first-fruits of all his increase," and that brings a blessing upon the rest: (Note, Prov. 3:9, 10.) nor will he defraud or withhold from the ministers, who labour in the word and doctrine, their proportion of a suitable maintenance.—In short, we must render to God, to the king, to magistrates, superiors, equals, inferiors, relatives, the poor, and all men, that which is due unto them, according to the precepts of Scripture; if we would evidence ourselves to be the true disciples of Christ, and "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour;" and in these things we must persevere, exhorting one another, "not to forsake the house of our God," but to "walk before him in all his ordinances and commandments blameless."

NOTES.—CHAP. XI. V. 1, 2. Jerusalem at this time was not a place of trade, by which men could acquire wealth; the houses in general were not built; the adversaries of the Jews were peculiarly hostile to that city, both as the capital of the people whose returning prosperity they envied, and the place of the holy worship which they hated; so that the cities of Judah, and other situations in the country, afforded a fairer prospect of living in peace, and of growing rich. It was therefore deemed a necessary policy, to replenish Jerusalem, for the re-establishment of the Jews as a distinct nation; and for the honour of the temple, and the protection of the priests and worshippers from the invasion of their enemies. It was "the holy city," as chosen, separated, and sanctified of God, for his immediate presence and instituted worship; as a type of Christ and even of heaven; and as the place, where the greatest advantages of becoming holy were enjoyed: yet the Jews, in general, had not sufficient zeal or desire after spiritual improvement, to venture the consequences of removing thither. Some indeed willingly offered themselves to dwell there; whom their brethren commended, thanked, and prayed for; though few would imitate them. The rulers fixed their residence there, that the courts of justice, and the business connected with public affairs, might draw others; and in addition to these inhabitants, one family in ten was expressly required to remove to Jerusalem; the selection of which was by lot referred to the determination of God. "They cast lots, that among ten men, it might be known whom God chose to come thither: and the lot falling by divine appointment upon such a person rather than another; no doubt, he removed the more contentedly to this city." Bp. Patrick. (Notes, Lev. 16:8—10. Prov. 16:33. Acts 1:23—26.)

V. 3. Israel, in this verse, seems to mean those of the ten tribes, who went up with the Jews. These were not required to dwell at Jerusalem, but inhabited the cities and villages allotted to them. The priests, Levites, Nethinims, and the children of Solomon's servants likewise, were left at liberty when not attending at the temple. (Notes, 1 Chr. 9:2. Ezra 2:55—58. 7:24—26.)

V. 4—6. "Shiloni" (6) is supposed by some to mean Shelah, Judah's youngest, but only surviving son, by Shuah, the Canaanitess. (Marg. Ref. n.) If this supposition be well-grounded, his descendants seem to have been included in the four hundred threescore and eight valiant men of Perez, or Pharez; that being the principal branch of the tribe of Judah.—Many or most of these men of Judah seem to have offered themselves willingly to dwell at Jerusalem, in order to defend it: and probably they were, in general, heads of families: yet the number from this principal tribe, appears to have been comparatively small.—In Chronicles a larger number is stated; but it may be supposed, that the descendants of Zerah, (Judah's other son,) are also included, of whom no more than one is mentioned in this chapter. (24. Note, 1 Chr. 9:3—9.)

V. 7—9. The greatest part of Jerusalem was situated within the lot of Benjamin; and it is probable, the men of that tribe were most desirous of having it fully replenished.—Nearly twice as many of this tribe, (we may suppose, with their families,) dwelt there, as of Judah. (Note, 4—6.) The number does not exactly agree with that in the ninth of the first of Chronicles; though there can be no reasonable doubt that the same events are intended; but at this distance of time it cannot be supposed that such trivial variations can in all cases be accounted for; though the reason of them might be very evident to contemporaries.—From this time Jerusalem was progressively re-peopled; so that it soon became very populous, and continued to be so, till destroyed by the Romans.—Joel was the principal commander of the Benjaminites in Jerusalem: and Judah, or Hodaviah, (Marg. Ref. p.) was his deputy, or the next in authority under him.

V. 10—15. (Notes, 12:10—21. 1 Chr. 6:4—15.) Eliashib was high-priest at this time, under whom it is probable Seraiah had the oversight of all the temple-service. (11) Some think the captain of the temple held the same office. The priests, mentioned in these verses, seem to have constantly resided at Jerusalem, by their own choice; besides those who attended by rotation. (Note, 3.)

the worship which the priests performed in the courts and in the sanctuary.

V. 17. (Note, 1 Chr. 9:12-18.) The time of the morning and evening sacrifices were the principal hours of prayer to the Jews, who then resorted to the courts of the temple for their devotions.—These were, it seems, preceded by the solemn praises and thanksgivings, which the Levites rendered to the Lord with music and singing. Over this sacred service, Mattaniah, as preceptor, stately presided; while the others acted under his direction. Mattaniah was descended from Asaph; and the others were descendants of Jeduthun, chief singers in David's time. (Notes, 22,23. 1 Chr. 16:37-43. 25:1-7. 2 Chr. 5:12,13. 29:25-30.)

V. 19. The children of Akkub and Talmon are numbered with the porters which came up with Zerubbabel, at least ninety years before the events here recorded. In this and a few other instances of the same kind, it must be supposed, either that the children were called by the names of their fathers; or that, having distinct names of their own, they were also honoured in their public characters, by the names of their more illustrious ancestors. (Note, 10:18-27.)

V. 22, 23. (Note, 17.) The descendants of Asaph, presided over some business relative to the temple and its repairs at those times when not employed in psalmody. And they were appointed to this service, because, it seems, the king of Persia allowed those employed in singing the praises of God a daily stipend, besides their maintenance as Levites. (Notes, 1 Chr. 9:31-33. p. 33. Ezra 7:24-26.)

V. 24. (Note, 4-6.) Pethahiah, a descendant of Judah by Zerah, probably was the king's commissioner, who received the tribute, made all payments from it, and managed all such matters, according to orders from the king. It was an advantage to the Jews to have one of their own nation in this office: and it may be supposed he was preferred to it, through Nehemiah's recommendation.

V. 25-36. No account is given of those who dwell in the cities and villages; but merely of the places which they inhabited. (Marg. Ref.) 'Some of these great towns, or cities without walls, had little villages about them; but others had only fields, and no villages in them, the country being as yet but thinly peopled.... The rest of the Levites, who were not settled at Jerusalem, were distributed among the people of Judah and Benjamin, who dwell in the forenamed towns, whom they taught and instructed in religion and good manners.' Bp. Patrick. (36) professed Christians too commonly "seek their own, and not the things of Jesus Christ;" and that but few have such an attachment to holy places and holy things, as to renounce their secular pleasures or advantages for the sake of them. Yet surely, where opportunities of spiritual improvement most abound, and where Jesus, the Ruler of our holy city, especially resides, there we should delight to dwell; in preference to all interests and connexions, and notwithstanding persecutions, tribulations, perils, and losses. Otherwise, where is our "meetness for the inheritance of the saints in light?" and how shall we be willing to depart hence, and be "absent from the body, that we may be present with the Lord?" For, to the carnally minded, the perfect holiness of heaven, of its inhabitants, its employments, and its pleasures, and especially of that God who there unveils his glory, would be proportionably more intolerable, than the feeble beginnings of holiness in his church on earth, which excite their disgust, their weariness, and aversion.—The remnant who now willingly offer themselves to self-denying and perilous services, from love to the church, and zeal for the glory of God, shall in the event be distinguished with peculiar honour, and are now entitled to it from their brethren: indeed many will commend and wish them well, who, alas! have not courage to imitate them.—Our habitations are allotted us by the Lord himself; and we should not be hasty in changing them, though they be in some respects incommodious, especially if convenient for attendance on divine ordinances, and giving us opportunities of doing good.—In every station in life we should "study to be quiet, and to do our own business" with diligence; and, at all times, to cast our cares on God, and make our requests known unto him, by prayer with thanksgiving. We cannot be so afflicted, as not to have cause for gratitude; nor so prosperous, as to have no need of prayer: these duties should therefore be always united. (Notes, Phil. 4:5-7. 1 Thes. 5:16-22. v. 17,18.) And to this the ministers ought to stir up the people, not only by their exhortations, but by their example likewise.—As far as the Lord sees good, he makes even strangers to protect and provide for his servants. Let us then seek first his favour and his glory; let us study contentment, patience, and usefulness in our several stations; and wait in cheerful hope for an admission into the holy city of our God above.

NOTES.—CHAP. XII. V. 1-6. It is evident that Ezra here mentioned, was not Ezra the scribe, but a priest of the same name, who came up to Jerusalem long before with Zerubbabel. Several of the names are the same with those of the priests who sealed the covenant: (Marg. Ref.) but different persons must be intended; and it is evident the 6 Shemaiah, and ⁷Joiarib, Jedaiah, ⁷Sallu, Amok, Hilkiah, Jedaiah. These were the chief of the priests and of their brethren in the days of Jeshua.

8 Moreover the Levites: ⁹Jeshua, Binnui, Kadmiel, Sherebiah, Judah, and ¹⁰Mattaniah, which was over the thanksgiving, he and his brethren.

9 Also Bakkukiah and Unni, their brethren, were over against them in the watches.

10 ¶ And Jeshua begat Joiakim, Joiakim also begat Eliashib, and Eliashib begat Joiada, 11 And Joiada begat Jonathan, and Jonathan begat Jaddua.

12 And in the days of Joiakim were priests, ¹³the chief of the fathers: of ¹⁴Seraiah, Meraiiah; of Jeremiah, Hananiah;

13 Of Ezra, Meshullam; of Amariah, Jehohanan;

14 Of Melicu, Jonathan; of Shebaniah, Joseph;

15 Of Harim, Adna; of Meraioth, Helkai;

16 Of Iddo, Zechariah; of Ginnethon, Meshullam;

17 Of Abijah, Zichri; of Miniamin, of Moabiah, Piltai;

18 Of Bilgah, Shammua; of Shemaiah, Jehonathan;

19 And of Joiarib, Mattenai; of Jedaiah, Uzzi;

20 Of Sallai, Kallai; of Amok, Eber;

21 Of Hilkiah, Hashabiah; of Jedaiah, Nehaneel.

22 ¶ The Levites in the days of Eliashib, Joiada, and Johanan, and Jaddua, were recorded chief of the fathers: also the priests, to the reign of Darius the Persian.

23 The sons of Levi, the chief of the fathers, were written in the book of the Chronicles, even until the days of Johanan the son of Eliashib.

24 And the chief of the Levites: Hashabiah, Sherebiah, and Jeshua the son of Kadmiel, with their brethren over against them, to praise and to give thanks, according to the commandment of David the man of God, ward over against ward.

same names were sometimes preserved in their families. (Notes, 10:13-27, 11:19.)

V. 7. "The chief of the priests" seem to have been the heads of the courses established by David; with the next in succession to the high-priesthood, and the ruler or captain of the temple. Perhaps the twenty-four courses were not yet fully re-established. (Notes, 1 Chr. 24:6-10. Ezra 2:36-39.)

V. 8, 9. Note, 11:17. Jeshua. (8) Marg. Ref. p.—In the watches. (9) It is probable that some of the Levites, in succession, sang the praises of God in the sanctuary during the watches of the night. (Note, Ps. 134.)

V. 10, 11. Jaddua is, by most expositors, supposed to have been high-priest in the time of Alexander the great, and to have met that haughty conqueror in his pontifical habit; in consequence of which Alexander greatly favoured the Jews. (Note, Dan. 8:5-7.) It is, however, evident that he was high-priest long after the events which are mentioned at the close of this book; for Joiada then filled that office: (13:28.) and as "Darius the Persian," (22) is supposed to mean the last king of Persia, who was subdued by Alexander about a hundred years after the principal transactions recorded in this book; this verse, and the twenty-second, must have been added by another hand after the death of Nehemiah. (26)

V. 12-21. These verses contain a catalogue of the next race of chief priests, as descended from those who came up from Babylon with Zerubbabel. (Note, 1-6.)—The marginal references show the variations which occur in respect of their names.

V. 22-26. It is not easy or perhaps possible to determine, why these few names of the Levites were here inserted: but probably they were persons who greatly distin-

Meshullam, Talmon, Akkub, were porters keep ing the ward at the thresholds of the gates.

26 These were in the days of Joiakim the son of Jeshua, the son of Jozadak, and in the days of Nehemiah the governor, and of Ezra the priest, the scribe.

27 ¶ And at the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem, they sought the Levites out of all their places, to bring them to Jerusalem, to keep the dedication with gladness, both with thanksgivings, and with singing, with cymbals, psalteries, and with harps.

28 And the sons of the singers gathered themselves together, both out of the plain country round about Jerusalem, and from the villages of Netophathi;

29 Also from the house of Gilgal, and out of the fields of Geba and Azmaveth: for the singers had builded them villages round about Jerusalem.

30 And the priests and the Levites, purified themselves, and purified the people, and the gates, and the wall.

31 Then I brought up the princes of Judah upon the wall, and appointed two great companies of them that gave thanks, whereof one went on the right hand upon the wall toward the dung-gate:

32 And after them went Hoshaiah, and half of the princes of Judah,

33 And Azariah, Ezra, and Meshullam,

34 Judah, and Benjamin, and Shemaiah, and Jeremiah,

35 And certain of the priests' sons with trumpets; namely, Zechariah the son of Jonathan, the son of Shemaiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Michaiah, the son of Zaccur, the son of Asaph:

36 And his brethren, Shemaiah, and Azrael, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethaneel, and Judah, Hanani, with the musical instruments of David the man of God, and Ezra the scribe before them.

37 And at the fountain-gate, which was over against them, they went up by the stairs of the city of David, at the going up of the wall, above the house of David, even unto the water-gate eastward.

V. 27, 28. Jerusalem was the holy city, and the wall was builded under the immediate superintendence and blessing of JEHOVAH: it was therefore proper that it should be dedicated to that God who was there worshipped by solemn praises, thanksgivings, prayers, and sacrifices; and thus committed to his gracious protection. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Deut. 20:5 —9, Ezra 6:13-18, Dan. 9:24-27.)

V. 29. Builded, &c. The singers had builded villages for their residence about Jerusalem: that they might be near at hand when wanted; and attend more conveniently and regularly at the temple.

V. 30. When the priests and Levites had prepared themselves by the appointed purifications, they proceeded to purify the people, the gates, and the wall; probably by sprinkling the water of purification, with suitable prayers and supplications. (Marg. Ref. Note, Lev. 16:15, 16. P. O. 1-19. Notes, Num. 19:.)

V. 31-43. The princes and priests were divided into two companies on the wall, Ezra going before the one, and Nehemiah after the other. (36, 38.) Thus they marched in a row opposite ways in the circuit of the wall, the priests sounding the sacred trumpets, the Levites playing upon instruments and singing the praises of God, and the people accompanying

When they met on the opposite side of the city, they marched in a body to the temple, and offered sacrifices and thank-offerings, with rejoicings: for God, by enabling them to rebuild and fortify the city, had made them to rejoice with great joy: so that the praises and acclamations of so large a multitude were heard at a great distance. (Notes, Ezra 3:12, 13. Jer. 31:10-14. Matt. 21:8-11.)—Zechariah (35) being descended from Asaph, of the line of Gershon, was no priest; and the word ^a“namely” is improperly added. (Marg. V. 44-47. The attendance and behaviour of the priests and Levites on this solemn occasion, seem to have greatly rejoiced the pious Jews. “They were so glad to see such a great concourse of them, (27, &c.) and that they performed their duty upon this occasion to the general satisfaction of all that were present; that their hearts were enlarged in love to them.” Bp. Patrick. They were therefore zealous to provide for them, that their incomes might be properly paid, and regularly and impartially distributed by persons appointed for that purpose. Thus matters were settled, as they had been in the days of David and Solomon. (Marg. Ref.) Similar regulations had been made in the days of Zerubbabel; but they were completed, and put upon a durable footing, in the time of Nehemiah. (Notes, 13:5-14. 2 Chr. 31:5-19. Mal. 3:7-12.)—The tithes were paid to the Levites, as sanctified to their use; and the tithes of them, by the Levites, sanctified to the use of the priests. (Notes, 10:35-39. Num. 18:25-32.)—“The porters ^a“kept the ward of purification,” (45) that is, duly observed the orders about purification, in not suffering any unclean person or unclean thing to come into the house of God.” Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord raises up a succession of worshippers from age to age, who honour him by their “sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving.” (Note, Heb. 13:15, 16.) and who derive instruction and encouragement from the examples and actions of those who have long before entered into their rest.—The believer should undertake nothing which he cannot, and does not, dedicate to God, by seeking his direction and assistance in it and his blessing upon it; by designing his glory, and by giving praise for success in all things: and whatever he possesses he should commit to the Lord’s keeping and disposal, and use it according to his will. (Note, Ps. 30: title. P. O. Note, Col. 3:16, 17, v. 17.)—But all that we sinners do must be purified by the blood of sprinkling, and by the grace of the Holy Spirit, or it cannot be acceptable unto God: and the whole church of God, which is “the lot of his inheritance,” and the object of his choice and delight, being descended from fallen Adam, must be thus purified and rendered holy unto

CHAPTER XIII.

On reading the law, Israel separates from the mixed multitude, 1-3. Eliashib having, during Nehemiah’s absence, prepared a chamber at the temple for Tobiah, Nehemiah on his return, being grieved and indignant, causes the chamber to be cleaned, 4-9. He reforms abuses concerning tithes and offerings, 10-14. He prevents the profanation of the sabbath, 15-22. He opposes those who had married strange wives, and drives away the grandson of Eliashib, 23-28. His other services and prayers, 29-31.

ON that day ^athey read in the book of Moses in the ^baudience of the people; and therein was found written, that ^cthe Ammonite and the ^dMoabite should not come into the congregation of God for ever;

2 Because they met not the children of Israel with bread and with water, but ^ahired Balaam against them, that he should curse them: howbeit ^bour God turned the curse into a blessing.

3 Now it came to pass, ^awhen they had heard the law, ^bthat they separated from Israel ^call the mixed multitude.

the Lord.—Those who would be instrumental in the conversion of sinners, and the sanctification of believers, must begin with themselves: and when we “acknowledge God in all our ways,” he will so prosper and comfort us as often to cause us to rejoice with great joy.—If our families be trained up to join in the solemn worship of God, and in attendance on his word, we may hope that they will share our joys and privileges; and the prosperity of the church gladdens the hearts of all true believers: and in all cases where the ministers of religion generally come forward in support of pious and benevolent measures, with zeal and alacrity, to the satisfaction of all concerned; they take the most effectual method not only of doing much good, but of securing the liberal and cheerful payment or contribution for the supply of themselves and families. When their affections are thus lively, they will be disposed to love and rejoice in those ministers who are instrumental to their comfort; and to care for their suitable provision. They ought, however, to attend to their several duties, and not to be anxious about their interests; and then God will stir up the hearts of the people to supply them in a comfortable and creditable manner. This they may receive with songs of praise and thanksgiving, and need not fear sanctifying a portion even of their portion, to the more immediate service of God and the support of his cause.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIII. V. 1-3. Some expositors think that the events recorded in these verses took place several years after those related in the former chapter, and that, during a great part of the time, Nehemiah had been absent at the Persian court. But the introductory language seems rather to imply, that they occurred immediately: though the words “on that day” may be understood with some latitude, and may mean, about that time. Indeed, it can hardly be supposed, that when the gross abuses stated in the sequel of the chapter prevailed, the public reading of the law at the temple was regularly kept up, and the people zealous to reduce it to practice. It is therefore more probable that, before Nehemiah left Jerusalem, or when he was first gone, the law was publicly read and expounded to the congregation. (Notes, 8:1-8, 13-18. 9:3, 4.) At that time the passage here referred to, coming in course, excited peculiar attention; and the people of their own accord, without compulsion, but with the concurrence of the magistrates, resolved to separate from the intimate society of the mixed multitude, especially of Ammonites and Moabites, according to the meaning of the law. (Marg. Ref. a, b. Notes, Deut. 23:3-6.) Whether intermarriages with any of those nations, even when fully proselyted, or with their descendants, was, or was not, intended in the law, many instances would doubtless occur, in which a separation would be required; for probably few, in comparison of those with whom alliances had been formed, were fully proselyted.—It is supposed, that from the days of Ezra

4 ¶ And before this, ^hEliashib the priest, ⁱhaving the oversight of the chamber of the house of our God, was ^jallied unto Tobiah :

5 And he had prepared for him ^ka great chamber, where aforetime they laid the meat-offerings, the frankincense, and the vessels, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine, and the oil, (which was commanded to be given to the Levites, and the singers, and the porters,) and the offerings of the priests.

and Nehemiah, synagogues were built in every part of the land where God was publicly worshipped, and his word read, expounded, or preached ; which produced very salutary effects. (Notes, 2 Kings 4:23. 2 Chr. 17:7-9.) A copy of the Scriptures then extant, was placed in every synagogue ; and the whole was divided into portions or lessons for the several days when they were accustomed to assemble for that purpose ; and probably the same became the general usage in the court of the temple. (Luke 4:16-22. Acts 13:13-15. 15:21.)

V. 4. Eliashib had before this formed an alliance with Tobiah the Ammonite, but perhaps secretly to escape censure. (Notes, 2:9, 10, 19, 20. 4:6, 17-19.) It does not appear, that the high-priest, to whom that his sons were, married to any of Tobiah's family : but he was confederated with him, and related to those who were ; and his authority over the temple and all its buildings, enabled him to commit that scandalous profanation which is next related.—The word rendered "chamber," seems to mean the out-buildings of the temple in general.

V. 5, 6. Nehemiah was first commissioned by Artaxerxes in the twentieth year of his reign ; and this journey to court took place in his thirty-second year ; so that twelve years had elapsed, concerning which we have little account : and the following events occurred after the end of those years.—When Nehemiah was gone from Jerusalem, Eliashib seems to have invited Tobiah thither : and though all Moabites and Ammonites had been publicly excluded from the congregation, according to the law of God ; yet the high-priest admitted this unprophesied Ammonite, who was as bitter an enemy to Israel as Balak or Balaam had been, even into the chambers of the temple ; casting out thence the consecrated oblations to make room for him ; (2 Chr. 31:11-13. v. 12. Notes, 10:35-39. 12:44-47. 1 Kings 6:5, 6. 1 Chr. 28:11-13.) and probably forming him a sumptuous apartment, by throwing many of them into one.—This was as great contempt of the divine law, profanation of the temple, and disgrace of the priesthood, as could well be imagined.

King of Babylon. (6.) The kings of Persia reigned over Babylon, and all the regions which had been before subject to the kings of Babylon : but their general residence was at Shushan, or Susa. (1:1) This was much more distant from Jerusalem than Babylon : but Nehemiah, most probably, journeyed thither on this occasion.

V. 7-9. Nehemiah is generally supposed to have been absent from Jerusalem only one year : but the great abuses which prevailed at his return favour the opinion of those who think that about five years intervened ; and there is nothing in the text that militates against it for the words rendered "after certain days," or, at the end of days, (6. marg.) do not necessarily signify after one year, but may denote a longer time. (Dan. 12:13. Heb.) At his return, however, he was greatly afflicted and displeased at what had taken place, and he soon exercised his authority in the most decided manner, to clear the temple from such a profanation, and to purify the chambers in the appointed and accustomed manner, that they might be restored to their proper use. (Notes, 5:6, 7. Ezra 9:3-15. 10:2.)—It is probable that Eliashib was dead before and the singers, that did the work, were fled every one to his field.

11 Then ^acontended I with the rulers, and said, ^bWhy is the house of God forsaken ? And I gathered them together, and set them in the place.

12 Then ^cbrought all Judah the tithes of the corn, and the new wine, and the oil unto the ^dtreasuries.

13 And ^eI made treasurers over the treasures, ^fShelemiah the priest, and Zadok the scribe ; and of the Levites, ^gPedaiah : and ^hnext to them was Hanan the son of ⁱZacur, the son of ^jMattaniah : for they were ^kcounted faithful ; and ^ltheir office was ^mto distribute unto their brethren.

[Practical Observations.]

Nehemiah returned ; and that Tobiah did not choose to appear at Jerusalem to see after his furniture.

V. 10-13. As the high-priest had ventured profanely to appropriate the chambers of the temple for the entertainment of an Ammonite ; perhaps he had also sacrilegiously intercepted the revenues of the Levites for similar purposes or the people were reluctant to pay their tithes, when so bad a use was made of them, or so little care was taken of them. (Note, 12:44-47.) Thus the Levites were driven from their office, to get their living by cultivating the land, or by other secular employments ; and the temple service, especially the psalmody, was interrupted.—The rulers, who had been left in trust, ought to have exerted their authority to prevent such mismanagement ; but probably they had concurred in it, out of regard to their secular interests ; and therefore Nehemiah called them to account for this misconduct. Malachi is supposed to have prophesied about this time, and he seems repeatedly to refer to these abuses. (Notes, Mal. 1:9-14. 3:7-12.) "It is a great artifice of the devil, by his instruments to defraud the ministers of religion of their necessary maintenance, that he may thereby abolish religion itself." Wolpius, in Ep. Patrick. (Notes, 1 Cor. 9:7-18.) Nehemiah, however, not only recalled the Levites, but having it seems, without difficulty, induced the people to bring their tithes, he placed the distribution of them in the hands of faithful men, in whom all parties reposed confidence. (Notes, 2 Chr. 31:15-19. Acts, 6:1-6.)

V. 14. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.) It is evident Nehemiah expected that the Lord would remember his good deeds, and vouchsafe them a gracious recompense, notwithstanding defects in them, and sin in him ; after the same manner, as even the apostle Paul assures the Hebrews, that the Lord would "not forget their work and labour of love," not as claiming "a reward of debt." (Notes, 20-22. v. 22. Rom. 4:4, 5. Heb. 6:9, 10.) But it is also worthy of notice, that these "good deeds," or kindnesses, "which he had done for the house of God," consisted in using his authority to protect the ministers of religion, from those who defrauded them of their maintenance. There have been times, when enriching the clergy beyond all bounds, and without requiring them to attend on their ministry, was thought the height of piety : but it may be questioned whether rulers may not at present, as well as for some past ages, have run into the contrary extreme ; and Nehemiah's firm and prudent conduct in this respect, might be imitated with good effect by Christian princes and rulers. (Note, 2 Chr. 31:5-7. P. O. 1-10.)

V. 15-18. It can hardly be supposed, that in the course of one year of Nehemiah's absence, such gross and open profanation of the sabbath should have been introduced and become general. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 10:30, 31. Num. 15:30-36. Jer. 17:19-27. John 5:10-16.)—The Tyrians, as heathens, not regarding the sabbath, tempted the Jews to break it by trading with them. The magistrates must have been shamefully negligent, in conniving at these abuses, till they were become so notorious ; and, the nation seemed to be proceeding, in many respects, as their fathers had done, in provoking the wrath of God against them.—Fish. (16) How far the concessions made by our laws, in respect to the 16 There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem.

17 Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath-day?

18 Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the sabbath.

19 And it came to pass, that, when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the sabbath: and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the sabbath-day.

20 So the merchants and sellers of all kind of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice.

21 Then I testified against them, and said unto them, Why lodge ye about the wall? if ye do so again, I will lay hands on you. From that time forth came they no more on the sabbath.

22 And I commanded the Levites, that they should cleanse themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates, to sanctify the sabbath-day. Remember me, O my God, concerning this also, and spare me according to the greatness of thy mercy.

23 ¶ In those days also saw I Jews that had married wives of Ashdod, of Ammon, and of Moab:

24 And their children spake half in the speech of Ashdod, and could not speak in the Jews' language, but according to the language of each people.

25 And I contended with them, and cursed them, and smote certain of them, and plucked off their hair, and made them swear by God, saying, Ye shall not give your daughters unto their sons, nor take their daughters unto your sons, or for yourselves.

26 Did not Solomon king of Israel sin by these things? yet among many nations was there no king like him, who was beloved of his God, and God made him king over all Israel: nevertheless even him did outlandish women cause to sin.

27 Shall we then hearken unto you to do all this great evil, to transgress against our God in marrying strange wives?

28 And one of the sons of Joiada, the son of Eliashib the high-priest, was son-in-law to Sanballat the Horonite: therefore I chased him from me.

29 Remember them, O my God, because they have defiled the priesthood, and the covenant of the priesthood, and of the Levites.

30 Thus cleansed I them from all strangers, and appointed the wards of the priests and the Levites, every one in his business;

31 And for the wood-offering, at times appointed, and for the first-fruits. Remember me, O my God, for good.

selling some fish on the Lord's day, agree with this, or consent with hallowing the sabbath, may fairly be questioned.

V. 19. Some of my servants, &c. (Notes, 4:16, 18-23. 5:14-18.) Nehemiah could place more dependence in this case on his own attendants, than on the porters appointed by the nobles and rulers of Judah; who probably countenanced this profanation, in order to indulge their luxury or avarice.

V. 20-22. The merchants and dealers, from Tyre and other places, still hoped to find some opportunity of trading on the sabbath, either with the citizens or countrymen; but, as they were endeavouring to induce the Jews to break the law of God, and also that of the rulers of Judah; Nehemiah solemnly assured them, that if they did not desist, he would proceed to inflict punishment on them.—He also appointed the Levites to watch the gates, perhaps supposing they would be more regarded than his servants; and also, because he would have the watch continued, even if he should leave Jerusalem.—This reformation seems to have produced very durable effects; for in the after ages of the Jewish church, they became exact even to superstition in observing the sabbath. Probably, his other regulations were at last equally effectual; but we have no more canonical history concerning them.

Remember, &c. (22) Nehemiah had besought God to "remember his good deeds;" (14) but to show that he did not think there was any proper merit or worthiness in them, which required a reward as a debt, in justice due to them, he here explains himself; and desires to be rewarded, or rather pardoned, out of God's free goodness, according to the greatness or the multitude, of his mercies. Bp. Patrick. (Notes, 3:1. Ps. 106:1-5. 119:132. Luke 23:39-43.)

V. 23-30. Some time must have elapsed after Nehemiah's departure from Jerusalem, before the children of these marriages could betray their origin by their speech: for though the Ashdodites lived near the Jews, their language was, it seems, materially different from theirs: yet probably they were not contracted before that event, and the reform seems to have been made very soon after his return. This separation also evidently was diverse from that recorded before; (Note, 1-3.) for that was the effect of reading the law, and by voluntary consent; this by more vehement and coercive measures.—When this zealous reformer found these undeniable proofs of the people's guilt, he began without delay to put a stop to the evil. He contended, or vehemently argued, the matter, with those who were concerned; proving the criminality and the fatal effects of such marriages from the Scriptures, in an unanswerable manner. (Notes, 1 Kings 11:1-13.) He then denounced the awful curse of God upon such as persisted in disobedience, and perhaps excluded them from the congregation: he punished such as were refractory, with immediate scourging; and put others of them under a disgraceful stigma, by plucking off their hair; (Note, Is. 50:5, 6.) and made them all solemnly swear to separate from their heathen wives. (Notes, 5:10-13. 10:29-31. Ezra 9:10. Mal. 2:1-16.)—Among the other examples of his impartial severity, he banished the grandson of Eliashub, who had married the daughter of Sanballat. (Notes, Lev. 21:7-15.) Josephus relates that this young man was named Manasseh, and that at his instance Sanballat and the Samaritans built their temple upon mount Gerizim, in opposition to that at Jerusalem; at which he officiated, in some measure, according to the ritual appointments of Moses. Hence schism, emulation, and rancorous enmity between the two nations, were perpetuated to future ages. The authority, which Nehemiah exercised over the priests, even the chief of them, and in requiring the ministers of religion to attend to their several duties; as well as over the people, requiring them to render the priests and Levites their dues; is no where expressly enjoined on governors, or kings, in the Mosaic law: yet as this exercise of authority was entirely limited to the things which God had commanded, he performed a good and acceptable service, and properly improved his talents. (Notes, 2 Chr. 29:3-5. 30:12.)

Remember them, &c. (29) By visiting with some evident token of his holy indignation the principal offenders in these things, the Lord would both display his own glory, and give a salutary warning to others, tending to repress such gross violations of his law; and even to bring the offenders to repentance. (Notes, Lev. 10:1-3. 21:7-15. Num. 25:11-13. 1 Cor. 5:1-5. v. 5.)

V. 31. "It becomes all men, especially those who are employed in divine things, if they have done any thing that is good, to remember it was by God's help and assistance, not by their own power: beseeching the Father of mercies, by his only begotten Son, to make it serviceable to his church, and his own good." Wolphius, in Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14. The public reading of the whole word of God, as far as it relates to our faith and practice, is of immense advantage to true religion. Though we have heard many sermons, and have the Bible in our hands, few of us are acquainted with every part of it; and many live in violation of its injunctions, through ignorance or inattention. But when those who are well disposed hear the word of God condemn any part of their conduct, they are reminded to repent and seek forgiveness, and to break off the sin, and attend to the neglected duty.—They who are unkind to the people of God, who attempt to afflict them, or who wish them evil, will be punished as his enemies; and he will turn their curses and malicious deeds into blessings to those who trust and obey him.—Alas, how prone is human nature to evil! When the restraints of influence or authority are withdrawn, men break out into those excesses of which they see and incapable; whilst the eye and authority of God are treated with almost atheistical disregard.—They who have enjoyed the highest dignities in the visible church, by divine right, have sometimes been equally distinguished by sacrilegious impiety; and have openly committed those crimes, which the most profane of the laity would not have ventured on without hesitation and dismay! But if sacredness of character will not restrain men from setting a pernicious example, it should not shelter them from censure, or condign punishment by the magistrate. (Note, 1 Kings 2:26,27.)—As nobles have too generally, in every age and country, deemed themselves privileged to disregard the divine law and many human institutions obligatory on others; magistrates and reformers need courage and resolution, as well as impartiality and integrity.—Our grief, for the sins which we witness, should stimulate us to oppose them strenuously, according to the duty of our station, and not induce us to yield to unmanly despondency.—It is not expedient, that magistrates or ministers should be long absent from their respective charges: for “one sinner” will often take advantage of their absence, to “destroy much good;” and by example, insinuation, and influence, to subvert their most useful regulations, and to render their designs abortive.—Few ministers are willing, during any length of time, to labour in their ministry, under the pressure or the prospect of indigence; but most of them will turn to more profitable occupations: so that depriving the clergy of a suitable maintenance forms one of Satan’s projects, for causing the house and ordinances of God to be forsaken. Pious magistrates should peculiarly attend to this: they should take care that the ministers of the gospel be encouraged to labour in their proper places, and that a competent provision be made for them: nor are any, except men of approved fidelity, to be trusted in such concerns.

V. 15—31. The due observance of the Lord’s day forms an important object for the attention of those who would promote true godliness: and the Christian magistrate ought to take proper measures, to prevent that sacred season from being profaned by labour, mer handise, or those occupations which subserve the luxury and pride of life. As nobles too commonly set the example both of breaking God’s commandments, and of disregarding royal edicts, in this particular; they must first be contended with, and vigorously urged to do their duty. Persons in the higher orders of society, in general, little consider the extensive effects of their misconduct: if they violate the holy day of God, others will assuredly imitate their impiety; and thus the floodgates of ungodliness and wickedness will be thrown open, which must bring the wrath of God on guilty nations. Indeed the present state of unprincipled profligacy in these kingdoms, may be shown in great measure to originate from the relaxed sentiments which some time after the reformation began to prevail concerning the spending of the sabbath. And as these have gained ground, that holy day has gradually become more and more the time when the lower orders are let loose to corrupt one another.—It is also necessary to repeat the observation, that improper marriages have ensnared the wisest men, have always led to apostacies, and tended to the ruin of succeeding generations. The children readily imbibed the principles of the infidel or ungodly parent, and soon forget the very language and appearance of piety; or substitute a corrupt religion, in the stead of that which comes from God, and leads to him.—Mothers likewise have a very important part allotted them in forming the manners of mankind; as the care of children in their tender years is almost wholly committed to them. It is therefore of great consequence to society, that females should be educated with a view to this most momentous employment, and qualified for the discharge of their duty in it. Every wise man, in contracting marriage, should consider whether the object of his choice would be a proper person to intrust with his children’s tuition: and every mother should consider, that this is the most important part of her charge, and most of all calls for assiduity, prudence, and circumspection. (Note, 2 Tim. 1:3—5. P. O. 3:10—17.)—In opposing fashionable and reputable vices; conclusive arguments, vehement expostulations, apposite examples, awful declarations of the wrath of God, and solemn engagements, may have the proper effect upon some: but the magistrate must often use more vigorous measures. He must disgrace, punish, and chase away the ringleaders in iniquity, without respect of persons or families: and severity to a few will prove mercy to many. But in every thing the word of God must be our rule: the love and fear of God, our principle; and his glory, in the prosperity of his cause and the welfare of his people, our great object. Whilst we labour in this manner, we must expect the enmity and opposition of a wicked world: but we may go on with confidence in the spirit of faith and prayer. We may humbly hope, that the Lord will “remember us,” and “not wipe out our services;” that he will “spare us according to the greatness of his mercy,” accept both our persons and our defective endeavours to glorify him: and if he “remember us for good,” that will be a sufficient recompense and happiness for ever: while those who impatiently sin against him, and especially such as disgrace a sacred character and office, will be remembered for evil, to their everlasting shame, confusion, and destruction, except timely and deep repentance intervene.

THE BOOK OF ESTHER.

THIS book, which takes its name from the principal character introduced in it, was most probably written by Mordercat, and inserted in the canon of Scripture by Ezra and his assistants, or by their successors: but there are various opinions among learned men on this subject. The Jews have always held the book of Esther in great veneration; and as the feast of Purim (9:26—32.) is observed by them to this day, no reasonable doubt can be entertained concerning the authenticity of the narrative. It contains no prophecies, and it is not referred to in the New Testament.—It is also very remarkable, that there is no clear mention in it of any of the names, by which the God of Israel is distinguished in the sacred oracles: yet it is most evidently intended, as well as admirably calculated, to illustrate the doctrine of Providence; and the methods and instruments by which the great Ruler of the world accomplishes his purposes, both of mercy and of judgment. Perhaps this omission of the names of God was designed. Facts, well known, concerning the worshippers of JEHOVAH, the plot formed for their extermination, and the wonderful deliverance vouchsafed them, were thus simply stated; in order that every reader might judge for himself, whether these facts did not demonstrate, that the God of the Jews was the great Ruler of the universe. Had this conclusion been urged on the Gentiles by a despised Jew, their prejudices might have been excited: let the simple narrative then speak for itself.—Several additional chapters are found in the Apocrypha, but they never were in the Hebrew text, and the Jews never received them: they principally contain repetitions, or additions, intended to decorate the history; but which in fact destroy its simple unity and beauty: and some things in them cannot be reconciled with the times to which the history must relate.—The preceding books form a specimen of the Lord’s care of his church in Judea: this shows his favour to the nation in general. A large proportion of those, who continued in remote countries, were very blameable in so doing: yet he would not leave the nation in the hand of their enemies, or deprive them of his mercy and grace on that account.

CHAPTER I.

Ahasuerus, king of Persia, makes a royal feast, 1—9. He sends for Vashti his queen, who refuses to come, 10—12. By the advice of his counsellors, he divorces her, and asserts, by a public decree, the authority of men over their wives, 13—22.

NOW it came to pass in the days of ^aAhasuerus, (this is Ahasuerus which reigned

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1, 2. It is evident, that the events recorded in this book, took place after the complete establishment of the Persian empire; for Shushan was the royal city of Persia. (Note, Neh. 1:1. Dan. 8:1.) Various have been the opinions of learned men concerning from India even unto Ethiopia, over ^aa hundred and seven and twenty provinces:)

2 That in those days, when the king Ahasuerus sat on the throne of his kingdom, which was in ^aShushan the palace, the Persian king, who is here called Ahasuerus. I am, however, fully satisfied with the arguments of Dean Prideaux: and consequently suppose Ahasuerus to have been Artaxerxes Longimanus, who commissioned both Ezra and Nehemiah. The extent of his dominions, his liberality, and his

3 In the third year of his reign, 'he made a feast unto all his princes, and his servants; the power of Persia and Media, the nobles and princes of the provinces, being before him:

4 When he showed the riches of his glorious kingdom and the honour of his excellent majesty many days, even a hundred and fourscore days.

5 And when these days were expired, the king made a feast unto all the people that were present in Shushan the palace, both unto great and small, seven days, in the court of the garden of the king's palace;

6 Where were white, green, and blue hangings, fastened with cords of fine linen and purple to silver rings and pillars of marble: the beds were of gold and silver, upon a pavement of red, and blue, and white, and black marble.

7 And they gave them drink in vessels of gold, (the vessels being diverse one from another,) and royal wine in abundance, according to the state of the king.

8 And the drinking was according to the law; none did compel: for so the king had appointed to all the officers of his house, that they should do according to every man's pleasure.

9 Also Vashti the queen made a feast for the women in the royal house which belonged to king Ahasuerus.

10 ¶ On the seventh day, when the heart of the king was merry with wine, he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, Harbona, Bigtha, and Abagtha, Zethar, and Carcas, the seven chamberlains, that served in the presence of Ahasuerus the king,

11 To bring Vashti the queen before the king with the crown royal, to show the people and the princes her beauty: for she was fair to look on.

12 But the queen Vashti refused to come at the king's commandment by his chamberlains: therefore was the king very wroth, and his anger burned in him. [Practical Observations.]

13 ¶ Then the king said to the wise men, which knew the times, (for so was the king's manner toward all that knew law and judgment:

14 And the next unto him was Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena, and Memucan, the seven princes of Persia and Media, which saw the king's face, and which sat the first in the kingdom:)

15 What shall we do unto the queen Vashti according to law, because she hath not performed the commandment of the king Ahasuerus, by the chamberlains?

16 And Memucan answered before the king and the princes, Vashti the queen hath not done wrong to the king only, but also to all the princes, and to all the people that are in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus.

17 For this deed of the queen shall come abroad unto all women, so that they shall despise their husbands in their eyes, when it shall be reported, The king Ahasuerus commanded Vashti the queen to be brought in before him, but she came not.

18 Likewise shall the ladies of Persia and Media say this day unto all the king's princes, which have heard of the deed of the queen. Thus shall there arise too much contempt and wrath.

19 If it please the king, let there go a royal commandment from him, and let it be written kindness to the Jews, favour the supposition. (Notes, Ezra 7:1—5,11,26. Neh. 1:1. 2:5, 6, v. 6.) The Septuagint translation calls him Artaxerxes, and Josephus calls him Artaxerxes Longimanus. See Prideaux's Connection, printed 1749, v. i. p. 361—364.

V. 3—5. It is probable that the princes and nobles from the several parts of Ahasuerus's immense dominions, were entertained in rotation, during six months, with the most studied and ostentatious display of magnificence, of wealth, and liberality, which could be conceived; and that afterwards all the citizens of Shushan, without distinction, were feasted for seven days in like manner. (Marg. Ref. Note, Matt. 14: 15—21.)

V. 6. Marg. and Marg. Ref.—The beds.] On these the guests sat, or reclined, at table. (Note, Am. 6:3—8.)

V. 7, 8. (Marg. Ref. o.) The absurd practice of urging people to drink more strong liquor than they are of themselves inclined to, has prevailed in all ages; though it is a most gross violation of common sense, freedom, and civility, as well as of morality and religion. It seems to have been devised and supported by drunkards, that the more sober part of mankind might be drawn in to keep them in countenance, by a reluctant intoxication.—The regulation enjoined by the king was very necessary in the midst of so many incentives to intemperance; and his mind, being thus made known, doubtless prevented many disorders which otherwise would have been committed.

V. 9. It seems, that the women were feasted by the queen in a more retired situation than the nobles and people, and were kept separate from the men by express appointment; which made the subsequent order of the king appear the more unreasonable. (Note, 10—12.)

V. 10—12. When the customs of the Persians relative to their women, especially the wives of their kings, are considered, this injunction of Ahasuerus must appear highly improper and inconsistent. He sent seven of his chamberlains, (which so far was honourable to his queen;) commanding her to appear in her royal attire, in order that a number of princes and nobles, who were heated with wine, might be gratified by a sight of her singular beauty! A reluctance therefore to an exhibition, so contrary to the decorum observed by her sex, became her rank and modesty; but as the king was peremptory, and every one must have known that she came at his command; it was highly imprudent in her to persist in a refusal, which could terminate only in an open contest and the most fatal effects. His anger was the more immoderate, because his blood was heated with wine, which made his passion too strong for his reason." Ep. Patrick.

V. 13, 14. These wise men, being acquainted with the records of the kingdom, might be able to bring precedents, how former kings had acted under circumstances in any respect similar, according to the laws and customs of the kingdom; as well as to understand in general what was proper to be done in the present emergency. (1 Chr. 12:32.) And it was the king's manner, in all such matters, to confer with those who knew law and judgment.—The seven counsellors here mentioned had free access to the king, and were the first subjects in the kingdom. (Note, Ezra 7:14.)

V. 15. Some suppose, that Ahasuerus was inclined to forgive Vashti, if it might stand with the honour of his government, and the laws of the realm. But others think, that he was disposed to divorce her, or otherwise punish her; but wished to proceed against her under colour of law and justice.

V. 16—18. Memucan is mentioned last of the seven counsellors: and it is supposed he was the youngest, or last in order on some account; and that he was required to give his opinion first, that he might not previously be biassed by the sentiments of his seniors or superiors.—It is uncertain, whether Memucan really deemed the queen's disobedience a dangerous precedent, while it remained unpunished; or whether he paid court to the king, by counselling him to follow his own humour, and by suggesting a plausible reason for so doing. (Notes, 2 Sam. 14:6—22. P. O. 1—20.) He, however, argued that the queen's rank, and the notoriety and pertinacity of her disobedience, would encourage other women to despise the persons and authority of their husbands; which contempt in the women would excite the wrath of the men, and thus destroy domestic subordination and peace.—Yet if husbands had been careful not to act contemptibly, or to give foolish and improper commands, they might have ruled by reason and affection, without either such fatal consequences, or violent measures. But despotism in civil government leads to despotism in domestic life: men imagine, that there is no way to rule, but by force and terror; and thus the superior relations become tyrants, and the inferior, slaves, submitting by constraint, without either conviction or affection.

V. 19—22. By this irrecoverable edict, which was published in the various languages spoken through the immense empire of the Persians, that all might understand it, Ahasuerus's example was virtually proposed for general imitation, so that every husband was allowed to divorce his wife, if she disobeyed his command, even when evidently foolish and among the laws of the Persians and the Medes, that it be not altered, that Vashti come no more before king Ahasuerus; and let the king give her royal estate unto another [†]that is better than she.

20 And when the king's decree which he shall make shall be published ^hthroughout all his empire, (for it is great,) ⁱall the wives shall give to their husbands honour, both to great and small.

21 And the saying ^{pleased} the king and the princes; and the king did according to the word of Memucan:

22 For he sent letters into all the king's provinces, ^jinto every province according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language, ^kthat every man should bear rule in his own house; and that ^{it} should be published according to the language of every people.

CHAPTER II.

By advice of his servants, Ahasuerus causes fair virgins to be sought out in every province of his kingdom, that he might choose a queen, 1-8. Esther has been brought up by Mordecai, 5-7. She obtains favour with the keeper of the women; pleases the king; and is made queen, having observed Mordecai's directions, 8-20. Mordecai discovers a plot against the king; the criminals are punished; and his service is registered in the chronicles of the kingdom, 21-23.

A^F^TER these things, when the wrath of king Ahasuerus was appeased, ^{he} remembered Vashti, and ^{what} she had done, and what was decreed against her.

2 Then said the king's servants that ministered unto him, ^{Let there be fair young virgins sought for the king:}

unreasonable! But whether pride, resentment, policy, or lust, predominated in the counsels of Ahasuerus, may remain uncertain; but the Lord was thus making preparation for defeating Haman's diabolical project, long before it ever entered into his heart, and before he arrived at the height of his power and prosperity. (Notes, 3:6-15. 8:8. Ps. 75:10. Ez. 33:10.)

It should be published, &c. (22) Marg.—The decree runs in the Hebrew, "That every man should bear rule in his own house, and speak in the language of his people." . . . that is, he should give his commands in his own language, which every one was bound to learn. Bp. Patrick. It is, however, evident, that great care was taken in all these decrees, that they should be circulated in each province in the language of that province, that all might understand them. (3:17. 8:9.) How important then is it, that the word of God should be translated into every language, and circulated in that language which is best understood in every land! and that all, without exception, should be offered them in the vulgar tongue, in every country.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. No extent of possessions or dominion can satisfy the human heart, and give contentment or felicity even in this present life. Cares, fears, and temptations are augmented by every accession; the power of doing good or harm is enlarged, and alas! the latter is generally chosen. But to whom much is given, of him will much be required" by the great Proprietor, who is continually saying to monarchs, as well as to subjects, "Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward."—Ostentatious generosity and magnificence, for a man's own honour and glory, that his wealth, bounty, and taste may be admired and applauded, is a common idolatry of the great and noble; and, except grace prevail in the heart, self-exaltation and self-indulgence, in some form or other, will be the ruling principles. But indeed the honour of every endowment, possession, or achievement, of created beings, belongs solely to the underrived, unchangeable Creator: his glory, in our own true felicity and that of our fellow-creatures, should be our great end in every action; and all other considerations ought to be subordinated to it, and regulated by it.—But if the feast of an earthly monarch, when he would "show the riches of his glorious kingdom and the honour of his excellent majesty," was so magnificent; what will be that feast, which the King of kings has prepared, to "show the riches of his glorious kingdom, and the honour of his excellent majesty," to the praise of the glory of his grace," in heaven, for ever and ever! There will be unfading splendour, inexhaustible abundance, and unalloyed pleasures, without interruption or satiety; and without danger or fear of excess: nor will there arise the least discord to mar enjoyment, through all the ages of eternity. "All things are ready" for this feast; sinners without exception are invited: may we accept the gracious invitation; seek and find the wedding-garment; and sit down at the marriage-supper of the Lamb!—But in all other feasts, the pleasure is greatly alloyed, and soon palls; and too generally they prove unfavourable, not only to wisdom and piety, but even to present comfort and advantage. Seldom do any frequent them, without being led into some degree of excess, injurious to their strength of body and vigour of mind. They are scenes of temptation, suited to excite man's various evil propensities. The enemy of souls will be sure to avail himself of the unguarded moments, especially of such as are in reputation for wisdom and piety; and he has artfully prevailed to render it creditable, for men to become tempters of each other to intemperance so that few public entertainments, even among professed Christians, are conducted by such good rules as this heavenly feast. But real Christians must not only shun such scenes, and separate from those who frequent them; but likewise, by warnings and exhortations, endeavour to preserve their brethren from sin: and if, by this conduct at their own tables, they incur the censure of being penurious; "the poor, whom they always have with them," afford them a fair occasion of refuting the slander. Indeed, that will go very far in hospitality to the indigent, which is quickly wasted by pampering the luxury of the affluent. (Note, Luke 14:12-14. P. O. 12-24.)—Seasons of peculiar festivity often terminate in vexation. Wine and jovial company elate the mind, add strength to the passions, and stun the voice of reason and conscience. On such occasions caprice generally dictates the conduct; unreasonable claims are started, or projects formed; and the eagerness of men's spirits ill brooks contradiction or affront, while it disposes to give them. Thus anger is excited and exasperated; and discords, revenge, duels, and murders, are the frequent consequences of pleasurable meetings! Propriety and decorum are also often disregarded; the respect and attention due to relatives are forgotten; improper requisitions are made, by which contempt and imprudent opposition are excited; affection is suspended, during the reign of haughty resentment; and all parties forget their reciprocal interests and duties, till their reputation and peace receive such wounds, as can seldom admit of a complete cure.—Let it also be specially noted, that superiors, in all cases and circumstances, should be careful not to command what may reasonably be disobeyed; for this must weaken their authority, and prove a temptation to those over whom they rule: yet inferiors ought never to persist in a refusal, except when it is really a point of conscience towards God. (Notes, Rom. 13:1-7.)

V. 13-22. There would be safety in the multitude of counsellors, if men did but welcome plain dealing; and if the counsellors of princes did not generally consult their inclinations, rather than their interests.—Domestic subordination doubtless ought to be preserved; and the wife ought to honour and obey her own husband: yet surely this may be effected by other means, beside severe laws, divorces, and measures more pernicious than the evil which they are intended to remedy! Regard to mutual interest, comfort, and reputation, serves to keep the world in tolerable order: the prudence and affection of the husband will do great things, where properly exercised: the general regard, which the more decent members of the community have to the precepts and authority of God, has considerable effect: true grace radically cures that evil, from which domestic discord arises; and in deplorable cases where the peace of society is materially violated, the magistrate may properly interpose. All other evils arising from this source may better be tolerated, than to attempt a remedy, by making the men tyrants, and the women slaves: while it is evident that the former fail as much, and commonly far more, in the duty of their relation, than the latter. Nor should even the interests of kingdoms be promoted, were it possible, by evident injustice.—The example of the great has a very extensive effect, and they are the more deeply concerned, not to exhibit a pernicious pattern to their inferiors: but human policy sometimes overshoots its mark; and to prevent the effect of one injurious precedent, forms another of still more fatal tendency. Let us then keep to the rule of God's word, and it will guide the humble, obedient believer through all these labyrinths; and be "a lantern to his feet, and a light unto his paths." Let us be upon our guard against every incentive to our passions; watching and praying against wrath, pride, and self-will, as well as sensual indulgence. Let us learn to bridle our tempers; to conquer by yielding; and to "leave off contention before it be meddled with." And let us rejoice that the Lord reigns, and will ever rule all the madness and folly of mankind, for the purposes of his own glory, and the safety and felicity of his believing, obedient people.

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1. When the vehemency of the king's anger subsided, his affection for Vashti revived; and probably he was sensible, that he had acted with precipitation and severity, and had done her injustice. But with all his power and authority, he could not again receive her into favour, without violating a fundamental constitution of the Persian government; which required that no edict, which the king had once established, should be reversed. The fatal effects of this absurd policy will be sufficiently illustrated, in the sequel of this narrative. Under colour of ascribing infallibility to the sovereign, and thus flattering his pride: this restriction perpetually exposed him, in his unguarded hours, to be deluded into the most pernicious measures; and would not so much as allow him to remedy the injustice, or impolicy, into which he had been betrayed, when reflection and expe-

3 And let the king appoint officers in all the provinces of his kingdom, that they may gather together all the fair young virgins unto Shushan the palace, to the house of the women, unto the custody of Heghe the king's chamberlain, keeper of the women; and let their things for purification be given them:

4 And let the maiden which pleaseth the king be queen instead of Vashiti. And the thing pleased the king; and he did so.

5 ¶ Now in Shushan the palace there was a certain Jew, whose name was Mordecai, the son of Jair, the son of Shimei, the son of Kish, a Benjamite;

6 Who had been carried away from Jerusalem, with the captivity which had been carried away with Jeconiah king of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away.

7 And he brought up Hadassah, (that is, Esther,) his uncle's daughter: for she had neither father nor mother, and the maid was fair and beautiful; whom Mordecai, when her father and mother were dead, took for his own daughter.

8 ¶ So it came to pass, when the king's commandment and his decree was heard, and when many maidens were gathered together unto Shushan the palace, to the custody of Hegai, that Esther was brought also unto the king's house, to the custody of Hegai, keeper of the women.

9 And the maiden pleased him, and she obtained kindness of him; and he speedily gave her her things for purification, with such things as belonged to her, and seven maidens which were meet to be given her, out of the king's house: and he preferred her and her maids unto the best place of the house of the women.

10 Esther had not showed her people nor her kindred: for Mordecai had charged her that she should not show it.

11 And Mordecai walked every day before the court of the women's house, to know how Esther did, and what should become of her.

12 ¶ Now when every maid's turn was come to go in to king Ahasuerus, after that she had been twelve months, according to the manner of the women, (for so were the ways of their purifications accomplished, to wit, six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours, and with other things for the purifying of the women;)

13 Then thus came every maiden unto the king; whatsoever she desired was given her to go with her out of the house of the women unto the king's house.

14 In the evening she went, and on the morrow she returned into the second house of the women, to the custody of Shaashgaz, the king's chamberlain, which kept the concubines: she came in unto the king no more, except the king delighted in her, and that she were called by name.

[Practical Observations.]

15 ¶ Now when the turn of Esther, the daughter of Abihail the uncle of Mordecai, who had taken her for his daughter, was come to go in unto the king, she required nothing but what Hegai the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women, appointed. And Esther obtained favour in the sight of all them that looked upon her.

16 So Esther was taken unto king Ahasuerus into his house-royal in the tenth month, which is the month Tebeth, in the seventh year of his reign.

17 And the king loved Esther above all the women, and she obtained grace and favour in his sight more than all the virgins; so that he set the royal crown upon her head, and made her queen instead of Vashiti.

18 Then the king made a great feast unto all his princes and his servants, even Esther's feast; and he made a release to the provinces, and gave gifts, according to the state of the king.

19 And when the virgins were gathered together the second time, then Mordecai sat in the king's gate.

zience had made him sensible of his errors. (Notes, 8:3-13. 9:1-16. Dan. 6:12-17.) And this was the more absurd and dangerous in its nature and effects, if they may be depended on, who inform us, that the Persian monarchs, and their counsellors, commonly framed their edicts at feasts, and when they were drinking. (Notes, 3:12-15.)

V. 2-4. (8-14. * Note, 1 Kings 1:4.) It is uncertain whether this was the project of the seven counsellors before mentioned; (Note, 1:16-18.) or of some other servants, who more immediately ministered to the king's pleasures. It seems, however, to have been devised, in order to prevent him from thinking any more of Vashiti, whose restoration to favour must be guarded against, for the safety of those who had counselled the king to exercise so great severity against her: for, if he had been greatly desirous of Vashiti's company, the law of the Medes and Persians would scarcely have prevented him from recalling her. This will appear by the following instance:—Cambyses, king of Persia, having conceived a violent passion for his own sister, inquired of his counsellors whether it was lawful for him to marry her? and they, dreading the effects of his resentment if they opposed his will, answered, that there was no law in Persia, by which a man was allowed to marry his sister, but that it was lawful for the king of Persia to do what he pleased.—It must also be noted, that though the king could not legally reverse the decree which he had signed and sealed; yet he might put to death the counsellors, who induced him to ratify it. (Notes, 7:7-10. 8:8. Dan. 6:24.)

V. 5-7. Mordecai, though a Benjamite, is repeatedly called the Jew: for the whole nation was now called after Judah. (Notes, Gen. 49:8-10. 2 Kings 16:6.)—Some of Mordecai's ancestors, (probably Kish,) had been carried to Babylon with Jeconiah; (Note, 2 Kings 24:8-16.) and the family afterwards settled at Shushan. But it seems that they were diminished in number, or impoverished: so that Mordecai's own cousin had been left an orphan; and he, being older than she was, had brought her up, and in all respects behaved as a father to her. Her Jewish name was Hadassah, but the Persians called her Esther.—The conjectures of several learned men concerning her, taken from rather a slight similarity of names between the king and the wives of some of the Persian kings, mentioned in Pagan historians, seem entirely groundless: as the dissimilarity of character, and indeed all other circumstances, vastly preponderate against them.

V. 8-10. As Mordecai was so scrupulous in respect of Haman, (Notes, 3:2-5.) it has been wondered, how he could consent to Esther's becoming the wife, or concubine, of a heathen prince, contrary to the law of Moses. But it does not seem to have been left to the choice, either of Mordecai or of Esther. By a public edict, the most beautiful virgins were selected from all parts of Ahasuerus's dominions; and it would have been unavailing, as well as dangerous, to have opposed the persons employed in this business. 'The word we translate "was brought," may be rendered was taken; and that by force, as the word sometimes signifies; and as the former Targum here explains it, She was brought by violence.' Bp. Patrick.—If Esther had made known her nation it might have interfered with her advancement to the rank of queen, as the Jews were generally despised; but she could not have avoided becoming one of Ahasuerus's concubines. Polygamy was connived at by the Mosaic law; so that the situation of a concubine was not deemed dishonourable, or unlawful; and in her peculiar circumstances, the ritual law of not giving their daughters to those of another nation, might not be thought obligatory.—The conduct of Providence, however, should be chiefly noticed; though it does not appear that either Mordecai or Esther could have acted otherwise, if they had been inclined.

V. 11-14. Marg. Ref. P. O. 1-14.

V. 15-17. About four years were spent before another queen was chosen instead of Vashiti: (1:3) so long a time had been employed in collecting the virgins from all parts of Ahasuerus's dominions, and in other preparations which were thought requisite.—Ezra obtained his commission in the former part of this same year, if Artaxerxes were the same as Ahasuerus: (Note, Ezra 7:6-10.) and they who think that Artaxerxes granted the desire of Ezra, through Esther's influence, suppose that Esther had been the favoured concubine of the king, residing in his palace a considerable time before she was publicly made and crowned queen, which was in the tenth month of the seventh year of his reign.

V. 18. Marg. Ref. Note, 1—3.

V. 19, 20. It is probable that a number of virgins had been collected before Vasthi was made queen; in relation to which it is here said, "When the virgins were gathered together the second time."—About this time Mordecai seems to have been appointed to some station in the service of the king: and the historian appears merely to have intended to connect the account of Mordecai's discovery of the treason, (21—23.) with Esther's advancement to be queen, as introductory to the subsequent narrative.—Esther, after her high preferment, still continued as attentive to Mordecai's command as she had been before; out of gratitude for his kindness, and confidence in his wisdom, piety, and affection. "A rare example of virtue, that she should be so observant of him when she was a queen: for most forget what they were when they are unexpectedly grown very great." Bp. Patrick.

V. 21—23. Many conjectures have been formed of the cause of this conspiracy, and the manner in which it was discovered; but curiosity alone is concerned in such inquiries, which after all end in uncertainty. It suffices for us to know, that a conspiracy was formed; that Mordecai detected it, and, by informing Esther, conveyed the intelligence to the king, that the criminals were convicted and executed; and that the account of it was written in the records of the kingdom. The transaction itself was nowise uncommon; but the event showed the hand of God in it, in a most remarkable manner, and for the most important purposes. (Notes, 6.) "Here we may see the infelicity and the danger of the most potent persons. The life of a great king depending on the fidelity of one single person, whose service was neglected by the court, though a memorial was made of it." Pellicanus in Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14. Resolutions formed in anger, and executed without deliberation, make work for bitter recollection and repentance. A wise man, therefore, will not proceed even to punish the guilty, till passion has subsided and reason resumed her sway.—The depravity of our nature, and the fallibility of our judgment, render it indispensable to our interest and happiness, that we should be allowed to change our sentiments and conduct, and correct our mistakes. Our gracious God has mercifully placed us under a dispensation which admits of this: and though many painful effects must follow from transgression, we shall not be ruined by it, if we avail ourselves of this provision. (Ec. 18:30.) But while pride and obstinacy seem to arrogate infallibility, and to aspire to a dignity incompatible with fallen nature; they forfeit the real advantages of our situation, and leave a man without redress, exposed to all the fatal consequences of every false step. No one, however, should be too proud to confess that he has been mistaken: and as this would preclude the absurdity of human laws, which must never be repealed or reversed; so it would strike at the root of that self-justifying, pertinacious temper, which induces sinners to neglect the gospel, and go on in sin. But even when men are in some measure made sensible of their folly and iniquity, new projects, amusements, and gratifications are devised, to silence conscience, and to carry them forward without uneasiness in the broad road of ungodliness.—The servants of mighty monarchs, though themselves princes and nobles, have often stooped to be pimps and parasites, in order to support their present authority, to purchase impunity for past crimes, or to procure future and still greater preferment! (P. O. Gen. 12:10—20, latter part.) But how degrading is it to our rational nature, that numbers of able men of superior rank, as well as of inferior station, should exert all their ingenuity and assiduity in enabling an individual more devotedly to pamper those "fleshly lusts which war against the soul!" Even reason, (not to say religion,) if her voice could be heard, would command men to moderate and restrain their passions, and to teach them submission by habituating them to brook denial. But the higher human beings are advanced in authority, the lower they too generally sink into the most abject slavery to their sensual appetites: as if their superiority were intended merely as a medium for the more unrestrained licentiousness, and to enable them to be avowed in those excesses which inferior libertines indulge with a more decent reserve!—How low is ter, it was found out; therefore they were both hanged on a tree: and it was written in the book of the Chronicles before the king.

CHAPTER III.

Haman is advanced by the king, who commands his servants to bow down to him; but Mordecai refuses to do it, 1, 2. Haman being informed, in revenge, purposes to destroy the whole Jewish nation, 3—6. He chooses a day, by casting lots, for executing his purpose, 7. By circumventing the Jews, he obtains a decree from the king to exterminate the nation, and publishes it through all the provinces, 1—55.

AFTER these things did king Ahasuerus promote Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, and advanced him, and set his seat above all the princes that were with him.

our nature sunk when these are the leading pursuits, and the highest felicity of many millions of rational creatures! when every consideration of decency, equity, and conscience; when domestic comfort, relative duties, and the natural rights of mankind; when even reputation, interest, and health; when life, and the immortal soul itself, are habitually sacrificed to such a base and hateful idol! Yet after a prostituted ingenuity has done its utmost, disappointment, vexation, and loathing must ensue: and that man most wisely consults even the enjoyment of this present life, who most exactly obeys the precepts of the divine law.—We ought also to be thankful for revelation, which is needful to teach us how to act in the common affairs of life. But without the supernatural teaching, inclining, and assisting influence of the Holy Spirit, men will not pay a due regard to that revelation: for, with the Bible in their hands, numbers deviate at least as widely from reason and Scripture, as even the Persian monarchs did; except, as the want of power, and the laws of the land restrain their licentiousness. For these laws indeed, and for many other advantages, we have great cause to be thankful: and especially, that the children of Britons are not liable to be forced into the Seraglio of any licentious ruler. Yet, alas! after all, who can bear steadily to contemplate the corrupt state of our favoured nation, in this respect, without a mixture of shame, indignant regret, and contrition?

V. 15—23. It is peculiarly useful to consider the providential conduct of God fulfilling his wise, faithful, righteous, and merciful purposes in the midst of the extravagances occasioned by the mad passions of wicked men. He "careth for his people," and he is "the Father of the fatherless:" orphans are often peculiarly favoured in his providence, to encourage us to intrust our children to his care while we live, and when we are about to die and leave them.—It is our duty, in some cases, if we are able to provide for the orphan children of our near relations; and by so doing, men often provide for their own comfort and safety, and for their families also.—The Lord not only confers personal and mental endowments, and enriches the soul with wisdom and grace; but he gives favour likewise: and, notwithstanding prejudices, and general contempt, he can, when he pleases, secure to his people the most endeared affection of those who know him not. If wealth or kingdoms were good for them, they would certainly have them; but prosperity too generally feeds the distempers of corrupt nature, and poverty and obscurity are more advantageous. Even those high stations which some few believers occupy for the good of their brethren, will be their cross, if not their snare; and their comforts must flow from the same source, and be of the same nature, with those of the poorest Christian; and are generally in more scanty measure.—We ought, however, to be passive in the Lord's hands; and only be careful to avoid sin, and to perform our duty, in whatever station we are placed.—Our profession of religion, and many things relating to it, must often be regulated and timed according to circumstances; so that we not only need to regard the advice of wise and experienced Christians, but daily to ask for that wisdom which is from above, or we shall be liable to perpetual mistakes.—It is a singular proof that men have obtained a good measure of that wisdom, when unexpected prosperity and favour leave them humble and teachable, attentive to every relative duty, grateful to benefactors, and disposed to listen to prudent and pious counsellors.—No men are exposed to so great danger from treachery, resentment, and ambition as absolute monarchs: and their servants, when really attached, often confer obligations upon them which they never can adequately compensate. But the servant of God must be faithful to every trust, and watchful for the safety and interest of those who employ him; and though he seem at present neglected, he may be remembered hereafter. However, his conscientious and upright conduct is registered in heaven, and will be graciously rewarded by his God, when all his enemies shall be driven into utter destruction. (Notes, Ec. 9:13—18. P. O. 11—18.)

NOTES.—CHAPTER III. V. 1. Haman is supposed to have been an Amalekite, descended from the stock of the ancient kings of that people; many of whom were named Agag. (Num. 24:7. 1 Sam. 15:8.)—If his descent was generally known, his advancement, to be the king's chief minister and favourite, would be peculiarly displeasing and alarming

2 And all the king's servants that were in the king's gate bowed, and revered Haman; for the king had so commanded concerning him. But Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence.

3 Then the king's servants which were in the king's gate, said unto Mordecai, "Why transgress-est thou the king's commandment?"

4 Now it came to pass, when they spake daily unto him, and he hearkened not unto them, that they told Haman, to see whether Mordecai's matters would stand: for he had told them that he was a Jew.

5 And when Haman saw that Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence, then was Haman full of wrath.

6 And he thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai: also for they had showed him the people of Mordecai: wherefore Haman sought to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai.

[Practical Observations.]

7 ¶ In the first month, (that is, the month Nisan.) in the twelfth year of king Ahasuerus, they cast Pur, that is, the lot, before Haman from day to day, and from month to month, to the twelfth month, that is, the month Adar.

8 And Haman said unto king Ahasuerus, There is a certain people scattered abroad and dispersed among the people in all the provinces of thy kingdom; and their laws are diverse from all people; neither keep they the king's laws: therefore it is not for the king's profit to suffer them.

9 If it please the king, let it be written that they may be destroyed: and I will pay ten to the Jews; as they were expressly commanded to extirpate the Amalekites. (Notes, Ez. 17:14-16. Deut. 25:17-19. 1 Sam. 15:1-3.)

V. 2. It has been much disputed, why Mordecai so pertinaciously and absolutely refused to bow before Haman, when commanded by his prince: and many, supposing that nothing more was meant than civil obeisance, such as Joseph's brethren and the Egyptians rendered to him, and such as they suppose Ezra, and Nehemiah, and even Daniel, must have paid to the Persian kings, have ascribed Mordecai's refusal to his contempt of Haman's character, or his dislike to him as an Amalekite. But these reasons are not sufficient to justify his conduct, when the fate of the whole nation was at stake: yet he evidently acted conscientiously, and was accepted by the Lord. We must not therefore ascribe his behaviour to pride, moroseness, resentment, or envy. It is well known that the Persian monarchs required an obeisance, which even the Greeks often refused or evaded, as express adoration: and it is not at all unlikely, that Ahasuerus required a similar act of adoration to be offered to his favourite. 'To bow the knee or the body, to all great persons, was a common respect; for which there needed not a particular command, . . . with respect of Haman. . . . There was therefore some kind of divine honour intended, such as was paid to the Persian kings themselves, to whom the Greeks would not pay this sort of respect, because it was accounted divine. And the word reverence imports something beyond bowing; which was falling flat on their faces to the ground.' Bp. Patrick.—The original words may be rendered, 'they kneeled down and fell prostrate before Haman,' or, 'they worshipped him: and perhaps the two expressions are never united, except when adoration is expressly meant, and they are in this narrative uniformly united. (Matt. 4:9. Acts 10:25,26. Rev. 22:8,9).—In the apocryphal addition to this book, Mordecai is introduced as thus appealing to God: 'Thou knowest, Lord, that it was neither in contempt, nor pride, nor for any desire of glory, that I did not bow down to proud Haman: for I could have been content, with good will, for the salvation of Israel, to kiss the soles of his feet: but I did this, that I might not prefer the glory of man above the glory of God, neither will I worship any but thee.' (Esther 13:12-14.) Indeed it is most probable that the homage required by Haman was idolatrous; and we may reasonably conclude, that the king himself dispensed with the customary ceremonies, out of regard to the conscientious scruples of those few Jews, who were admitted into his presence, and whom he peculiarly favoured; but that Haman, despising Mordecai and hating his people, was not so condescending. And though we do not read that other Jews refused Haman this honour; yet numbers might be of the same opinion, who were not put to the trial, not being employed in any places of honour or profit about the king; and indeed it does not appear that Mordecai was blamed by any of them, even amidst the most imminent danger to which the whole nation was exposed. (Note, Dan. 3:1-7.)

V. 3-5. Haman seems not to have noticed Mordecai's singularity, (amidst the homage which he received from all others,) till it was pointed out to him by the other servants of Ahasuerus. These first remonstrated with Mordecai for his disobedience to the king: but when he disregarded them, they desired to know whether 'his matters would stand: for he had told them that he was a Jew.' 'He acquaints them plainly of what religion and nation he was; who might not . . . worship any but God alone.' Bp. Patrick. This proves, that he vindicated himself on the ground of his religion: and it implies, that he expected Ahasuerus would admit of this plea; which favours the supposition, that the kings of Persia had been used to excuse their Jewish servants from such obeisance as they could not conscientiously render.—It is probable, however, that these informers thought this a good opportunity of paying court to the favourite; or of obtaining Mordecai's post for some of them, or their dependants: and they did not approve of his singularity, by which he seemed to reproach their complacency.

V. 6. A wise man would have treated this information with neglect; and had he even thought that Mordecai's conduct was the effect of pique, pride, malice, or insolence, he would have left him to his humour. But Haman was a man of a weak and vainglorious mind, and intoxicated with prosperity, as the whole history shows. Being therefore fired with indignation, that these honours were refused him by one so greatly his inferior, and having understood that the refusal was dictated by principles, which were common to all the Jews; he considered the whole nation as his enemies, and determined, if possible, to involve them all in one common destruction. (Note, Ps. 83:1-4.)—The ancient enmity of an Amalekite seems also to have revived; and perhaps he meant to revenge the quarrel of his nation, as well as the affront which he had received from Mordecai. His rank and authority, and his unbounded influence over Ahasuerus, emboldened him to expect success in the daring attempt. His self-importance made him think it a mean revenge to crush an individual who had offended him; and his pre-eminence seemed only to suggest the idea of being able to do more mischief, and diffuse more extensive misery, than an inferior could have done.—His diabolical ambition and cruelty thirsted for the extirpation of the whole people of the Jews at one blow: at least all of them who dwelt in the immense kingdom of Persia, including those in Judea, which was a province of that kingdom. (Note, Ezra 2:1.) It may therefore fairly be concluded that the device was not his own; but was suggested by that ambitious spirit, who aspires to be "the god of this world," who has been "a murderer from the beginning," and whose enmity to the "Seed of the woman," to Christ and his church, is communicated to all his children. In this view, it was a plan worthy of the vast capacity, enmity, malice, ambition, and desperation of that arch rebel, against his Maker. (Notes, Gen. 3:14,15. Matt. 4:1,2. John 8:41-47, v. 44.)

V. 7. Esther had now been queen five years; yet her nation and kindred had not become publicly known: for Haman did not suspect that the queen was a Jewess, or that Mordecai was her near relation. (Note, 7:6.) Had Mordecai been ambitious of preferment, no doubt he would have counselled Esther to make known her kindred, when she was first in high favour: but he seems to have foreseen, that she was advanced for some future service to her people, for which she ought to reserve herself. (Note, 4:13,14.)—The word "Pur" signifies the lot. Haman, having formed his project, inquired of his idols, according to his own superstition, by casting lots what day would be most propitious to its execution: for he made himself sure of the king's concurrence: and it pleased God so to order it, that the day which had the favourable token, was above eleven months distant. Haman's superstition was such, that he did not venture to execute his design till that time came: though it can hardly be supposed, but he must have perceived that many things might occur to prevent the execution of his intentions. The king might change his mind, or might die; or the Jews might take refuge in other countries, or make such preparations for their own defence, as to render the attempt most perilous, and the success of it very hazardous.—The event showed the vanity of his oracles or auguries; and illustrated the doctrine of a particular providence over all the affairs of men, and the care of God over his church. 'This whole business was governed by a wonderful providence of God, by whom these lots were directed, and not by the Persian gods, to fall in the last month of the year; whereby almost a whole year intervened between the design and its execution; and gave time for Mordecai to acquaint Esther with it, and for her to intercede with the king, for the revoking or suspending his decree, and disappointing the conspiracy.' Bp. Patrick. (Note, Prov. 16:33.)

V. 8, 9. Haman does not seem even to have mentioned thousand talents of silver to the hands of those that have the charge of the business, to bring it unto the king's treasuries.

10 And the king took his ring from his hand, and gave it unto Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, the Jews' enemy.

11 And the king said unto Haman, The silver is given to thee, the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee.

12 Then were the king's scribes called on the thirteenth day of the first month, and there was written according to all that Haman had commanded unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors that were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province, according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language; *in the name of king Ahaserus was it written, and sealed with the king's ring.

13 And the letters were sent by posts into all the king's provinces, to destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish, all Jews, both young and old, little children and women, in one day, even upon the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar, and to take the spoil of them for a prey.

14 The copy of the writing for a commandment to be given in every province was published unto all people, that they should be ready against that day.

15 The posts went out, being hastened by the king's commandment, and the decree was given in Shushan the palace. And the king and Haman sat down to drink; but the city Shushan was perplexed.

to Ahasuerus the name of the people, whom he purposed to extirpate; supposing that they would be sufficiently known from his description of them. He probably acted as prime minister under the king, who, like most of those eastern monarchs, giving himself up to his pleasures, left the management of his affairs almost entirely to him. Indeed the ascendancy of Haman was so absolute, that none of the other counsellors seem to have been advised with in this most important matter; and probably the proposal was made and consented to, while the king was heated with wine. (Note, 2:1.)—The laws and customs of the people of God were indeed diverse from those of any other nation: but there is no proof, that they refused obedience to the laws of Persia, except as Mordecai refused to worship Haman; for we do not find that the kings of Persia required them to worship idols, or even forbade them to observe their sabbaths, festivals, and ceremonial institutions.—It does not appear from the narrative, that the horrible cruelty and injustice of the proposal at all startled the king! Indeed Haman seems to have been more apprehensive, that he would object to the impolicy of diminishing the revenue, by decreasing the number of his subjects. He therefore offered the king ten thousand talents of silver, (about four millions sterling, if reckoned according to the talent of the Jews' Tables,) by way of compensation for the loss. But it seems, that he meant to indemnify himself out of the property of the massacred Jews: and he would engage to raise the sum at once from the execution of his project which would, as he pretended, be more than equivalent to all present or subsequent disadvantages. 'He intended not to pay one farthing of it himself, it being easy to raise it out of the spoil of the Jews' goods.' Bp. Patrick. Those who were employed in executing the bloody decree, were required "to take the spoil of them for a prey;" (13) out of which he would require them to pay a certain proportion to "those who had the charge of the business" of collecting the revenue, "to bring it into the king's treasuries."

V. 10, 11. Without considerable knowledge of the human heart, and the history of mankind, we shall find a difficulty in conceiving, how any prince could be induced to consent to so horrid and pernicious a proposal without objection or hesitation. It would be absurd to assign a reason for so inflated a measure. But when an arbitrary monarch has become the dupe of a wicked favourite; it has always been observed, that the first object of his life, the chief, and almost the only use, which he makes of his power, is to gratify and aggrandize him: and the lives of subjects, or the interests of empires, have, on such occasions, often been wantonly sacrificed to the avarice, the ambition, the revenge, or the caprice, of a worthless minion!—"So loath are men that love their pleasure, to take any pains to distinguish between truth and falsehood." Bp. Patrick.—As a token that the request was granted, Ahasuerus gave the ring, with his royal signet, from his own hand, to the enemy and oppressor of the Jews; and he also granted to him all the spoil, without making any payment into the treasury: thus Haman seemed about to obtain the most complete gratification of his revenge, ambition, and avarice. (Notes, Ex. 15:9,10. Is. 10:13—15. Luke 12: 15—21.)

V. 12—15. Haman hastened to form the grant of the king into a decree, and to publish it throughout the empire: that the sentence might be looked upon as irreversible; and that all the subjects might prepare to carry it into execution, as they valued the favour of the king, and of his minister. Thus he expected, that the hope of ingratiating themselves at court, and the enmity borne the Jews, would unite the inhabitants of every city and province, in this bloody massacre: doubtless he intended to stir them up, and lead them to the attack, by his emissaries; and, further, to encourage them, it seems probable, that they were allowed to take the whole spoil of the Jews to themselves as a prey. That his meaning might not be mistaken, he caused the edict to be drawn up with a remarkable repetition, and almost in the style of modern law; and the inhabitants of every province were expressly commanded, "to destroy, kill, and cause to perish," all the Jews, even old men, and women, and children, in one day.—When this strange and most horrid decree was published, it caused much perplexity and consternation, not only to the Jews, but to all considerate men, especially at Shushan: for they could not but tremble for themselves, when they perceived what a bloody tyrant had possession of authority; and they must foresee, that terrible effects would follow from such a mad and rash attempt, which would render an immense number of people desperate, and drive them to the most furious courage in their own defence. 'Perhaps some of them were related to the Jews, or had made friendship with them; and therefore were much concerned at this horrid decree.'—Bp. Patrick. But Haman was insensible to every thing, except the gratification of his revenge: and in order to keep such reflections and reports at a distance from the king, he engaged him in pleasure and indulgence; and they sat down to drink, as perfectly unconcerned in the event!—Eleven months intervened, between the publishing of the decree, and the day appointed for carrying it into execution. 'This was not wisely projected, to let his design be known so long before it was to take effect: for the king's mind might alter, or the Jews might find some way to deliver themselves, or might steal out of the kingdom.' Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. The favourites of earthly princes have too often been distinguished by their folly, pride, and profligacy: but those of the King of heaven are endowed with wisdom, and grace, and prepared for usefulness in their several situations.—The vanity and comparative worthlessness of earthly dignities and possessions are shown, by their being so commonly lavished upon the basest of the human species; "God having provided better things" for the objects of his special love.—The poison of the old serpent, infused by his first temptation, "Ye shall be as gods," still rankles in the human heart; and when the pride of man is emboldened by great prosperity, it is capable of openly affecting the honour and worship, which belong to God alone! (Notes, Gen. 3:4,5. Ex. 28: 2—5. P. O. 1—10. Notes, Dan. 6:6—9. Acts 12:20—23.) We are all by nature idolatrous, and self is the most favourite of our idols: and whilst we admire and glory in our own supposed excellences, we delight that others should join the incense of their adulation; we are pleased to be treated, as if every thing were at our disposal, and within the reach of our capacity, and that all around should submit to us and bow before us. And when this vast ambition occupies a narrow mind, and the possessor climbs the pinnacle of earthly grandeur, he forgets that he is a man: and acts as if the world were made for him, and were to be governed by him; and as if all its inhabitants were created to be his slaves, and to worship at his shrine!—The desire of the favour of monarchs, and the fear of their wrath, influence most men to allow of these arrogant claims, and to conform to this strange idolatry: and those princes, who have literally demanded altars, sacrifices, and incense to their own deity, have generally met with a ready and zealous compliance from most of their subjects. But the true believer can neither obey such edicts and conform to such fashions, nor be induced, by any persuasions or menaces, to violate the law of God, or the dictates of his own conscience. He must "obey God rather than men," and leave the consequences to him; and whether "his matters will stand," and his religion excuse his disobedience to unlawful commands, in human courts of justice, or not, he will certainly be justified in so doing before the tribunal of God.—Who can know the desperate wickedness of the human heart, or prescribe any bounds to its devices! When a man possesses the dangerous privilege of doing as he pleases, without control, and with present impunity; when pride and ambition meet with an unexpected repulse, and when indignation and revenge occupy the heart; the most horrible and diabolical designs will be considered as the evidences of a noble and daring mind. In such circumstances, the infuriated wretch will think scorn of the petty rapines and assassinations of inferior villains, and become ambitious of being as much distinguished by a vast revenge, as by the eminence of his rank: and what massacres and crimes will not in that case be perpetrated without remorse, and even with pride and pleasure; while immense numbers both fall victims to his fury, and are involved with him in the guilt of murder and other enormities! What cause then have we to be thankful for external restraints to our headstrong passions; and how ought we to watch and pray against pride, anger, malice, and every sinful propensity! for if left under the power of them, we cannot conceive how far they would hurry us.—Let us also remember to be thankful for a limited, mild, and equitable government; and to beg of God to extend the same blessing to all other nations; with all the blessings of our holy religion, and that liberty with which Christ makes his people free.

V. 7—15. The world, as lying in wickedness, must hate the people of God, who bear his image and do his will: but they will be peculiarly obnoxious to tyrants; as they must refuse unreserved compliance with their mandates and humours; being the subjects of another kingdom, and governed by laws diverse from, nay opposite to, their favourite maxims and pursuits. They are indeed, and ought to be, “a peculiar” and singular “people,” “not conformed to this world,” while they are dispersed in the various parts of it: and they should be willing to be treated as precise, conceited, and unpliant. But those who persuade princes, that it is not for their profit to tolerate them, and that they had better persecute, destroy, or banish them, are as much enemies to the state as to the church of God. Whatever mere professors may be, true Christians are the best subjects under every government: not only because they are more peaceable, honest, and industrious than their neighbours; and conscientiously pay tribute, and render obedience in all things lawful; but because their examples and conversation edify many, and their prayers bring down a blessing upon the land in which they live in peace. No acquisitions of wealth therefore could compensate the loss of them, even in a political view; and without bringing into the account the enormous loss of national guilt, which persecution rapidly accumulates.—The ungodly are often lavish in expenses on their lusts: and thus shame those Christians who are penurious in promoting the cause of God: they, however, frequently find means by one of their crimes to bear the expenses of the rest; and it is through defect of ingenuity or of power, if they do not always accomplish this.—Inconsiderate princes, who are the slaves of pleasure and dupes to their favourites, may, though humane in their own dispositions, become as mischievous as the most bloody tyrants; by consenting, through false accusations, to that injustice and cruelty which they would have abhorred, if they had taken the pains properly to investigate the business. Thus the most important interests of millions are sacrificed to the humour, emolument, or revenge of some worthless wretch; who regards the honour of his patron no more than he does the happiness of the people, and is as insensible to gratitude, as to compassion. But we may cease to wonder that such things have been done, when we consider how individuals, in every station of life, sacrifice their credit, interest, health, and connexions, and even shorten their lives, as well as ruin their souls, for the sake of the most contemptible gratifications: and though sensible of their danger, they have no power to resist the importunity of an inordinate, unreasonable inclination! When this becomes the case of one in authority, and unites with his other passions and partialities; intoxication and excess extinguish every remaining spark of humanity, and stupify conscience and reflection; and he and his companions will be revelling king's chamberlains, whom he had appointed to attend upon her, and gave him a commandment to Mordecai, to know what it was, and why it was.

6 So Hatach went forth to Mordecai, unto the street of the city, which was before the king's gate.

7 And Mordecai told him of all that had happened unto him, and of the sum of the money that Haman had promised to pay to the king's treasuries for the Jews, to destroy them.

8 Also he gave him the copy of the writing of the decree that was given at Shushan to destroy them, to show it unto Esther, and to declare it unto her, and to charge her that she should go in unto the king, to make supplication unto him, and to make request before him for her people.

9 And Hatach came and told Esther the words of Mordecai.

[Practical Observations.]

with unfeeling and most unseasonable mirth, while thousands are deploring the fatal effects of their pernicious counsels.—But the Lord bounds the effects of man's malice, as he does the raging waves of the ocean: even superstition, though baneful in itself, may sometimes operate as a useful restraint on those who are free from every other; and it has often so dismayed unprincipled men, in the full career of prosperous wickedness, that they have postponed their designs, till opportunity has been given to render them abortive. Thus “the counsel of the LORD shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure;” and “they that trust in him shall never be confounded.”

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1. (Marg. Ref.) Mordecai, besides giving vent to his own sorrows, by his open lamentations, and by the habit of a penitent mourner, doubtless intended to excite the attention of his people to the extent and imminence of their danger, and to the proper method of seeking deliverance. Probably, he was one of the most considerable Jews in Shushan, and immediately struck at by the decree: therefore he thus avowed his relation to the Jews, and called upon them to unite in seeking protection from God.

V. 2. Nothing was allowed to enter within the palace, which did not bear the aspect of joy and pleasure, or which could remind the king of misery or mortality. (Note, Gen. 50:4.) Thus, whatever oppressions were committed upon the subjects, all complaints were discouraged, and care was taken to prevent the king from being troubled with the report of them. Mordecai, therefore, when expressing his grief by the customary tokens, might not enter to his usual place of attendance: but he walked as near it as he could, that being noticed, Esther might hear of him; through whom he doubtless entertained hopes of deliverance. (Notes, 13:14. 2:21—23.)

V. 3. It cannot be reasonably doubted, that the fastings and weepings of the Jews were attended by constant prayers and supplications: yet all mention of them, and of the glorious God whom they worshipped, seems to have been carefully and purposely avoided, both here and elsewhere. (Preface.)

V. 4. Some of the queen's attendants were, it seems, acquainted with her relation to Mordecai; and his excessive grief being noticed, she soon heard of it. As a token of her sincere and deep sympathy with him in his sorrow, and her unabated affection for so kind a benefactor, she sent him change of raiment, according to the custom of the times; in order perhaps, that he might resume his place: but she seems not to have known the cause of his affliction; and his refusal to be comforted would lead her to conclude, that it was for some very great and terrible calamity. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. The wives and concubines of the Persian kings were watched with such jealous strictness, that the queen herself had not liberty to go out of the precincts of the palace, to confer in person with so near a relative; nor might he have access to her, especially in mourning! So that she could only inquire the cause of his excessive sorrow, by the interposition of one of the chamberlains, whom the king had appointed to attend on her. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6—9. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 3:2—15.) Mordecai told Hatach, in what manner Haman's revenge was excited, and of the proposal which he had made to the king of paying ten thousand talents into the treasury, if a decree might be passed for destroying all the Jews; and that such a decree had been ratified, of which he sent a copy to Esther; and he charged her to intercede with the king in behalf of her nation.

V. 11. It may be supposed, that this law was framed, under the pretext of securing the person of the king from the assaults of conspirators, and of maintaining his dignity; that whether man or woman, shall come unto the king into the inner court, who is not called, there is none law of his to put him to death, except such to whom the king shall hold out the golden sceptre, that he may live: but I have not been called to come in unto the king these thirty days.

12 And they told to Mordecai Esther's words.

13 Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, "Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews.

14 For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed and who knoweth, whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?

15 ¶ Then Esther bade them return Mordecai this answer,

16 Go, gather together all the Jews that are present in Shushan, and fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink three days night or day: also and my maidens will fast likewise: and so will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law; and if I perish, I perish.

17 So Mordecai went his way, and did according to all that Esther had commanded him.

being seldom seen, he might be considered as a kind of deity: but it would serve also to protect his ministers and favourites from detection, in their oppressions or pernicious measures. For in general the king must see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and receive their reports; and if any one would venture to present to him a complaint, petition, appeal, or information, he must do it at the hazard of his life; as the king would seldom call for any person, in opposition to the advice of his counsellors and ministers. By this method the king also was excluded from liberal society and converse: so that his palace in the city, and his pavilions in the camp, became a kind of prison: and no wonder, that princes who were so immured, became morose and capricious, and prepared for every kind of tyranny and cruelty. (Notes, Neh. 2:1, 2. Dan. 6:6—9.)—As the law extended to the women likewise, we may suppose that this was intended to free the monarch from molestation, when his affections had been transferred from former objects to more successful rivals: for if the queen went into his presence uncalled, immediate death was the inevitable consequence, should he be displeased at her intrusion. And as Esther had not been called for during a whole month, she had some reason to fear that she had lost the king's favour; and that she should also lose her life, if she presumed to enter uncalled into his presence.—Probably, Haman had occupied the king's mind with every species of licentious pleasure, that he might think no further of the edict, which he had confirmed and published.

V. 13, 14. Mordecai represented to Esther, that in case the decree against her people should be executed, she would certainly be known to be a Jewess, and would be slain even in the king's palace, by some of the envious and malicious enemies of that nation. But, being "strong in faith," he was assured, that God would by some means deliver his people; and that, if she refused to venture her life in the cause, their engagement would be attended by some remarkable judgment upon her, and all her remaining relations. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Prov. 24:11, 12. Matt. 16:24—28.) He also suggested to her, that most probably she had been advanced to her present dignity, on purpose to be the deliverer of her nation in this perilous crisis, and in this case, her attempt would be both safe and honourable.—It is remarkable that sentiments, so replete with faith and piety, are conveyed to us, without the mention of God, or Providence. This seems to have been done intentionally. (Preface.)

V. 15—17. (Marg. Ref.) Some think that the Jews were only required to abstain from all delicacies, and to fast each day till after sunset: but perhaps on this extraordinary occasion, all, who had no hindrance that rendered it impracticable, (in which situation many must needs be found,) fasted from the morning of the first, until some time on the third day, without eating any thing. (Notes, Dan. 10:2, 3. Joel 1:13—15. 2:15—17. Jon. 3:5—10.) The queen herself, however, conformed to the same rule which she prescribed to others: and she had obtained some attendants, who were willing to unite with her in these exercises of devotion, though it is not probable that they were Jewesses. And when preparation had been made, by solemn humiliation before God, no doubt accompanied by fervent, united, and persevering prayer, she determined, by an heroic act of faith and love, to venture her life in the cause of her people: and if it were the will of the Lord, that she should be put to death, she was ready to acquiesce in his appointment. "This is not a speech of despondence, but of courage and resolution; being as much as to say, I am content to perish in so good a cause: and if I perish for it in this world, (as the Targum glosses,) I shall have my portion in the world to come." Bp. Patrick. (Notes, Neh. 6:10—14. Acts 20:22—24. Phil. 2:24—30. 1 John 3:16, 17.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. Public calamities, especially those which oppress the church of God, should more affect our hearts than any private affliction: and it is peculiarly distressing to a generous mind, to be even the occasion of suffering to others.—Vain is the attempt of man to banish misery from his heart, by any of those varied devices which he tries for that purpose. A refuge from the wrath to come is indeed provided; and an effectual support under temporal afflictions, and victory over death itself: but most men content themselves with striving to forget their misery, instead of seeking and securing happiness. Yet the approach of death, as well as its consequences, must be formidable, in proportion as it is unexpected and unprepared for.—Exalted stations, and envied distinctions, in many respects, greatly abridge the liberty of the possessors, and preclude them from the most agreeable and profitable society. Pride, envy, suspicion, and other unreasonable passions, render them slaves to cumbrous forms; and to preserve their dignity, or from fear of giving offence, they often have less opportunity of enjoyment or improvement, than their inferiors, and become the ignorant dupes of designing men in matters of the greatest importance. Too often laws also are framed in subservency to men's lusts; and under every government, the more cause is given for complaint, the less liberty is allowed to complain.—But let us rejoice that the righteous Lord reigns, and upon a mercy-seat. To him we have access at all times: his golden sceptre is ever held forth to encourage our approach: we cannot come uncalled into his presence, when we plead the Saviour's name; our danger consists in keeping at too great a distance, not in drawing too near: if he have taken us for the objects of his peculiar love, he will never cast us off; and it is our own fault if we have not daily access to him and communion with him. We never have any good reason to complain of his dispensations; though we have frequently cause to bemoan our afflictions, to deprecate the miseries to which we are exposed, and to appeal to him against our oppressors, persecutors, and tempters: and we are charged to present our daily petitions at his throne of grace, for the whole church of God and all the members of it, according to their several difficulties, trials, and services; as well as for the conversion and salvation of our fellow-sinners. For this purpose, we should inquire concerning the state of our brethren, how they fare, and of the cause of God, how it prospers; that we may be directed in our prayers, and in our endeavours to serve the common cause by the due improvement of our talents. And if we be thus disposed, we shall seldom want opportunities of comforting the mourners, protecting the oppressed, or succouring those who are in tribulation or necessity.

V. 10—17. As the enemies of the church are instigated by malice to be unwearied in mischief, surely we should be constrained by love to be as unwearied in doing good. But we are prone to shrink from perilous and self-denying services: and to think ourselves sufficiently excused for neglecting an opportunity of important usefulness, if we can truly say, that it would have been embraced at the hazard of liberty or life. Yet, as the disciples of him who laid down his life for us, we ought also, if properly called to it, "to lay down our lives for the brethren;" and no labour, loss, or suffering in the way, will justify us in neglecting the duty of our station. If then Christians, who are placed in exalted situations, show a disposition to consult their own ease and safety rather than the public good, they should be plainly remonstrated with and reminded that their interest and that of God's people are inseparable; that their enemies are the same: that he, who sinfully determines "to save his life, shall lose it;" that enlargement and deliverance will arise to the church of God from some quarter; that if they, from selfish motives, refuse the privilege of being his instruments, the honour will be given to others, and disgrace or ruin will come upon them and theirs, for deserting the cause when the emergency called for their interposition; that Providence has raised them to their high stations, that they may serve God, and do good to mankind; and will they then neglect the opportunity which is presented to them? that, perhaps, this was the very service for which they were raised up; and it is preposterous to fear man in doing the evident will of God. Such remonstrances, when urged by men of consistent character, have a powerful effect, in exciting the timorous and reluctant to venture in a good cause.—Those, however, who are called to stand forth boldly in perilous services, have a right to demand the united prayers of all their brethren. And, in great emergencies and adversities especially, solemn seasons of fasting, humiliation and prayer are peculiarly useful, to prepare the mind for expecting and receiving deliverance from the mercy of God, in a proper manner.—Believers may have fellowship with

CHAPTER V.

Esther, venturing unaided before the king, is graciously resolved; and, being encouraged to make her request, she invites the king and Haman to a banquet. 1-5. Being again asked what was her request, she invites them to another banquet the next day, 6-8. Haman, proud of this distinction, and elated by prosperity, is yet disquieted by Mordecai's neglect, and amidst his vainglorious complaints of it to his friends and his wife, 9-13. By their advice he erects a gallows for Mordecai's execution the next morning, 14.

NOW it came to pass *on the third day, that Esther put on her royal apparel, and stood in the inner court of the king's house, over against the king's house: and the king ^dsat upon his royal throne in the royal house, over against the gate of the house.

2 And it was so, when the king saw Esther the queen standing in the court, that *she obtained favour in his sight: and the king held out to Esther (the golden sceptre that was in his hand. So Esther drew near, and touched the top of the sceptre.

3 Then said the king unto her, *What wilt thou, queen Esther? and what is thy request? it shall be even given thee ^hto the half of the kingdom.

4 And Esther answered, *If it seem good unto the king, let the king and Haman come this day unto ^kthe banquet that I have prepared for him.

5 Then the king said, *Cause Haman to make haste, that he may do as Esther hath said. So the king and Haman came to the banquet that Esther had prepared.

6 ¶ And the king said unto Esther at the banquet of wine, What is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? even to the half of the kingdom it shall be performed.

each other in the same duties, when not able to meet in the same place.—Those who stir up others to self-denial should set the example of it: and a winning deportment, a pious conversation, and a holy life, will generally induce others to join us in seeking the Lord, wherever we are placed. (Note, Acts 10:3-8, v. 7.) Having solemnly commended our souls and our cause to God, we may venture under his protection upon any service, without distressing fear: we are perfectly safe, if he please to preserve us; and should we lose our lives in doing his will, that loss would be our greatest gain.—Indeed all dangers are trivial, compared to the danger of losing our souls. When this is apprehended, the trembling sinner is often as much afraid of casting himself, without reserve, upon the Lord's free mercy, as Esther was of coming before the king. But let him venture, as she did, with earnest prayers and supplications, saying, "If I perish, I perish," and he shall certainly succeed in the event. And as the cause of God will at last be triumphant, it is our highest interest cordially to adhere to it, whatever cross we may be required to endure.

NOTES.—CHAP. V. 1-3. Esther, having intrusted herself to the protection of God, and put on her royal apparel, ventured into the presence of the king; most probably before the conclusion of the solemn fast and while the Jews were still engaged in prayer. Her conduct was contrary to the law of the Persians: but the king, by holding forth the golden sceptre, granted her a pardon; and by his subsequent inquiry and promise, relieved her anxiety and raised her expectations. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 32:6-8, 24-28. 33:4. Neh. 1:5-11. Prov. 21:1. Acts 9:3-6. 12:5-11.)—The apocryphal addition to this book, says, that at first the king frowned, and Esther fainted; and that God then put it into his heart to behave kindly towards her.

V. 4. It appears probable, that Esther intended to make a previous trial of the king's disposition, before she presented her important petition, which could scarcely be granted without the immediate ruin of his principal favourite. It might also be improper to make her request before the king's attendants; and she meant to do it in the presence of Haman. The delay likewise expressed her respect for the king, whom she reluctantly troubled, because the matter was urgent: and probably she well knew that blandishments, and the exhilaration of wine and feasting, disposed him to grant such petitions as he would otherwise have rejected.

V. 5-8. (Marg. Ref.) Whether Esther's courage failed her, or whether she had some good reason for this delay; the providential wisdom of God was wonderfully manifested by it, as the event sufficiently shows. There was 7 Then answered Esther, and said, My petition and my request is:

8 If I have found favour in the sight of the king, and if it please the king to grant my petition, and to perform my request, let the king and Haman come to the banquet that I shall prepare for them, and I will do to-morrow as the king hath said.

9 ¶ Then went Haman forth that day joyfully and with a glad heart: but when Haman saw Mordecai in the king's gate, that he stood not up, nor moved for him, he was full of indignation against Mordecai.

10 Nevertheless, Haman refrained himself: and when he came home, he sent and called for his friends, and Zeresh his wife.

11 And Haman told them of the glory of his riches, and the multitude of his children, and all the things wherein the king had promoted him, and how he had advanced him above the princes and servants of the king.

12 Haman said moreover, Yea, Esther the queen did let no man come in with the king unto the banquet that she had prepared but myself; and to-morrow am I invited unto her also with the king.

13 Yet all this availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate.

14 ¶ Then said Zeresh his wife and all his friends unto him, Let a gallows be made of fifty cubits high, and to-morrow speak thou unto the king that Mordecai may be hanged thereon: then go thou in merrily with the king unto the banquet. And the thing pleased Haman; and he caused the gallows to be made.

also a singular providence of God in this matter, which so disposed her mind, that the high honour the king bestowed on Mordecai the next day, might fall out between this and that, and make way for her petition. . . . The Israelites were in great expectation of the issue of this feasting, and hoped to see Haman suddenly cut off; but she was resolved to turn their thoughts the right way, that is, from their own God, looking for mercy from their heavenly Father. Bp. Patrick and Targum quoted by him. (Notes, 6.)

V. 9, 10. Mordecai had before refused Haman the exorbitant honours which he claimed: but now he "stood not up, nor moved for him," which probably he had before done; for Haman's prodigious wickedness rendered him unworthy even of common respect. Mordecai would also show this base man, that, so far from abject submission from dread of his cruel revenge, he had trusted his cause with God, and did not "fear what flesh could do to him." But Haman, though full of indignant wrath, refrained himself for the present.—It seems that at the close of the solemn fast, Mordecai had hastened to put off his sackcloth, and to be found in his place (Notes, 1-3. 2:21-23. 4:1, 2.)

V. 11, 12. Haman's wife and friends must have before known all the particulars of his prosperity: but he loved, it seems, to be talking on these subjects; and the queen's invitation, which he supposed to spring from peculiar esteem and respect, was a recent distinction which greatly flattered his pride.

V. 13. The neglect of Mordecai, by Haman's own confession, more than counterbalanced all his singular prosperity, and marred all his enjoyment. His proud heart rankled with malice and impatience, because this Jew still lived, kept his place, and refused to bow unto him. The destruction of the nation was determined on at a distant day; but he thirsted for Mordecai's blood, as an anticipation of that more complete revenge.—How small a matter will spoil all the satisfaction of those, who are arrived at the top of human felicity! Immense riches, glory, and honour, gave not Haman so much pleasure, as he felt pain from one man's disrespect. Bp. Patrick.

V. 14. Zeresh and Haman's friends supposed, that being so deeply chagrined, he could not enjoy the royal banquet, if he did not previously gratify his malice by the death of Mordecai. They were confident, that at the first word the king would consent to Mordecai's execution; and they advised the immediate erection of a gibbet for that purpose, that no time might be lost; and, in order that all men might witness the death of him, who refused honour to the king's favourite, it must be more than twenty-five yards high. This cruel and

CHAPTER VI.

The king unable to sleep, orders the records of the kingdom to be read, 1: and discovering that Mordecai's service had not been rewarded, he considers how to honour him, 2-3. Haman, coming early to request that Mordecai might be named, is himself appointed to confer the highest honours upon him, 4-11. He is strictly cut down, and distressed; his friends and wife predict his ruin; and in this state of mind he is called to attend Esther's banquet, 12-14.

ON that night 'could not the king sleep, and he commanded to bring the book of records of the Chronicles; and they were read before the king.

2 And it was found written, that Mordecai had told of Bigthana and Teresh, two of the king's chamberlains, the keepers of the door, who sought to lay hand on the king Ahasuerus.

3 And the king said, 'What honour and dignity hath been done to Mordecai for this? Then said the king's servants that ministered unto him, 'There is nothing done for him.

4 And the king said, 'Who is in the court? (Now Haman was come into the outward court of the king's house, to speak unto the king to hang Mordecai on the gallows that he had prepared for him.)

foolish counsel was calculated to please Haman; and though night was approaching, the gallows was immediately prepared; but little did he dream for whom it was erected. (Notes 7: 9, 10. 9:13, 14.) 'The Jews were extremely troubled at the sight of these gallows, and all cried to God in the words of the Psalmist, 123:2, "Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress; so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God, until that he have mercy upon us." Targum in Bp. Patrick. The text selected is apposite; but the rest is the mere imagination of the writer.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In those things which must be done, and which require great courage, needless delays should be avoided; and it is best to proceed when our affections are lively, and our faith in exercise.—Costly or royal apparel is not the Christian's ornament, and is utterly worthless when compared with wisdom and grace; yet, on some occasions and in some stations, it may and ought to be worn. (Notes, 1 Tim. 2:8-10; 1 Pet. 3:1-4.) But it is a most deplorable evil that inferior persons will ape the fashions, and emulate the expense, of their superiors: and thus they often injure their families and creditors, or lavish that which belongs to the poor; and at the same time expose their own weakness and folly.—The best method of prevailing with men, is first to prevail with God by earnest prayer; for he can dispose the heart of any prince or persecutor, to favour his people, as far as he pleases. Yet while we trust in his omnipotent protection, we should be wise as well as courageous: and he will generally teach those who consult him, to conciliate men's affections by attention and respect, and to watch for favourable opportunities before they propose important matters. But, however largely men may profess or promise, it is best not to ask or expect too much from them.—A slight affront, which a humble man would scarcely notice, will torment a proud man even to madness, destroy all his comforts, and sometimes fill him with diabolical rage and misery. Vainglorious men delight in boasting of the commendations, honours, and favours conferred on them; each new distinction gives a momentary gratification to their vanity, and they receive every attention, as a tribute to their merit, or as homage paid to their superior talents. They invite, and even hire men, to listen to their praises; and often glory most in those things which tend to their immediate disgrace and ruin. For "vanity and vexation" are at last the inventory of all sublimary things. All "avaleth them nothing," while this is wanted, or the other wrong; a beloved child or friend is dead, or an enemy lives and prospers; while some are mounted higher than themselves, and others refuse to render them the most servile flattery, and comply with their capricious and unreasonable demands. (Notes, and P. O. 1 Kings 21: 1-7.) Prosperity increases insolence and arrogance, which stir up envy and enmity, and provoke affronts and opposition, and thus the most venomous resentments and tormenting passions are excited, and the fair edifice of fancied felicity vanishes, like the enchanted castles of romantic poets. May we then seek happiness in the favour of God, in peace of conscience, and dominion over our own spirits; and in cultivating that love, which "suffereth long and is kind, . . . envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own: is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things; and which never faith, but shall be perfected in the eternal felicity of heaven! (Note, 1 Cor. 13:5-7.)

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1, 2. No reason is assigned why Ahasuerus was not able to sleep: but the Lord so ordered it, that sleep fled from him: (marg.) and instead of calling for the ministers of his pleasure to entertain him, he was disposed to examine the records of his kingdom! It does not appear, that he had any express intention, in having recourse to this extraordinary way of employing his sleepless hours, during the night: but the only wise God so appointed it. And he likewise so ordered it, that the reader opened the records in that part, in which Mordecai's important service was written! (Note, 2:21-23.) Had not this circumstance intervened, Haman no doubt would have prevailed in his request against Mordecai; and this would have been extremely unfavourable to the success of Esther's petition for her people, and against Haman. (Note, 5:14.)

V. 3. Instead of a reward, Mordecai, and all his people for his sake, were actually condemned to die! probably some recompense had been intended: but so unassuming a person who would not cringe and flatter, and who presented no requests for preferment, was soon forgotten by a mighty prince, surrounded by his courtiers and pleasures, and engrossed by a multiplicity of affairs. (Notes, Gen. 40:23. 1 Sam. 17:55-58. 2 Sam. 9:1. Ec. 9:13-18. Luke 17:11-19.) 'But there was a special Providence in it, that he went without a reward then, which procured it for him most opportunely at this time. It is not improbable, that, as Josephus saith, the history of some of his ancestors was read before they came to his reign; wherein was set down what services men had done, and what preferment or gifts had been bestowed upon them; which moved the king to ask, when they came to this story of Mordecai, what had been done for him.' Bp. Patrick.

V. 4, 5. 'Haman came early to court, that he might gratify his revenge, and go with more pleasure to the banquet. This was another part of God's providence, to bring him so soon to court, when the king was thus disposed.' Bp. Patrick.—Even Haman might not enter the inner court till called for. (Note, 4:11.)

V. 6-11. We may suppose, that Haman was much pleased to be so speedily called into the king's chamber: but at his request was prevented, by his advice being asked on a very different business. Probably, the king was considering what good preferment was vacant, which might suit Mordecai, whom he should delight to honour and reward, as the preserver of his life: but he did not name the person; and Haman's thoughts were so engrossed about himself, that he could not think the king would honour any one above him, or would delight to honour any one beside him.—His excessive vanity, ambition, presumption, and ostentation, as well as the emptiness of his worthless mind, are fully illustrated by the honours which he chose, supposing them intended for himself. He must, forsooth, have the use of the king's own royal robe, and horse, and crown: one of the most noble princes must be his page, and his herald: and by proclamation it was to be made known, what delight the king had in honouring him! Perhaps Ahasuerus understood his meaning and was disgusted at his exorbitant pretensions; and while he peremptorily commanded him to do all this to "Mordecai the Jew," he could scarcely help remembering the edict, which Haman had obtained against that people. Haman, however, did not venture to object or demur; his request for leave to hang Mordecai was adjourned sine die; and he was ana-said, and do even so to Mordecai the Jew, that sitteth at the king's gate: 'let nothing fail of all that thou hast spoken.

11 Then took Haman the apparel and the horse, and arrayed Mordecai, and brought him on horseback through the street of the city, and proclaimed before him, Thus shall it be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honour.

12 And Mordecai came again to the king's gate. But Haman hasted to his house mourning, and having his head covered.

13 And Haman told Zeresh his wife, and all his friends every thing that had befallen him. Then said his wise men and Zeresh his wife unto him, 'If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, before whom thou hast begun to fall, thou shalt not prevail against him, but shalt surely fall before him.

14 And while they were yet talking with him, came the king's chamberlains, and hasted to bring Haman unto the banquet that Esther had prepared.

CHAPTER VII.

Esther, at the banquet, petitions the king for her own life, and the lives of her people; and accuses Haman as their enemy, 1-6. The king, in wrath and jealousy, condemns Haman, who is hanged on the gallows prepared for Mordecai, 7-10.

SO the king and Haman came to 'banquet with Esther the queen.

2 And the king said again to Esther on the second day at the banquet of wine, What is thy petition, queen Esther? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? and it shall be performed, even to the half of the kingdom.

3 Then Esther the queen answered and said, If I have found favour in thy sight, O king, and if it please the king, let my life be given me at my petition, and my people at my request:

strained to become page to a man, comparatively obscure, whom he hated and contemned above all other men on earth, while this extraordinary honour was conferred on him! Imagination itself cannot devise a more painful mortification. It cannot indeed be supposed, that Mordecai was greatly pleased with this unmeaning pageantry considered in itself, which would confer no solid advantage, but expose him to great envy: yet he probably considered it as a favourable presage of Esther's success, and of the deliverance of his people from their malicious enemies.—Some learned men think, that "the crown-royal" denotes an ornament by which the king's horse was distinguished; and not the crown which the king himself wore.

V. 12. Mordecai, not elated with the honour which he had received, returned to his place and duty as if nothing had happened. (Notes, 1 Sam. 3:15. Prov. 27:20.) But Haman went home as a condemned criminal, dreading the consequences of this unexpected disaster. If Mordecai had been a person before unknown to Haman, it would have been no real degradation, to be employed in honouring him in this manner, as the preserver of the king's life; though his pride would have been mortified: but, as he was the man whom he mortally hated, and one of that nation whose destruction he had sought and confidently expected; he must conclude that this favour indicated the determined purpose of the king to prefer Mordecai; and consequently foreboded his own ruin. For in such a contest there could be no alternative between victory and destruction. (Note, Prov. 25:8-10.) The contrast also, between the object of his so early coming to the king, to request permission to hang Mordecai, and the honour which he was in consequence compelled to do him, was in itself most dismaying. Having his head covered. Marg. Ref. r. Note, 7:8.

V. 13. "Haman told Zeresh his wife, and his friends," who were waiting to hear what was become of Mordecai, whom they advised to get hanged on the gallows, . . . how cross every thing had fallen out to him that morning." Bp. Patrick.—The "wise men," here mentioned, seem to have been astrologers or magicians, whom he consulted on this occasion; and were probably the same persons whom he had before consulted: (Marg. Ref. Note, 37.) and perhaps they pretended to found their judgment on the principles of their art, or to consult their oracles. Yet what had been observed of the contest between Haman and Mordecai, and the sudden and rapid falls of court favourites in absolute monarchies; as well as what they must have heard of the wonderful works of JEHOVAH in behalf of his people; were sufficient to convince them, that this unexpected turn was the forerunner of more fatal consequences. But they deduced no salutary counsel from these apprehensions: and indeed their conclusions were entirely calculated to drive Haman to despair. (Notes, 1 Sam. 28:12-19.) His wife also concurred with them in opinion, that these were fatal omens; which was calculated still more to overwhelm him.

V. 14. Haman, in the anguish of his heart, seems to have neglected his appointment; and doubtless he would willingly have been excused from the banquet, to which he had expected to go so cheerfully: (Note, 5:14.) but there was no alternative; he must attend, to hear his accusation, and the judgment in consequence awarded against him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are in every thing entirely dependent upon God: nor can the whole world purchase an hour's refreshing sleep, if he be good to withhold it: from him therefore we should seek this solace to our cares, and thank him for it when we have enjoyed it. But when, by any means he withhold sleep from us, it is of great importance to employ usefully our waking hours. The cares and duties of our station in society may properly occupy our reflection, to the exclusion of those thoughts that are vain and injurious: but it is best, when we can meditate upon God, and his works, his truths, his precepts, and promises; and when we can bless him for his mercies, and pour out our hearts before him in prayer. (Notes, Ps. 77:12-12.)—The providence of God superintends the most minute concerns of men. Those actions which are the result of caprice, and appear unaccountable, fall in with his wise and gracious purposes, and "not a sparrow falls to the ground without him."—Gratitude even to man, though commended by all, is practised by very few indeed; and commonly least by those who have most in their power. Pride of rank and birth, a variety of pleasures and occupations, and the presence of agreeable flatterers, combine to induce neglect and forgetfulness of those, who have most faithfully and effectually served them; especially if obscure, modest, and unassuming. Yet thus they not only become guilty of the odious sin of ingratitude; but actually yield the superiority to the very man whom they affect to despise: for he that confers, is always superior to him who receives, an unmerited and unrequited favour.—Those qualifications which demand esteem, and those actions which merit a reward, generally meet with neglect, if they do not expose the possessors to ill treatment, in the circles of the great, and in the courts of kings.—The instruments of pleasure and amusement, who help them to forget their misery, and to waste their fleeting moments; the forward, the subtle, and the artful; and those who can sacrifice conscience, honour, and honesty, to wit, ingenuity, and politeness, have hitherto always met with most favour from the great. Let us then learn to serve a Master, who will not let the least well-meant service lose its reward.—And if any reader should recollect, that nothing has been done to requite some benefactor who aided him many years ago, let him not think that the obligation is out of date; but rather let him study how he may, effectually and without further delay, do that which should have been done long since; and delight to honour his benefactors, if he can render them no other recompense.—Pride, envy, and ambition are insatiable and every sinful passion grows more exorbitant by indulgence. When a man heartily idolizes his important self, he readily fancies that others equally admire him, and are disposed to do him all the honour which he foolishly longs after. If any one open his lips in commendation, doubtless he must be the object! if a favour be mentioned, it must be intended for him! if a preferment be vacant, who but he can be thought of to fill it, provided it be not beneath his acceptance!—But "before honour is humility, and a haughty spirit before a fall." both God and man delight in rendering the mortification of proud worms proportioned to their ambition: and men of this character meet with many presages on earth of that everlasting contempt and misery which await them in another world, if not redeemed from this diabolical vice. (Notes, Dan. 4:34-37. 5:18-28.) They who have flattered them in prosperity, will prove "miserable comforters" in the time of their distress: worldly pleasures will soon become tasteless, and even nauseous, to those who have a conscience burdened with guilt or appalled with terror; and even the wise men of this world have often foreseen the ruin of those, who engage in the unequal contest with the church of God.—But the depth of the believer's distress is the seedtime of his joys; and every victory and comfort is to him an earnest of his final triumph and felicity. The honour, which the Father delights to confer upon his beloved Son, is a pledge of the security and salvation of all whom he represents, and who commit their cause into his hand. Their bitterest enemies shall promote, and be constrained to witness their exaltation, and to know "what shall be done to the men whom the LORD delighteth to honour;" and how much their "eternal weight of glory" exceeds the worthless, transient honours of the world; while the sight shall increase the anguish and despair of those, who expected to be gratified in effecting their misery and destruction.

more expressive than before, promised to grant it, though it were to the value of half his kingdom; (5:3, 6.) she, with the greatest modesty and respect, and in the most simple and affecting manner, besought him, that her own life might be spared, and the lives of her people, which were all involved in one common danger. Without complaining of his conduct in any degree, she stated, that she and her people had been sold as sheep for the slaughter; alluding to the money which Haman had offered to pay into the treasury for their destruction; she quoted the words of the unrighteous decree, "to be destroyed, to be slain, and to perish," as proving that her life, as well as those of the other Jews, was certainly in danger: (3:13.) and she added, that if they had been only sold for slaves, she would not have interposed; though the enemy could never have made up the loss, which the king would have sustained by thus oppressing his peaceable and industrious subjects. Some interpret the last clause to mean, that if the sufferings of the enslaved Jews, though extreme and undeserved, had not been likewise detrimental to the king's interest, Esther would have held her peace. The whole speech, however, was replete with natural eloquence, and suited to affect and persuade the king.

V. 5. Perhaps Ahasuerus at first scarcely recollected his edict against the Jews, or was not aware of its consequences; or he did not immediately perceive that Esther referred to it; and therefore he could not conceive that any one could be so daring, as to attempt the life of his queen, as well as the destruction of his subjects. The language is peculiarly expressive of astonishment and indignation. "In the Hebrew words are, 'Who is he, whose heart hath filled him to do so?' A speech like that in the New Testament, (Acts 5:3.) 'Why hath Satan filled thy heart?' Made thee so daring and presumptuous." Bp. Patrick. (Note, Acts 5:1—11, v. 3.)

V. 6. The events, and presages, of the morning no doubt tended to increase Haman's terror on this occasion. He had found, that the king "delighted to honour" Mordecai the Jew; he now discovered that the queen was a Jewess, and strongly attached to her people; he had heard the king repeatedly promise to "grant her request to the half of his kingdom;" and he could not but be aware that his own ruin was impending.

V. 7. We may suppose, that at the moment when Esther mentioned "this wicked Haman," as the enemy of her and of her people, the whole transaction of the edict rushed into the king's mind, and appeared to him in its true colours; and that he was filled with rage, when he reflected how his worthless favourite had seduced him into a measure, calculated to ruin his kingdom, to take away the life of his beloved queen, and exceedingly to tarnish his own reputation; and that he walked about in agitation of mind, not knowing what could be done in such an emergency.

V. 8. Haman had prostrated himself against the couch, on which Esther reclined at the banquet. His only design was to deprecate, with the most abject submission, her displeasure, and to entreat her to intercede for his life. But the king, regarding him as one capable of any villany, and growing more enraged by reflecting upon his former machinations; suspected him, or professed to suspect him, of having designs against the queen's honour also.—This word sufficiently informed the attendants of the king's determination; and they directly treated Haman as a condemned criminal, who was never more to see the face of the king, or even the light of the sun, but to be hurried away to immediate death.

V. 9. Harbonah, probably when he went to call Haman to the banquet, had seen the gallows, and discovered for what purpose it was prepared. Haman had doubtless been greatly envied for his prosperity, and hated for his insolence, in the midst of all the homage which was paid him. But now that the king's mind was evidently alienated from him, the courtiers were glad to please him and the queen, by concurring in Haman's downfall.

V. 10 It is immaterial to us, whether Haman died by 8 Then the king returned out of the palace-garden into the place of the banquet of wine; and Haman was fallen upon ^athe bed whereon Esther was. Then said the king, Will he force the queen also ^bbefore me in the house? As the word went out of the king's mouth, they ^ccovered Haman's face.

9 And ^dHarbonah, ^eone of the chamberlains, said before the king, ^fBehold also the ^ggallows fifty cubits high, which Haman had made for Mordecai, ^hwho had spoken good for the king, standeth in the house of Haman. Then the king said, ⁱHang him thereon.

10 So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. ^jThen was the king's wrath pacified.

crucifixion, or was strangled, or put to death in some other way, before he was suspended on the gibbet. (Notes, Deut. 21:22, 23. Josh. 8:29. 2 Sam. 17:23. 18:9. 21:9—14, v. 9. Matt. 27:3—5. Gal. 3:10—14.) Crucifixion however seems to have been a Roman punishment; at least not to have been in use at this early period. (Note, Ps. 22:16—18, v. 16.) It is enough to know, that he suffered the punishment which he had devised for Mordecai. Nec lex est aequior ulla, quam necis artifices arte perire sua. "There is no law more equitable, than that the devisers of death should perish by their own art."—Thus "the righteous is delivered out of trouble, and the wicked cometh in his stead." (Note, Prov. 11:8.)—"In this wonderful deliverance of the Jewish nation, there was no extraordinary manifestation of God's power, no particular cause or agent, that was in its working advanced above the ordinary pitch of nature; and yet the contrivance, or suiting of those ordinary agents appointed by God, is more admirably than if the same end had been effected by means truly miraculous." Dr. Jackson in Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The repeated promises, even of weak, mutable, and selfish men, encourage us to make our requests to them with great expectation of success: much more then should the exceedingly great and precious promises of the unchangeable God, embolden us to present many and large petitions to him, in behalf of ourselves and others, and with the full assurance of receiving far more than we ask.—If the love of life inspire such earnest and pathetic pleadings, with those "who can only kill the body;" how fervent and importunate should our continual prayers be to "Him, who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell!" And how affectionately should we pray for the eternal salvation of our relatives, friends, and neighbours, and all around us!—In supplicating the great men of this world, we must be very cautious not to withhold proper respect, or to give needless offence; even just complaints must be suppressed, and that asked as a great favour, which might equitably be demanded as a debt. But when we approach the King of kings, provided we come with humble reverence and uprightness of heart, we cannot ask or expect too much: for though nothing but wrath is our due, he is able and willing to "do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."—Persecution is as impolitic as it is unjust: nor would the wealth of both the Indies compensate the temporal loss, which must arise to every prince, who puts to death his conscientious, industrious subjects, immures them in prisons, drives them out of his dominions, harasses them with oppressions, and tempts them to hypocrisy.—Men often commit crimes without remorse, which, when described in their nature and consequences by proper language, or pointed out to them in the conduct of others, appear most horrible and atrocious: and when they find upon reflection, the nature and effects of their own headless conduct, they are filled with anguish and remorse. (Notes, 2 Sam. 12:1—14. Ps. 51:1—6.) Yet alas! their indignation frequently falls exclusively upon their tempters or accomplices, instead of producing unreserved self-condemnation and abhorrence. But when such convictions are excited in those in authority, though they do not terminate in true repentance, they may yet produce many salutary effects, by inducing them to punish atrocious criminals, to protect the innocent, and to rectify grievous abuses.—Those who are most insolent in prosperity, are commonly the most abject in adversity: and the enemies of God shall all be brought down before his people, and made to know his love towards them. (Ex. 11:8. Is. 60:14. Rev. 3:9.)—When men have proved themselves capable of the most daring and horrid crimes; they have no reason to expect any other, but to be suspected where they are not guilty, and to have the worst constructions put upon their most innocent actions.—The favour of men is deceitful and precarious: the higher wicked ambition climbs, the more rapid and terrible will be its fall. When haughty favourites, either of mighty princes, or of fickle multitudes, begin to totter upon their slippery eminences, all hands join to hurry

CHAPTER VIII.

Haman's estate is given to Esther; and Mordecai, as her near relation, is preferred in Haman's stead, 1, 2. Esther, with tears, entreats the king to reverse the decree against the Jews, 3-6. The king authorizes the Jews to defend themselves, and sends letters to that effect, throughout the provinces, 7-14. The honour conferred on Mordecai, and the joy of the Jews, 15-17.

ON that day did the king Ahasuerus give the house of Haman, the Jews' enemy, unto Esther the queen. And Mordecai came before the king; for Esther had told what he was unto her.

2 And the king took off his ring which he had taken from Haman, and gave it unto Mordecai. And Esther set Mordecai over the house of Haman.

3 ¶ And Esther spake yet again before the king, and fell down at his feet, and besought him with tears to put away the mischief of Haman the Agagite, and his device that he had devised against the Jews.

4 Then the king held out the golden sceptre towards Esther. So Esther arose, and stood before the king.

5 And said, If it please the king, and if I have found favour in his sight, and the thing seem right before the king, and I be pleasing in his eyes, let it be written to reverse the letters devised by Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, which he wrote to destroy the Jews which are in all the king's provinces:

them down, either out of envy, revenge, hatred, or similar ambition: and even they, who have most carested and delighted to honour them, will often as much delight in their misery and ruin. Thus "the fear of the wicked cometh upon him," and that suddenly: he is "taken in his own net, and entangled in his own devices;" and "when he perishes there is shouting." (Notes, Prov. 10:24. i 10:11.)—At the day of final retribution, when the whole wickedness of the ungodly shall be discovered, and the justice of God displayed in their everlasting punishment; all the righteous shall joyfully exclaim, "So let all thine enemies perish, O LORD!" (Notes, P. 3:20. 19:1-6.) but those who love him "shall shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father."

N. T. ES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1, 2. Some of Esther's attendants were acquainted with Mordecai's relation to her; (Note, 4:4.) and the king knew that he was of Jewish extraction: (6:10.) but he did not know that Mordecai was Esther's own cousin, and had been as a father to her, till on this occasion she disclosed it to him. Mordecai in consequence was introduced to Ahasuerus, and preferred by him: and as he had been so kind a friend to the queen when she was in destitute circumstances, and had also preserved the king's life, none could have fairer pretensions. The ring with the royal signet seems to have continued with Haman, as denoting the high offices which he bore under the king, till he was deposed and condemned; when, being taken from him, it was given to Mordecai as his successor. (Notes, 3:10, 11. Gen. 41:41-43. Is. 22:20-25. Jer. 22:24-27.) Haman's large estate also, being confiscated for his crimes, was given to Esther, and managed for her by Mordecai: (Notes, Job 27:13-23, vv. 16, 17. Prov. 13:22, 28:8. Ec. 2:24-26.) and if that haughty man could have foreseen these events, the prospect would have embittered his life, and even augmented the anguish of his death.

V. 3-6. Haman was dead, Mordecai was advanced, and the queen's person was protected; but the edict against the Jews remained in force, and their numerous enemies, in every province, would certainly endeavour to carry it into execution; so that Esther had not yet obtained the deliverance of her people, and that lay nearest to her heart. Probably, she was sometimes called for by the king; but to show that she was interested in the concerns of her nation, even more than in her own safety, she again ventured uncalled into his presence to plead for them. She seems to have been peculiarly earnest on this occasion; for she fell at his feet, and besought him with tears to grant her request. It may be supposed, that Ahasuerus hesitated in this perplexing case; as not knowing how to extricate himself with credit from so great a difficulty, and as reluctant to proclaim to all the world the folly into which he had been seduced. But Esther, with great discretion, avoided every intimation that the king himself had issued the decree, and expressed herself as if it had been not only Haman's device, but altogether his work, even as if the edict had been forged by him. And it had originated in his pride and revenge; his artful insinuations had decoyed the king to give an inconsiderate

[Practical Observations.]

7 ¶ Then the king Ahasuerus said unto Esther the queen, and to Mordecai the Jew, "Behold, I have given Esther the house of Haman, and him they have hanged upon the gallows, because he laid his hand upon the Jews."

8 Write ye also for the Jews, as it liketh you, in the king's name, and seal it with the king's ring: for the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, may no man reverse.

9 Then were the king's scribes called at that time in the third month, that is, the month Sivan, on the three and twentieth day thereof; and it was written, according to all that Mordecai commanded, unto the Jews, and to the lieutenants, and the deputies and rulers of the provinces, which are from India unto Ethiopia, a hundred twenty and seven provinces, unto every province according to the writing thereof, and unto every people after their language, and to the Jews according to their writing, and according to their language.

10 And he wrote in the king Ahasuerus's name, and sealed it with the king's ring, and sent letters by posts on horseback, and riders on mules, camels, and young dromedaries, assent to it; and he had framed it in his own words, and to answer his own purposes. (Notes, 3:6-15.)—If she herself were spared, she represents to him that it would break her heart to see all her kindred, nay her whole nation, destroyed. Bp. Patrick. Her plea, and the expressions used in urging it, are peculiarly pathetic and emphatical, and suited to excite the deepest and most tender sympathy; as well as to show her fervent affection for her people, as the people of God.

V. 8. The decree against the Jews was irrevocable: (but another edict might counteract its operation, and that would also become irreversible; and Esther and Mordecai were allowed to frame one for the purpose, as explicit as they pleased: and to ratify it in the same manner. Thus, that most absurd law, or constitution, made it necessary to authorize a civil war throughout this vast empire; both parties acting by and against the king's authority, at the same time.—The maxim in our government, that 'no act can be so framed, but that the same authority which enacted it may repeal it,' is immensely more suited to the state of human nature: for no human wisdom can foresee all the effects of any regulation, till experience has evinced them. While the king had legal authority to put the evil counsellor to death, to confiscate his estate, and to prefer his most hated enemy to his high offices, so that no objection seems to have been advanced by his nobles and counsellors; he had not the legal power to revoke, or the obnoxious decree! (Notes, 2:1, 3:10, 11.)—He chose to fill his realm with blood, rather than revoke a rash decree. Bp. Patrick.

V. 9. (Notes, 1, 2, 3:12-15.) More than two months had past, since Haman's decree was framed. (3:7.) Probably Ethiopia or the south of Egypt is intended.

V. 10. These letters were sent by runners, (Note, 2 Chr 30:6-9, v. 6.) or by horsemen. The words for the other animals, on which some of the messengers rode, are unusual, and learned men are by no means agreed about the meaning of them. Probably they were derived from the Persian language, or from that of some of the eastern nations. But the greatest speed was needful in this emergency, and every method was taken to secure it. (Marg. Ref.) "He sent men on horseback, . . . and upon other creatures as swift as horses, and upon mules both young and old, according as the places were nearer or further off. So he ordered the letters to be sent with great speed by the post, which carried them from stage to stage, till they came to the place whither they were directed." Bp. Patrick.

V. 11-13. This last decree evidently showed the king's intentions, though the former edict remained in force: so that they who assailed the Jews, were, in reality, though not formally rebelling against his authority. The Jews were not allowed to assault their enemies: but they might legally assemble and combine in defending themselves, and slay any number of those who attacked them. As the children and women were included in Haman's decree, they were also mentioned in this: but the Jews did not avail themselves of the clause; neither did they take any spoil. (3:13. Note, 9:6)

10.) Haman aimed at extermination, they only at self-defence. If this edict had not been granted, the Jews would have been punishable for taking previous measures in order to defend themselves; so that they could not have engaged, with concert or prospect of success, in any measure for that purpose: and even if any had escaped the massacre they would have been exposed as criminals to the sword of the magistrate, for resisting the execution of the law. They might, and doubtless would, when rendered desperate, have sold their lives as dear as possible; but they could have had little hopes of escaping, when overwhelmed by numbers, who were countenanced by the governors in every province. But now the advantage was entirely on their side: as none who valued the king's favour would injure them; and they might prepare with union and concert to repel the assault of others, and to inflict deserved punishment on their inveterate enemies. (Marg. Ref. e.)

V. 14. (Note, 10.) Though this decree was ratified above eight months before the appointed day; yet there would be time little enough to publish it throughout all the provinces of this immense empire, considering the great distance of many of them from Shushan; and to give the Jews opportunity to prepare arms, and take proper measures for their own preservation. The king himself therefore hastened the messengers, as dreading the consequences of the former edict.

V. 15. Mordecai, being now publicly recognised as the chief minister and favourite of the king, went from the palace, arrayed according to his rank, in conformity to the customs of the country. (Marg. Ref. f.) It seems that the people of Shushan in general, having a better opinion of his integrity and capacity than of Haman's, were greatly pleased with the change: (Notes, Prov. 11:10, 11. 28:12, 28. 29:2.) though the sequel shows, that there was a strong party of rancorous enemies to the Jews residing there.—A great crown, &c. [Note, 1:8. * Not like that of the kings, but such a coronet as was worn by the peers of the realm.] Bp. Patrik. Perhaps it was one of the insignia of the chief minister under the king.

V. 16. Had light, &c. That is, prosperity and hope. The dark cloud which had long hung over the nation of the Jews was dispelled, and the returning favour of the king, in answer to their prayers, was a token of the Lord's care of them. So that their hopes revived, and they began, as it were, to walk in the sunshine, and were filled with gladness, and treated with respect by those who had despised them; being evidently in favour both with God and man. (Notes, Ps. 30:9-12. 97:11. Prov. 4:18, 19.)

V. 17. (Marg. Ref.) When the people saw the interpositions of Providence in behalf of the Jews, many were convinced that God was with them, and that they would certainly prevail in the contest: being therefore afraid of perishing among their enemies, and desirous of sharing the rising prosperity of his people, they embraced their religion, and united interests with them. We may suppose that some were true converts, and others only formal professors, as it commonly happens in such cases. Haman's plot, however, to destroy the Jews, was overruled to increase their numbers. (Notes, Zech. 8:20-23. Acts 12:1-4, 24.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. Many of those, who most prosper in the world, would have little alacrity in their pursuits, or joy in their possessions, if they could foresee to whom their riches would devolve, and what use would be made of them. It is, how-

17 And in every province, and in every city, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, the Jews had joy and gladness, ^a feast and a good day. And ^amany of the people of the land became Jews; ^afor the fear of the Jews fell upon them.

CHAPTER IX.

On the day appointed, the Jews, aided by the rulers, slay their enemies; and among the rest five hundred men in Shushan, and Haman's ten sons. 1-10. The king hearing this, at Esther's request, allows the Jews in Shushan to stand against their enemies on the day following, when three hundred more are slain; and on the cause Haman's sons to be hanged on the gallows erected by Haman. 11-15. The Jews throughout the provinces slay seventy thousand men. 16. They rejoice with feasting on the two following days. 1-19. These days are appointed by Esther and Mordecai as an annual feast, in commemoration of this deliverance, and called the feast of Purim.

ever, a good thing when, consistently with justice, that wealth, which has pampered pride and luxury, and increased insolence and oppression, is transferred to those who will improve it to the glory of God and the benefit of mankind.—No advancement should render us forgetful of our indigent relatives, or indifferent about the public good, and the peace and prosperity of the church. These especially should be dearer to us than life itself: and when we have obtained our requests for ourselves; we should be the more fervent in prayer for our brethren, and in using our influence and venturing all consequences for their good.—If we would affect others, we should study to get our own hearts suitably impressed: and in many cases, we may be more importunate in asking favours for our friends and brethren, and for the poor, than we ought to be for ourselves.—It is a good and cogent plea, when we are praying for the conversion of our children or relatives, to say, "How can I endure to see the evil that shall come upon them? How can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?" And it forms an argument equally forcible, to induce us to use every means for their good, with assiduity and perseverance.—Bac examples, unjust laws, rash projects, and wicked books, often prove an extensive and durable curse to the world, when the authors of them are removed: no wisdom suffices to prevent their fatal tendency; and, as we must all be answerable for the consequences of our misconduct, this should render us very circumspect, lest our guilt should accumulate even after our death. (Note, Luke 16:27-31.)

V. 7-17. Every regulation in society, however apparently reasonable and beneficial, which does not advert to the fallen nature of man, will on trial be found unsuitable to his real condition, and inconsistent with his best interests: and all provisions, made to humour the ambition and passions of princes, will eventually embarrass and ensnare them. We are, however, indispensably bound to adopt every method of preventing the fatal effects of our past mistakes, or crimes even though we should be constrained to proclaim our own folly to the world: and much expedition should be used, when the lives of men are in danger, or their minds distracted with terrors.—If it was proper, that the decree of Ahasuerus should be communicated to every nation in its own language; how reasonable and necessary is it, that the holy law and gracious gospel of our God should be put into every one's hands in his own tongue!—Those who sow in tears and prayers, may expect speedily to reap with joy.—External decorations are insignificant in the judgment of the wise and pious: yet they may properly distinguish those in authority; and, while they procure them respect from the multitudes, who look no further, they should remind them of the duties to which their dignities call them. The preterm of wise and pious men ought to be matter of rejoicing to all: but the people of God have the most cause for gladness. They may expect to be delivered from the darkness of oppression, to enjoy the light of peace and prosperity; and to meet with honour, in some measure proportioned to the contempt which they before endured. And when believers "have rest, and walk in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, they will be multiplied." Indeed, the attempts of Satan and his agents, to destroy the church by cruel persecutions, have uniformly tended to the increase of true Christians. May the Lord speedily "destroy every enemy who hath done evil in his sanctuary;" may the princes of the earth become nursing fathers to his church: may his people have "light, and joy, and honour, a feast and a good day" &c.

their hurt: and no man could withstand them; for the fear of them fell upon all people.

3 And all the rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, and the deputies, and officers of the king, helped the Jews; because the fear of Mordecai fell upon them.

4 For Mordecai was great in the king's house, and his fame went out throughout all the provinces: for this man Mordecai waxed greater and greater.

5 Thus the Jews smote all their enemies with the stroke of the sword, and slaughter, and destruction, and did what they would unto those that hated them.

6 And in Shushan the palace the Jews slew and destroyed five hundred men.

7 And Parshandatha, and Dalphon, and Aspatha,

8 And Poratha, and Adalia, and Aridatha, 9 And Parmashta, and Arisai, and Aridai, and Vajezatha,

10 The ten sons of Haman the son of Hammedatha, the enemy of the Jews, slew they; but on the spoil laid they not their hand.

11 On that day, the number of those that were slain in Shushan the palace was brought before the king.

12 ¶ And the king said unto Esther the queen, The Jews have slain and destroyed five hundred men in Shushan the palace, and the ten sons of Haman; what have they done in the rest of the king's provinces? now what is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: or what is thy request further? and it shall be done.

13 Then said Esther, If it please the king, let it be granted to the Jews which are in Shushan to do to-morrow also according unto this day's decree, and let Haman's ten sons be hanged upon the gallows.

14 And the king commanded it so to be done: and the decree was given at Shushan; and they hanged Haman's ten sons.

15 For the Jews that were in Shushan, gathered themselves together, on the fourteenth day also of the month Adar, and slew three hundred men at Shushan; but on the prey they laid not their hand.

16 But the other Jews that were in the king's provinces gathered themselves together, and stood for their lives, and had rest from their enemies, and slew of their foes seventy and five thousand, but they laid not their hands on the prey,

[Practical Observations.]

17 On the thirteenth day of the month Adar; and on the fourteenth day of the same rested they, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

18 But the Jews that were at Shushan assembled together on the thirteenth day thereof, and on the fourteenth thereof; and on the fifteenth day of the same they rested, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

19 Therefore the Jews of the villages, that dwelt in the unwall'd towns, made the fourteenth day of the month Adar a day of gladness and feasting, and a good day, and of sending portions one to another.

20 ¶ And Mordecai wrote these things, and sent letters unto all the Jews that were in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, both nigh and far,

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. 14:1-6. Rev. 11:7-12).—As the Jews were not charged with exceeding the limits, assigned them in the king's edict, it may be concluded that they assaulted none, except such as appeared in arms against them: but when they were attacked, they vigorously pursued their advantage. Neither the fear of God, nor that of the king, could overcome the desperate enmity of numbers against the Jews, whom they had hoped to extirpate; so that, perhaps urged on by the enraged friends of Haman, and all his party, they attacked them on the day appointed, in every part of the empire: yet they were every where speedily intimidated, and yielded the Jews an easy and decisive victory.

V. 3, 4. The late decree, and the report which accompanied it of Mordecai's increasing greatness, rendered all the governors afraid of offending him, lest they should fall under the king's displeasure: so that they generally assisted the Jews, which gave them a decided advantage in the bloody contest. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5-10. The sons of Haman seem to have combined against the Jews, by way of revenging their father's death; as the king and Mordecai were out of their reach. At the head of their retainers, probably, they led on the attack in the royal city of Shushan, but they were all slain, with five hundred of their party.—As the Jews professed only to defend their own lives, when they "did what they would unto those that hated them;" they would not take their spoil, or any part of it: and there is no intimation, that they injured their families, or any individual, who was not found in arms against them. (Notes, 3:12-15. 8:11-13.)

V. 13. As it cannot be supposed that Esther was actuated by revenge in this request: it is probable she had learned from Mordecai, that Haman's retainers still formed a faction, not only dangerous to the Jews, but to the state: and were prepared to renew the attack on the next day. She therefore desired, that the Jews might defend themselves, and pursue their assailants, in order that the party might be crushed or finally intimidated: and also, that the bodies of Haman's sons might be suspended on the gallows, prepared by their father; to show all persons concerned, that by assaulting the Jews, they would expose themselves to the indignation of the king. (Note, 7:10.)

V. 15. "Some that appeared against them, perhaps escaped their hands, whom they might meet withal the next day." They "in the conflict escaped by flight, and were now found out and killed." Bp. Patrick.—It does not however appear, that they were authorized by the new decree, to slay any but those who assaulted them, or that they actually did so. Some think, that many of those slain in Shushan, and in other parts of the empire, were Amalekites, and that thus the prediction, concerning the utter destruction of Amalek, was exactly accomplished. (Notes, 3:1. Ex. 17:14-16.)

V. 16. Seventy-five thousand, &c. All this large number lost their lives, through the pride and revenge of one wicked man, but by their own malice and enmity to the worshippers of JEHOVAH. Thus the power and spirits of the enemies of the Jews were broken, and peace and rest were prepared for them. It is not recorded that any Jews were slain on this occasion; and probably their preservation was as remarkable as the destruction of their assailants.—They were indeed placed in the most extraordinary circumstances: but as they were sanctioned in what they did by the king's authority, and stood in defence of their own lives; as they slew none but those who attacked them, and universally declined availing themselves of the king's permission to enrich themselves with the spoil; they must be allowed to have acted in an unexceptionable manner: and were no more chargeable with the blood shed by them, than if they had been engaged in the most necessary defensive war: and indeed it was one of the most necessary defensive wars, that ever any people or nation engaged in.—Thereby we may judge what a great number of Jews still remained in other countries, and did not return to their own.... It is likely, Mordecai by his letters, had charged them not to make use of the liberty the king had given them to take the spoil; (8:11.) because they universally avoided it. Bp. Patrick.—It may be supposed, that the enemies of the Jews; in the vicinity of Judea, did not venture to assault them.

V. 17-19. Note, 21-32.

V. 20. "Mordecai wrote these things," or the history contained in this book, as the words most obviously imply; and not merely the letters afterwards mentioned, as many understand it. It is most probable, that he wrote an account of these interesting transactions, and sent it with his letters into all the provinces of the empire. This, no doubt, included Judea and Jerusalem; the inhabitants of which were as much aimed at in Haman's decree, as the Jews dispersed in other countries were.—The contrast between his style and that of Nehemiah, is very remarkable. The latter is interspersed with ejaculations and pious reflections; (Notes, Neh. 2:4. 4:4,5. 5:19. 6:5-9. 13:14,20-22. v. 22,31.) the former treats of divine things, without any explicit mention of God and religion. (Note, 4:13,14.) The different situation in which the two writers were placed, and the objects which they aimed at in writing, might have as much influence in causing this difference, as their different dispositions. Nehemiah's manneis in general most worthy of imitation: yet in some circumstances men are not to be censured, if they deem it expedient to imitate Mordecai. (Preface.)

V. 31-32. These verses contain the institution of the feast of Purim, which the Jews observe to this day. When the second decree of Ahasuerus was published, they had in every place "joy, and gladness, a feast, and a good day." (Notes, 8:16,17.) And when they prevailed in the contest in all parts of the empire, on the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, they with one common impulse observed the fourteenth as a festival, with joy and gladness. But the Jews at Shushan were, on that day likewise, engaged in conflict, and the fifteenth of the month was their day of rest and joy and festivity. (17-19.) Mordecai therefore wrote to his people in every place, proposing the observance of both these days annually, in commemoration of their deliverance, by Jews and proselytes, throughout their dispersions, and to all future generations. And upon the receipt of these letters, the Jews every where consented to the proposal. Yet it seems, that they afterwards grew negligent: and therefore a second letter was written, with all authority, by Esther and Mordecai, enjoining the observance; which was accompanied "with words of peace and truth;" (30) that is, with affectionate good wishes, prayers, and congratulations; and with wholesome counsels and instructions. The festival therefore was appointed by authority and by royal proclamation, yet under the direction and according to the mind of the Spirit of God. It was evidently proper to perpetuate the memory of so extraordinary a deliverance: and no doubt Esther and Mordecai did right in requiring the Jews on this great occasion, thus to keep it in remembrance, and transmit the memorial of it to their posterity. It was appointed that these days should be spent in feasting and joy, in hospitality and liberality to the poor. But, as the prayers, which without doubt attended the fasting of the Jews in Shushan, are not mentioned; (Note, 4:13,14.) it cannot reasonably be questioned but that praises and thanksgivings to God at first attended their feasting and rejoicing, though not recorded. Even to this day the Jews are used to assemble, at the time appointed, in their synagogues, to read over this book of Esther, and to perform some acts of religious worship: but the feast has long since degenerated into a season of riot and excess.—The word Purim signifies the lots, (being the plural of the word Pur,) in remembrance of the lots cast by Haman, by which the day was deferred till time was allowed for defeating the whole design, and all his tokens were frustrated. (Note, 3:7.) The fastings, lamentations, and prayers, which preceded the deliverance, were to be remembered with peculiar joy and gratitude. (31) Some think it was intended, that the thirteenth day should be observed as a day of fasting and prayer, as an introduction to the festival; and the Jews at present profess to observe it as such: but the decree does not admit of this construction. Finally, the decree was added to this book of Esther, in which the history of these transactions was recorded, that the institution might never be forgotten.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-16. The obstinate enemies and persecutors of the church are often left to act in the most infatuated manner; being urged on by malice, in opposition to the most evident dictates of prudence. (Notes, Ex. 14:5-9,21-23.) For the 28 And that these days should be "remembered and kept throughout every generation, every family, every province, and every city; and that these days of Purim should not "fail from among the Jews, nor "the memorial of them "perish from their seed.

29 Then Esther the queen, "the daughter of Abihail, and Mordecai the Jew, wrote with all "authority, to "confirm this second letter of Purim.

32 And the decree of Esther confirmed these matters of Purim; and it was written in the book.

records of history show, that when the enemies of God's people have "hoped to have power over them," it has generally been "turned to the contrary," and they have gained the advantage "over them that hated them." Yet, neither observation, nor experience, nor demonstration, can subdue the enmity of the carnal mind, which seizes every opportunity of exerting itself: and even the protection of the ruling powers, if not very decisive, has generally been found insufficient to repress the spirit of persecution; though men commonly fear the displeasure of a king, or of powerful courtiers, far more than the wrath of almighty God.—The aggressor is answerable for all the blood shed in unjust war; provided the advantages gained by those, who stand in their own defence in a good cause, be not pushed on with revenge and cruelty: and when whole nations are attacked on account of religion, they have as good a right to defend themselves, as when the assault is made on any other unrighteous pretext.—But in every case the servants of God should manifest a disposition to humanity and disinterestedness; and frequently they ought to decline advantages, which might legally be obtained.—Prosperous sinners often bequeath their vices and enmities to their posterity; the effects of which remain, when their ill-gotten or abused affluence is dissipated; but children will never be ruined by the crimes of their parents, unless they imitate them. (Notes, Ex. 20:5. Ez. 18:2-4,14-17.)—The pertinacity of some offenders renders it necessary for the most merciful rulers to use severity: and the enmity and obstinacy of wicked men will display the justice of God in their final and eternal destruction, when the whole world will know all their crimes. But what dire effects to thousands may result from one malicious, or even incautious action! (Notes, 3:8-11.)

V. 17-32. When the sense of recent mercies is lively in our hearts, we should hasten to pour out our praises to the Lord. Gratitude to him, when united with temperance and liberal kindness to the poor, will sanctify our rejoicing, and render a day of feasting a good day to our own souls, and to our brethren. (Notes, Neh. 8:9-12. P. O. 9-18.)—In reviewing our mercies, we should advert to our previous fears and distresses: we should consider, how our "sorrow hath been turned into joy;" what imminent danger of death, or destruction we have escaped; what cries, prayers, confessions, and vows we have made; and with what remarkable circumstances our deliverances have been attended, our enemies disappointed, and our comforts renewed. When our mercies are personal, we should be careful that we do not by forgetfulness lose the comfort of them, and withhold from our God the glory due unto his name. When they are very public and remarkable, rulers in church or state should unite authority, with admonitions and "words of peace and truth," to prevent the memorial of them from perishing; and that all, who shall eventually share the advantages, may join in rendering praise unto the Lord. But alas! the best institutions are liable to be perverted by human depravity: and to degenerate, not only into a form, but into an occasion of sin. Hol joy in God is supplanted by sensual indulgence and carnal mirth: under pretence of celebrating great deliverances, or even of commemorating the mysteries of redemption, professed Christians often behave, as if they were the devotees of Bacchus or of Momus; and, instead of "a good day" and a feast unto the Lord, they imitate the worshippers of the golden

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 1—3. These verses close the narrative, as it stands in the original Hebrew; and are very improperly detached from the preceding chapter. As, however, they here stand, they begin another chapter, which is continued in the apocryphal supplement to this book, and opens with the fourth verse of the tenth chapter. The nature of Ahasuerus's tribute, and the acts of his power, are not declared in the sacred Scripture; but the preference of Mordecai proved no diminution of the king's greatness, or detriment to his subjects at large; and it was peculiarly advantageous to the Jews. (Marg. Ref. f, g.) Mordecai neither concealed his religion, nor grew shy of his people, though they were generally poor and despised. His authority seems to have been durable; and he was greatly honoured by all his retainers: for he used his power to protect them and promote their welfare; and he behaved towards them with all condescension and affection.—This book is placed in our Bibles the last of the historical records of the Jews; though the events recorded by Nehemiah seem to have occurred subsequent to most, if not all, in this book. (Note, Neh. 2:6.)—However, for above four hundred years, that is, till the coming of the Messiah, the scriptural narrative of that favoured nation is suspended.—A compendious view of the most material events which are transmitted to us by other writers, is added, at the close of this book, in order to connect the Old Testament with the New.—It has been observed, that no pagan writer mentions any of the events recorded in the book of Esther; but in fact, little comparatively is known concerning the Persian kings, or the Medo-Persian empire, except as connected with the history of Greece, and as recorded by Grecian historians; and it cannot be supposed, that the concerns of the Jews, as dispersed through the vast empire of Persia, would at all attract the attention of that proud people, who considered all nations, except themselves, as barbarians; and who peculiarly despised the Jews, as a bigoted and narrow-minded race; because they would not conform to any of their varied idolatries, or embrace any of their systems of skeptical philosophy.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The concerns of the despised worshippers of God are deemed more important by the Spirit of inspiration, than the greatest exploits of the most illustrious monarch upon earth.—Those who enjoy the benefits of civil government, are reasonably required to contribute to the expense of it; but it is happy for the people when taxes are imposed with justice and equality; and the advancement of wise and good men forms the most honourable part of the conduct of powerful princes.—Rulers should consult the advantage of all their peaceable subjects; but they are peculiarly required to seek the welfare of the church, by protecting it from oppression, and encouraging the worship and ordinances of God.—That greatness is truly honourable which is usefully employed: and when those fill exalted stations, who behave with humility and condescension, and who manifest a due regard to religion, and affection for their inferiors; they will be most likely to escape envy, and to be honoured and accepted by the multitude of their brethren.—Contentment, diligence, and fidelity in lower employments, form a hopeful presage of good conduct in more important and exalted situations: and though men of superior talents and excellency may for a season appear to be buried in obscurity; yet, if the Lord have work for them to do, he will bring them forth to more extensive usefulness. We should be thankful for equitable and peaceful rulers and temporal privileges; but all earthly grandeur is passing away:—may we then seek those riches and that glory, which shall endure to all eternity!

EPITOME OF
THE HISTORY OF THE JEWS, AND THE SURROUNDING NATIONS AS FAR AS CONNECTED WITH THE JEWS, FROM THE CLOSE OF THE SACRED CANON OF THE OLD TESTAMENT, UNTIL THE TIMES OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Soon after the events, recorded by Nehemiah and in the book of Esther, or perhaps before the close of them, Artaxerxes Longimanus died, and was succeeded by Darius Nothus. (B. C. 423.) He dying, was succeeded by Artaxerxes Mnemon; (B. C. 405;) in whose time Johanan, the high-priest, murdered his brother Joshua in the temple, and the nation was fined by the Persians. After some other successions, of little consequence to the narrative, in our present view of it, Darius Codomannus, the last king of the Medo-Persian empire, ascended the throne. (B. C. 336.) During all these years the Jews were entirely a province of the Medo-Persian empire.

Xerxes, the father of Artaxerxes Longimanus, had before this unsuccessfully attempted to subjugate Greece. (Note, Dan. 11:2—4.) This so exasperated the Greeks, that they long meditated a design of subverting the Persian empire.—Various events, not material in this epitome, made way for Alexander the great, king of Macedon, to be appointed commander of a Grecian army, which was raised for the purpose of invading the Persian dominions. With about thirty thousand select troops, he passed over into Asia; (B. C. 334;) and with a celerity, unexampled in history, having vanquished the immense armies of Darius, in three pitched battles, the last of which was followed by the murder of Darius by his own servants, he terminated the Medo-Persian empire, and assumed the dominion over all the nations contained in it. (B. C. 330.) (Notes, Dan. 2:39. 7:6. 8:5—7. 11:2—4.) In a short time Alexander, having still more enlarged his dominions, died at Babylon; and after many severe and bloody contests, his empire was divided into four kingdoms, Macedonia, Thrace, Syria, and Egypt. (B. C. 323.) (Notes, Dan. 7:6. 8:8.)—The Jews, however, had little concern, for some ages, with any of these, except the kings of Syria, and of Egypt, called by Daniel, the king of the north, and the king of the south. (Notes, Dan. 11:2—6.) Judea lay between the dominions of the successive rulers of these kingdoms; and was, for a long time, under the power of one or the other of them; (Notes, Dan. 11:5—20.) and exposed to the ravages of the armies which marched through the land. At first they formed a part of the kingdom of Egypt, under Ptolemy Soter: after his death, Ptolemy Philadelphus, his son and successor, showed them much favour; and during his reign, the Hebrew Scriptures began to be translated into Greek, for the benefit of the Jews, who lived in Egypt and other places, where the Greek was known.—This translation is called the Septuagint; and by means of it, many of the learned Gentiles acquired considerable acquaintance with the Old Testament.

The Jews, having been cruelly oppressed by Ptolemy Philopater, (who, attempting to enter into the holy of holies, was opposed and hindered by the priests and rulers, which he indignantly resented,) revolted from him, and submitted to Antiochus the great, king of Syria. But Antiochus, having rashly engaged in war with the Romans, was vanquished, and reduced to make an inglorious peace; which gave the Romans, the fourth kingdom, their first entrance into the dominions of the Grecian empire, or the third kingdom. (Notes, Dan. 2:39—43. 7:7,8. 11:17—19,31.)

EPITOME OF THE HISTORY OF THE JEWS.

After the death of Antiochus the great, and the inglorious reign of his son, Seleucus Philopater, (Notes, Dan. 11:20;) Antiochus Epiphanes, called by Daniel "a vile person," succeeded, and most cruelly oppressed and persecuted the Jews, causing all the worship at the temple to cease, and even dedicating it to his own idol. (Notes, Dan. 8:9—12. 11:21—30.) But Mattathias, a priest, and his sons called the Maccabees, opposed him; and being wonderfully assisted and prospered, in many bloody contests, under Judas Maccabæus, the power of Antiochus was overthrown, his persecution terminated, the temple was recovered and its service restored; and Antiochus soon came to a miserable end. These events are recorded in the books of Maccabees, the first of which especially is allowed to contain authentic history. (Notes, Dan. 11:31—35.) From about this time, (B. C. 153,) the Jews, taking advantage of the enfeebled state of the contending kingdoms, (Syria and Egypt,) became independent under the government of the Maccabees, who united in general the high-priesthood with the sovereign authority; but without the name of king, till the time of Aristobulus, son of Hyrcanus. (B. C. 107.) This epitome must exclude the notices of the intestine contests of the different parties, among the Jews; which were many, fierce, and often bloody.

At length, however, the Romans greatly extending their conquests, the kingdom of Syria was reduced into the form of a Roman province, by Pompey the great. He not long after besieged Jerusalem; and having taken it, he entered into the holy of holies; (B. C. 63;) but after that, he never prospered. (Note, Dan. 11:31, conclusion.)—From this time, the Jews became dependent on the Romans.—At length Antipater, the father of Herod the great, an Edomite, by the favour of Julius Cesar, (who had prevailed against Pompey, and obtained dominion at Rome,) was made ruler in Judea. (B. C. 47.) After Antipater's death, Herod his son, called by Matthew, "Herod the king," by the favour of the Romans, and by force of arms, obtained possession of Jerusalem, and was established in regal authority; being by birth an Edomite, but proselyted to Judaism; which authority was at length confirmed by Augustus Cesar. (B. C. 30.) This dignity he maintained with great ability, but most atrocious cruelties, in his own family, as well as among others, till the birth of Christ. In this interim, he had built many cities, and almost rebuilt the temple. (Notes, Hag. 2:6—9. Matt. 16:13—16. John 2:18—22. Acts 22:35.) His atrociously cruel attempt to murder the infant Saviour, is recorded by the evangelist; and soon after he died most miserably. (Notes, Matt. 2:) After some years, in which the dominions of Herod were divided into four Tetrarchies under the sons of Herod, (Note, Matt. 14:1,2.) Judea became a Roman province; the sceptre departed from Judah, for Shiloh was come; (Notes, Gen. 49:9,10.) and under Pontius Pilate, the Roman procurator, in the reign of Tiberius Cesar, the successor of Augustus, the Lord Jesus was crucified.—Galilee, however, still remained under the government of Herod the Tetrarch, son of Herod the king, who beheaded John Baptist: but after some other changes, at length the whole Jewish state was subverted under Titus the son of Vespasian. (A. D. 79.)
